“Conventional value” means that the currency has that value because it was established by convention. A just order of the “International Monetary System” is indispensable for the peaceful coexistence of peoples; the knowledge of the organization of this system, and of the potential of the monetary instrument, is utterly necessary, so that, whoever uses it, does so only to offer a service to humanity and not to use it as an instrument with which to threaten the fundamental liberty of all peoples. Today, with much ease and with too much trust, public opinion has accepted as a legitimate fact the institutionalization of the so-called “paper gold.” The general public, in fact, is convinced of “convertibility” of paper money into gold.
The reality, however, is quite different, even if almost all public opinion overlooks it; effectively: «In 1935 the convertibility of the lira into gold stopped, and at the same time the “suspension” of the obligation for the Bank of Italy was decreed. Since the end of 1926, the law of the Monopoly of the Emissions was enacted to keep available intentionally, a gold reserve of not less then 40% of the money in circulation and pledge of cash on delivery [payment on receipt] (see R. Gattoni, "How the Bank of Italy functions," p. 52). Therefore, the caption on the banknotes: "Payable or payment on receipt" has no meaning. Sure enough, since then there is no longer coverage nor convertibility into gold, therefore, money as "trust deposit" results only in public illusion! ...maintained skilfully only in order to convince the man on the street. In fact:

– An objective limit exists to the issue of money, based on the quantity of the "gold reserve."
– Money cannot be issued free (as it actually is) from the Issuing Bank, because apparently conditioned by the production and availability of the real comodity (gold).

Prof. Giacinto Auriti.

With the pretext of the gold reserve, it is essentially desired to preserve the public opinion, which is the conditioned reflex caused by the old monetary system, i.e., the use of money commodity (gold, silver, salt, tobacco, shells, etc.) that, already belongs to the "History of the economy." This strategy, on the part of the International Monetary Banking System, is based on confusion willfully preordained between two concepts of "credit value" and "conventional value." So that, with the issue of paper money structured to as fake "promissory note" or "phony deposit validation," induces the community to give merchandise, which has a cost, against paper gold, which has no cost! At the international banking vertex it has been possible to substitute for money merchandise, the monetary symbol at nil cost, because a fundamental principle of the "philosophy of value" is understood, that is: that the value is never a quality of the material, but a dimension of the spirit!

So, for example, we might say that the pen has a value because we expect to write with it. Therefore, the value is the relation between the moment of the expectation and the expectation fullfilled. Also the money has a value because each one is ready to change merchandise into money, because each one expects to be able to give, in turn, money for merchandise. Therefore, as foreseen, other people's conduct as its own condition, is the source of the conventional monetary value. The conventional value, falsely passed off as "title of credit," the banking system obtains the objective of appropriation of the conventional values produced by the community.

The bank transforms its own "Debt," only apparent, into a tangible accumulation of wealth, by a Macroscopic Accounting Reversal of which nobody, unfortunately, is aware, perhaps because is too obvious! and that it permits appropriating a value that has nothing to do with the "credit," which extinguishes itself with "payment," while the money continues to circulate after each transaction, indefinitely.

The category of the "conventional" values, even today is almost entirely ignored by the economic science (establishment) and by the legislative system, to the point that a valid monetary juridical regime still does not exist. According to the traditional theories, when we speak of "value," as a rule, we erroneously understand by that term, the "cost" value, as being the incorporation of the cost of the product (example gold money). Historically, it has been proven that each time a merchandise has been considered "a currency symbol," its value has notably risen; this shows that the value of a good is commensurate with its benefit.

The currency takes its value by the simple fact that it is a "unit of measure of the value of the goods. As the yardstick has the quality of length because it measures length; as the kilogram has the quality weight because it measures weight, so currency has the quality of value because it measures value. We must attain financial responsibility of this truth and discover the immense potentiality of value of the mental activity of the group. It has been demonstrated by the fact that the monetary value subsists even when the monetary symbol is of nil cost, and is lacking of any form of reserve, as for example the "dollar," declared non convertible, non guaranteed and not covered by gold, by President Nixon on August 15th 1971 at Camp David; as also we have seen in Italy, even since 1935. To recap, then we can say that "money" has the dual characteristic of being the unit of measurement of the value of goods, but also the Power of Acquisition of such Goods.

It is time that public opinion becomes aware that those who create the value of Money are not those who issue and print it, but those who accept it as medium of payment, that is the Community!!! The lack of this awareness means it that, by usurping of the monetary value, it is not the people but the International Banking System, by virtue of "cultural monopoly" of the category of the conventional values.

The Issuing Bank creates the money just for the cost of printing, in other words, paper and typographic colours. It is the community which gives monetary value to the banknotes, accepting them as "medium of payment."

Today we observe that, in every modern state, the citizens, represented by the Treasury, becomes indebted to the Issuing Bank for all the money that the Bank puts into the marketplace (In fact the bank debits the said amount to the state). Such amounts instead ought to be accredited to the State, i.e., to the citizens the legitimate owners because they work, and through the medium of their work create wealth, and the wealth, therefore, is represented by Money; rather than to the Issuing Bank. This Macroscopic Accounting Reversal means that today any political, economical, social apparatus (Public Institutes, State- controlled institutes, etc.,) will be conditioned in their decisions and in their choices by the Banking System!

2. ORIGIN OF MONEY

The oldest document, ancestor of our Paper-Money, is the "Mamre" which is discussed at length in the Bible, in the Book of Tobias. The "Mamre" was the real "monetary instrument" of the Israelites which was entrusted to the "religious" sensitivity and the responsibility of individual believers, and it was protected and supported by "solidarity lending" that extended to the whole People God.

In the Book of Tobias, it is presented as an "instrument of charity." It does not need many words to comment on the moving story of Tobias, son of Tobit, and the high sense of religiosity of that story. "Debt endowed with power of movement without the need of endorsement," the Bible devotes not a few verses, but an entire book, so "the establishment of the monetary instrument" was important and it does not speak in abstract form, but with clear and simple language understandable to all. The establishment of "Mamre" is transmitted from generation to generation as a means to draw upon oneself the divine blessings, the true and fitting exercise of charity, and the gift and loan without interest are the source of life that frees from evil.

The Receipt, or "Mamre," as it is sanctified and ingrained with the emanation of God, so that the Most High does not hesitate to send one of the seven Archangels admitted to His presence, Raphael, to accompany the "creditor," Tobias, on his long journey that will lead to the "collection" of "credit." And in the journey He fills him with the blessings of life: he finds a wife, he brings the tangible material goods and unites him to friends. God Himself, through His Archangel, by the "collection" takes care of the "loan" (see Chap 5-12).

Mosès.

Paper-Money, so conceived, is the holiest and most sacred of all coins minted and visualized in gold and silver from ancient civilizations, as other peoples coined the "money" in the most precious metals, no people reached the extraordinary mystical-religious conception of the Hebrew people.

On the border of the Promised Land, Moses revealed to the people of God, the Secret Commandment of Power and Goodness. God, through the mouth of Moses, commanded to entrust this secret to the only Word and to the Tradition with the obligation to transmit it to future generations, but this duty was neglected, and from ancient times the "secret" of the "Power" was monopolized by the "curse of the human race."

«I call heaven and earth to witness" says Moses, "I put in front of you Life and Death, Blessing and Curse. Therefore choose life, that thou mayest live, thou and thy posterity. Loving your God and obeying His voice» (Deut. 30: 19, 20).

The Commandment of "Power" is what gives a man the right to enter into the process of "Creation," by changing the structure and evolution of living species and of territories, of the constituent elements of "matter": this "commandment" has to be placed at the service of Creation! It cannot remain hidden and monopolized by a few, who use it as a weapon, and in order to achieve a dreadful tyranny on the work of God!

The Commandment of Power must not be subordinated to greed and pride of man and of nations a Commandment, precisely because "The Revealed Truth," given, does not come from the creature, but from the Creator! This commandment imposes on those who use it, that they subordinate themselves in an attitude of "brotherhood" and "charity," a "universal" precept of love; this is the substance of the Revelation of Moses.

A "rabbinic" parable makes explicit reference to this Commandment, presenting a dialogue between God and Moses: «God, after having taught the Torah to Moses, he said: "Teach it to Israel."» And Moses replied: «Lord of the Universe, I will put it in writing for him.»

But God stopped him and said: «I do not want you to put it in writing, because I foresee that the nations of the world will dominate Israel, and then will try to take away the Word. I give to Israel in writing only the Mickra, but I communicate only "orally" the Mishnah, the Talmud and the Haggadah. If the nations of the world come to dominate Israel, it will be distinguished from them thanks to the Mishnah and the Talmud. In this way the Israelites will be differentiated from all other peoples."

Few books have been read and commented on as much as the Bible, yet the social doctrine of Moses, which has been translated into an explicit "monetary institutionality," imposed with extreme solemnity on the Hebrew people, just at the moment when they entered the "Promised Land," has remained "taboo!"

It seems that a mysterious "censorship" has prevented eyes from seeing, ears from hearing and the words from being spoken! Nevertheless the words are all before us, as they were before the generations that preceded us over the millennia.

The "monetary social doctrine" of Moses is contained in Deuteronomy and is essentially based on three principles:

1. All believers in God must mutually give each other "loans" without "interest" to the extent of their need.
2. The "loan" has an ephemeral life: every 7 years it is cancelled, even if it was not paid (the sabbatical year).
3. No believer can make images of God, either carved or engraved or printed, nor on stone or metal. Precious metals can be used as merchandise but not as currency.

«Thanks to our Press, we have gotten all the gold in our hands, despite the fact that we had to gather it out of the oceans
of blood and tears ...»

(Mayer Amschel Rothschild, 1773)

From these three premises arise a fourth principle: "For those who believe in God should loan to each other, in accordance with their needs," any "debtor," at any moment could have paid off their "debt" with the proceeds of a "new" debt contracted to a "new" creditor. Therefore, the Commandment of Moses rendered insolvency debt impossible, and in addition, as a consequence of the impossibility of "minted" coins made of precious metals, it was necessary to have recourse to another currency. This coin was formed by the "received credit" that the debtors issued, they circulated without the need of "endorsement", and they were called "Mamre:" the ancestor of our Paper-Money.

The "Mamre" was born as a "perfect" instrument of charity and brotherhood.

The "credit" Commandment has established a very specific "pact" between God and His people, who, by means of this instrument, has created a particular "social structure," unique in ancient history, that is in essence, the "structure" of a "Credit Cooperative," as well as, the possibility of creating from nothing a nominal money (paper) that cost nothing, but has an actual value, arbitrary and conventional, and with an absolute guarantee, because it is protected by the "solvency" of the whole people of God.

This Commandment was a promise for mankind. It was an instrument of charity, of love and of prosperity for all nations!

But it has been transformed into an instrument of prey, of tears and suffering! Sure the "weight" of that Commandment, the "secret" of Power, loaded on the fragile back of a archaic pastoral people must have been too much, and the temptation, continuous and incessant. Over the centuries and millennia, that race must have been in the grip of a terrible spiritual warfare, lacerating its religious, cultural and political structure. The speech given by Moses before his death was clear: he had endowed his people with the "secret" of Power, and of Brotherhood, to reveal to all future generations!

«That thou mayst pass in the covenant of the Lord thy God, and in the oath which this day the Lord thy God maketh with thee. [That he may raise thee up a people to himself, and he may be thy God as he hath spoken to thee, and as he swore to thy fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Neither with you only do I make this covenant, and confirm these oaths. But with all that are present and that are absent.» [Deut 29: 12-15]

This means that the commandment of Moses was revealed for all the peoples of the earth, who are still waiting for the "instrument," the "institutionality" that makes brotherhood and love possible: money, but used in the "ways" and "terms" prescribed by God (through the mouth of Moses), to date, unfortunately always kept hidden for their own advantage and never revealed by our "Elder Brothers"!!

3. FROM "MAMRE" TO MODERN MONEY (cause of the fall of Roman Empire)

The Mamre soon spread outside Israel, as the foreign merchants were willing to accept these monetary "symbols" in lieu of monetary gold coins; for two main reasons: because the merchants themselves wanted to avoid being robbed; and because they had, in the symbol, the "maximum" trust, in that the "receipt" of payment issued by a single Israelite was securely guaranteed by the entire Israel. The certainty in performance became that whoever was holding the "title of credit," felt more advantaged to keep it with him, rather than presenting it for collection. At this point, the "original" nature of the "document" was modified since the function of "paper credit" was lost to become that of "conventional monetary value!"

The Bank of England, founded in 1694.

It was said "conventional value" was given to the "document" by the same economic operators, as a consequence of the certainty of being able to claim it at maturity; they, therefore, were satisfied merely by the possession of that document, so they did not feel the need to present it at collection. That is why in trading practice, paper money issued by a mere component of the Israelite people, acquired a value equivalent, if not superior, to that of gold.

The Israelites could put on the market an unlimited amount of Mamre that "acquired" a "real value," which were acknowledged by individual traders who accepted them as a "medium of payment" but, in reality, of "zero cost" (only paper and ink). The Mamre did not cause the accumulation of "liabilities" (among Israelites), because every seven years, according to the Mosaic Commandment, all the "debt" was cancelled; however, (the lender) came to seize all the goods, as we have seen. The merchants preferred Mamre to gold itself, so the Mamre continued on its way from border to border, being the certain possessor of solvency and collectability...

With the "Diaspora," the Hebrew people conquered the "monetary sovereignty" among all peoples of the world, precisely through the Monopoly of the coinage of money symbols for zero cost, made possible by the "exclusivity" of the monetary and cultural "secret" of which they remained sole possessors, and by the link established between the "Israelite colonies" of the Mosaic Law.

The Hebrew paper money came, in effect, to compete with the activities of those who used money merchandise (gold, silver, bronze, livestock, salt, etc.).

The potential for exchange of those who used the commodity money, in fact, was constrained by the amount of these precious goods available, while paper money was inexhaustible. The consequence of this state of affairs was that everywhere the Hebrew "Diaspora's" trading activity operated, the use of money-lending, along with monetary gold, silver or bronze, made all money more plentiful. Consequently, the gold, silver and bronze had ever less value where paper money circulation was augmented.

The "Bad money" (at no cost) then pushed out the "good Money." The fact was verified in the first three centuries of the Roman Empire. The immense power of the Hebrews, spoken of by Tacitus, was economic lending, and demonetization of all the peoples of the Mediterranean which caused the collapse of the Roman Empire. Circulation and indebtedness of Rome to Israel was like a noose around the neck.

Throughout the "Middle Ages," and to this day, none of the Christian commentators on Deuteronomy have been able to pierce the veil of mystery it contains. No one has penetrated the secret that God has entrusted to the oral tradition of the Hebrew people, the well-kept secret, since no one has ever been able to reveal it!

Nobody realized that the Christian peoples were demonetised, not because they were subject to loans at exorbitant and usurious interest, but because, in effect, with their trading on the monetary market, a coin was established that was a "tax"!

So the people were not dispossessed of the interest, but of the value relative to the principal (wealth) created (the Mamre) out of nothing and loaned to them!

Only in the last three centuries, after the "Creation of Money," on the part of Institutes of Issue, in Amsterdam, London, and later in the USA, the "privilege" to create money out of "nothing" was transferred to an "official institutionality": the Bank.

«The Bank of England, for example, was based on the discovery that, instead of lending money, it could lend the Bank's own "promissory notes» (See Ezra Pound "Work and Usury" p. 68, Ed Scheiwilier, 1972).

The Bank has a "structure" of "hybrid" character between the political and the private sector, which is between the "power" group and the "Club," but no one can deny that in those clubs, the modest "puppets" that recite are "remote-controlled" with strings that go to the "mysterious" and "invisible" "Lords of Money." Still today before our eyes they repeat the same moves of the "monetary strategy," learned three thousand years ago, at the gates of the Promised Land, by the same voice of Moses.
«The world is governed by very different personages from what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes.» (Benjamin Disraeli).
«Let me issue and control a nation's money and I care not who writes the laws.» (Meyer Amschel Rothschild, 1744 -1812).
To no avail are the speeches, warnings and "curses" of Moses to his people; he himself says:

> «I know that you are a stiff-necked people, proud ... you have transgressed the law of God while I was with you; I know that you will transgress even more so now that I'm about to leave and even when I will be no longer with you. And then the "curses" will come true and you will be "scattered" among all the nations, and you will be servants; life will tremble in your heart. Every hour of the day you freeze from fright. And all this will happen because you transgressed this law of God, revealed through my word. But I have prayed to God to have mercy on you, and the end of time you will be forgiven and return to your fatherland, because you will obey the commandment of God.» [Deut 31:27-30]

The mysterious Lords of the Money, still today keep well hidden the terrible "secret" of money creation that God wanted to give them, for their own happiness and the happiness of others. It is enough to think that, in our day, we have great sources of energy that can make deserts bloom and polar ice caps melt; the resources are particularly limitless. So why, even today, do some 30 million people a year die of hunger? That is: one person every second, a child every two seconds?

4. POLITICAL SOVEREIGNTY AND MONETARY SOVEREIGNTY

With the creation of the "Bank" then, there was the demonetization of gold: the currency-commodity (gold) was replaced by banknotes at no cost.
The gold, in fact, was relegated to a secondary role, commodity trading ever less used as currency, and kept its value fixed since 1717, the official date of the creation of the Bank of England (see A.Z. "The Eye Above the Pyramid," p. 17, Tip. Artigianelli), although operating since 1694 until 1944, the year of the "Bretton Woods Agreement."
Let us not forget that in 1717, three major events occurred:

1. The "fixity" of gold is established;
2. The Bank of England is officially founded;
3. Establishment of the Grand Lodge of London.

The "control" of the issuance of paper money notes, symbols at zero cost implemented by banks, has made possible a "strategy" of domination of all markets, with the consequence of stealing political (and economical) purchasing power of money which was at their disposal, that is, of their "economic-productive potentiality" and therefore, in essence, political Sovereignty!
All the vaults of the old Royalist-Christian Europe were emptied of their contents, not as much for its material content, but for the immaterial: the Value!

Wall Street. New York Stock Exchange.

Governments were thus forced to indebit themselves to the banking system by borrowing Banknotes (at zero cost) to spend on the achievement of their projects and for the fulfilment of their undertakings.
Once then "monetary value" was extracted from gold, it was acquisitioned by the "banking system," producer of the "paper money" at no cost, which thus became the new master of the world.

The realization of this "instrument of domination" was made possible by the "cultural monopoly" of the "issue of the conventional values at zero cost" (banknotes), legislatively and legally recognized by the Bank.

The BIS: Bank for International Settlements in Geneva.

To the issuance of money has been applied a principle well known to the "Schools" of Upper Diplomacy, so the other party accepts a condition that would never be accepted had they known the implicit "clause" set in the contract.

So it is that he who "takes money" on "loan" from the Issuing Bank explicitly recognizes himself "the debtor" (when in fact he is not!):

– Firstly, without realizing it, he recognizes, in those "documents" received from the Bank, the quality of "money" (because he accepts them as a "means of payment") and,
– Secondly, he attributes ownership to the Bank, because "lending money" is a "prerogative" of the owner.

Therefore, the Bank will charge the banknotes to the State. The Bank declares itself "debtor," because in fact on banknotes, there always appears the inscription: "payable to bearer," but, in reality, it only gives "false promissory notes," because, in our case, the Bank of Italy gives us nothing if, for example, we present L. 100,000 in banknotes at the "desk." You can only exchange them for more banknotes of the same amount; you cannot get gold coins or bullion, since no "money" is covered, secured and convertible into gold.

So, what do we do? At the time of issue of money, citizens are dispossessed and indebted to their own currency by the Central Bank; so it is obvious that this severe degeneration of the Monetary System cannot be eliminated unless the rectification of the defect at the root is made at the source, and we make known to humanity what is happening behind its back and to its skin.
The "ownership" of "money" must be taken away from the International Banking Oligarchy and restored to the people, who are the "legitimate and sole proprietors." "The money belongs to those who work and not to parasites," and this is made explicit, first of all, by putting on the banknotes the words "State of Italy," i.e., sovereign "State Money."
It was precisely for this decision to regain monetary sovereignty, with the printing of "Greenbacks" (American State Banknotes) before the Civil War, that Abraham Lincoln was assassinated with a bullet to the head on April 14, 1865. And it was just because he wanted to counter the control of the money and the interests of U.S. bankers, that, having ordered the printing of several million dollars, denominated "UNITED STATES NOTE" instead of "FEDERAL RESERVE NOTE," that John F. Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas, also with a bullet in the head on November 22, 1963.

5. TO WHOM ARE WE IN DEBT?

Another fundamental question of which we must deal is that of the futility of the "Monetary Reserve." Today, no "money" whatsoever is anchored to a gold reserve, not even the U.S. dollar, as was declared by President Richard Nixon on August 15, 1971 at Camp David, and reported by all the mainstream press.
So, it is not understood why the Issuing Banks of the USA, the USSR and the IMF can issue money without "reserve", without gold, or without any other "title," while the same principle does not apply to other Sovereign Nations, which must be indebted to those banks in order to have currency "reserve." In fact, while the "dollar" without reserve of gold, has international recognition as legitimate currency and is driving the Western economic system, that is not the case for other "currencies" bound by the "necessity" of a "reserve" in "dollars;" so it's like saying that while the dollar, without reserve, has the value of gold, that is not the case for other currencies!
At this point, we can say that the "International Banking System" is governed by a feudal type of "hierarchical structure," in which there are the Imperial Banks, i.e., those able to issue currency without reserve, and the Colo- nial Banks, all the others that, to issue its own currency, must necessarily have a currency of "reserve."

This "structure" is based on the cultural "monopoly" at the vertex of the banks and on '"public opinion" deculturated and accustomed to the principle of monetary rarity. "To say that a country cannot achieve its goals due to lack of money is like saying that you cannot build roads for lack of miles!"

The rarity of monetary symbols, traditionally caused by the rarity of the goods with which the symbol was coined (for example gold,), is now accepted as a perfectly normal, even though the paper-money (the symbol) can be produced without limit and without cost. In addition, there is still a deep-rooted belief in the need of money "reserve," which is also manufactured without limit and without cost, but that is universally distributed in limited quantities arbitrarily established at the vertexes of the Imperial Banks.
At the present state of affairs, "all" the peoples of the world are reduced to the level of "colonies" of the International Banking System with the aggravating circumstance of "not knowing." All the social-cultural-political economic initiatives of the "nation-colonies" are "conditioned," "determined" and "programmed" at the table of the Imperial Banking System, through the "monopoly" of the issuance and delivery of the reserve currency that is "loaned out," and so "indebting" the various nations; and when the "loans" – moreover – are denied, the people are destined to die of hunger.
Money, like water for fish, is by now "oxygen" for the nations! With this system, the Imperial Banks "deduct" from the Colonial Banks any "discretion" and every "freedom of decision," so they can adjust the monetary gains to the economic development of their own country. In fact, these increases are artificially "limited" and "proportionate" to the "amount" of reserve currency, which is basically determined by the Imperial Banks. Money, then, is like blood: its amount should be proportionate to the size of the body!

«With a combination of high taxes and unfair competition to bring ruin on the Goyim (Christians) in their own financial interests and t heir investments ... »

(Mayer Amschel Rothschild, 1773)

To realize this truth, it is sufficient to consider a simple example: if on the market there are 10 pens and 10 lire, you will be able to sell the pens at a price of 1 lira each pen, but if you have to produce 10 more pens, you will have to enter on the market 10 more lire, otherwise you would have to sell the pens at the price of only half a lira. And if the pen cost, for example, 0.6 lira, it is obvious that the process of production, in the absence of increase in monetary liquidity, stops!
This means that every freedom to make decisions on the development or market recession, does not lie in the hands of the actual producers of goods, but in those of the "banking system" that produces "reserve currency."
On this basis one can understand the meaning of the letter sent by Mayer Amschel Rothschild to the Company Klerneimer, Morton and Vandergould of New York dated June 26, 1863:

> «... few understand this "system" and those who understand will be occupied in exploiting it; the public, perhaps, will never understand that the system is contrary to their interests ... »

That is why - although there exists in the world raw materials in abundance, labour, facilities, qualified skilled workers, scientific and technological resources, and, in general, sufficient wealth to feed, even overfeed all its inhabitants - periodically and punctually, the economic crises, inflation, unemployment, etcetera, reinvent themselves, until the arrival of famine, and even the death of millions of human beings, all creatures of God!
The official economic science (at the service of the Banks) justifies these crises citing as "cause" "counterfeit welfare" and "overproduction" and, in some cases, even reaching the astonishing conclusion that it is natural and logical that some men live in poverty and in misery and even die of hunger, despite having nearby, warehouses crammed with every type of merchandise!
At this point, the following statement appears clear and truthful:

> «I doubt that the man in the street will be pleased to learn that the banks are able to manufacture money, as indeed they do manu- facture it. The mass of money in circulation varies only by the intervention of the banks, through the "expansion" or "contraction" of credit. Each "credit" or "overdraft" creates money. And those who "control" the credit of a country will direct government policy and hold the destiny of the people in their hands.» (Reginald McKenna, Member of the House of Commons, speech given at the Midland Bank in January 1924).

Also from the Papal See have come many allegations and admonitions, but never acknowledged by the "men of good will" (by inability or bad faith?).

The ECB: European Central Bank in Frankfurt.

Pope Pius XI, for example, in the Social Encyclical "Quadragesimo anno" (1931) Articles 105-106 and 109 read:

«An immense power and despotic economic dictatorship is consolidated in the hands of a few, who often are not owners but only the trustees and managing directors of invested funds which they administer according to their own arbitrary will and pleasure. This dictatorship is being most forcibly exercised by those who, since they hold the money and completely control it, control credit also and rule the lending of money. Hence they regulate the flow, so to speak, of the life-blood whereby the entire economic system lives, and have so firmly in their grasp the soul, as it were, of economic life that no one can breathe against their will.»

A sane monetary system should provide to the "community", money which is a "measure of value," a "medium of exchange," a "way of claiming and obtaining goods and services."
But to fulfil these "functions," the prices of goods and services must remain stable, in other words the ratio between the volume of goods and services exchanged in a "community" and the volume of the currency by which they are traded, should be constant (as the blood circulating should be commensurate with the size of the body).
The monetary system in use worldwide today, precludes this equivalence, since as we have seen, the "power" is in the hands of a few who control at will the fate of nations.
The modern monetary system was introduced in England by the promoters of the Bank of England, who adopted as a principle the bank loan according to this procedure: it lent at interest to the State money which in reality was its own already!
In fact, a private "coterie (mafia)" headed by Mr. Paterson, lent the government of King William III, the sum of 1,200,000 pounds sterling in gold, at 8% interest and as a counterpart of the "loan" was "authorized" to "print" Banknotes for the same amount.
If William III had printed the "Notes" himself and had allowed the "cronies of Paterson" to keep the gold, he would not only have saved the nation 96,000 pounds sterling (equivalent to one year's interest at 8%) but his subjects would also have avoided the "tax" imposed on them to cover the "debt" contracted through the "Paterson Bank," with the consequent rise in prices and with the onset of the consequent inflationary spiral.
Inflationary effects which, in those days, with a predominantly agricultural economy, were negligible, but when the system was introduced in the U.S. in 1913 (the year of the founding of the Federal Reserve,) after 2 centuries of industrialization, its effects were felt.

The need for a "growth" economy, in fact, establishes an "increase" in the demand for "loans" and then an even higher "debt" to the banks.
"Interest" on these loans piles up on the loan itself, and the "community" therefore incurs "debts" to the banks of more money than there is in circulation; in this way, even if only to allow "colonies" to pay "interest," banks are required to expand the volume of their "loans." In so doing, it creates a permanent "imbalance" between the amount of money due to the Imperial Bank and the quantity of money in circulation with which to make the repayment, and the attempt to make up the difference with new loans makes the inflationary effect of the system "cumulative," almost "irreparably."

Another consequence of this lack of permanent (artificial) "liquidity" is this: the community is never in a position to buy at reasonable prices all goods and services produced. The effort to overcome this scarcity is one of the causes of the excessive importance given to "foreign trade" to achieve a favourable "trade balance." The promotion of industrialization, the throwaway consumer society, generally promoted by the "Mass Media" only aggravate the situation, as they lead the community to borrow more and more because of the requirement of industries to borrow further from the banking system.
It's a dizzying spiral!

The peoples, the more they produce and the more they advance industrially, the more they overtake other nations in the "hit parade" of the economy; but at the same time - coincidentally note the inconsistency! – the more they are indebted! And to whom? It's simple, isn't it? To the Imperialist Banking System, but the "Mass Media" is careful not to mention this reality!

6. THE GREAT PARASITE OR THE HIDDEN GOVERNMENT

Since the first appearance of civilization, the people appointed Leaders – by choice or by force – but yet renowned leaders, acknowledged and responsible for their actions. Above the heads of the weaker nations, was the power of the dominant people. But over the heads of the stronger peoples there was nobody, no other power, and no other man. And this is the fundamental criterion for distinguishing the free peoples from the people are not free.
For at least two centuries, in an ever growing measure, and in different degrees from region to region, from area to area, it is no longer so: the hardly recognizable, never responsible, "unofficial forces," are the true, the real Masters of the game. They decide the destinies of the peoples. They are there somewhere, in high places and everywhere, omnipresent and elusive, but still over our heads. They provide us with ideals and slogans, reasons to hate and fight, weapons and money!
For several decades, a new factor has been added, a power outside and above all, a power that, among the many forces that agitates, that fights, that emerges and bubbles on the "crust" of the planet Earth, and chooses – as does the puppeteer - who must win and who must lose.
This power is constituted by the men of the Great International Finance that slowly, unceasingly, wisely, have stretched out the "threads" of their "intangible" network. They made use, of the East as of the West, now one ideology, now another according to their interest and advantage.

The Great "Parasite" has founded his instruments of "exploitation" and of "dominion" on "lies," on "deception," "intellectual and spiritual subversion" meticulously planned for hundreds of years.

Through liberal capitalism, it has subjugated human beings with the "Phantom of Liberty" and with the mirage of wealth, always there, alluring, two steps away but always elusive! Through Communist Socialism – instead – it has hypnotized and, without chloroform, has put the masses to sleep, with the utopia of Justice and the lie of Equality, "awakening," then, in the Gulag Archipelago, "behind the Iron Curtain" and Cement Walls. The "foundations" of the same bourgeois ideology were demolished, in order to realize the ever forgotten "biblical promise" of dominion of the Chosen People over the gentiles and over all the countries of the earth!

The High Finance Banking chooses a country or group of countries to dominate the world, giving these countries the illusion that they are the true rulers, whereas, in reality, they are the ones to be totally dominated in turn.
Until World War I, the "Money Masters" identified their interests with those of the British Empire, and then abandoned it, without ceasing to continue to exploit it.
They had done this previously with the Russian Czarist and Hapsburg empires, as well as with France, and as they are currently preparing to do, we think, over a period of one (or two) generations, with the USA.
In an article appearing in "Avvenire" (08.11.1989, p. 9),

Maurizio Blondet comments thus, «In fact, "the Financial Crisis" in New York could not be more bleak, in the diagnosis of Felix Rohatyn, the banker of the very powerful investment bank Lazard Freres and Co., and President of the "Municipal Assistance Corporation" ...» The entire article shows how, in effect, the U.S. has in place a "great economic recession."
In the same article, the Nobel Prize winner for economics, Maurice Allais states:

> «We have to change the system of the credit as it works today, i.e. the creation of money from nothing by the International Banking system.»

The Wall Street banker, Jacob Schiff, an intimate friend of the Rothschilds and principal financier of the Russian Revolution of 1917.

For several decades, the interests of High Finance overlapped with those of the American Empire, until the Second World War, then, faced with the danger that a total American "supremacy" could lead to a political and economic power too strong to be "controlled," the High Finance decided to push the U.S. toward "decline," while she was made to grow, but always under control, the "Soviet" power to be used as a counterweight.

Today, we are at US-Soviet Agreement (with meetings even on warships in the Mediterranean). But really, has no one ever noticed that the two "superpowers" have never had need to join forces, because they always have been joined, through the Upper Finance Banking? Has no one really ever realized that the "cold war" was a scam and that the USA and USSR are two of the same pincer jaws, whose handles are kept under control by a single hand?
The book, "Vodka-Cola" by Charles Levinson, is one of many sources of information demonstrating the union between "capitalism" and "communism."
In particular, it documents that the "main" banks in the liberal-capitalist sector, first among all of those branded Morgan and Rockefeller, have their own "branches" in the socialist-communist countries since 1917 (such as Chase Manhattan Bank, etc.), and vice versa, the socialist-communist sector banks have "branches" in the liberal-capitalist countries (e. g. Northern Europe Commercial Bank, Eurobank BCEN, etc.); that the "capitalist" economy sustains the "communist" with a continuous "flow" of facilitated "credit", if not even non-repayable "grant." In addition, a dossier "published in the journal "OP" of May 1982 showed how the "Gosbank" (the Central Soviet Bank) was a limited company with "participation of foreign private capital" (e. g. the Aschberg, Sweden, etc.).
Today, we are witnessing the downfall of many barriers, ideological and non-ideological walls; before our eyes what no one thought could ever happen is happening, but the ways of High Finance are endless!
The process of socio-political-economic-cultural-religious "homogenization" is essential for the establishment of a New World Order to technocratic government. We see, therefore, the apparent gradual rapprochement of the "two" alleged "enemy brothers" conceived and born from the Yalta Pact.

«We shall have world government, whether or not we like it. The question is only whether world government will be achieved by consent or by conquest,» proclaimed James P. Warburg, of Kuhn-Loeb & Co., the son of Max Warburg, in 1950, during a session of the United States Senate, who, along with Jacob Schiff, was the greatest financier of the Russian Revolution (1917).

Aurelio Peccei, Executive Member of PCI and founder and President of the "Club of Rome" (one of many globalist institutes) said:

> «We need to arrive at an efficient "world system," governable with the same techniques of "marketing." And it is precisely this that is taking place in the world: a "plot" by an almost closed number of Multinational Corporations, is carrying out the agreed-upon "division" of the "market areas," resulting in the "cessation of all forms of economic competition" and the policy of the single "national sovereignty."»

Behind the large multinationals, operate the banks that create money out of nothing! (for which we now understand better the causes of "wars" going on between giants that contend for the European Common "Market" and the reason to achieve it).
And when such an event will actually be implemented in the whole world, then the World Economic Power, the Great "Parasite," indistinguishable in the "infinite mass of anonymous shareholders of the "limited company," will outsource the daily management of the Empire of Capital in the World technocracy. Every "national sovereignty" will cease "automatically," the World Economic Power will rule with an absolute "power," worse than that of a "tyrant."
The people will be deprived of their wealth, in exchange for "Credit Cards" or perhaps still worse, not even those, but a "Personal Number" (the personal Code or "mark of the beast" or the number 666, applied by means of a subcutaneous microsurgical operation on the right hand or on the forehead as in Revelation, Chapter 13, verse 17). In this situation we will be offered the choice to adapt to the rules or be left to die of hunger!

> «If today man can still choose between different conceptions of the world and continually has to face moral and spiritual dilemmas, tomorrow will not be so ... we will have in the future only technical choices!» (C. Finzi).

The Technocratic Government, in fact, will constitute a kind of "elitist" corporation, carefully "selected" and properly "educated," that will be responsible to operate on the coldly "rational" basis and with choices merely "technical," all designed to bring out the maximum "profitability" for the World Economic Power.
There will be the "suppression" of every type of "privatization" in the level of "affection" and that of the "effects;" the Technocracy will absorb all the "rights" of the "person" and "family;" the "socialization" will also include the education of children (already they are trying to take them away in Italy, perhaps under the pretext that children need to live "well" economically), and everything will be delegated to the Technocratic Government.
An "Agnostic Humanism" will replace the old "Christian Humanism." This will achieve a breed of men, to whom will be distributed a set amount of food per capita, which is necessary for survival and for production!
Once again the words of Revelation will resonate in the mind:

> «And it was given him to give life to the image of the beast, and that the image of the beast should speak; and should cause, that whosoever will not adore the image of the beast, should be slain. And he shall make all, both little and great, rich and poor, freemen and bondmen, to have a character in their right hand, or on their foreheads. And that no man might buy or sell, but he that hath the character, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. He that hath understanding, let him count the number of the beast. For it is the number of a man: and the number of him is 666.»
> (Revelation Chapter 13: 15-18)

As early as 1975, Dr. Charles Ducombe of the Information Office of Jerusalem declared that Dr. Harinck Eideman, head analyst of MEC Bruxelles, revealed the existence of a "Super-computer" called "The Beast," occupying 3 floors of an Edifice carpeted with computers, and that would have assigned a number to each inhabitant of the Earth, and its code is "666." (See "Chiesa Viva" n. 201, p. 9, 12 and 13). Another Super-Computer or SuperMarket of Religions, called the "Temple of Understanding," with 6 arches, 6 sides and 6 vaults (here returns "666"), would provide from the U.S. to sell to the spiritual "consumers", wherever they live on earth, the "religion of choice," with the possibility of choosing from assorted "sampling" of the most important ones.

«And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice: If any man shall adore the beast and his image, and receive his character in his forehead, or in his hand; He also shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is mingled with pure wine in the cup of his wrath, and shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the sight of the holy angels, and in the sight of the Lamb. And the smoke of their torments shall ascend up forever and ever: neither have they rest day nor night, who have adored the beast, and his image, and whoever receiveth the character of his name. Here is the patience of the saints, who keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.»

(Apocalypse 14: 9-12)

So, with the extermination of “native” cultures and “cultures” and the plummeting of “traditions” into oblivion, will end up in the dust of museums without visitors! Access to higher education will be reserved for the “caste” of technocrats; knowledge of the “masses” will be reduced to the minimum, consistent with that required for work performance. Once the “Universal Synarchy” is achieved, technocrats will be the official operators of the Mega-Brain and all its terminals, and at that point the World Empire of Capital will have dominion [“dominion usque ad sidera et usque ad inferos”] for “whoever owns the soil, it is theirs all the way up to Heaven and down to Hell.”
It is quite understandable and natural that the reader of these notes can show a morsel of “doubt” and wonder how it is possible that all this comes about, and how it could happen that the general population – politicians, scientists, sociologists – is totally unaware of the Great Parasite that lurks behind our backs and of whom (almost) no one talks.

“Rothschild”, cartoon of C. Léandre - France 1898.

E. Ronzoni wrote:

> «The dark times in which we live are characterized with respect to past eras in the “totalitarian” and “widespread” way, with which the masses are “conditioned” and for the way in which in the name of Democracy, they are kept “subtly” in the dark about what is being decided against them.»

THE GREAT SEAL OF THE TRILATERAL COMMISSION

In the centre of the seal, appears a Beast with seven heads, the “Beast coming from the sea” as described in the Revelation of St. John. The Beast enwraps a dodecahedron, that is, a solid with 12 faces representing the World. The Beast, therefore, symbolizes the Emperor of the World, and is the Head of the temporal power, with Lucifer and the Patriarch of the World, forming the blasphemous and satanic Most Holy and Indivisible Trinity , namely the Third Masonic Trinity.
The dodecahedron, composed of two square-based pyramids placed above and below a parallelepiped with a square base, with its 6 visible vertices, pinpointing the 6-pointed Star etched on the solid. The 6-pointed Star is a symbol of the Rothschild family and, in ancient times, Druid priests used it to symbolize human sacrifices.
Above the Beast and the Dodecahedron, there are three 6-point Stars. Since the star represents the number 6 (its vertices) and 18 (segments made thus), the meaning of the 3 Stars is 3 times 6 = 666 = the Antichrist and the Mark of the Beast,
3 times 18 = 666 = Declaration of War agaist God.
Over the three 6-pointed Stars, there is the inscription: NOSTER ORDO SECLORUM, composed of 18 letters, which symbolize the 18th degree Knight of the Rose-Croix Scottish Rite of Freemasonry which has the task to eradicate the Sacrifice of Christ on the Cross from the face of the earth.
Under the Beast there is the inscription: EGO TERMINATIO EGO FIDES EGO SCEPTRUM, symbolizing the three powers of Lucifer and of the Holy and Indivisible Masonic Trinity. Lightning manifests the divine will and the omnipotence of the “supreme god”. The two Lightnings, in the claws of the beast, symbolize the dual power of destruction and creation of the “supreme god” of Freemasonry.
The Seal is enclosed in a succession of triple arches, 31 of which are visible to the right and 31 to the left. This number indicates the 31th degrees of Scottish Rite Freemasonry, the degree of the Masonic SAPIENTIA, and that is the art of “binding the hands and feet of the usurpers of the rights of men” (i.e., Catholics).
In this degree, the Mason swears blind obedience to the Most Holy of Holies and Indivisible Masonic Trinity.
In this degree, the Freemason is free from any obligation of oaths, in the past, to other authorities.
The Motto of the 31st degree is: “Justice and Equity.”

The Tower of Babel. The New World Government is none other than the New Tower of Babel wanted by the occult power for the total annihilation of the Church of Christ.

Here is one more testimony from Gore Vidal:

> «I believe that most of what we consider Human History is probably false. We have no way of knowing, apart from what they told us. What we do know is that history is written by those who won the wars, so we know only one side ... Whoever governs desires that no one comes to the "root of the problem" because, if that eventuates, then the people could change the government. Today, the ruler exercises his power through television and the press giving false images of the world!» (See "L'informatore librario" no. 1, 1984).

"Wall Street" (so-called because it was the first American ghetto separating Jews from Americans, and later, as "revenge," therein arose the largest Money Temple) and the City of London, through the various Foundations (Ford, Carnegie, Rockefeller, etc.) that "feed" with inexhaustible "rivers of gold" the "machine" that maintains the gigantic deception.

Even the Kremlin, according to Eugene Melani of "Il Giornale Nuovo," contributes the sum of 5,000 billion lire a year to overturn the "truth" and obfuscate the conscience of the people. And so therefore the World Economic Power manages to keep hidden and viewed as science fiction because, today, it has full control of all the "centres" of power of the earth.
Governments – sorry to say – are "puppets" in its hands; the press, the TV, the radio, the cinema are its "dependents" and the tools of mental conditioning of the people. On the other hand, among intellectuals, historians, sociologists, philosophers, etcetera, no one dares to come out of the rut of official "historiography" permitted and approved by sociology, since each of them is aware that the slightest "offense" would clearly truncate academic career, sinecures, honours, wealth, and would transform their lives into failure, if not tragedy.
If, despite careful vigilance, still some uncorrupted ones come forward, a few brave, some unconquerable, there is for all the same fate: the "excommunication" on the part of official "intelligentsia" and confinement in the "ghetto" of the visionaries, of the vulgar, of the storyteller, of the raving, of the unreliable, of the mentally ill, etcetera.

***

We are aware that even this small work, however incomplete – because of so many things we want to say – will be understood only by a few, but it comes with the hope of inducing "reflection," to study and fathom the depths of the problems and realities, just sketched here.

Also we want it to be an exhortation not to despair but to fight for our future and that of our children, knowing that the pages of the future have not yet been written.

Here's something to think about:

> «After the great intoxication, after the collective euphoria, we will plumb the inner silence that will to lay bare, the loneliness of those who have no certainty, nor myth, nor gods, nor the will to exist. And anguish cometh as never before. That will be the time when many among the masses will begin to ask questions, and to seek answers to the questions: to understand the why, the how, the when.»

And more:

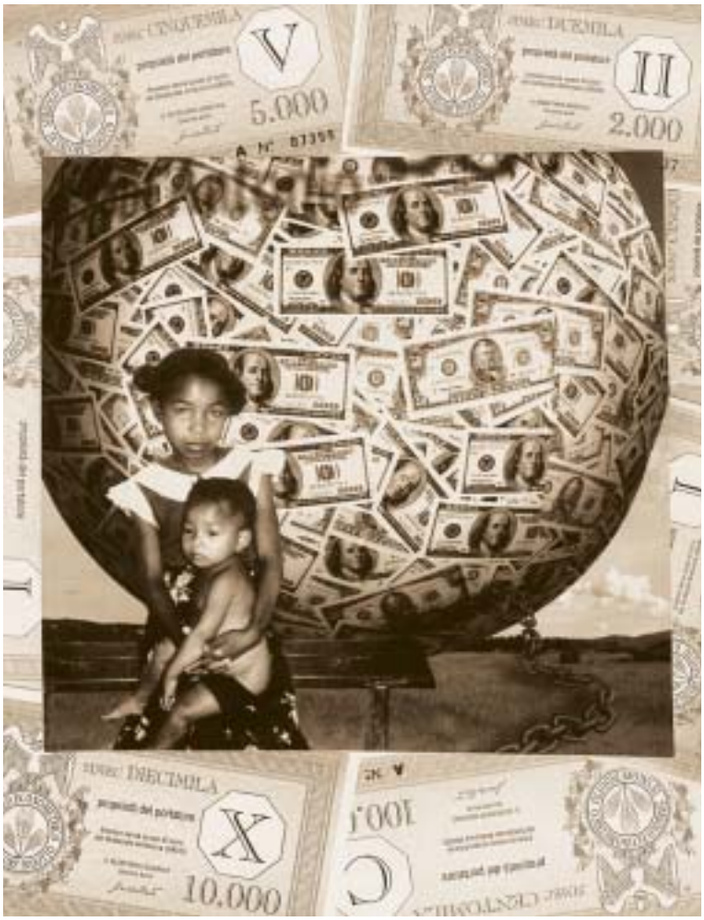
> «The crisis will come upon an unprepared, stunned, helpless, lost mass: a "throng" without any reference to morality, unaccustomed to any sympathetic behavior, educated exclusively in unrestrained selfishness and mutual wellbeing; a mass incapable to design and build. It will be an unprecedented phenomenon because never before has there been manifested such a prevalence of material interest over spiritual values.
> With the God-Mammon collapse, all structures built in its name, and the current wellbeing vanished, suddenly you will have a period of chaos, violence and abuse. The course of events can change only at the hands of the aristocracy capable of effective authority, that is able to embody values, to guide and give security and confidence, to restore concrete forms of solidarity.»

There is always a possibility for the people to rise again, to modify their own destiny. Should men desire it, governments would still be able to "restructure" the "economic system" and therefore the "socio-political;" Christian civilization always has the possibility to avoid disaster.

«The members of the World Government will be appointed by the Dictator. He will choose men from among its scientists, economists, financiers, industrialists and millionaires ...»

«The forced unemployment and hunger ... creates the right of Capital to rule more securely.»

«The Reign of Terror ... is the most economical means to bring the population into quick submission ... »



«... the Goyim (Christians) will destroy each other, but on a scale so colossal that, in the end, just the masses of the proletariat will remain in the world, with a few millionaires devoted to our cause ... and the police force and military sufficient to protect our interests.»

(Mayer Amschel Rothschild, 1773)

The civilized world must first “Restore All things in Christ,” to recover the physical and mental health, an indispensable condition for the “return” of the prerogative of the Sovereign National Monetary Issue:
Only thus would Samson’s hair be cut!!!
We must bring back the use of the “monetary” instrument for the purposes for which it was established. It was a “message of love” and “brotherhood,” of “charity” and of “wellbeing,” a foretaste of God’s generosity!
The peoples must recognize God’s sovereignty over all things and all men; obedience is due only to Him without end and without reserve, to Him the fidelity and confidence of every man.

> «See, I have set before thee this day life and good, death and evil, for I command you today to love the Lord your God, to walk in his ways, to keep His commands, His laws and His ordinances, then you shall live and multiply, and the Lord will bless you ... But if your heart turns away and if you do not listen but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods and serve them, I declare to you today that you shall surely perish ... I take as witnesses today against you, that heaven and earth: I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing, therefore choose life, that you and your descendants may live.» (Deut. 30-15,19).

Suggested BIBLIOGRAPHY

– AURITI GIACINTO, “L’ordinamento internazionale del Sistema monetario” (Ed. Solfanelli).
– A. Z., “L’occhio sopra la Piramide”, (Tip. Artigianelli).
– BANCA D’ITALIA, “La Banca d’Italia ed il problema del Governo della Moneta” (Centro Stampa della Banca d’Italia) (curato da Finocchiaro - Contessa).
– S. BIBBIA, “Deuteronomio” – “Libro di Tobia” – “Apocalisse”.
– BOCHACA JOAQUIN, “La finanza ed il potere” (Edizioni Di Ar).
– BONATESTA ALFREDO, “La sinarchia universale” (Edizioni Il Cinabro).
– CHESSA FEDERICO, “La Moneta” (Giappichelli Editore).
– COSTON HENRY, “La Haute Banque etles Trusts” (Publications Henry C.).
– DI NICOLA UGO, “I movimenti mondialisti” (Ed. Solfanelli).
– GATTONI ROMANO, “Come funziona la Banca d’Italia” (Edizioni Savelli).
– GILLES - Y. BERTIN, “Le multinazionali” (Ed. Il Mulino).
– GOZZOLI SERGIO, “Sulla pelle dei popoli” (Ed. Uomo Libero, 27).
– KRILIENKO ANDREI, “The Affluence of Midas” (Resurgam Press).
– P. MEINVIELLE JULIO, “Conceptos fundamentals de economia” (Cruz y Fierro Editores).
– MONCOMBLE YANN, “La politique le sexe et la finance” (Faits et Documents).
– NOBLEJAS GARCIA J.A., “Espansion y variantes socialmarxistas” e “Organizaciones de origen Judeo-Masonica” - (Riv. “Que Pasa?” nn. 707, 708 e 709).
– POUND EZRA, “Lavoro ed usura” (Ed. Scheiwiller).
– ROMANO DAVID, “Antologia del Talmud” (Plaza & Janes Editores).
– SEARCH R.E., “LincoIn - Money Martyred” (OMNI Publications).
– SELLA DI MONTELUCE PAOLO, “La verità sulla Carta-Moneta” (Pubbl. Riv. del Popolo, 69).
– THOREN THEODORE, “The Truth in Money” (Truth in Money, Inc.).
– TURNER W.E., “Stable Money” (Marvin Evans Co.).

LE BARON

SALOMON

J. DE ROTHSCHILD

—

17 MAI 1864

X 9035

PARIS

TYPOGRAPHIE GÉNÉRALE DE CH. LAHURE

RUE DE FLEURUS, 9

DISCOURS

DISCOURS PRONONCÉ SUR LA TOMBE

DE M. LE BARON

SALOMON DE ROTHSCHILD,

PAR M. ULMANN,

GRAND RABBIN DU CONSISTOIRE CENTRAL,

Le mardi 17 mai 1864.

Chers Frères,

Quelle leçon la Providence nous donne-t-elle aujourd'hui! En frappant une illustre et vénérée famille dans ses plus vives, dans ses plus chères affections, Dieu a-t-il voulu, par un de ces coups éclatants et trop sensibles, hélas! nous rappeler une fois de plus la vérité de ces paroles bibliques : « L'Éternel éprouve ceux qu'il aime et leur demande, comme autrefois au frère de Moïse, une force de résignation égale à la grandeur de leur perte? Ou bien, en brisant presqu'au début de sa carrière une existence si jeune, si pleine de vigueur, d'espérance et d'avenir, la mort a-t-elle dû hâter le moment de nous montrer comment, dans une vie si courte, ont cependant pu se développer, avec une admirable facilité, les plus nobles sentiments, les plus charmantes vertus, et se multiplier les actes les plus méritoires, les plus sublimes exemples de bonté et de charité.

Sans vouloir sonder les impénétrables desseins de la Providence, et quel que soit l'enseignement que nous offre la présence de ce cercueil, serrons-nous autour de la famille si cruellement éprouvée, et mêlons notre deuil à celui des parents qui pleurent leur enfant bien-aimé, des frères qui pleurent un frère adoré, d'une tendre épouse qui pleure son ami de jeunesse, enlevé lorsqu'à peine il avait commencé à goûter avec elle les douces et innocentes joies de la famille!

Notre voix est trop faible pour un si lamentable sujet, trop au-dessous de sa tâche pour retracer la vie et pour honorer comme elle le mérite, la mémoire de M. le baron Salomon James de Rothschild, que Dieu vient d'appeler à lui.

A peine sorti de l'enfance et toujours modeste et sans ambition, Salomon de Rothschild n'a voulu révéler son nom à la communauté que par des actes de bienfaisance. De bonne heure son concours était acquis au Comité consistorial, qui le comptait au nombre de ses membres les plus charitables, et qui vient par l'organe de son digne président, lui payer un si juste tribut d'hommages et de regrets. Prenant au sérieux la belle devise du Comité (אשרי משכיל אל דל) « Heureux celui qui consacre son intelligence aux intérêts des pauvres ; » il faisait le bien en joignant aux inspirations de son cœur généreux le discernement d'un esprit éclairé, et ceux qui étaient admis dans son intimité pourraient vous dire par quels actes admirables il a prouvé que le sentiment du devoir avait autant de part à ses nobles résolutions que sa bonté naturelle. Ses bienfaits, accordés avec autant de délicatesse que de libéralité, étaient marqués au coin de cette charité ingénieuse et élevée qui s'exerçant sans bruit et sans ostentation prévient la misère, qu'elle empêche de se produire, et reçoit, sans les rechercher, les bénédictions de ceux dont elle conjure la perte, en sauvant de la ruine leur fortune chancelante et leur honneur.

Mais, si avec cette sublime timidité, avec ce désintéressement propre seulement aux grandes âmes, Salomon de Rothschild a souvent dérobé à ses plus intimes la connaissance de ses bonnes œuvres, il possédait au suprême degré l'art de prévenir tout le monde en sa faveur par la franchise de son caractère, par l'aménité de ses paroles, par l'affabilité de ses manières, par ses procédés bienveillants qui lui gagnaient tous les cœurs et lui conciliaient promptement l'estime et l'affection de tous ceux qui ont eu le bonheur de l'aborder.

Uni par les liens du mariage à un ange de bonté et de charité, sa belle âme a pris un nouvel essor sous une influence si douce et en harmonie si parfaite avec ses propres inclinations; et la vie qu'il devait partager avec celle qui a si bien partagé ses principes et ses sentiments, lui promettait une existence dont rien ne devait troubler le charme et les joies. Mais qui eût cru que du dais nuptial à la tombe la pente dût être si rapide et le chemin si court? Deux ans à peine se sont écoulés depuis que nous avons vu bénir son union, et déjà nous devons lui adresser un dernier et suprême adieu, et voir la joie de sa famille se changer en deuil et en larmes.

Courbons la tête devant la volonté de Dieu et ne murmurons pas contre les décrets de sa Providence! accomplissons avec résignation le douloureux devoir « de louer le Seigneur pour le mal comme pour le bien » en prononçant ces paroles (בנוך דין אמות) « Hommage au juge suprême! » bénissons la mémoire de celui dont les dépouilles mortelles vont disparaître de devant nos yeux, et dont l'âme remonte vers le Père des miséricordes, pour recevoir là-haut la récompense de ses œuvres, et en laissant profondément gravé dans nos cœurs le souvenir de ses vertus et de son mérite!

DISCOURS PRONONCÉ SUR LA TOMBE

DE M. LE BARON

SALOMON DE ROTHSCHILD,

PAR M. ISIDOR,

GRAND RABBIN.

Le 17 mai 1864.

MES FRÈRES,

Sur le bord de cette tombe si prématurément ouverte, en présence d'un malheur comme celui qui vient de nous frapper, les larmes et les prières sont la seule manifestation convenable, la seule possible.

J'ai cherché tout à l'heure des paroles pour vous consoler, et je n'ai trouvé moi-même que des larmes pour pleurer avec vous.

Oui, pleurons ensemble, et arrosons de nos larmes ce cercueil où nous avons déposé la dépouille mortelle de notre bien-aimé frère, le baron Salomon de Rothschild. En fermant les yeux de ce jeune homme, Dieu nous enlève un de ces hommes d'élite qui sont l'ornement de leur famille, l'honneur et l'espérance de leur communauté, et chacun de nous s'est senti tressaillir quand on est venu nous apporter le triste message de mort, qui, en frappant cette illustre et noble famille, nous frappe tous si douloureusement.

Prions ensemble, mes frères, et prions pour lui, demandons à Dieu d'accueillir son âme avec amour, et de lui donner là-haut les joies et les félicités célestes, les seules durables, en échange de ces félicités qui semblaient devoir être longtemps encore son partage sur cette terre, et au milieu desquelles la mort est venu le surprendre.

Ah! mes frères, de tous ces tombeaux qui nous entourent, nous entendons sortir une voix mystérieuse qui nous répète sans cesse cette lugubre parole de la Bible : « Nous sommes poussière et nous retournons à la poussière. »

Mais il semble que pour graver cette vérité plus profondément dans nos cœurs, Dieu se plaise parfois à frapper, comme aujourd'hui, de ces coups inattendus qui, en confondant notre raison, nous montrent d'une manière irrésistible tout le néant et toute la fragilité des choses humaines.

La légende nous raconte qu'un pèlerin, rencontrant un jour, sur sa route, un jeune arbre arraché du sol, s'arrêta et dit en pleurant : « Jeune arbre, quel malheur que tu aies été sitôt brisé! Que d'om-brage et que de fruits tu aurais pu fournir encore au voyageur fatigué! »

En présence de ce jeune frère, moissonné à la fleur de l'âge, nous pleurons comme le pèlerin, et nous nous écrions :

« Ah ! Seigneur, pourquoi avez-vous abattu cet arbre, ce jeune arbre, et déjà si beau et si plein de fruits ? »

Vos décrets, mon Dieu, sont justes sans doute, mais ils sont terribles parfois, impénétrables toujours ! Pourquoi avez-vous enlevé ce frère à sa jeune compagne qui l'avait rendu si heureux, qui était déjà de moitié avec lui dans toutes ses grandes œuvres, et qui, aujourd'hui est veuve à vingt ans ? à cette enfant qui entre à peine dans la vie, et qui est orpheline avant d'avoir connu son père ? à ses frères et sœur qui l'aimaient si tendrement et qui étaient si fiers de lui ? à ses vénérés parents dont il continuait les nobles traditions d'honneur et de charité, dont la douleur si légitime et si profonde est notre douleur à tous, et qui, si cruellement frappés dans un âge où les affections de famille sont les plus belles, et les plus douces jouissances ? Pourquoi, Seigneur, avez-vous refusé d'exaucer les prières que nous vous avons adressées pour la guérison de ce frère chéri, et avez-vous éteint sans pitié cette belle, cette noble existence ?

A ces pourquoi, mes amis, il n'y a qu'une ré-ponse, c'est celle du prophète : « Mes pensées ne sont pas vos pensées; inclinez-vous et espérez. »

Oui, inclinons-nous et espérons, Dieu a parlé, soumettons-nous au décret de sa divine Providence, et disons du fond de notre cœur : « Que votre volonté se fasse, Seigneur, et quand vous frappez, et quand vous bénissez. »

Entendez-vous la voix de Dieu qui vous adresse cette consolante parole : « Salomon de Rothschild était mûr pour l'éternité, et voilà pourquoi je l'ai appelé près de moi. »

Il était mûr pour l'Éternité; sa vie était courte, trop courte, hélas ! mais il l'a doublée par des bienfaits, il l'a marquée par des actes qui ne s'effaceront jamais.

Qu'importe les années et leur grand nombre ! Dans la balance de Dieu, les œuvres sont tout, et les années ne sont rien. Salomon de Rothschild est mort à l'âge de trente ans, et ces quelques années lui ont suffi pour gagner la couronne de l'immortalité ! Son nom est inscrit partout, du Nord au Sud, partout où s'est accomplie une belle œuvre. Sur les hauteurs où Dieu l'avait placé, il est resté fidèle à ses devoirs, il n'a jamais oublié ni la foi de ses pères, ni les souffrances de l'humanité; l'orgueil n'a point envahi son cœur ; la douceur de son caractère, l'aménité de ses paroles encourageaient ceux qui s'adressaient à lui, et lui faisaient gagner tous les cœurs !

Je voudrais, mes frères, vous raconter quelques-uns de ces actes ; je voudrais vous rapporter quelques-unes de ces nobles et généreuses paroles que j'ai entendu sortir de sa bouche, dans ce comité où j'ai eu le bonheur de siéger à côté de lui et où il a si souvent plaidé la cause des pauvres avec une chaleur qui prouvait tout ce qu'il y avait d'amour et de charité dans son cœur. Mon émotion ne me le permet pas, et c'est à peine si, étouffant la douleur de mon âme, je puis lui adresser un suprême adieu ! Qu'il me suffise de dire ici, chers frères, qu'il marchait déjà sur les traces de ses nobles parents ; qu'il savait déjà, comme eux, compatir à toutes les souffrances, et tendre une main secourable à toutes les misères, qu'il me suffise de vous dire que Salomon de Rothschild meurt pleuré de tous et regretté de tous !

Que pourrait-on dire, d'ailleurs, de plus éloquent que ce concert de bénédictions qui s'élève autour de cette dépouille mortelle ! Les accents de la reconnaissance générale sont une sainte harmonie qui accompagne son âme près de Dieu !

Ah ! soyez consolés, vous tous qui pleurez, soyez consolés, laissez couler vos larmes, mais élevez aussi vos yeux vers le ciel. Il est là-haut, il est près de Dieu, et son âme, unie à celles de ces ombres vénérées qui l'ont précédé dans le séjour des élus, priera pour vous tous, pour sa veuve, pour son enfant, pour ses parents, pour tous ceux qu'il a aimés ici-bas, et qu'il continuera à aimer dans le ciel !

Soyez consolés ! Salomon est entré dans le port, et il n'est plus exposé aux souffrances de ce monde. C'est ici, non la maison des morts, mais la maison des vivants (בית החיים), le lieu de repos, et qui sait ce que l'avenir lui est réservé ! Qui sait si Dieu ne l'a pas appelé près de lui pour éloigner de ses lèvres la coupe du malheur !

Soyez consolés, et s'il est vrai que la sympathie générale adoucit l'amertume de vos souffrances, laissez-moi vous dire que vous n'êtes pas seuls dans la douleur ; nous la partageons, nous mêlons nos larmes à vos larmes, et nous venons jeter avec vous un dernier regard de douleur et de regret sur cette dépouille que la terre va couvrir, mais dont la mémoire vivra, et dont l'âme purifiée remonte radieuse vers Dieu !

Et vous, frère chéri, reposez en paix et jouissez du fruit de vos œuvres. Priez pour ceux que vous avez aimés, et que votre belle âme plane sans cesse au milieu de nous ; vous nous quittez, mais nous ne vous oublierons jamais, nous vous garderons une place dans la mémoire de notre cœur ; car deux choses impérissables nous restent de vous ; sur cette terre, votre nom couronné du souvenir de vos vertus : dans le ciel, votre âme unie à Dieu !

Amen.

DISCOURS PRONONCÉ SUR LA TOMBE

DE M. LE BARON

SALOMON DE ROTHSCHILD,

PAR M. LE Dr ALBERT COHN.

Le 17 mai 1864.

Ne pouvant t'accompagner jusqu'à la dernière demeure, c'est ici, cher ami, que je veux te dire un dernier adieu, à la porte de la maison des vivants. (שער בית החיים)

Il avait à peine un an quand je le vis pour la première fois; depuis cette époque, il a grandi pendant vingt-huit ans, se faisant aimer et chérir par tous ceux qui le connaissaient, qui le recherchaient, car un caractère aimable et généreux lui ouvrait facilement tous les cœurs, lui gagnait cette sympathie universelle dont vous voyez en ce moment la preuve la plus manifeste.

Pour soulager cette immense douleur, tous voudraient partager avec nous le poids de l'affliction générale. Aucun endroit ne fut visité par ce cher ami sans qu'il y laissât des traces de sa nature libérale. Agé de vingt ans, il alla voir le Maroc, et un séjour de quelques heures lui suffit pour gagner sa sollicitude sociale. De retour à Paris, il obtint de sa bonne mère l'envoi d'un médecin particulier, et de cette époque date la régénération de cette population intéressante. En Amérique, comme en Europe, il trouva son bonheur à faire des heureux. Combien de jeunes gens, combien de pères de famille lui doivent l'accès dans leurs carrières? Il y a à peine quelques mois qu'en causant avec moi il me dit ces délicieux mots : « Je voudrais bien sauver quelqu'un, relever de temps en temps une famille qui puisse alors honorablement vivre par le travail. » Quelques jours après, un cas pareil se présenta : qu'il était content d'accomplir ce désir de sa bonne nature ; quelques jours avant ce triste événement, il s'informa encore avec une bien tendre sollicitude si ce premier essai avait bien réussi.

Dans ce moment même, j'en ai la plus entière conviction, au pied du trône céleste, auprès duquel son âme s'est rendue pour s'élever en pureté, en sainteté et en adoration, il implore le Père de la miséricorde pour qu'il veuille bien envoyer un baume consolateur dans tous ces cœurs, qui souffrent tant de son départ précipité ! Aussi, cher ami, tes bons parents ont bien deviné ta pensée, en voulant ajouter à une maison qu'ils ont fondée pour le soulagement de l'humanité souffrante une partie dans laquelle, sous la protection de ta mémoire bénie, bien des existences puissent trouver jusqu'à la fin de leurs jours, sinon une guérison complète, du moins un adoucissement et des soins de tous les instants.

Le printemps vient de perdre sa fleur; car c'est le plus jeune de nos collègues que nous conduisons au champ du repos; son cœur était trop grand pour rester plus longtemps avec nous, il était prêt; aussi vas-tu au repos (לשלום); tandis que nous devons retourner aux labeurs de tous les jours, aux devoirs sérieux que la vie nous impose. Gardant de toi un souvenir ineffaçable, nous nous soumettons aux décrets impénétrables de la Providence par ces mots (יי נתן יי לקח יהי שם יי מברך): l'Éternel nous l'avait donné, l'Eternel nous l'a ôté trop tôt, que son nom reste béni.

Adieu, adieu, cher ami!

EXTRAITS DES JOURNAUX

JOURNAL DES DÉBATS.

« .... Quare mors immatura vagatur? »

Pourquoi la mort prématurée erre-t-elle parmi nous? dit tristement Lucrèce lorsqu'il énumère les fléaux qui peuvent nous faire mettre en doute la justice et la bonté des dieux. L'objection n'est peut-être pas invincible, mais ce n'en est pas moins un des spectacles les plus cruels et les plus mystérieux que de voir frapper à ses côtés, dans la fleur de la jeunesse et dans la plénitude du bonheur, des êtres qui semblaient destinés à faire beaucoup de bien et à jouir longtemps du bien qu'ils auraient fait. Ces tristes réflexions nous assaillaient il y a deux jours, lorsque nous conduisions à sa dernière demeure un jeune homme de vingt-neuf ans, auquel il n'a manqué que de naître dans une condition plus modeste pour mettre dans une pleine lumière les heureux dons qu'il avait reçus de la nature. La fortune, que tant de gens désirent avec excès, agit souvent comme un obstacle, et enchaîne parfois les esprits les plus distingués loin des carrières dans lesquelles ils auraient pris leur essor naturel et rencontré la renom-

mée. Si Salomon de Rothschild était né dans une condition ordinaire, si le monde des affaires, au lieu de le saisir, comme de droit, dès le berceau, l'avait laissé vivre au milieu de nous, condamné comme nous tous à prendre son rang, selon ses facultés, dans la grande mêlée de la vie, nous n'apprendrions aujourd'hui à personne que ce jeune homme était doué d'une vive et remarquable intelligence, d'un goût élevé et délicat pour les lettres, et des instincts les plus nobles et les plus droits dans tout ce qui touche aux affaires publiques. Si pourtant la grande fortune empêche ou détourne parfois de montrer tout ce qu'on peut, elle n'empêche pas de montrer tout ce qu'on vaut; elle peut rendre relativement stériles les plus brillantes qualités de l'esprit, mais elle laisse toute leur liberté aux nobles élans du cœur. Salomon de Rothschild était réellement bon, de cette bonté naturelle et presque involontaire qui agit toujours, qui se sent toujours, comme à l'insu de celui qui en est pénétré, qui se répand en bonnes actions et en bonnes paroles, par une sorte de courant continuel auquel la mort seule a le pouvoir de mettre un terme. Cette bonté était chez lui si ouverte et si sincère qu'elle provoquait à l'amitié les cœurs les moins faciles à séduire, et qu'elle triomphait en fort peu de temps de cette roideur involontaire à laquelle, dans notre société démocratique, toute âme un peu fière se sent d'abord disposée en face d'une grande fortune. Lorsqu'il fut accablé en trois jours par le mal le plus soudain et le plus terrible, sa préoccupation la plus vive fut le chagrin qu'il craignait de causer aux autres. Il ne parlait plus guère que pour supplier qu'on s'évitât une fatigue ou pour dissiper de son mieux les inquiétudes croissantes de sa jeune femme et de ses malheureux parents. C'était entre cette jeune femme et lui un touchant combat à qui ferait meilleure figure et porterait le mieux sa part de cet affreux coup du sort. Quiconque meurt ainsi, l'âme tout occupée de la douleur d'autrui et l'esprit plein de délicates pensées, a réellement accompli sa destinée, car c'est après tout la bonté et le dévouement qui font la véritable perfection de l'homme.

PREVOST-PARADOL.

REVUE DES DEUX MONDES.

Peut-être nous sera-t-il permis encore, quoique bien tard, de nous associer au deuil qui frappait, il y a quinze jours, la famille de M. J. de Rothschild? Les regrets sentis qu'a inspirés la mort de M. Salomon de Rothschild, se sont exprimés par l'empressement universel qui a entouré sa famille, si inopinément, si cruellement atteinte. Salomon de Rothschild est mort à vingt-neuf ans, sans avoir rempli le rôle auquel il était appelé dans les grandes affaires économiques de notre époque; mais à ceux qui l'ont connu, il avait déjà prouvé que ce rôle il l'eût rempli dignement. Il avait une juvénile ardeur d'esprit et une rare chaleur d'âme. Il travaillait avec l'application d'un jeune homme qui aurait eu besoin d'être le fils de ses œuvres. Il aimait les livres, les arts comme les affaires. Il avait une pétulance bonne et communicative. A voir son activité, il semble qu'un instinct secret l'avait averti qu'il devait se hâter de vivre. Mille traits de gracieuse délicatesse, de cordiale générosité, que sa modestie et son bon goût tinrent cachés pendant sa vie, se révèlent maintenant chaque jour, et le font revivre doucement dans la mémoire de sa famille et de ses amis, où sa spirituelle et attachante figure ne sera jamais effacée.

E. Forcade.

31 mai 1864.

LE PETIT JOURNAL.

MORT DU BARON

SALOMON DE ROTHSCHILD.

Que me parle-t-on, en ce monde, d'inégalité de conditions;

Des priviléges de la naissance, de l'éducation, de la richesse et du génie;

De la plus grande part de bonheur inhérente aux favorisés de la terre?

Je ne suis pas toujours de cet avis.

Je crois que plus on est modeste, léger de bagage, mieux on s'en va de ce monde, sans trop d'embarras et de chagrin.

Je crois que les humbles ont parfois leur bonheur dans leur humilité même.

C'est-à-dire qu'ils possèdent bien cette insouciance, ce détachement des biens matériels que commandait, en faveur du spiritualisme, la primitive religion.

La mort est dure à tous, assurément.

Mais s'appeler Horace Vernet, Halévy, Meyerbeer, Flandrin, et quitter le monde quand on a encore des chefs-d'œuvre dans l'esprit et le cœur, C'est peut-être plus cruel que de s'en aller doucement, laissant une honnête médiocrité à sa famille.

Hier est mort un homme tout jeune,

Devant lequel la vie s'ouvrait avec toutes les garanties de bonheur et de succès;

Son nom était une recommandation;

Son esprit était fin, distingué, cultivé;

Sa fortune était immense.

Il s'appelle le baron Salomon de Rothschild.

Le défunt était le troisième fils du baron James de Rothschild.

Il comptait à peine trente ans,

Et avait fait, il y a quelques années, un voyage en Amérique, au point de vue d'études financières sur ce curieux pays.

Revenu de ses excursions, le baron Salomon de Rothschild s'était marié, il y a deux ans, comme les Rothschild se marient, C'est-à-dire en choisissant sa femme dans sa propre famille.

Il avait épousé une jeune personne pleine de distinction, sa cousine de Francfort, la fille de la baronne Charles, sœur du baron Nathaniel.

Depuis 1795, date de la fondation de la maison allemande, il n'est arrivé qu'une fois qu'un fils de ces riches banquiers ait cherché une femme dans une famille étrangère.

Ce fut quand, il y a peu d'années, le jeune baron Gustave épousa la fille de M. Anspach, le savant et honoré conseiller à la cour impériale.

Puisque j'ai l'honneur d'écrire dans un journal populaire, il m'est agréable de dissiper un préjugé très-répandu parmi nous.

On affirme que le premier Rothschild vendait des petits couteaux,

Et s'était enrichi à ce commerce de Langres et de Birmingham.

Il n'en est rien.

Le fondateur de cette dynastie de financiers éminents se nommait Mayer Anselme Rothschild.

Il naquit à Francfort-sur-le-Mein en 1742. Il étudia, pour se préparer au professorat, au collége de Furth.

Mais, suivant sa vocation, il entra comme commis chez un banquier à Hanovre, et s'établit quelques années plus tard, dans sa ville natale avec un bien petit capital, fruit de ses économies.

C'était un homme aussi instruit que persévérant.

A cette époque, l'Allemagne était envahie.

Le grand-duc de Hesse s'enfuit, laissant comme un dépôt sa fortune au jeune financier.

Non-seulement celui-ci la défendit au péril de sa vie, au détriment de sa fortune, Mais il la fit valoir et en doubla l'importance.

Il mourut sans avoir eu la consolation de voir l'électeur revenir dans ses États.

Mayer Anselme Rothschild a, par sa probité et ses talents, puissamment contribué à l'émancipation des israélites.

Pour récompenser ses services, le grand-duc de Francfort avait donné aux juifs la jouissance de tous les droits civils et religieux.

Il avait appelé Rothschild à faire partie du collége d'élection.

En 1813, l'électeur rentra dans ses États et les fils de Rothschild lui restituèrent non-seulement son capital, mais encore les intérêts.

Charmé de cette loyauté, l'électeur leur laissa la somme en dépôt, Et elle vint agrandir les opérations financières de la fraternelle association.

De ce jour, les Rothschild traitent avec les États, négocient des emprunts avec les grandes puissances.

Ils ont été anoblis en 1815 par l'empereur d'Autriche.

Ils ont reçu du roi de Prusse, en 1822, le titre de baron

Et la qualité de conseillers intimes.

Le doyen de la maison actuelle est depuis plusieurs années consul général d'Autriche.

Le véritable fondateur de la famille Rothschild quitta la vie en 1812, laissant dix enfants, dont cinq fils, qui se partagèrent le monde :

Anselme Rothschild, né le 12 juin 1773, dirigea la maison de Francfort;

Salomon Rothschild, né le 9 septembre 1774, dirigea la maison de Paris;

Nathan Rothschild, né le 16 septembre 1777, fonda la maison de Manchester en 1798, qui devint la maison de Londres. Il est mort en 1836;

Charles Rothschild, né le 24 avril 1788, fonda la maison de Naples;

Enfin le cinquième frère, James Rothschild, né le 15 mai 1792, est venu en 1812 s'associer aux opérations de la maison de Paris.

C'est le fils de ce dernier qu'une mort aussi subite que cruelle vient d'emporter à la fleur de l'âge.

Le jeune baron Salomon a succombé à la rupture d'un anévrisme.

On prétend qu'il ne sentait aucune indisposition il y a quelques jours, et que le mal s'est déclaré par un refroidissement, à la suite d'une promenade aux courses de Longchamps.

M. le docteur Rayer, médecin de la famille, autour duquel s'étaient groupées toutes nos célébrités médicales, a donné tous ses soins au malade.

Le baron Salomon de Rothschild laisse une veuve de vingt ans, et un enfant de sept mois.

Les obsèques se feront mardi.

Un concours considérable suivra le cercueil jusqu'au lieu de la sépulture, où, selon le rite israélite, la cérémonie religieuse s'accomplit.

Le sépulcre des Rothschild est situé au cimetière du Père-Lachaise.

C'est un grand et sévère monument, sans ornement, sans statue,

N'ayant comme armoiries qu'un R majuscule gravé sur la pierre

Et des vases de granit remplis de fleurs en toute saison.

Je saluerai bien bas le cercueil de ce grand de la terre que je n'eusse point adulé de son vivant.

Car si la mort est cruelle, c'est assurément quand elle frappe un homme que tout attachait à la vie :

L'éclat d'un grand nom;

La jouissance d'une fortune sans pareille;

La tradition patriarcale de la famille;

Le bonheur dans le mariage;

La joie toute récente de la paternité;

L'avenir triomphant et prospère.

Mais je dirai à tous ceux qui ont aimé et estimé ce jeune homme, à ses parents, à ses amis, aux pauvres qui le connaissaient, cette belle phrase que chante notre Église : Vita mutatur, non tollitur : « La vie n'est pas enlevée à ceux que vous pleurez, elle n'est que changée. »

La voix de la religion est éloquente en condo-léances à ces heures suprêmes de douleurs et de regrets.

Lamartine l'a rappelé dans son langage admirable :

On sent que sa douce parole
A d'autres ne peut se mêler,
Seigneur! et qu'elle ne console
Que ceux qu'on ne peut consoler.

TIMOTHÉE TRIMM.

JOURNAL DES CHASSEURS.

LE BARON
SALOMON DE ROTHSCHILD.

Le Journal des Chasseurs est en deuil; il vient de perdre un de ses meilleurs et de ses plus puissants protecteurs. Le baron Salomon de Rothschild est mort dans toute la force de sa jeunesse et de ses espérances, mort à vingt-sept ans ! Ce deuil est bien plus encore dans notre cœur que dans les quelques mots que nous adressons aujourd'hui à sa mémoire.

Des fonctions, auxquelles nous ne pensons jamais sans regret, nous ont mêlé, pendant trois ans, à la vie de cette grande et bonne famille ; quoique ce temps soit loin déjà, nos sentiments de respect et d'attachement dévoué sont restés les mêmes ; il nous semble qu'il nous est encore permis de prendre une part de ses douleurs.

A vous qui enviez sa fortune et sa grande position ici-bas, le baron James de Rothschild pourrait dire : la Providence ne m'a-t-elle pas fait bien large ma part des misères et des peines de ce monde? Prenez-les ces richesses, ces honneurs, et rendez-moi mes enfants perdus!

De mes petits-fils, l'orgueil de ma vieillesse, l'objet de toute une vie d'honneur et de travail, quatre se sont éteints dans mes bras, et voilà que Dieu me reprend mon fils! Vous, les humbles de la terre, qui vivez dans la paix de la famille et dans la joie de voir grandir vos enfants autour de vous, n'êtes-vous pas plus heureux que moi?

Et elle, la pauvre mère, l'ange de ce foyer désolé, elle, dont la tendre nature ne resta jamais insensible au malheur d'autrui, elle qui toujours racheta ses richesses par l'immensité de sa charité, est-elle assez blessée au plus profond de ses entrailles, son front saigne-t-il assez sous les épines de sa couronne d'or! Un père, une mère qu'elle adorait, ses petits-enfants, son fils, tous ces trésors perdus en quelques années! Est-ce assez d'épreuves et de douleurs?

Le baron Salomon de Rothschild était bien jeune quand nous le vîmes pour la première fois, il avait quinze ans. C'était un cœur ardent et affectueux, il était généreux et affable pour tous. L'homme avait tenu les promesses de l'adolescent. Entré depuis dix-huit mois à peine dans la vie des grandes affections et des grands devoirs, il était bon, fort, intelligent, aimé; devant lui s'ouvrait une carrière dont nul n'aurait mesuré les limites, et voilà déjà qu'il n'est plus ; le jeune athlète s'est couché sous le souffle de la destinée.

Pauvre père, pauvre mère, si grands et si misérables, que je vous plains, que je crois à votre souffrance ! Je ne puis, hélas ! vous apporter qu'un humble tribut de regrets et de sympathie, et prier le ciel qu'il vous console de ceux que vous avez perdus par le bonheur de ceux qui vous restent.

Ch. Godde.

L'UNIVERS ISRAÉLITE.

Juin 1864.

LE BARON

SALOMON DE ROTHSCHILD.

Cette grande et illustre famille israélite qui par ses immenses bienfaits sèche tous les jours tant de larmes et guérit tant de blessures, elle pleure maintenant à son tour et son cœur saigne douloureusement....

Le Seigneur, dans ses desseins impénétrables, lui a enlevé un de ses plus magnifiques ornements, une de ses joies les plus douces, une de ses forces les plus vitales, une de ses rayonnantes espérances d'avenir et de gloire, une de ses plus splendides bénédictions.

Le baron Salomon de Rothschild, troisième fils de M. le baron James de Rothschild, est mort presque subitement, le 14 mai, après avoir gardé le lit pendant trois jours seulement. Son âme est montée au ciel lorsque la vie terrestre semblait encore l'inonder de toutes ses clartés.

Il n'avait que vingt-neuf ans.... Il y avait seulement deux ans qu'il avait épousé sa noble cousine, Adèle de Rothschild, fille du baron Charles, de Francfort, une jeune personne ornée de toutes les grâces et de tous les enchantements de la femme poétique de la Palestine, et de la femme brillante de la civilisation moderne. Elle était le rêve de sa jeunesse, l'attente de sa félicité, la fleur se développant splendidement sous le soleil pour parfumer et illuminer sa vie. Et après qu'il fut uni à l'élue de son cœur et de son âme, le ciel mit le comble à son bonheur en lui accordant un enfant, né en août 1863, au milieu de toutes les joies, de tous les ravissements, de toutes les actions de grâces envoyées au Très-Haut, de tous les actes de charité accomplis envers les hommes!

Pourquoi, hélas! en brisant tout ce bonheur si bien mérité et si noblement employé, la divine Providence nous a-t-elle montré de nouveau que tout est vanité et périssable ici-bas, que nous sommes nés de poussière et que nous retournons à la poussière!

Salomon de Rothschild, bien que fort jeune encore, possédait une haute intelligence qui le rendait digne d'être une des colonnes de cette grande et puissante maison, plus grande et plus puissante que celle de maint souverain assis sur un trône. Mais il avait aussi un cœur large et magnanime, ouvert à tous les sentiments élevés, à toutes les généreuses inspirations, à toutes les bonnes et belles actions, Son nom rappelait ces paroles de l'Écriture dites du roi d'Israël, fils de David : ויתן אלהים חכמה לשלמה ותבונה הרבה מאד ורחב לב כחול אשר על שפת הים « Et Dieu donna la sagesse à Salomon, et un vaste esprit, et une étendue de cœur comme le sable sur le bord de la mer. » (I Rois, V, 9.)

Il possédait surtout le caractère le plus affable, le plus sympathique, le plus liant. Jouissant d'une des plus brillantes positions sociales, il se montrait gracieux, aimable, charmant envers tous, riches comme pauvres, grands comme petits. Dans ses rapports avec les hommes, on ne voyait sa haute fortune que dans ses bienfaits.

C'est à un voyage au Maroc qu'il fit, en 1856, qu'on doit le commencement de la régénération de nos malheureux coreligionnaires de ce pays. Tout jeune, à peine âgé de vingt ans, il demanda énergiquement au pacha de Tétuan une protection pour ses frères. En Amérique, où il passa près de deux ans, de 1859 à 1861, il sauva la vie à une jeune personne qui s'était jetée à la mer, et il fut nommé membre de la société des sauveteurs. Mais de tout cela, il ne parla jamais.

C'était une nature généreuse, heureuse de faire le bien sur une large échelle, et toujours à l'insu de tout le monde.

La grande et irréparable perte que font en lui sa famille, ses amis, la société tout entière, est surtout bien douloureuse pour notre communauté et notre culte. Il en était un des plus fermes soutiens. Comme tous les membres de sa famille, il portait avec bonheur et orgueil le titre d'israélite; ses sentiments religieux éclataient en toute circonstance, et sa fraternité se lisait en lettres d'or partout où il y avait une œuvre d'humanité à accomplir. Sur toutes les listes de souscriptions charitables, son nom brillait d'un vif éclat. Membre du Comité de bienfaisance et de la Société des apprentis, il s'occupait avec le plus ardent dévouement des besoins et des souffrances de nos pauvres, de nos malades, de nos veuves et de nos orphelins. Agissant ainsi pendant son trop court séjour sur la terre, sa charité lui survit au milieu de nous et fera à jamais bénir sa mémoire.

Les regrets, la consternation de la communauté sont grands et légitimes. La situation du judaïsme est fort précaire dans les temps modernes. Beaucoup d'hommes nés dans notre sein, une fois arrivés à la richesse, à la puissance, à une haute position, ne nous connaissent plus, tournent le dos à l'assemblée du Seigneur et à son culte, renient leur naissance, leurs pères et mères, tout ce qu'il y a de sacré sur la terre. Salomon de Rothschild était un appui fidèle, courageux, inébranlable de la maison de Jacob; nous pouvions compter sur lui comme sur un vrai fils de Juda: il était une forte et brillante espérance de notre avenir religieux et social au milieu des peuples. « Dieu nous l'avait donné, et Dieu, hélas! nous l'a repris. »

Le ciel nous l'a enlevé dans la fleur de son âge, avant qu'il ait pu développer tous les trésors de son cœur et de son âme, avant qu'il ait pu vider ici-bas la corne d'abondance de sa douce et bienfaisante bonté. Il repose maintenant dans le sein de l'Éternel, à côté de son grand-père et de sa grand'mère Salomon de Rothschild, dont nous avons pleuré naguère la mort comme un malheur public. « Son tré-
« pas a semé le deuil parmi nous, tandis que lui « récoltera là-haut, avec joie, les fruits de ses ver-« tus, הזרעים בדמעה ברנה יקצרו; il est parti au mi« lieu de nos larmes, retournant dans sa céleste « patrie, où il est reçu avec allégresse, portant les « gerbes abondantes de ses œuvres méritoires, et les « déposant sur l'autel du divin sanctuaire, comme
« une digne et immortelle offrande au Seigneur. »
הליך ילך ובכה נשא משך הזרע בא יבא ברנה נשא אלמתיו

Que la mémoire de ce juste soit bénie à jamais!
זכר צדיק לברכה

S. Bloch.

LE CONSTITUTIONNEL.

Ce matin, vers dix heures, toute l'entrée du faubourg Saint-Honoré était remplie par le concours immense des personnes venues pour assister aux obsèques de M. le baron Salomon de Rothschild, enlevé d'une manière si douloureuse et si prématurée à sa famille et à ses amis. Le monde officiel, le monde financier étaient représentés par toutes leurs sommités.

M. le baron James de Rothschild avait voulu suivre le corps de son fils. Sa santé affaiblie l'a forcé de monter en voiture; chacun était attendri par la douleur profonde dans laquelle il était plongé.

Le cortége a suivi les boulevards pour se rendre au cimetière de l'Est. L'affluence était telle aux abords de l'hôtel du défunt, qu'il a fallu interrompre la circulation des voitures à l'entrée du faubourg Saint-Honoré.

Une très-nombreuse assistance a suivi le corps jusqu'au champ du repos.

LA FRANCE.

Aujourd'hui, à dix heures, ont eu lieu les obsèques de M. le baron Salomon de Rothschild, qu'une mort soudaine vient d'enlever, dans la force de l'âge, à l'affection de sa famille et de ses amis.

Tout ce que Paris compte d'illustrations dans les rangs de la haute société, dans le monde de la politique, de la finance, de la presse, des lettres, des sciences et des arts, était accouru à cette triste cérémonie, et avait voulu donner à la famille de Rothschild un éclatant témoignage de l'universelle sympathie dont elle est l'objet.

Tout le monde sait que c'est bien moins par le prestige de son immense fortune que par sa bienveillance, son goût éclairé, le concours qu'elle donne à toute œuvre belle, généreuse ou utile, mais surtout par son inépuisable charité, que la famille Rothschild a conquis l'estime et la haute considération qui l'entourent.

Le deuil était conduit par M. le baron James de Rothschild qui, obéissant à une émouvante tradition de la religion israélite, n'a voulu céder à personne le douloureux devoir d'accompagner le corps de son fils jusqu'à sa dernière demeure. Il était suivi de ses deux autres fils, MM. Gustave et Alphonse de Rothschild.

Le convoi a parcouru tous les boulevards jusqu'au cimetière du Père-Lachaise, où le corps a été inhumé, et où deux discours ont été prononcés sur le cercueil.

M. le grand rabbin du Consistoire central, et M. le grand rabbin de Paris, escortés de leurs coadjuteurs, ont tenu à honneur de présider eux-mêmes à la cérémonie funèbre, donnant, au nom de la religion, cette marque de haute sympathie à une famille qui n'oublie pas que la richesse vient de Dieu, et que nous ne devons nous regarder ici-bas, auprès de nos frères malheureux, que comme les distributeurs des dons que la Providence nous accorde.

J. Cohen.

MONITEUR DU SOIR.

17 mai 1864.

Tous les journaux de Paris ont rendu compte des funérailles de Salomon de Rothschild, auxquelles la capitale tout entière semblait avoir pris part. Le Moniteur du soir du 17 mai donne les détails suivants :

« Les obsèques de M. le baron Salomon de Rothschild ont été célébrées ce matin en présence d'une assistance considérable, dans laquelle figuraient toutes les illustrations de Paris. L'hôtel de la rue Saint-Honoré pouvait à peine contenir les invités.

« A dix heures, le corps du défunt a été placé sur un char traîné par deux chevaux, et le cortége s'est mis en marche dans l'ordre suivant pour se rendre par les boulevards au cimetière du Père-Lachaise.

« Le char funèbre était précédé d'une voiture dans laquelle se trouvaient le grand rabbin du Consistoire central et le grand rabbin du Consistoire de Paris.

« Après le char marchaient M. le baron James de

Rothschild, père du baron Salomon ; MM. Alphonse de Rothschild, Gustave de Rothschild et Edmond de Rothschild, frères du défunt, conduisant le deuil.

« Venaient ensuite les serviteurs de la maison, les élèves des écoles israélites, les employés de la maison Rothschild, les employés des chemins de fer du Nord et de l'Est.

« Les invités avaient pris place dans les voitures de deuil. On remarquait parmi eux S. Exc. M. Fould, ministre des finances; le maréchal Magnan, M. le duc de Morny, M. le comte de Persigny, M. le comte Walewski, M. Vuitry, gouverneur de la Banque; M. de Forcade La Roquette, M. Thiers, M. Berryer, M. le général Changarnier, etc.

« Les restes du baron Salomon ont été déposés dans le caveau de la famille de Rothschild après la célébration de la cérémonie funèbre prescrite par le culte israélite. »

On remarquait aussi dans le convoi funèbre le personnel des ambassades d'Autriche, de Prusse de Bavière, etc. Un premier discours fort touchant a été prononcé, à la porte du cimetière, par M. Albert Cohn, président du Comité de bienfaisance; et sur la tombe même, MM. les grands rabbins se sont rendus les organes de la communauté et de la religion, et ont accompagné par leurs prières l'ame d'un noble enfant d'Israël au ciel.

Les parents du défunt ont envoyé dix mille francs

au Comité consistorial de bienfaisance, douze mille francs à l'administration de l'assistance publique de Paris, et ils ont l'intention d'ajouter et d'entretenir, en souvenir de son nom, une section pour les maladies incurables à l'hôpital israélite.

CORRESPONDANCE

DE L'UNIVERS ISRAÉLITE.

Tétuan (Maroc), 13 juin.

Notre communauté a appris avec une profonde douleur le décès de M. le baron Salomon de Rothschild et a célébré un service funèbre en son honneur le 4 de ce mois. J'ai prononcé un discours espagnol dans ma synagogue, que M. le baron Salomon a visitée lors de son passage à Tétuan. C'est à lui que notre ville est redevable d'un service de santé et de tant d'autres bienfaits. Après les paroles de regrets bien senties, prononcées par M. le grand rabbin Isaac ben Walid sur la perte cruelle de ce noble jeune homme, M. le docteur Schmidt a prononcé également un discours très-touchant qui a vivement ému tous les assistants. Puis M. le professeur Hermann Cohn a fait une belle prière hébraïque et dix élèves de son école ont chanté en adagio les psaumes 49 et 91. La cérémonie a eu lieu dans le local de l'école contiguë à l'établissement de pharmacie fondé par la famille de Rothschild.

LA FRANCE CENTRALE.

Paris, 19 mai 1864.

Le baron Salomon est mort à vingt-neuf ans, d'une inflammation de poitrine compliquée d'une maladie de cœur; depuis près de deux mois, il était souffrant, mais il ne s'est alité que l'avant-veille de sa mort:

Ce jeune homme, que tous ceux qui le connaissaient aimaient et estimaient, laisse après lui de profonds regrets, aussi ne faut-il pas s'étonner de la foule immense qui suivait à pied ou en voiture le char mortuaire qui l'a porté jusqu'au cimetière du Père-Lachaise.

Si quelque chose peut adoucir la douleur de la famille Rothschild, ce sera, sans doute, de la voir partagée par tant de gens qu'elle ne connaît même pas, mais qui, eux, connaissent l'honorabilité, la bonté et l'inépuisable bienfaisance des Rothschild.

Comme son père, comme sa mère, comme ses frères, le baron Salomon poussait la charité jusqu'à la prodigalité, si tant est cependant que l'on puisse être taxé de prodigalité en tendant sa main à toutes les misères, en se laissant émouvoir par tous les malheurs. Comme toute sa famille aussi le baron Salomon cachait son ardente charité. Le baron Salamon était, non-seulement l'associé de la plus grande maison de banque française, mais encore de la maison de bienfaisance la plus riche en bonnes œuvres, la plus généreuse en véritable commisération.

Je ne saurais vous faire comprendre à quel point a été universelle la sympathie dont on a entouré la famille Rothschild. Autour de ce père et de ces frères si douloureusement blessés dans leur plus chère affection se pressait une foule où tous les rangs, toutes les opinions se trouvaient confondus et le peuple parisien s'est associé à cette immense manifestation, parce qu'il savait ce que la mort venait de lui ravir.

C'était, je vous l'atteste, un navrant et tout à la fois consolant spectacle que ce convoi conduit par un père et par trois frères désolés et que suivaient si douloureusement émus tant de serviteurs, tant d'obligés, tant d'amis qui ont voulu accompagner jusqu'au cimetière la chère dépouille mortelle d'un jeune homme si tendrement aimé.

Vous me permettrez, pour aujourd'hui, de faire trêve à la politique et de ne vous parler que du baron Salomon, car je me sens encore sous l'impression de cette grande tristesse dans laquelle nous nous recueillions avant-hier, et par le temps où nous vivons, il y a une certaine douceur à éprouver de telles tristesses, à sentir ainsi que l'on ne vit pas seul et que le stoïcisme de l'égoïsme n'a point entièrement desséché votre cœur.

Paul Beurtheret.

LE CHARIVARI.

17 mai 1864.

Je ne peux terminer cette lettre sans dire un mot de la triste nouvelle qui est venue surprendre si péniblement la Bourse d'hier et que tout le monde connaît à cette heure ; je veux parler de la mort du baron Salomon de Rothschild, un des fils du célèbre banquier, le roi de la finance européenne. Le baron Salomon a succombé en peu de jours, tout jeune encore ; il avait à peine trente ans. Tous ceux qui l'ont connu s'accordaient à reconnaître les qualités de cœur et d'esprit qui le distinguaient, une rare aménité de caractère, le goût inné des arts et des façons généreuses de dépenser en grand seigneur une immense fortune. Il était adoré de sa famille qui l'appelait l'enfant prodigue, mot exprimant non un reproche mais l'éloge de ses qualités. Cette mort inattendue et si prématurée a produit à la Bourse une vive et profonde émotion.

Agréez, etc. CASTORINE.

Pour copie conforme :

S. ZABBAN.

DIVERS

LE CHAPEAU

DE M. DE ROTHSCHILD.

Il existe à la Havane, comme dans la plupart des grands centres à l'étranger où peut s'accumuler une population française, une institution qui, sous le nom de Société française de bienfaisance, et sous la présidence du consul général de France, rend de grands services à nos compatriotes nécessiteux. Le zèle des administrateurs est grand, l'empressement des souscripteurs méritoire, mais les obligations de la Société sont lourdes et la Société n'est pas riche.

Pendant mon séjour à la Havane, en 1855, je fus chargé par M. Durège, alors chef de la maison Mangoaga, Ducatel et C^ie^, et vice-président annuel, de faire quelques extraits dans les registres de la Société française.

Un article de recettes à la caisse attira mon attention; il était ainsi conçu :

Le chapeau de M. de Rothschild, deux cent cinquante francs.

Je priai M. Durège de m'en donner l'explication, et voici ce qu'il me dit :

« Dans le cours de son voyage en Amérique, le fils de M. le baron de Rothschild passa par la Havane et se présenta chez MM. Mangoaga, Ducatel et C^ie^, sur lesquels il avait une lettre de crédit. Il s'informa de tout ce qui pouvait attirer l'attention d'un étranger. Après renseignements pris avec soin sur la fabrication du sucre, la culture du tabac, du café, les richesses agricoles et industrielles de l'île, l'importance du mouvement commercial, le système financier en usage, enfin l'éternelle question de l'esclavage, il s'enquit aussi de ces petits objets, futiles en apparence, mais qui, rappelant matériellement les mœurs et les habitudes des pays parcourus, ont toujours un certain attrait pour le voyageur.

« A la Havane, tout le monde, riche ou pauvre, esclave ou grand d'Espagne, porte pour coiffure le chapeau de Panama, dit chapeau de Jipijapa.

« M. de Rothschild voulut en avoir un, et demanda qu'on l'accompagnât. Un employé de M. Durège fut chargé de cette mission. On demanda de beaux chapeaux, et le marchand d'étaler avec empressement ce qu'il avait de mieux. M. de Rothschild, en homme de goût, choisit entre tous un chapeau dont le tissu, plus souple et plus fin que la soie de l'Inde, en avait jusqu'au brillant et le reflet doré. Il s'informe du prix :

« C'est trois cents piastres, répondit le marchand.

« — Quinze cents francs! jamais mon père ne me « pardonnerait une pareille folie. »

« On choisit autre chose, et M. de Rothschild rapporta un fort joli chapeau de cinquante piastres. Chacun lui fit compliment sur la belle qualité et le prix modéré qu'il avait payé.

« J'en avais d'abord choisi un plus beau; mais « quinze cents francs, monsieur! j'eusse mérité que « mon père me déshérităt.

« Oh! monsieur votre père peut heureusement, « reprend M. Durège, vous pardonner sans se ruiner une fantaisie de quinze cents francs.

« — Sans doute, et vous m'avez mal compris, ré- « pond sérieusement M. de Rothschild; ce n'est pas « les quinze cents francs dépensés que mon père « me reprocherait, c'est le chapeau pris en échange « de cette somme, quand j'aurais pu si facilement « l'employer mieux. Aussi, monsieur Durège, veuil- « lez débiter la maison de mon père de trois cents « piastres, dont je dispose; vous voudrez bien pré- « lever cinquante piastres et faire payer mon cha- « pelier; puis vous verserez deux cent cinquante « piastres à la Société française de bienfaisance. Si « mon père me demande compte de cette somme, « il approuvera, je le sais, celui que je lui en ren- « drai. »

« Telle est l'histoire du chapeau de M. de Rothschild. En est-il beaucoup qui la vaillent? Ai-je eu tort d'en conserver précieusement le souvenir? Ne serait-ce pas dommage de la laisser ignorer? »

Ad. E. B.....

Bordeaux, 29 mai 1864.

. . . . . .

Je ne vous demande rien, et je n'ai pas besoin de vous.

Mais je suis avec vous parce que vous souffrez, et je vous aime parce que vous pleurez.

Mais aussi vous avez la foi, me dit-on, et si votre religion, comme les autres, vous promet les récompenses futures lorsque vous avez été bons, vous n'avez plus à souffrir ni à pleurer, pauvre père !

Quelle sainte parole on me dit de votre fils ! huit jours avant de mourir de cette mort qu'il n'attendait pas, il donne, un matin en se levant, dix mille francs à son homme de confiance, en lui disant : « Cherchez quelqu'un à sauver !

S'il a dit cette magnifique parole, plus magnifique que tous vos trésors — et elle est trop belle pour que je ne veuille pas croire qu'il l'ait dite — ne devez-vous pas être consolé, et ne sentez-vous pas, croyant, que votre enfant est à sa vraie place à cette heure?

J'ai eu besoin d'être consolé par la vérité, et comme votre mal a besoin d'être consolé, je vous apporte ce que je peux, à vous qui êtes en ce moment le plus misérable des hommes et que je plains du plus profond de mon âme, d'après ce que je pouvais pressentir, et d'après ce qu'on me dit de votre immense douleur.

Ceux qui ont été soulagés par votre bonté, et par la bonté des vôtres, ceux qui, sans y avoir eu recours, connaissent cette bonté, doivent souffrir et pleurer avec vous. — Moi, qui ne vous connais pas, je vous apporte ma parole de commisération et de consolation, et, si peu qu'elle puisse être et faire, je souhaite qu'elle vous arrive, parce qu'il me semble qu'elle doit vous soulager un peu.

Paris. — Imprimerie de Ch. Lahure, rue de Fleurus, 9.

LE BARON

JAMES DE ROTHSCHILD.

1844-1881.

PARIS,

DAMASCÈNE MORGAND, LIBRAIRE,

55, PASSAGE DES PANORAMAS.

1884.

Extrait du Catalogue des livres composant la bibliothèque de feu M. le Baron James de Rothschild.

1844 ~ 1881

LE BARON

JAMES DE ROTHSCHILD

1844-1881

Trois ans se sont écoulés depuis que la mort a ravi James de Rothschild, et son souvenir est encore si vivant en nous, le vide que sa perte a laissé dans notre existence est encore si profond, que ce n'est pas sans une bien douloureuse émotion que nous prenons la plume pour retracer en quelques mots une vie si noblement remplie. Peut-être eussions-nous réussi à hâter la publication, depuis si longtemps attendue, de ce catalogue, si nous n'avions reculé de jour en jour devant l'accomplissement de cette pénible tâche.

Nathan-James-Édouard de Rothschild naquit à Paris le 28 octobre 1844. Il était fils du baron Nathaniel et de la baronne Charlotte de Rothschild. Il tenait de son père cet esprit droit et lucide, cette entente des affaires, cette mémoire prodigieuse qui ont fait l'étonnement de tous ceux qui l'ont connu. Quant à sa mère, qui occupe une place si distinguée dans la haute société parisienne, elle ne nous en voudra pas de dire qu'il lui devait par-dessus tout l'amour du beau.

De bonne heure le jeune James entra au lycée Bonaparte (aujourd'hui lycée Condorcet), et nul n'apporta plus de zèle ni de régularité dans ses études classiques. Ce fut sur les bancs du collège que nous eûmes la bonne fortune de nous lier avec lui. Nous pourrions dire le jour où commença cette liaison : ce fut au banquet de la Saint-Charlemagne de l'année 1859, et, depuis lors, elle n'a jamais cessé d'être intime ; elle n'a été rompue que par la mort !

James de Rothschild n'avait pas plus de douze ans qu'il commençait à se former une petite bibliothèque. Les livres étaient les seuls cadeaux qui lui fissent plaisir le jour des étrennes. A peine adolescent il se mit en relations avec M. Potier, le savant libraire dont la maison était le rendez-vous de tout ce que Paris comptait d'amateurs distingués. Ce n'étaient pas alors les productions du XVIII[e] siècle, ni les ouvrages des romantiques que l'on recherchait avec passion ; la mode était aux classiques ; on s'intéressait même encore aux auteurs grecs et latins. James de Rothschild se familiarisa ainsi avec les livres sérieux, et, lorsqu'il se consacra plus spécialement à l'étude de nos vieux poètes et des grands écrivains du XVII[e] siècle, il n'en conserva pas moins le respect des lettres anciennes.

En 1862, James de Rothschild quitta le lycée, laissant à ses maîtres et à ses camarades les plus excellents souvenirs. Il entra à l'école de droit, où beaucoup d'entre nous le suivirent. Après les cours, nous nous réunissions souvent chez lui, dans cet hôtel de la rue Taitbout qui disparut lors du percement de la rue La Fayette. Notre ami nous surprenait sans cesse par ses goûts simples et par son ardeur au travail. L'activité de son esprit lui permettait d'embrasser à la fois les recherches les plus diverses. Entraîné dans les conférences, alors en grande vogue parmi les jeunes gens, il s'y fit remarquer par le soin avec lequel il suivait toutes les questions qui y étaient discutées. Il publia en 1863 un Essai sur les Satires de Mathurin Régnier, dont il avait donné lecture à la Conférence du Rez-de-Chaussée. Cet essai, qu'il eût voulu plus tard refondre et développer, atteste déjà une véritable connaissance de notre ancienne poésie ; il est écrit de ce style clair et châtié que nous retrouvons dans tout ce qui est sorti de sa plume.

Bien qu'une partie de son temps fût consacrée à des lectures variées et, qu'il suivît avec une ponctualité exemplaire tous les cours de la faculté de droit, il voulut encore se familiariser avec la jurisprudence pratique. Il se fit clerc d'avoué, et fréquenta l'étude de Me de Brotonne. Ce ne fut pas là une fantaisie passagère. Il avait compris que la connaissance approfondie des lois et de la procédure lui serait d'un précieux secours dans le maniement des grandes affaires dont il était appelé à s'occuper un jour.

Après avoir passé dix mois de l'année dans un labeur assidu, il prenait généralement ses vacances en Italie, de préférence à Venise et, là, il visitait les musées et fouillait les boutiques des libraires. Il lui arriva plusieurs fois de sauver de la dispersion des collections précieuses. Ce fut ainsi qu'il conserva à l'Italie un millier de pièces, presque toutes italiennes, relatives à la bataille de Lépante. Cette réunion unique est aujourd'hui une des curiosités de la Bibliothèque Marcienne. Une autre fois, il se rendit acquéreur des archives de la famille Mocenigo ; il les offrit à la Bibliothèque de la Sorbonne.

Quand venait la fin des vacances, James reprenait ses études au jour dit. Le 9 août 1865, il fut reçu licencié en droit, et, le 14 novembre suivant, il prêta serment comme avocat stagiaire. Le 17 février 1866 il plaida pour la première fois à la cour d'assises, et, pendant trois ans il fut fréquemment appelé à prendre la parole devant les jurés. Mais les audiences criminelles n'étaient pas les seules qu'il suivît ; il plaida aussi diverses affaires devant la juridiction civile. L'étonnement de ses clients était grand quand ils se voyaient en présence d'un avocat qui ne réclamait pas d'honoraires et qui parfois ne les aidait pas moins de sa bourse que de ses conseils.

Entre les audiences, il assistait presque chaque semaine aux conférences des stagiaires ou à celles des attachés au parquet de la cour. Ce fut à l'une des réunions des attachés qu'il lut un mémoire intitulé : De la naturalisation en France, sous la loi du 3 Décembre 1849, et des modifications introduites par la loi du 29 Juin 1867. Ce mémoire fut imprimé au mois d'octobre 1867 dans la Revue pratique de droit français.

James de Rothschild se rappela toujours avec bonheur le temps qu'il avait passé au palais. Il avait conservé les plus cordiales relations, non seulement avec le jeune barreau, mais avec les avocats plus anciens, avec une foule de conseillers et de juges, qui avaient été unanimes à l'apprécier.

En dehors du palais, il ne négligeait aucune occasion de faire le bien. Choisi comme délégué cantonal pour le VIII[e] arrondissement de Paris, il visitait les écoles, distribuait des encouragements aux maîtres et aux élèves ; il s'intéressait à la Société d'instruction élémentaire, à la Société protectrice de l'enfance, à la Société de patronage des jeunes détenus et à toutes les œuvres du même genre. Les établissements de bienfaisance israélites, dus pour la plupart à la munificence de sa famille, ne pouvaient le laisser indifférent ; il prodiguait à tous son argent et, chose plus rare, son temps et sa peine.

Une société à la fondation de laquelle James de Rothschild prit une part importante fut la Société de médecine légale, qui se constitua le 10 février 1868. Il fut nommé secrétaire des séances, tandis que la présidence était dévolue au D[r] Alph. Devergie. Il exposa lui-même plusieurs affaires délicates, et ne cessa de prendre part aux travaux communs qu'après s'être convaincu que l'existence de la société était assurée et qu'elle pouvait se passer de son concours.

Au mois de février 1870, James de Rothschild perdit son père, le baron Nathaniel à qui l'unissait la plus tendre affection et qu'il avait toujours entouré des soins les plus touchants. Le premier usage qu'il fit de sa fortune fut d'honorer par une œuvre durable le souvenir de ce père bien-aimé.

En visitant les écoles israélites du Marais, il avait été frappé d'y voir un grand nombre d'enfants chétifs et débiles ; ce fut à ces enfants qu'il résolut de venir en aide. La ville de Paris avait récemment fondé à Berck-sur-Mer, sous le haut patronage de l'impératrice Eugénie, un hôpital destiné au traitement des jeunes scrofuleux par l'hydrothérapie maritime ; on y constatait déjà des cures merveilleuses ; il n'y avait qu'à suivre cet exemple, à créer dans des proportions réduites un établissement où les petits malades fussent reçus sans aucune de ces formalités administratives dont la lenteur pouvait compromettre leur guérison. Telle fut l'origine de l'hôpital Nathaniel de Rothschild.

Le commencement de l'année 1870 fut une époque laborieuse. James de Rothschild, qui jusque là n'avait pas voulu distraire une heure de ses études en s'occupant d'affaires financières, fut appelé à remplir dans le bureau de la rue Laffite l'importante place que la mort de son père y laissait vacante. Dès le premier jour ses aptitudes naturelles se révélèrent ; il devint pour ses oncles un précieux collaborateur. En même temps il fut nommé membre du comité de direction du chemin de fer du Nord, où ses talents d'administrateur, son horreur de la routine et sa sollicitude pour le personnel de la compagnie ne tardèrent pas à se montrer.

Quelques mois plus tard la guerre éclata entre la France et l'Allemagne. Le baron James, qui était né Anglais, mais qui, à sa majorité, avait réclamé la nationalité française, tint à remplir son devoir de citoyen. Il eût pu exciper de sa qualité de fils aîné de veuve et laisser à d'autres le soin de défendre la patrie ; il préféra s'enrôler dans un bataillon de marche et s'exposa volontairement à toutes les souffrances, à tous les dangers du siège de Paris. Sa noble conduite lui valut la médaille militaire, distinction dont il eût eu le droit d'être fier, mais dont il ne fit jamais parade. Nul ne se rappelle lui avoir entendu raconter ses campagnes ; par contre, ses camarades du régiment n'ont pas oublié les services qu'il leur rendit pendant ces longs mois où la famille Rothschild soulagea tant de misères.

A peine les portes de Paris furent-elles ouvertes que le baron James voulut avoir des nouvelles de son hôpital de Berck. Les travaux étaient fort avancés au moment de la déclaration de guerre, et les bâtiments, qui devaient recevoir des enfants, avaient donné asile à des soldats blessés ou convalescents. N'était-ce pas là une inauguration digne de cette belle œuvre ?

*

Le voyage de James dans le Nord fut marqué par un triste accident. Il se cassa la jambe dans la gare de Boulogne, et dut rester dans cette ville jusqu'à guérison complète ; mais, par une juste compensation, un événement heureux marqua sa convalescence. Il célébra ses fiançailles avec sa cousine, Mlle Thérèse de Rothschild, de Francfort-sur-Mein, que les qualités les plus charmantes rendaient digne de devenir sa compagne. Le mariage fut célébré à Francfort le 18 octobre 1871.

James de Rothschild avait de tout temps aimé la vie calme et tranquille ; aussi le mariage ne changea-t-il guère ses habitudes. Il partageait ses journées entre sa famille, ses affaires et ses livres. Il avait peu de penchant pour les voyages et ne quittait guère Paris que pour faire de rapides excursions à Francfort ou à Londres. Les séjours qu'il fit en Angleterre furent toujours profitables soit à sa bibliothèque, soit à ses études favorites. Il était bien connu, non seulement chez les libraires de Piccadilly et de Bond-Street, mais encore au Musée Britannique, où il venait travailler avec ardeur dès qu'il pouvait s'échapper de la Cité.

Les autres déplacements auxquels le baron James se prêtait volontiers, c'étaient ses excursions en Médoc, où il visitait régulièrement sa propriété de Mouton. Là aussi il marqua son empreinte par une œuvre utile : la fondation d'une école et d'un asile.

Sa bienfaisance intelligente rendit son nom populaire dans tout le Médoc ; aussi un groupe important d'électeurs lui offrit-il dans le département de la Gironde une candidature législative qui eût probablement rallié tous les suffrages ; mais il n'avait pas d'ambition politique. Il ne comprenait pas qu'un professeur pût quitter sa chaire, qu'un savant s'éloignât de ses livres ou de son laboratoire, pour se lancer dans les luttes le plus souvent stériles des partis. Il repoussa donc les ouvertures qui lui étaient faites, et le triste spectacle que nos assemblées parlementaires ont offert depuis quelques années ne nous fait pas regretter qu'il n'ait pas eu le désir d'y siéger.

Nous avons dit que James de Rothschild rêvait une existence tranquille et ne se déplaçait qu'à regret. Le seul véritable voyage qu'il fit dans les dernières années de sa vie fut le voyage de Russie. Il se mit en route au mois de janvier 1874, avec son oncle le baron Edmond de Rothschild. Son absence se prolongea pendant plus de six semaines. Le grand pays qu'il visitait et dont il put contempler les splendeurs lors des fêtes données à la cour au moment du mariage de la grande duchesse Marie Alexandrovna avec le duc d'Édimbourg, l'intéressait à plus d'un point de vue. Il était bien aise d'étudier chez eux ces peuples slaves qui lui paraissaient appelés à jouer un grand rôle dans le monde ; puis il se rappelait les relations que la Russie avait entretenues avec la France, surtout au XVIII^e^ siècle, et il était curieux de voir les collections réunies à l'Ermitage et dans les autres palais impériaux. Chaque jour il communiquait à sa femme ses impressions dans de charmantes lettres qui seront peut-être publiées un jour, et qui donneront une haute idée de son esprit et de son talent d'observateur.

Il avait espéré découvrir pendant son séjour en Russie quelques livres précieux apportés de France par les gentilshommes de la grande Catherine ; il eut à cet égard une déception : il ne trouva pas un seul volume digne de lui ; aussi se dédommagea-t-il, dès son retour à Paris, en se rendant acquéreur de la petite bibliothèque formée par M. Ernest Quentin-Bauchart.

En 1874 commença pour James de Rothschild la période de grande activité littéraire. Il s'occupait depuis longtemps d'une Bibliographie des poésies anonymes du XV^e^ et du XVI^e^ siècle ; il laissa provisoirement de côté ce travail, qu'il pensait avoir l'occasion de compléter dans le cours de ses recherches ultérieures, et profita de la connaissance qu'il avait acquise de notre ancienne littérature pour reprendre avec M. A. de Montaiglon le Recueil de Poésies françoises des XV^e^ et XVI^e^ siècles, resté inachevé depuis 1865. Les tomes X, XI, XII et XIII de cette précieuse collection, qui parurent de 1875 à 1878, sont presque entièrement de lui. Ils contiennent 95 pièces puisées en grande partie dans sa propre bibliothèque, et accompagnées de notices érudites. Sentant bien qu'un recueil semblable ne peut rendre de réels services que grâce à des tables complètes, il entreprit de dresser un index détaillé des neuf volumes antérieurement publiés et de ceux auxquels il attacha son nom. Cet index existe; peut-être serait-il déjà imprimé si les vicissitudes subies par la Bibliothèque Elzévirienne et la mort de M. P. Daffis n'avaient entravé bien des projets. Il était d'ailleurs nécessaire de soumettre le travail à une révision qui aurait encore exigé de longues veilles.

A l'année 1874 appartient également la fondation de la Société des anciens Textes français, qui se constitua définitivement le 15 avril 1875. James de Rothschild devint l'âme de cette société, qu'il aida de toutes les manières. Non seulement il lui recruta de nombreux adhérents parmi ses amis et les membres de sa famille, mais il entreprit pour elle une vaste publication dont il fit généreusement les frais, le Mistère du viel Testament, qui ne doit pas compter moins de six forts volumes in-8. M. Gaston Paris, dans un discours prononcé par lui le 21 décembre 1881, à la séance annuelle de la société dont il était alors le président, a rendu un digne hommage à la mémoire de celui que nous venions de perdre, et nous ne pouvons mieux faire que de reproduire ses paroles :

« Le baron James de Rothschild, mort à trente-six ans il y a quelques semaines, est, messieurs, le véritable fondateur de la Société des anciens Textes. C'est lui qui, en 1874, à Vichy, où j'avais eu l'honneur de faire sa connaissance, me dit un jour, après plusieurs entretiens où il m'avait surpris et charmé par l'étendue et la sûreté de ses connaissances autant que par la finesse de son esprit : « Pourquoi ne fonderiez-vous pas, vous, M. Paul Meyer et les autres savants qui s'intéressent au moyen-âge littéraire, une société des anciens Textes français, analogue à l'Early English Text Society ? » — « Nous y avons pensé plus d'une fois, lui répondis-je; mais nous craignons un insuccès. Les affaires de ce genre ont un côté temporel qui nous est étranger et qui nous effraie. » Sa proposition me fit cependant réfléchir, et le lendemain je lui dis en l'abordant : « Eh bien ! la société dont vous me parliez hier, nous la fonderons si nous pouvons la présenter comme ayant pour trésorier le baron James de Rothschild. » — « J'y consens de grand cœur », dit-il aussitôt, et la société existait l'année suivante.

« Vous savez quel intérêt il a toujours porté à vos travaux, et quel précieux concours il nous a donné et valu. Qu'il fût un trésorier hors ligne, c'est ce qu'on pouvait attendre ; qu'il fût en même temps un donateur libéral, on n'en était pas non plus étonné ; mais ce qui surprit fort ceux qui ne le connaissaient que de nom, ce fut de trouver en lui un excellent éditeur de textes. Je ne parlerai pas ici des ouvrages qu'il a publiés ou commencés ailleurs, et qui auraient justement fondé la réputation d'un littérateur sérieux ; mais le Mistère du viel Testament, dont il a pu nous donner deux volumes, et dont la suite, grâce à la générosité de M^me^ la baronne James de Rothschild et à l'active amitié de M. Émile Picot, ne nous fera pas défaut, est une publication hors ligne. Pour les soins à donner au texte, le baron James étonnait parfois les éditeurs les plus diligents par la rigueur de sa méthode et la minutieuse exactitude de son travail ; pour le commentaire, il a montré une information que peu de savants auraient possédée au même degré. Vrai Français de cœur, et s'intéressant à la France de toutes les époques, surtout de celle qui termine le moyen-âge et ouvre les temps modernes, fidèle en même temps à la race dont son nom est une des gloires, il trouvait un attrait particulier à publier et à illustrer cette grande œuvre, où se reflète la manière dont les Français d'autrefois ont compris l'histoire d'Israël. Il y avait du reste conçu bien d'autres projets pour la société. Elle perd avec lui tout ce qu'elle pouvait en espérer, tout ce qu'elle s'en promettait légitimement pour une longue suite d'années. »

Bien que James de Rothschild eût spécialement porté ses investigations sur le XV^e^ et le XVI^e^ siècle, il ne négligeait pas l'étude des auteurs classiques du XVII^e^ siècle, dont il s'efforçait de réunir les ouvrages. Ce fut lui qui nous encouragea à publier la Bibliographie Cornélienne, et ce livre ne put être improvisé en aussi peu de temps que grâce à son active collaboration. Il eut aussi l'occasion de lire les gazettes rimées du temps de Louis XIV, et d'apprécier les renseignements qu'il était possible d'en tirer pour l'histoire littéraire. Il s'attacha dès lors à recueillir toutes les notes imprimées ou manuscrites de Loret et de ses continuateurs qu'il put rencontrer chez les particuliers. MM. Ravenel et Pelouze avaient commencé une réimpression de la Muze historique dont le tome I^er^ seul avait paru ; le baron James décida M. Daffis à se rendre acquéreur de l'édition et à charger M. Livet de l'achever. De son côté, il se donnait une tâche plus aride encore : il poursuivait dans toutes les bibliothèques publiques ou privées les gazettes publiées par les continuateurs de Loret. Il les fit copier, les classa et en constitua une série s'étendant de 1665 à 1689. Il ne se proposait pas de les imprimer avant d'avoir terminé les divers ouvrages qu'il avait entrepris ; mais, cédant aux instances de son ami M. Ludovic Halévy, il en mit sous presse le premier volume. Ce fut la dernière publication dont il put lui-même s'occuper.

Bien d'autres projets occupaient pourtant le baron James. Il se proposait d'achever l'édition des œuvres de Gringore, commencée en 1858 par MM. d'Héricault et de Montaiglon; son nom figure même sur le titre du second volume, publié en 1877, bien qu'il n'y eût pas travaillé ; sa collaboration devait commencer avec le tome III, et déjà il avait transcrit tous les poèmes du célèbre héraut d'armes qui devaient être réimprimés. Les chansonniers l'intéressaient également. Il en avait copié ou fait copier un grand nombre, qu'il devait annoter lui-même ou qui devaient paraître sous sa direction. Les Noelz de Jehan Chaperon, publiés par nous en 1879, étaient le premier volume d'une collection d'anciens chansonniers qui ne sera peut-être pas reprise.

Outre le Viel Testament bien d'autres mystères avaient attiré l'attention de James de Rothschild. Non content d'avoir réuni tous les ouvrages modernes consacrés à notre ancien théâtre, il fit copier les plus importants manuscrits conservés dans nos bibliothèques publiques. Il transcrivit lui-même le Mistère de sainct Pierre et sainct Paul, puis la Vie de saint Christofle composée par maître Anthoine Chevalet. Épris de ce dernier ouvrage qui renferme des parties si vivantes et si curieuses, il se proposait de le réimprimer en y joignant l'ancien Mistère de sainct Christofle déjà reproduit en 1833 par la société des Bibliophiles français.

Ces copies et bien d'autres encore, il les faisait de sa main ; c'était, disait-il, le meilleur moyen de lire, et, en effet, grâce à sa mémoire, il se rappelait les moindres détails d'un texte qu'il avait une fois transcrit.

En voyant ces énormes cahiers copiés par lui, on se demande comment James de Rothschild, absorbé par les affaires financières et par l'administration d'un chemin de fer, si occupé de ses livres et des mille soins matériels qu'entraîne la formation d'une grande bibliothèque, recevant tant de lettres auxquelles il était obligé de répondre, a pu suffire à de si nombreux travaux. C'est qu'il avait un ordre et une méthode inflexibles. Quand il avait entrepris un ouvrage quelconque, il n'eût voulu pour rien au monde laisser passer un seul jour sans y consacrer au moins quelques instants. S'il copiait un mystère, il ne se serait jamais couché sans avoir transcrit ne fût-ce que vingt ou trente vers, pour « sauver le principe ». Il avait sans doute relu bien des fois l'épître dans laquelle le vieux Jehan Bouchet insiste sur les résultats inattendus que peuvent produire quelques heures d'un labeur quotidien.

Nous ne mentionnerons plus qu'un seul projet de publication formé par James de Rothschild, celle des papiers de Rasse des Nœux, le médecin de Charles IX. Ces papiers, bien connus de ceux qui étudient l'histoire du protestantisme et celle des guerres de religion, contiennent une multitude de pièces satiriques, d'épigrammes, de chansons, etc., qui peuvent servir d'introduction au recueil de Pierre de L'Estoille. La copie de ce vaste répertoire est entièrement terminée, quant à l'impression, il ne fallait y songer que plus tard.

Nous arrivons à la dernière fondation du baron James, à la Société des études juives, qu'il organisa sur le modèle de la Société des anciens Textes, et dont il fut élu président. Dès la séance constitutive du 10 novembre 1879, il montra la largeur de ses vues en faisant écarter des travaux qu'il proposait d'encourager toute œuvre de polémique ou même de simple édification. La société ne devait avoir d'autre but qu'un but scientifique ; les orientalistes de profession, aussi bien que ceux qui se livrent à des recherches historiques, pourraient en faire partie au même titre que les Israélistes eux-mêmes. Ces principes libéraux ont été féconds en résultats. La Revue des études juives a pris rang, dès ses débuts, parmi les publications les plus sérieuses et les plus estimables. Nul doute qu'elle ne contribue puissamment à développer chez nous le goût d'études trop longtemps négligées.

Tant de travaux divers avaient causé chez James de Rothschild une grande fatigue. Sa santé, dont il avait peu de soin, inquiétait souvent ses amis, qui eussent voulu lui voir prendre quelque repos ; ils étaient pourtant loin de supposer que le mal fût déjà si grave. Pendant l'été de 1881, le baron éprouva plus d'une fois des accidents congestifs d'une nature inquiétante ; à l'entrée de l'automne, ces accidents devinrent plus fréquents, et il fut emporté subitement le 25 octobre 1881 : il allait avoir trente sept ans !

Nous n'essaierons pas de peindre le deuil dans lequel ce coup inattendu jeta non-seulement sa famille et ses amis, mais tous ceux dont il avait été le bienfaiteur. On en eut la preuve dans le long défilé d'hommes de toute condition qui suivirent le convoi funèbre. Ses obsèques n'eurent pas d'autre pompe. Conformément à un désir souvent exprimé, aucun discours ne fut prononcé. Il avait voulu être simple jusqu'au bout.

Nous avons retracé les principaux événements de la vie de James de Rothschild ; mais nous n'en n'avons pas assez dit pour faire apprécier les excellentes qualités de son cœur. Le nombre de ceux qu'il obligea, soit parmi ses anciens camarades, soit parmi le personnel du chemin de fer du Nord, soit dans le monde des inconnus, est vraiment incalculable. Il n'aimait pas à donner d'une manière banale ; quand il s'inté-ressait à une infortune, il suivait ses protégés jusqu'à ce qu'il les eût vus hors du besoin. Sa munificence s'étendait particulièrement sur les libraires, les encolleurs, les relieurs : on eût dit qu'il leur était reconnaissant des jouissances que les livres lui procuraient. Nous ne dévoilerons pas ici les secrets de sa générosité ; aussi bien n'aimait-il pas à les divulguer. Nous-même, qui pendant des années avons eu avec lui un commerce de chaque jour, nous découvrons souvent des bienfaits qu'il nous avait cachés avec soin. Outre ce qu'il donnait lui-même, plusieurs de ses amis, ses anciens maîtres pour la plupart, étaient les distributeurs attitrés de ses aumônes. Le baron James suivait ainsi les traditions de sa famille, qui s'est toujours montrée aussi désireuse de faire le bien que de dissimuler la main qui donne. Son frère, le baron Arthur, qui coopéra toujours à ses bonnes œuvres, ne nous permettrait sans doute pas de dire quelle part il y a prise.

Nous voudrions avoir la compétence nécessaire pour rappeler les services rendus par James de Rothschild à la maison de banque dont il était l'associé ; tout ce que nous pouvons dire, c'est que la justesse de ses vues et son extrême prudence y furent constamment appréciées. Ainsi qu'il l'avait pensé, ses connaissances juridiques lui furent de la plus grande utilité et lui valurent des missions de la plus haute importance.

Nous avons plutôt à parler ici du bibliophile et, sur ce terrain, nous nous sentons plus à l'aise. Nous ne craignons pas d'affirmer qu'il n'y eut pas dans ce siècle un amateur plus délicat que le baron James. Sa collection, commencée vers 1856, ne prit un développement considérable qu'à partir de 1863. Il acheta lui même, à la vente Double, les Libri de re rustica, aux armes de J.-A. de Thou, et l'exemplaire des Œuvres et Meslanges poétiques d'Estienne Jodelle qu'on croit avoir appartenu à la reine Marguerite de Valois. En 1864, à la vente d'Auteuil, il se fit adjuger un superbe exemplaire de l'Atalanta fugiens, de Michel Maier, relié en mosaïque pour Girardot de Préfond. Ce précieux volume fut le premier article d'une série unique de ces riches reliures exécutées pour les plus illustres bibliophiles du XVIII[e] siècle. Dès lors, il n'y eut pas une vente marquante à laquelle il n'enlevât quelques morceaux importants. Il nous suffira de rappeler les ventes de Techener (1865), du prince Radziwill (1866), de Yemeniz (1867), de J.-Ch. Brunet (1868), du baron J. Pichon (1869), de M. L. Potier (1871-1872), de MM. Bordes, Perkins et Tufton (1873), de M. W. Tite (1874), de MM. Capron et Benzon (1875), de M. Lebeuf de Montgermont (1876), de M. R.-S. Turner (1878), de M A.-F. Didot (1878, 1879 et 1881), du docteur Desbarreaux-Bernard (1879), du comte O. de Béhague (1880), du marquis de Ganay (1881), etc. Dans ces ventes, le baron James se contentait d'un petit nombre d'articles; mais il excellait à choisir, et c'est là surtout qu'il montrait la sûreté de son goût.

D'ailleurs, il n'était pas de ces bibliophiles qui dépensent de grosses sommes d'argent dans les enchères publiques, soit parce que la galerie les contemple, soit parce qu'ils espèrent ainsi retrouver plus facilement, en cas de revente, le prix qu'ils auront payé, et qui ne se décident qu'avec peine à faire une transaction amiable; il estimait au contraire que le vrai plaisir de l'amateur, c'est d'aller soi-même à la découverte. Les volumes les plus précieux peut-être de sa bibliothèque, il les avait acquis dans ses visites journalières à M. Potier, à M. Porquet, aux frères Tross, à MM. Morgand et Fatout. Ajoutons que ses trésors bibliographiques reçurent un accroissement notable à la mort de son grand'père, le baron de Rothschild, qui lui légua une collection unique de livres d'heures, de classiques et de dessins originaux, acquis pour la plupart aux ventes de Renouard et de La Bédoyère. La baronne douairière compléta cette dernière série en faisant acheter pour son petit-fils les dessins exécutés par Boucher pour les œuvres de Molière, suite admirable qui était la perle du cabinet formé par M. le baron Pichon.

Pendant dix ans, James de Rothschild exerça sur le marché des livres une sorte de suprématie. Il y avait des amateurs plus anciens que lui et dont les collections étaient encore plus importantes que la sienne; il n'y en avait pas de plus appliqué ni de plus soigneux. Sa mémoire lui permettait de reconnaître à des années d'intervalle les exemplaires qui lui étaient soumis; il possédait un véritable flair pour découvrir les restaurations ou les défauts que nul parfois n'avait remarqués avant lui, et, comme il croyait avoir le temps de compléter sa bibliothèque, il ne voulut jamais fixer son choix que sur des volumes irréprochables. Il se priva souvent de tel ou tel ouvrage qui l'aurait intéressé, parce qu'il n'en trouvait pas un bel exemplaire et qu'il ne voulait pas faire baisser le niveau de sa collection en y introduisant des choses médiocres.

Chaque jour, un peu après trois heures, le baron James quittait la rue Laffitte et se dirigeait vers le passage des Panoramas. Il venait s'asseoir dans la librairie de MM. Morgand et Fatout, où sa place était marquée, et où de nombreux amateurs faisaient cercle autour de lui, désireux d'entendre ses appréciations et de profiter de ses conseils. C'est là qu'on pouvait le mieux juger et de son érudition et de son esprit. Il n'avait pas, comme causeur, la timidité qu'il avait dû surmonter comme orateur; il trouvait sans cesse des mots heureux, qu'il lançait avec un fin sourire; mais s'il connaissait la malice, il ignorait la méchanceté.

A quatre heures et demie, il regagnait son bureau; puis, après avoir expédié sa correspondance, il faisait une nouvelle séance chez M. Rouquette, dans le passage Choiseul. Il y retrouvait, à quelques exceptions près, les mêmes bibliophiles, auxquels venaient s'ajouter ceux qui ont voué un culte particulier aux romans et aux ouvrages illustrés du XIX^e^ siècle. Il avait bien quelques épigrammes contre ces amateurs d'un genre nouveau : il tint un jour à leur montrer que, s'ils avaient révélé au monde l'importance des couvertures imprimées qui recouvrent les éditions originales des romantiques, ils n'avaient pourtant pas encore poussé la minutie à ses dernières limites : ils avaient, en effet, négligé de conserver à la postérité les inscriptions placées sur le dos des livres. Il venait d'acheter un exemplaire de la première édition des Chansons de Béranger, dans sa brochure primitive, en vilain papier jaune; ne voulant pas dépouiller le volume d'un aussi précieux habit, ni soustraire aux regards l'étiquette en papier blanc qui portait le titre, il fit faire en maroquin un élégant étui dans lequel il enchâssa le livre broché. Nous ne savons si la raillerie fut remarquée ; après tout, les amateurs de littérature moderne pouvaient s'en consoler en pensant que la baron James collectionnait, lui aussi, les œuvres des romantiques.

Dans ces conversations intimes, James de Rothschild avait sur les bibliophiles une influence incontestée et l'on peut dire que beaucoup ne le devinrent qu'à cause de lui. Les uns achetaient des livres parce qu'il le leur avait conseillé ; d'autres pour faire comme lui ; d'autres, peut-être, avec la secrète pensée de les lui revendre. Les livres une fois achetés, il fallait s'occuper de la reliure, et c'est alors qu'on le consultait de toute part. Il avait acquis sur l'art du relieur aux différentes époques les connaissances les plus sûres. Après avoir réuni de brillants spécimens de l'art ancien, il ne contribua pas peu au perfectionnement de l'art moderne. Ce fut lui qui mit en relief les rares qualités de M. Trautz. Cet excellent homme, victime d'une modestie excessive, était presque à la fin de sa carrière quand le baron James réussit à le faire ranger parmi les maîtres. Il publia dans le Bulletin de la librairie Morgand et Fatout, au mois de mai 1876, une notice dans laquelle il justifiait sa prédilection pour M. Trautz et décrivait en détail toutes les opérations par lesquelles un volume doit passer avant de prendre place sur les rayons d'un collectionneur délicat. Ce fut pour lui que le grand relieur exécuta ses œuvres les plus importantes, ses dentelles les plus riches et ses mosaïques les plus étincelantes. L'amateur était difficile, et l'artiste tâchait de se surpasser pour le satisfaire.

Après la mort de M. Trautz, le baron James sauva de la dispersion les dessins et les fers réunis dans l'atelier de la rue du Four, et veilla à ce que les traditions s'y maintinssent.

James de Rothschild devait ses succès de bibliophile moins à sa fortune qu'à la sûreté de son goût, et ce goût le guidait en toute chose. Ce ne sont pas seulement les livres de sa bibliothèque qui brillent par une qualité sans laquelle les autres ne sont rien, les objets d'arts acquis par lui, depuis le grand meuble en tapisserie du duc de Parme jusqu'au buste de M^elle^ Dotinville par J.-J. Caffieri, peuvent être cités comme des objets exquis. Au sein d'une famille qui compte tant d'amateurs passionnés et de fins connaisseurs, aucune voix n'était plus écoutée que la sienne ; jamais une acquisition faite d'après ses conseils n'a causé de regrets.

Le baron James se montrait particulièrement sévère pour certains architectes contemporains qui font la leçon à Michel-Ange et s'enorgueillissent de rompre avec les traditions glorieuses des siècles passés. En voyant ces pauvretés qui coûtent des millions, il se prenait à regretter que l'amour des livres ne fût pas plus répandu ; il eût volontiers invité tel ou tel artiste en vogue à feuilleter avec lui les œuvres de Du Cerceau, de Bérain, de Meissonnier et de Delafosse. Quand le pic du démolisseur faisait tomber quelqu'une des merveilles de l'ancien Paris, il s'efforçait de sauver du naufrage les épaves les plus précieuses. C'est ainsi qu'il se rendit acquéreur des admirables boiseries exécutées pour la bibliothèque du roi sur les dessins de Robert de Cotte, lorsque M. Labrouste, les jugeant sans doute indignes de figurer dans un édifice construit sur ses plans, les fit vendre avec les matériaux de rebut. Il préserva de même de la destruction le joli fronton et la principale cheminée de l'hôtel Choiseul. Il avait surtout la passion des boiseries, et l'on en verra de superbes, tant dans son hôtel de l'avenue de Friedland que dans le château qu'il a fait construire près de Chantilly.

Tel fut James de Rothschild : à ceux qui l'ont connu de dire si nous exagérons son mérite ou si nous ne restons pas plutôt au-dessous. Jamais plus bel exemple ne fut donné, jamais homme ne trouva moyen en si peu d'années de se vouer à plus d'œuvres utiles. Ces œuvres heureusement ne périront pas avec lui ; grâce à l'inépuisable générosité de sa famille, elles ont, au contraire, reçu, en souvenir de lui, un nouveau développement. Malgré une santé délicate, la baronne James veille avec une piété touchante à l'exécution des volontés ou des désirs de son mari. Pendant ses séjours à Berck, elle prodigue à ses petits malades des soins maternels. Les résultats médicaux obtenus à l'hôpital Nathaniel de Rothschild sont supérieurs à ceux qu'on peut observer dans les autres établissements du même genre. On n'en sera pas surpris si l'on songe que les enfants y sont admis dès que la nécessité du traitement par l'air marin a été constaté. Ils n'ont pas à subir cette longue attente pendant laquelle le mal s'aggrave au point de devenir quelquefois incurable.

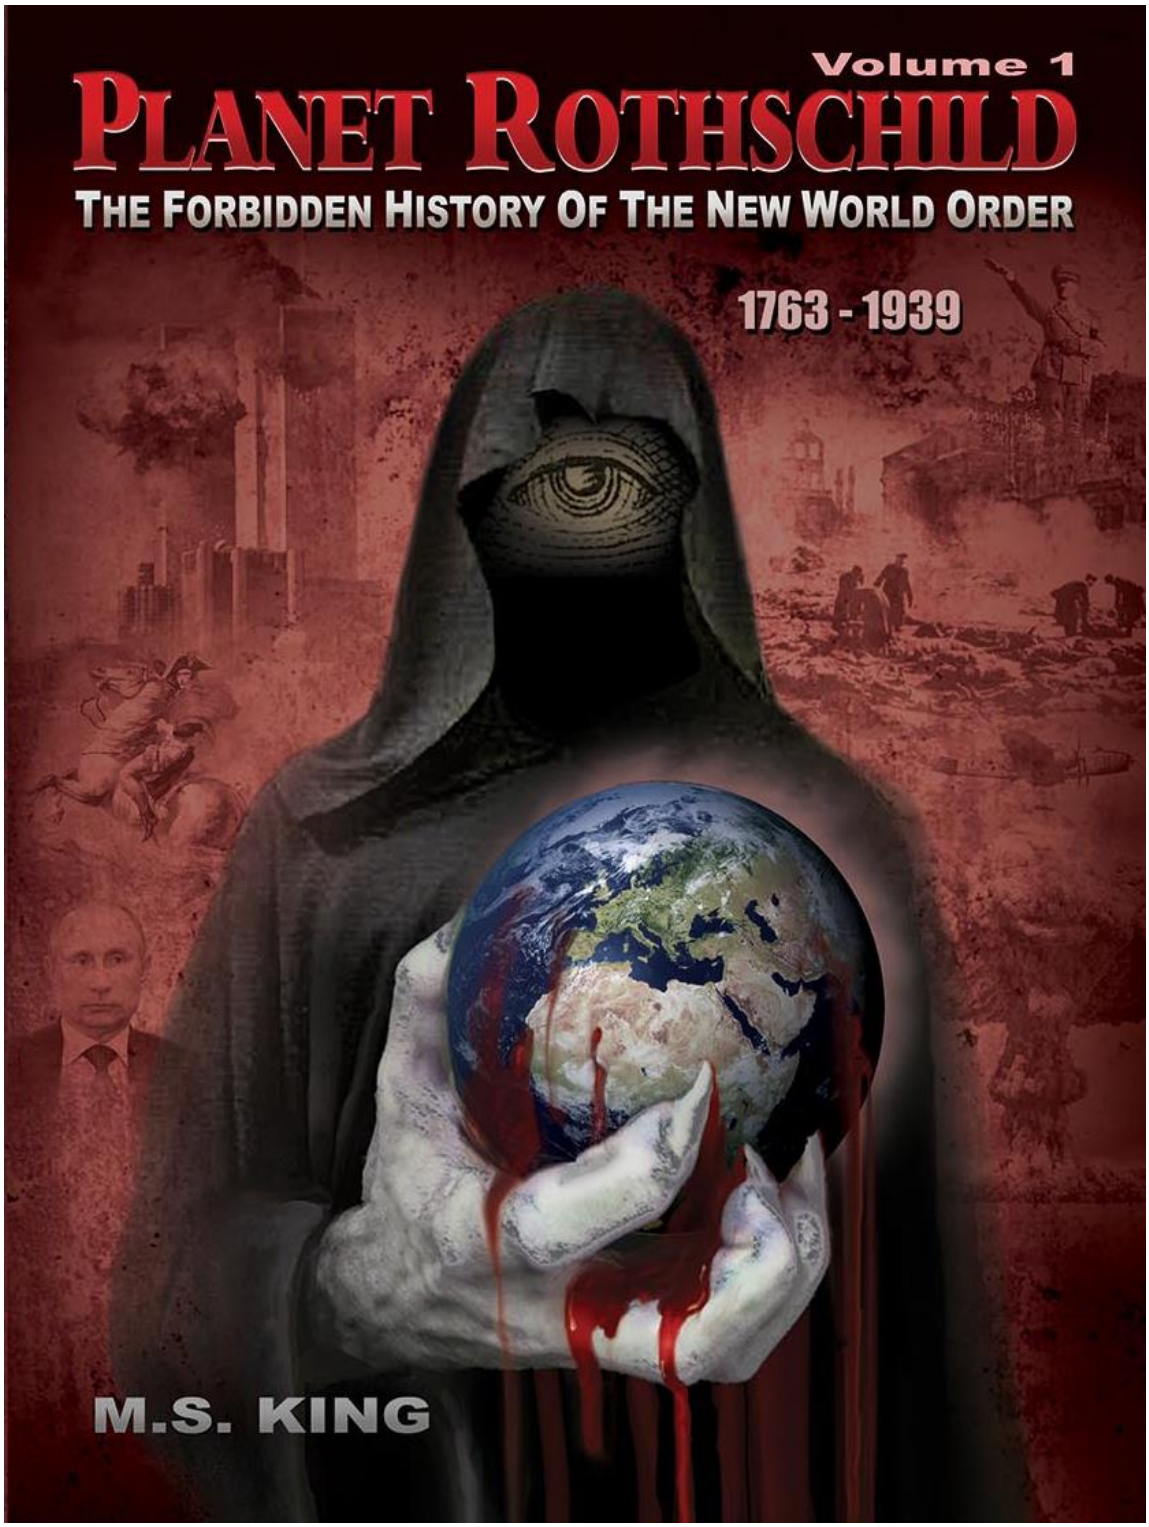
Quant à l'héritage littéraire de James de Rothschild, il a été remis entre nos mains. C'est à nous qu'incombe la lourde tâche de terminer les vastes publications qu'il avait entreprises et qui auraient suffi à remplir une vie entière. Nous nous sommes consacré de tout notre cœur et de toutes nos forces à l'accomplissement de ce devoir. Nous avons déjà publié les tomes III et IV du Viel Testament et le tome II des Continuateur de Loret; nous donnons aujourd'hui le tome I du Catalogue des livres rares et précieux réunis par le baron James. Ce travail, auquel nous avons été associé, mais auquel il a eu la part principale, ne porte que sur les articles choisis. Il n'y est fait aucune mention, ni d'une bibliothèque moderne composée de plus de vingt mille volumes, ni d'une collection de pièces historiques relatives au règne de Louis XIII, collection acquise à la mort de M. Pécard, et considérablement augmentée depuis.

Bien que toutes les divisions contiennent des livres importants, on verra que James de Rothschild avait surtout concentré ses recherches sur les productions de nos anciens poètes et sur la littérature française en général.

En dressant l'inventaire de ses richesses, il a tenu à consigner une foule d'observations que lui suggérait son expérience d'amateur, et qui seront sans nul doute utiles aux bibliographes de l'avenir. Au lieu de publier une simple nomenclature des livres qu'il avait groupés sur ses tablettes, il s'est proposé de faire une œuvre scientifique. Il a voulu que tous ses volumes fussent décrits avec une précision rigoureuse; il a supprimé toutes les attributions douteuses ou contestables. Il lui aurait été facile de se conformer à l'usage et d'attribuer toutes ses reliures anciennes aux Du Seuil, aux Padeloup et aux Derome; il a cru préférable de s'abstenir de toute attribution quand les livres ne portent pas de signature. Il a de même supprimé ces épithètes, chères aux faiseurs de catalogues, de



« bel exemplaire », de « rare » et de « précieux ». Ceux qui ont pénétré dans les deux cabinets de l'avenue de Friedland seront probablement d'avis que ces qualificatifs eussent été superflus. Ils ont été remplacés par des notices littéraires qui ne paraîtront peut-être pas sans intérêt, si l'on en juge par la peine qu'elles ont coûté. De nombreux fac-simile, obtenus à l'aide de la photographie, permettent de se faire une idée précise des impressions les plus rares, surtout de celles qui ne portent pas le nom du typographe qui les a exécutées. Elles devront servir à fixer l'origine de plus d'un volume curieux.

Le catalogue était déjà en grande partie rédigé lorsque la mort a frappé James de Rothschild. Il voulait qu'il fût entièrement composé en placards avant de commencer la révision des épreuves. Cette manière de procéder devait permettre d'y intercaler toutes les acquisitions faites au cours de l'impression; la correction et la mise en pages eussent pu s'opérer ensuite rapidement, et l'ouvrage eût été presque complet. Les évènements ont modifié le plan primitif. Nous n'avons pas cru devoir attendre que la rédaction et la composition du tome second fussent achevées pour donner au public le tome premier. La bibliothèque du baron James reste ce qu'elle était, en attendant que son fils soit en âge de la continuer : il n'y avait donc pas à s'inquiéter des additions. Par contre, nous nous sommes astreint à revoir toutes les descriptions sur les originaux et à contrôler rigoureusement toutes les notices.

Nous avons apporté tous nos soins à cette tâche, et, si nous avons échoué, si l'ouvrage auquel James de Rothschild attachait le plus d'importance, n'est pas ce qu'il avait rêvé, qu'on ne s'en prenne qu'à notre incapacité de mieux faire ; qu'on ne nous accuse pas d'ingratitude ni d'indifférence envers sa mémoire.

ÉMILE PICOT.

Paris, le 7 décembre 1884.

Volume 1
PLANET ROTHSCHILD
THE FORBIDDEN HISTORY OF THE NEW WORLD ORDER
1763 - 1939
M.S. KING

© 2015 M S KING

"History is indeed little more than the register of the crimes, follies and misfortunes of mankind."

Edward Gibbon, English historian (1737-1794)

From: "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire"

About the Author

M. S. King is a private investigative journalist and researcher based in the New York City area. A 1987 graduate of Rutgers University, King's subsequent 30 year career in Marketing & Advertising has equipped him with a unique perspective when it comes to understanding how "public opinion" is indeed scientifically manufactured.

Madison Ave marketing acumen combines with 'City Boy' instincts to make M.S. King one of the most tenacious detectors of "things that don't add up" in the world today. Says King of his admitted quirks, irreverent disdain for "conventional wisdom", and uncanny ability to ferret out and weave together important data points that others miss: "Had Sherlock Holmes been an actual historical personage, I would have been his reincarnation."

King is also the author of The War Against Putin: What the Government-Media Complex Isn't Telling You About Russia. King's other interests include: the animal kingdom, philosophy, chess, cooking, literature and history (with emphasis on events of the late 19th through the 20th centuries).

Be sure to bookmark and follow King's popular website: TomatoBubble.com

The Mind-Altering Internet Classics of Alternative History, Economics, Philosophy and Current Events

FOREWORD – PLANET ROTHSCHILD

By Jeff Rense

For over the past 30 years, I've worked in many key positions in broadcast journalism, as a TV news reporter, news director, anchorman, and, for the past 20 years, the producer and host of my own talk radio program. It has been quite a journey and all during that times I really never stop wanting to know the realities of news stories, large and small. Who?, What?, Where?, How?, When?... and, most importantly, Why? When applying those timeless questions towards the crucial subject of History, I have seldom been satisfied with the 'official explanations' for my inquiries and questions. The 'truth' is just not 'out there' nor is it accessible. There is too much sleight-of-hand and structural criminality.

That's one reason I am so gratified that one of the most remarkable, insightful, truthful historians of today, M S King, has tackled the murky, imponderable subject of revisionist history, (realistic history that is) with his stunning epic, "Planet Rothschild". Though I am generally cautious in bestowing blessings upon the work of others, 'NWO Forbidden History' caught my attention for a number of reasons. Through his writings submitted to Rense.com, and also from his 'tour d' force' guest appearance on my show, King's mastery of the subject, formidable writing talent, and unique ability to break down the complex into simple bites - were already known to me. I was pleased when I learned of his project to reformat his Internet Classic into a hard copy version.

As my regular listeners and readers are by now well aware, the world situation becomes gloomier by the day. It is only through a clear understanding of the past, that we can truly understand the present, and the dark future that is being planned for us. By distilling conspiratorial history into easy-to-understand, illustrated mini essays, "Planet Rothschild" serves as the perfect reference guide to help you navigate through the sea of lies which have been fed to us since childhood, and continue to be fed to us each day. "Planet Rothschild" makes an utterly unique and important contribution to the fields of economics and history - a contribution which we can all appreciate, and all understand.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PLANET ROTHSCHILD: The Forbidden History of the New World Order (1763-2015)

VOLUME 1 of 2 | (1763 - 1820)

INTRODUCTION	P. 7
1763 - 1820	P. 9
1821 - 1880	P. 59
1881 - 1910	P. 109
1911 - 1920	P. 171
1921 - 1930	P. 225
1931 - 1939	P. 251
BIBLIOGRAPHY	P. 307
FOOTNOTES	P. 311

INTRODUCTION

From the days of the American Revolution, to the Jacobin French Revolution, to the coalition wars against Napoleon Bonaparte, to Andrew Jackson's war on the Central Bankers, to Karl Marx's war on sanity, to the American Civil War, to the Reds' shocking wave of 19th century assassinations, to the conspiratorial founding of the U.S. Federal Reserve, to the horrific First World War to enslave Germany, to the Rothschild-Communist subversion of Russia's Czar, to the horrible World War against Hitler and Japan, to the Cold War, to the JFK assassination, to the "women's movement" to the Global Warming Hoax, to the "fall of communism", to the 9/11 attacks & the "War On Terror", and finally, to the looming confrontation with Russia and China - the common thread of the New World Order crime gang links all of these events together.

At the heart of this self-perpetuating network sits the legendary House of Rothschild – the true owners of 'Planet Rothschild'. Through an alliance with other billionaire families, universities, corporations, think tanks and media moguls worldwide; the cabal has, for 250 years, manipulated world events and political players like so many pawns on a global chessboard.

If it's true that "all the world is a stage", then the House of Rothschild and its international partners are the writers, directors and producers of the exciting play called, 'History". The politicians are the actors and the TV talking heads are the narrators. The audience is humanity itself – most of which, unfortunately, have no idea that a rigged show has been, and still is, playing out before their eyes. It is a global monster-scam of unimaginable dimensions in which humanity is the target.

Now, you can earn your 'Phd' in New World Order studies by reading this epic two-volume timeline thriller entitled PLANET ROTHSCHILD. It is a unique "blurb by blurb" chronological and photographical review that will enrich your depth of historical and economic knowledge like no other work of its kind. Travel through time in just under 600 easy-to-digest pages loaded with over 1200 images. This life-changing work is ideal as a permanent reference & study guide. You may not like what you find in its pages. Truth is not always easy to swallow. But you won't be able to refute any of it; and nor will you ever look at world events in the same light ever again.

1763 – 1820

Be sure to bookmark and follow King's popular website: TomatoBubble.com

The Mind-Altering Internet Classics of Alternative History, Economics, Philosophy and Current Events

1763
BIRTH OF THE NEW WORLD ORDER: THE ROTHSCHILD BANKING DYNASTY IS ESTABLISHED

In 1743 a goldsmith named Amschel Moses Bauer opens a coin shop in Frankfurt, Germany. Above his door he hangs a sign depicting a Roman eagle on a red shield. The shop became known as the Red Shield (German: Rothschild).

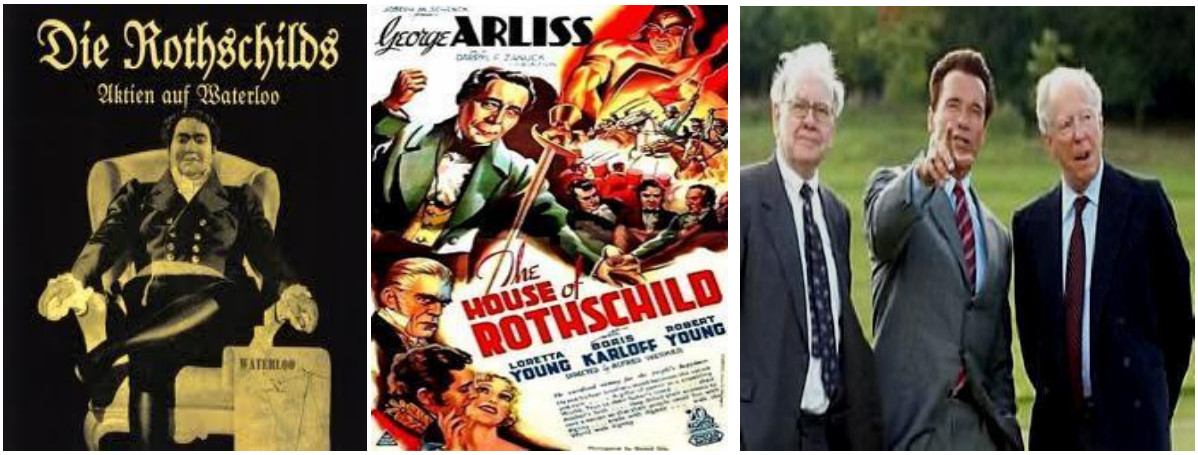
Amschel Bauer had a very intelligent son, Meyer Amschel Bauer. His father spent much of his time teaching him everything he could about the money lending business and the dynamics of finance. After his father's death in 1755, Mayer went to work at a bank in Hannover, owned by the Oppenheimer Family. Meyer's immense ability was quickly recognized and he quickly advanced within the firm. He was awarded a junior partnership.

His success allowed him to return to Frankfurt and purchase the business his father had established in 1743. The Red Shield was still displayed over the door. Recognizing the significance of the Red Shield (his father had adopted it as his emblem from the Red Flag which was the emblem of the revolutionary minded Jews in Eastern Europe), Mayer Amschel Bauer changed the family name to Rothschild. It was at this point that the House of Rothschild came into being.



The Rothschild home in Frankfurt / Family Coat of Arms

Through his experience with the Oppenheimers, Rothschild learns that loaning money to governments is much more profitable than loaning to individuals. The loans are not only much bigger, but they are secured by the nation's taxes.

The Rothschild Banking Dynasty becomes the richest family business in world history. (1) Forbes Magazine refers to Mayer Amschel Rothschild as "a founding father of international finance". (2) Rothschild's five sons will later branch out to head banking dynasties in Austria, Italy, France, and England, becoming lenders to the Kings of Europe, often financing both sides of the European wars that will so enrich them.

To this very day, the House of Rothschild and its allies remain the dominant force behind world finance, Globalism, "environmentalism", and 'liberalism'. The Jewish-Zionist Rothschild Family will also play a major role in establishing Israel in the 1900's (Zionism). There can be no doubt; Mayer Amschel Rothschild was the original "Godfather" of the New World Order.

1 - 1934 Hollywood Film: The House of Rothschild / 1940 German Film: The Rothschilds

2- 2002: Warren Buffett, Governor Schwarzenegger marvel at one of Lord Jacob Rothschild's palatial European estates.

Just a few of the Rothschild Family palaces / England – Austria – France

1764
THE BRITISH CURRENCY ACTS FORBID THE ISSUE OF DEBT-FREE CURRENCY IN THE AMERICAN COLONIES

Anno Regni
GEORGII III.
REGIS

The Currency Act of 1764 is a British law that imposes a monetary policy on its American colonies. The Act extends the provisions of the 1751 Currency Act and forbids the colonies from issuing debt-free paper currency as legal tender. This creates financial difficulty for the colonies. Benjamin Franklin, the colonial representative, urges the British to reject the Currency Act.

The Currency Act creates tension between the colonies and Britain. When the First Continental Congress meets in 1774, it strongly objects to The Act as "subversive of American rights." It is a little known fact of the American Revolution, that the right of the colonists to issue debt-free currency, and spend it into circulation (as opposed to a private Central Bank lending debt-currency into circulation), became one of the main causes of the Revolution.

MARCH 5, 1773
THE "BOSTON MASSACRE" / TENSIONS MOUNT AS FIVE AMERICAN COLONISTS ARE KILLED BY BRITISH TROOPS

Exaggerated images of "the massacre" were used to inflame the colonists.

The increase in British troops stationed in Boston leads to tension with the locals. Fights erupt between soldiers and liberty-minded civilians. British troops are sent to Boston in 1768 to enforce the Townshend Acts, a series of laws passed by the British Parliament. The purpose of the Townshend Acts is to make colonial governors and judges independent of colonial control, to enforce compliance with trade regulations, and to tax the colonies without their approval.

When an angry crowd of colonists - most likely led by provocateurs of a secret society known as The Sons of Liberty (3) - confronts a group of soldiers with taunts and snowballs, the frightened British soldiers overreact. Shots are fired and five American colonists are killed. The embellished news of the Boston Massacre serves the purpose of spreading the revolutionary spirit throughout the colonies.

DECEMBER 16, 1773
THE BOSTON TEA PARTY / COLONISTS REBEL AGAINST BRITISH TAXES AND MONOPOLIES

The Boston Tea Party is an action by Boston colonists in the British colony of Massachusetts, against the British government and the monopolistic East India Company which controls all of the tea shipments coming into the colonies. After officials in Boston refuse to return three shiploads of taxed tea to Britain, a group of colonists, dressed as American Indians, climb aboard the ships and destroy the tea by throwing it into Boston Harbor.

The Tea Party is the culmination of a resistance movement against the Tea Act, which had been passed by Parliament in 1773. Colonists object to the Tea Act for a variety of reasons, especially because it violates their right to be taxed only by their elected representatives. The Boston Tea Party is a revolt against state sponsored monopolies (British East India Company) as much as it is about taxation.

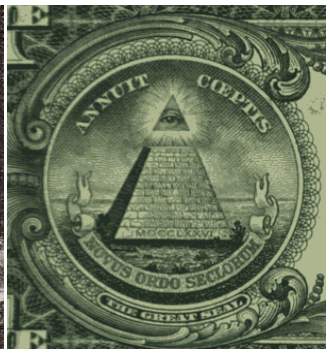
It should be noted that, as was the case with the Boston Massacre, the Sons of Liberty orchestrated the event. Many members of this organization are true liberty-loving patriots (Sam Adams, John Adams, Paul Revere), but others may have had ulterior, NWO-related motives for wanting to weaken the British Empire.

APRIL 19, 1775
LEXINGTON & CONCORD / AMERICAN REVOLUTION BEGINS WITH 'THE SHOT HEARD AROUND THE WORLD'

The Massachusetts Militia is storing guns and ammo in the town of Concord, MA. About 700 British troops are sent to seize the military supplies. Patriot leaders learn of the British plan and begin organizing.

The night before the scheduled British raid, Paul Revere takes off on his famous "Midnight Ride" to warn the local militiamen (Minutemen). The first shots are fired as the sun begins to rise in Lexington, MA. The militias are outnumbered and fall back as the British advance upon Concord. At Concord, approximately 500 "rag tag" militiamen fight and defeat the King's troops.

The "red coats" retreat after a pitched battle in open territory. More militiamen arrive soon thereafter and inflict heavy damage upon the British, firing at them from behind trees as they march back towards Boston. The war for American independence is on! The Battle of Lexington and Concord will go down in history as "the shot heard around the world."



1- Paul Revere's 'Midnight Ride' – part real history / part mythology.

2- The Battle of Lexington & Concord

MAY 1, 1776
ADAM WEISHAUPT ESTABLISHES THE SECRET ORDER OF THE ILLUMINATI

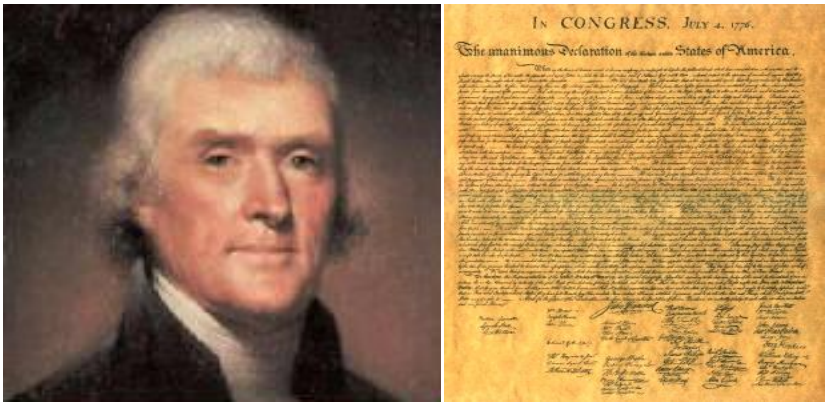
Jewish Professor Adam Weishaupt, forms the secret order of The Illuminati in Bavaria (Germany). He is most likely a paid agent of Rothschild, also based in Germany. Weishaupt (code name Spartacus) recruits wealthy elites to his society. The Illuminati, or, Enlightened Ones, infiltrate Masonic lodges, which serve as cover for their activities.

They plot the overthrow of governments, the destruction of Christianity, and the future arrival of a world communal state (New World Order). Bavarian authorities disband the Illuminati in 1784. But the tactics and goals of the order are clearly evident in the French Revolution of 1789, and future Communist plots. To this day, May 1 (May Day) remains a sort of 'Holy Day' to Communists, Anarchists, and "Progressives".

The 'illuminated' all-seeing eye atop a pyramid is the symbol of Weishaupt's Illuminati NWO Mafia – and CBS network.

.

JULY 4, 1776
THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE IS SIGNED



Written by Thomas Jefferson and signed by 56 patriots, the Declaration of Independence officially breaks the colonies away from Britain, and sets forth the ideal that governments exist to serve the people, not to control them.

America's founders believe that rights come from God, not government. Prosperity follows when the power of the state is limited. Small government, God-given rights, morality, stable currency, respect for private property, and minimal taxes represent the opposite of what the Illuminati and latter day 'Red" revolutionaries advocate.

These lines of the Declaration sum up what America, and the '4th of July', are (or were) all about:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness. --That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, --That whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government." (4)

Jefferson: Rights come from the Creator, not the State

1781-1784
JEWISH MONEY-LENDER IS THE MAIN FINANCIER FOR THE AMERICAN REVOLUTIONARY WAR

During the war, Washington relies heavily upon a well-connected Polish-born Jewish money-lender named Haym Salomon for financing. Salomon is a member of the Sons of Liberty – the same secret society that had instigated the Boston Massacre and organized the Boston Tea Party. From the period of 1781–84, records show Salomon's outside fundraising and personal lending help provide over $650,000 (approximately $9 billion in 2015 dollars!) in financing to Washington in the war effort against Britain. (5)

Certainly, Salomon's eagerness to finance the war must have had some profit motive (though he died in 1785 before he could be repaid), but it is also in line with Jewish Illuminati objectives to weaken the existing Empires of Europe while keeping them all in a "balance of power" situation in which one can be played off of another. Without Solomon's money and other fundraising efforts, the colonies will have no chance of winning the war.

Commemorative postage stamp, Chicago statue, and Los Angeles statue in honor of Haym Solomon.

1782
THE MYSTERIOUS GREAT SEAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Although the freedom-based, Creator-based ideology of American's Founding Fathers represents the polar opposite of the goals of the New World Order / Illuminati system, it does appear that elements of the early NWO Mafia may have assisted the Revolution for the ulterior purpose of weakening the British Empire and then taking control of the new American nation. George Washington certainly was no Globalist Red, but he was indeed a Freemason. It was through the secretive Masonic lodges that Illuminati plotters operated.

The most ominous sign that conspiratorial influence was at work during the earliest days of the United States can be found in the Great Seal of the United States, first established in 1782. The Seal depicts an eagle with the 6-pointed Jewish Star of David above it. The inscription reads: "E Pluribus Unum" – (out of many, one). Is that a reference to the uniting of the colonies, as we have been taught? Or is it really a reference to "the chosen people"?

In 1786, a reverse side was added to the Seal. The all-seeing illuminated eye above the pyramid with the Latin phrase: "Annuit Coeptis"(He favors our undertaking) and the Roman numeral 1776 (Declaration of Independence? …Or founding of Weishaupt's Illuminati?). But the 'dead giveaway' is the inscription at the bottom: "Novus OrdoSeclorum" (New Order for the Ages) – New World Order!

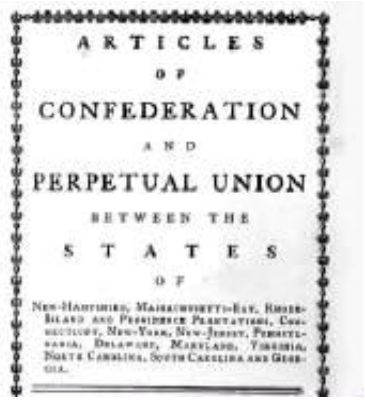
NWO Symbols and the Star of David are right under our noses, and in our wallets. There is a legend that during the design of the Great Seal, Washington asked what compensation Haym Salomon *wanted in return for his financial contributions to the Revolution. He replied that "he wanted nothing for himself but that he wanted something for his people".(6) As a result, the 13 stars representing the colonies were arranged in the shape of the Star of David.

Degenerate modern celebrities like Kanye West, Jayzee, Rihanna, Beyonce & Lady Gaga have all sold their souls to the powerful geo-political force. Above, they make hand-symbols of the Illuminati pyramid and eye.

1783
WITH FRENCH HELP, AMERICA'S WAR FOR INDEPENDENCE ENDS IN VICTORY FOR THE COLONIES

The American Revolution had begun badly for the 13 colonies. The colonists themselves were divided as to their loyalties with as many as one third wishing to remain British subjects, at least at first. The best that General George Washington's 'Continental Army" can do against the better equipped British is to limit direct combat and harass the British instead.

As American "minutemen" and Washington's Army draw the 'redcoats' into a battle of attrition, Ben Franklin visits Paris to persuade the French to help the colonies. After Washington's surprise Christmas Day 1776 attack against the British & Hessian mercenaries, followed by victory at Saratoga in '77, the French are sold. French military assistance will play a huge role in reversing the course of the war. The British grant the colonies full independence in 1783.



1- Christmas, 1776: Washington crossing the Delaware River

2- 1781: General Cornwallis surrenders to Washington

1781-1788
THE COLONIES ARE UNITED UNDER THE ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION

ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION
AND PERPETUAL UNION BETWEEN THE STATES
OF

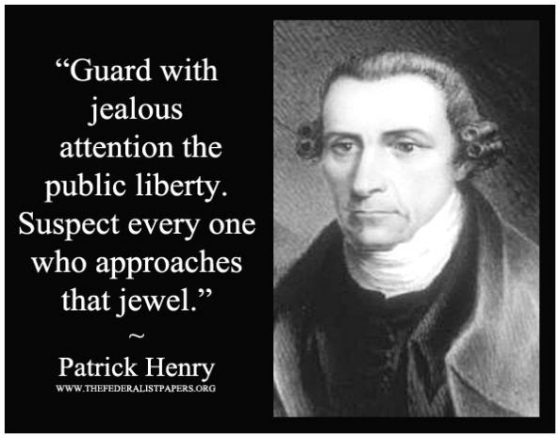
Drafted during the early years of the war, and ratified in 1781, the "Articles of Confederation and Permanent Union" establishes a very decentralized government for the colonies. Under the Articles, the colonies (now referred to as "States') are sovereign entities. For six years after the end of the war, the colonies are not truly a united nation, but rather a league of allied states living under mutually agreed upon rules.

America's founders are divided. Though all of them believe in freedom and limited government, one camp (The Federalists) prefers a stronger central government to help organize the nation's affairs. The other camp (the anti-Federalists) fear that any centralized American government might become corrupted and dangerous to the people's liberty.

JUNE 21, 1788
THE U.S. CONSTITUTION IS RATIFIED / THE "UNITED STATES IS CREATED"

Some of America's founders believe that the Articles of Confederation are too weak for the government and the new nation to survive. For this reason, the Continental Congress approves the US Constitution in 1787, in Philadelphia. Months of contentious debate follow before the States ratify the Constitution, the framework of the Federal Government.



The checks and balances built into the Constitution establish 3 branches of government, and limit the power of each. George Washington will be chosen as the first US President. The document also limits the power of the masses of people. The founders know that "democracy" results in mob rule, in which a "majority" of people can be manipulated into voting themselves the wealth of the productive people. Under the Constitution, taxes and state spending are minimal, and only gold and silver coins are recognized as currency. There is no authorization for income taxes, central banking, and social welfare schemes.

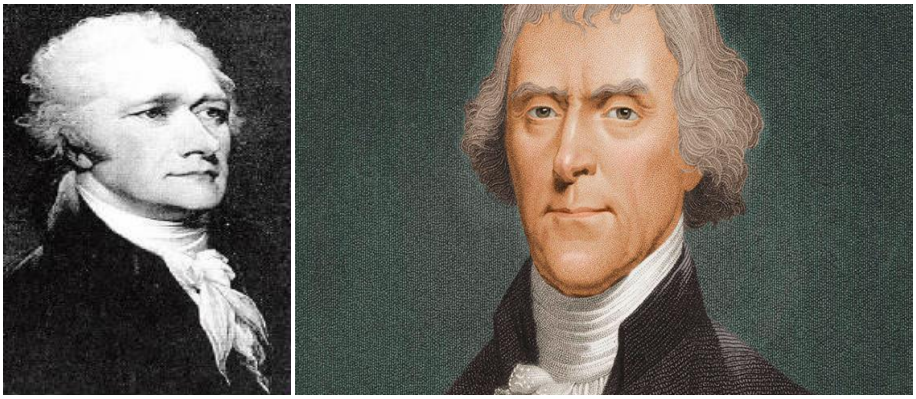
.

The Constitution and its original 10 amendments (The Bill of Rights) serve as a leash on government growth and power, and a guarantor of personal liberties, such as rights to free political speech, to own firearms, and to be secure from unlawful searches and seizures.

1- Similar to pre-Imperial Rome, the United States is founded as a republic (rule of law) -NOT a socialist "democracy" (rule of the manipulated mob).

2- Even with its strict limits on government power, patriots such as Patrick Henry of Virginia viewed the new Constitution as a potentially dangerous power-grab.



1790
JEFFERSON AND HAMILTON CLASH OVER CENTRAL BANK

The proposed Bank of the United States is to be a Central Bank with a 20-year charter. It is the brainchild of New York banker Alexander Hamilton. Hamilton, born in the British West Indies and educated in a Jewish school there (7), is an agent of the New York-London moneylenders. Hamilton had previously founded the Bank of New York in 1784.

As President Washington's Treasury Secretary, Hamilton clashes with Secretary of State Thomas Jefferson. Hamilton and the New York bankers believe in strong central government and debt-based central banking and currency issue. Virginians Jefferson, James Madison (father of the Constitution) and the southern agricultural class believe in decentralized government and local banking. The roots of the future American Civil War can be traced, in part, to the Jefferson-Hamilton feud.

Jefferson argues that centralization of power away from private mints and banks is unconstitutional and dangerous. He wrote: "…banking establishments are more dangerous than standing armies." (8) The New Yorker Hamilton argues that if the nation is to grow, it needs a standard coinage supported by a Central Bank and excise tax.

1- Hamilton was London's banker boy.

2- Jefferson wanted no part European Central Banking.

1791
HAMILTON WINS. A U.S. CENTRAL BANK IS ESTABLISHED / WHISKEY FARMERS REBEL

President Washington listens to Jefferson's and Hamilton's position on the Central Bank, but is ultimately taken in by Hamilton. The Father of America has a blind spot when it comes to the smooth talking, foreign- born deceiver. Others are not so easily fooled. In later years, President John Adams will describe Hamilton as:

"...the most restless, impatient, artful, indefatigable, and unprincipled intriguer in the United States, if not in the world." (9)

Along with establishing an excise tax, Hamilton's Bank is a private company with some foreign shareholders. To cover the government's interest payments to the Bank, Hamilton imposes an excise tax on whiskey.

When Pennsylvania whiskey farmers rebel (Whiskey Rebellion), Hamilton convinces Washington to allow him to personally lead 12,000 troops to enforce compliance. Brute force is used to collect the taxes needed to pay the interest to the foreign shareholders of the Central Bank.

When men were men! Angry whiskey farmers attack, tar & feather Hamilton's tax collectors for the Central Bank.

THE CENTRAL BANKING SCAM EXPLAINED

CENTRAL BANKING AND GOVERNMENT DEBT

When government uses up the money it collects in taxes, it resorts to borrowing. It can borrow by selling bonds to investors, or to foreign governments. But when governments borrow from a privately owned Central Bank, the Bank is actually creating new money "out of thin air" and then lending it to the government at interest. The injection of new money into the economy has the effect of reducing the value of existing money (inflation). The government must then tax its citizens to repay the loans (Bonds) to the Central Bank, plus interest.

If the government were to simply create its own debt-free currency to cover its bills, there might still be an inflationary effect, but the government would not carry debt, and therefore not need to tax its people to pay principal and interest to the Central Bank.

It makes no sense for a government to pay interest to a Central Bank on new currency when it can simply create the currency itself, interest free!

CENTRAL BANKING AND LOCAL BANK / CONSUMER DEBT

The other way in which a Central Bank preys upon people is by lending to the nation's banks. The banks can then increase the number of loans to their customers by borrowing money themselves from the Central Bank (again, created out of thin air.) The local bank borrows at a lower rate from the Central Bank, and then re-loans the money to you at a higher rate. Consumer debt is thus maximized as constant inflation erodes the value of existing money.

Consumers do not benefit from debt as they would believe because the new money pumped into the economy artificially drives up the price of whatever they are buying.

In short, behind its academic cover, Central Banks are legalized counterfeiters and loan sharks. When a Central Bank, owned by private shareholders, controls the money, every dollar of currency must be loaned into circulation at interest. Therefore, there will always be more total debt outstanding than there is money in circulation. Those who control this perpetual debt machine always become powerful enough to control the government.

1789
THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

The French Revolution is a period of radical upheaval in France. Unlike America's Revolution, which put limits on government power, the atheistic radicals of France seek total power. Their rallying cries of "Liberty, Fraternity, and Equality" are empty words that attract gullible mobs.

The revolution leads to the rise of the mad killer Robespierre, and the Jacobins. From 1793-1794, the "Committee of Public Safety" operates as the dictatorship of France. A "Reign of Terror" is unleashed. King Louis XVI, Queen Marie Antoinette, and 40,000 others are executed, mostly by public guillotine. The Jacobin mobs single-out priests, nuns, and the wealthy for special brutality.

The Jacobins (forerunners of the Communists) are eventually displaced by more sensible elements of the revolution. Robespierre himself is executed. The "Directory" will control France from 1795-1799 as the monarchies of Europe wage a war against Republican France.

Though historians portray The Revolution as a "spontaneous uprising" of the oppressed, the funding of the movement, and the disciplined organization of the radicals, suggest otherwise. Was Rothschild money behind the revolt? Could this be the meaning of the French Revolution's theme color, red? (Rothschild is German for "Red Shield"). Many more "spontaneous" red revolts will follow over the centuries to come.

The works of early 20th Century British historian Nesta Webster exposed the genocidal French Revolution as the work of occultists aiming to overthrow civilization and bring about "world revolution".

1795
THE JACOBINS ARE OVERTHROWN; 'THE DIRECTORY' TAKES CONTROL OF FRANCE

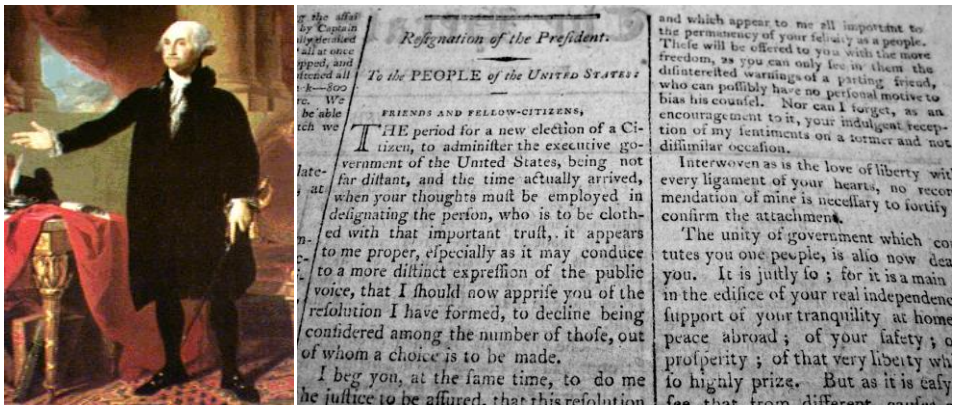
The Jacobins (forerunners of the Communists) are eventually displaced by more sensible, Republican elements of the revolution. Robespierre himself is then executed. The "Directory" will govern France from 1795-1799 as the worried monarchies of Europe (led by Great Britain), as well as the displaced Jacobin Reds of the NWO, continue to wage war against a divided France.



Robespierre gets a taste of his own medicine as the Directory takes control. But the Red Jacobin Clubs are still in operation.

1796
WASHINGTON'S PROPHETIC FAREWELL ADDRESS

In his Farewell Address to Congress and an adoring American public, the great General and President George Washington uses the occasion to advise America on how to secure its future happiness and prosperity. Washington's prescient warnings come from his extensive knowledge of history. His wise and prophetic advice includes:

- Maintain religion and morality as supports of a free people.
- Beware of the formation of political parties.
- Avoid alliances & foreign military entanglements.
- Balance the Federal Budget and avoid state debt.
- Keep the government's spending and taxes low.
- Do not weaken the U.S. Constitution with amendments.
- Do not allow sectional differences to divide the Union. (10)

In Europe, the early New World Order/Red crime gang is already in operation. Eventually, the Globalists will attack America (and the world) in each area that Washington warned about.

Resignation of the President.

To the PEOPLE of the UNITED STATES

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS,

THE period for a new election of a Citizen, to administer the executive government of the United States, being not far distant, and the time actually arrived, when your thoughts muft be employed in defignating the perfon, who is to be clothed with that important truft, it appears to me proper, efpecially as it may conduce to a more diftinct expreffion of the public voice, that I fhould now apprife you of the refolution I have formed, to decline being conftdered among the number of thofe, out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you, at the fame time, to do me and which appear to me all important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. Thefe will be offered to you with the more freedom, as you can only fee in them the difintereited warnings of a parting friend, who can poffibly have no perfonal motive to bias his counfel. Nor can I forget, as an encouragement to it, your indulgent recep- tion of my fentiments on a former and not dilfimilar occafion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty wit every ligament of your hearts, no recor mendation of mine is neceffary to fortify confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which co tutes you one people, is alfo now dea you. It is juftly fo ; for it is a main in the edifice of your real independene fupport of your tranquility at home peace abroad ; of your fafety ; o profperity ; of that very liberty wh fo highly prize. But as it is eafy

Once regarded as a sacred American historical relic, Washington's prophetic advice has long since been forgotten.

1797
ITALIAN CAMPAIGN – NAPOLEON BONAPARTE CAPTURES ROME / DEFIES DIRECTORY'S ORDER TO DETHRONE POPE

French military hero Napoleon Bonaparte completes his successful Italian campaign, defeating Austrian, Sardinian, and Neapolitan forces before capturing Rome. The French General's stature as a military genius and leader is now such that he can defy the Atheistic Directory's orders to dethrone the Pope and get away with it. Napoleon is by now a legend in the making, soon to be a political force in his own right – a force beyond Illuminati-Rothschild-NWO control.

1- Napoleon crosses the Alps. 2- Napoleon enters Rome.

The NWO gang was behind the French Revolution, but they cannot control Napoleon Bonaparte.

1798
NAPOLEON'S EGYPTIAN EXPEDITION

The French Campaign in Egypt and Syria (1798–1801) is Napoleon Bonaparte's campaign to protect French trade, undermine Britain's access to India, and promote scientific enterprise in the region.

Napoleon approaches the Egyptians not as a conqueror, but as a liberator who respects their religion and culture. This position earns him solid support in Egypt and the admiration of Muhammad Ali, who later succeeds in declaring Egypt's independence from the Ottoman Turks.

An unusual aspect of the Egyptian military expedition is the inclusion of a large group of scientists and scholars. This deployment of intellectual resources is an indication of Napoleon's devotion to higher learning. Much of what we know today about ancient Egypt is the result of this mission. The discoveries include the deciphering of ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics by way of "The Rosetta Stone".

1- Napoleon at the pyramids.

2- The Rosetta Stone was etched in hieroglyphics and Greek. The known Greek figures allowed the French to decipher the unknown Egyptian, and translate into modern languages.

1798
JOHN ROBISON WRITES: 'PROOFS OF A CONSPIRACY'

John Robison was a prominent physicist and professor of philosophy at Scotland's Edinburgh University. He worked with James Watt on the early steam car and he later invented the siren. The Illuminati had attempted to recruit him but he declined. In 1798 he writes "Proofs of a Conspiracy Against the Religions and Governments of Europe" in which he exposes the secret societies behind the terrorist French revolution.

His warning to Europe is stark:

"An association has been formed for the express purposes of rooting out all the religious establishments and overturning all existing governments ... the leaders would rule the World with uncontrollable power*, while all the rest would be employed as tools of their unknown superiors."* (11)

French priest Abbe Barruel independently developed similar views that the Illuminati had infiltrated Freemasonry, (12) leading to the excesses of the French Revolution. In 1798, the Reverend G. W. Snyder sent Robison's book to George Washington for his thoughts on the subject. Washington replied:

"It was not my intention to doubt that, the Doctrines of the Illuminati, and principles of Jacobinism had not spread in the United States. On the contrary, no one is more truly satisfied of this fact than I am. The idea that I meant to convey, was, that I did not believe that the Lodges of Free Masons in this Country had, as Societies, endeavored to propagate the diabolical tenets of the first, or pernicious principles of the latter (if they are susceptible of separation). That individual of them may have done it, or that the founder, or instrument employed to found, the Democratic Societies in the United States, may have had these objects; and actually had a separation of the People from their Government in view, is too evident to be questioned." (13)

PROOFS OF A CONSPIRACY AGAINST ALL THE RELIGIONS AND GOVERNMENTS
OF EUROPE, CARRIED ON IN THE SECRET MEETINGS
OF
FREE MASONS, ILLUMINATI,
AND READING SOCIETIES.
COLLECTED FROM GOOD AUTHORITIES,
BY JOHN ROBISON, A. M.
PROFESSOR OF NATURAL PHILOSOPHY, AND SECRETARY TO THE ROYAL SOCIETY OF EDINBURGH.
Nunc tua res agitur paries cum proximus ardet.
THE FOURTH EDITION.
TO WHICH IS ADDED, A POSTSCRIPT.
NEW-YORK:
Printed and Sold by George Forman, No. 62, Water-Street, between Cranelin and the Old-Slip.
1798.

Robison was a big man of science and letters. George Washington agreed with his observation about Illuminati & Jacobin infiltration of freemasonry.

1798-1815
THE 5 SONS OF ROTHSCHILD SPREAD THEIR MONEY LENDING EMPIRE ACROSS EUROPE

After amassing an enormous fortune from his base in the Hessian city of Frankfurt (Germany) Mayer Amschel Rothschild sends his five sons abroad to expand the Rothschild Family Empire throughout Europe. Each of the brothers will emerge as dominant financial players, and behind-the-scenes political players, in their respective new countries. The five sons and the five sub-dynasties they will operate are as follows:

Anselm: Stays in Frankfurt to run the German operation.
Salomon: Vienna, Austria
Nathan: Manchester, and then London, England
Carl: Naples, Italy
Jacob: Paris, France

Of the five, Nathan in London ("The City of London") will become the wealthiest and most powerful of the brothers. His power surpasses even that of the other existing Jewish family dynasties that own The Bank of England (Montefiores, Goldsmids, Mocattas).

The London Rothschilds are the beating heart of the centuries old movement to tear down European civilization and erect The New World Order in its place.

1 & 2 - The Jewish-produced 1934 Hollywood film, The House of Rothschild made no effort to hide the historical power of the 5 sons, especially Nathan of London (played by George Arliss - brother in center).

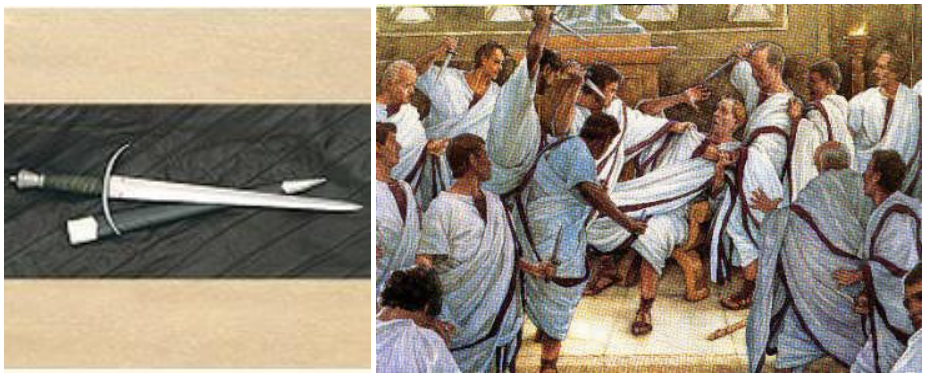
3 – Today, young Nat (Nathan) Rothschild, great-great-great-great grandson of Nathan is being groomed as the next Family Patriarch.

Then and now: the immense wealth of the Rothschild Family STILL commands obedience. (Above: Sir Evelyn de Rothschild with gold bars, and commenting on BBC TV)

1799
NAPOLEON STAGES A COUP IN PARIS - OVERTHROWS THE DIRECTORY

Napoleon the war hero returns to a deeply-divided and chaotic Paris. With the help of allies in the French Senate, Napoleon stages a bloodless coup and is named First Consul. A plebiscite (popular vote) is held soon afterwards. Napoleon's ascension to First Consul is overwhelmingly approved by the French public.

The New World Order gang created the Revolution in order to overthrow the Monarchy. Now, with the rise of Napoleon, the NWO has lost control of France.



Move over Directory. Napoleon Bonaparte is now the Boss!

OCTOBER 1800
JACOBINS PLOT TO KILL NAPOLEON WITH DAGGERS

The Communistic Jacobins (working for their secret New World Order Rothschild bosses in London) want their bloody dictatorship back. They openly call for the death of Napoleon. One leftist agitator, named Metge, publishes a pamphlet comparing Napoleon to Roman ruler Julius Caesar, who was killed by daggers wielded by Brutus and others. Metge openly calls for "the birth of thousands of Bruti to stab the tyrant Bonaparte."

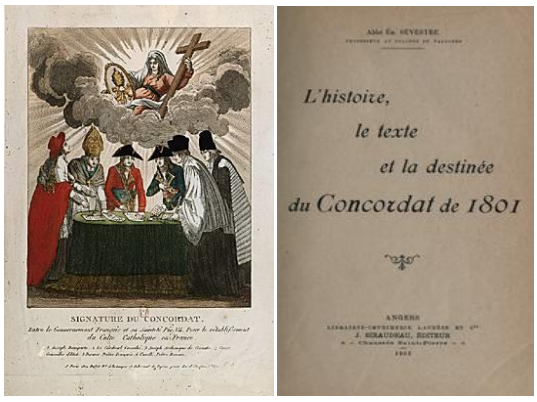
Indeed, one of the Jacobin plots which is foiled is the "Conspiration des poignards" (Conspiracy of the Daggers) in October 1800. The Jacobins plan to stab Napoleon, as Julius Caesar had been, as he arrives at the Paris Opera House. Informants are able to foil the assassination plot, but the Jacobins will again try to kill Napoleon.

Jacobins plotted to stab Napoleon, as Caesar had been by Brutus & others.

OCTOBER 1800
JACOBIN BOMB NEARLY KILLS NAPOLEON & HIS WIFE

Two months after the Dagger Plot is foiled, the Jacobins nearly succeed in blowing up Napoleon's carriage with a bomb (Plot of the Rue Saint-Nicaise or "The Infernal Machine"). Napoleon and Josephine (who faints) both survive the massive blast, but 10-12 innocent bystanders are killed, and dozens more injured or maimed.

Napoleon uses public outrage over the bombing to annihilate the remnants of the violent and conspiratorial Red Jacobins.



The Jacobins never stop plotting. The mighty bomb that nearly killed Napoleon was known as "The Infernal Machine".

1801
NAPOLEON MAKES PEACE WITH THE CATHOLIC CHURCH

After years of persecution at the hands of atheistic Jacobin radicals and also the Directory, Napoleon moves to protect and preserve the Roman Catholic Church that he had spared from extinction during his Italian campaign. Raised Catholic, Napoleon is himself a Deist (14) (belief in a Creative force) who retains a special fondness for the moral principles and ceremonies of the Church. Napoleon is also impressed by Islam, and believes that people of all faiths should have freedom of conscience.

The Concordat of 1801 between Napoleon Bonaparte and Pope Pius VII reaffirms the Roman Catholic Church as the majority church of France and restores its civil status. While the Concordat restores ties to the Papacy, the balance of church-state relations tilts in Napoleon's favor.

The Concordat reassured French Catholics, angered Red Atheists, and improved relations with the Vatican.

MARCH, 1802
THE TREATY OF AMIENS: PEACE WITH BRITAIN

The Treaty of Amiens ends hostilities between the French Republic and the United Kingdom. It is signed in the city of Amiens on March 25, 1802 and celebrated as the "Definitive Treaty of Peace" between Napoleon and Britain. In retrospect, it appears to have been a British ploy more than a sincere desire to make peace with France.

The Peace Treaty of Amiens. Was it just a British trick to buy time?

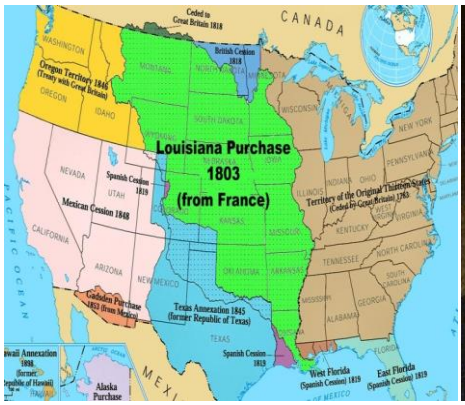
MAY, 1803
BRITAIN BREAKS THE PEACE / NAPOLEONIC WARS FOLLOW

The Peace of Amiens lasts only one year and was the only period of extended peace during the 'Great French War' between 1793 and 1815. Britain does not evacuate Malta as promised. Instead, the British protest against Bonaparte's annexation of Piedmont and his Act of Mediation, which establishes a new Swiss Confederation, though neither of these territories are covered by the treaty.

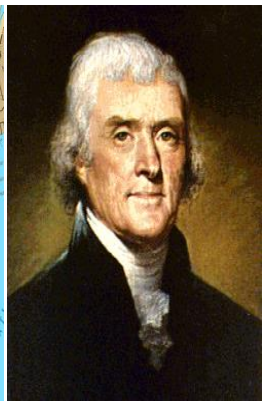
These phony pretexts for starting a new war against Napoleon culminate in a declaration of war by Britain, and the reassembly of another coalition against France. Having failed to kill Napoleon from within France itself, the NWO Mafia and the Royal Families of Europe will continue to wage a series of on and off "coalition wars" on post-revolutionary France. At varying times, Great Britain (the chief instigator), Russia, Austria, Prussia, Spain and other minor Kingdoms unite in opposition to Napoleonic France. The ensuing wars that follow are known as the Napoleonic Wars, although Napoleon didn't start these wars with Britain and friends.

It is important to note that without Rothschild funding, these wars would not have been possible, at least not in the long term. The Old World Order (Monarchies) and the New World Order (Rothschilds-Illuminati) both seek the demise of Napoleon Bonaparte.

The Napoleonic Wars were a series of wars declared against Napoleon's French Empire by opposing coalitions, led by Britain and funded by Rothschild.



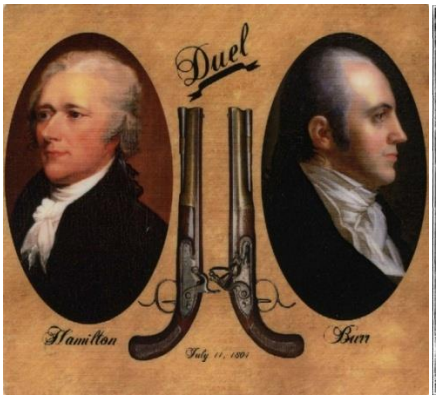
1803
THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE: RATHER THAN BORROW FROM THE BANKERS, NAPOLEON SELLS LAND TO THE U.S.



Napoleon needs money to finance France's war effort against the European powers, but he is unwilling to borrow from big bankers. Napoleon once wrote:

"When a government is dependent upon bankers for money, they and not the leaders of the government control the situation, since the hand that gives is above the hand that takes. Money has no motherland; financiers are without patriotism and without decency; their sole object is gain." (15)

Instead of crawling to Rothschild, Napoleon raises money by proposing to sell the massive Territory of Louisiana to the United States. President Jefferson jumps at the offer. Napoleon's move also closes a possible front in the western hemisphere from which Britain could wage war against French territory.

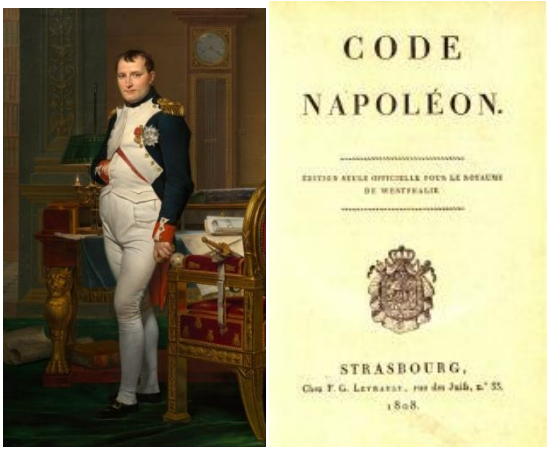


Cartoon above depicts nobles and peasants crawling to Rothschild. Napoleon did borrow money, but he also utilized other means for finance. The Jefferson-Napoleon deal DOUBLED America's territory.

1795 - 1804
THE FALL OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON

Meanwhile, back in the fledgling U.S.A., in 1795, London's banker-tool Alexander Hamilton is forced to resign his Treasury position in disgrace when it was discovered that he is sleeping with another man's wife (Maria Reynolds Affair).

On July 11, 1804, Hamilton is killed in a duel with Thomas Jefferson's Vice President, Aaron Burr; a political rival whom the arrogant Hamilton had insulted and defamed. Though dueling was illegal in New Jersey, Burr returned to Washington and finished out the remaining 8 months of his term as Jefferson's first Vice President.



Hamilton had many enemies. He finally messed with the wrong guy.

1804
NAPOLEON ESTABLISHES THE NAPOLEONIC CODE

Napoleon's lasting reforms include higher education, a tax code, road systems and sewer systems. His set of civil laws, the Code Civil—now known as the Napoleonic Code—is prepared by committees of legal experts. Napoleon participates actively in the sessions of the Council of State that revises the drafts. The Code forbids privileges based on birth, allows freedom of religion, and specifies that government jobs must go to the most qualified. Other codes are commissioned by Napoleon to codify criminal and commerce law. A Code of Criminal Instruction is also published, which enacts rules of due process.

The Code will be accepted throughout much of Europe and remain in force even after Napoleon's eventual defeat. It is a revolutionary idea that spurs the development of the middle class by extending the right to own property. Napoleon also reorganizes what had been the Holy Roman Empire, made up of more than a thousand entities, into a streamlined 40-state Confederation of the Rhine. This confederation will provide the basis for the German Confederation and the unification of Germany in 1871.

The Napoleonic Code sought to eliminate undeserved privileges and establish true justice.

1804
GENOCIDE IN HAITI: 'BLACK JACOBINS' MASSACRE ALL REMAINING FRENCH WHITES

In 1791, the French Revolution in Europe had also inspired a Revolution in the French Caribbean colony of Haiti. The after-effect of the 13 year conflict will ruin Haiti, which remains an unhappy land to this day. The Revolution begins as a slave uprising but eventually degenerates into a genocidal race war targeting French settlers in Haiti – including many who are opposed to slavery and friendly toward the Blacks.

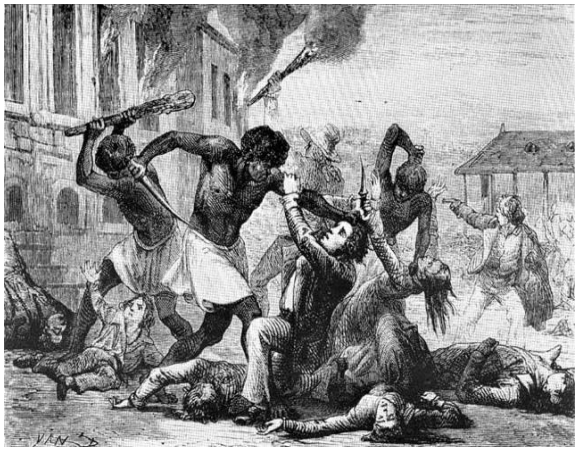
Even after slavery had been abolished, radical elements of the Haitian Revolution continue to incite racial hatred toward the innocent Whites who were far outnumbered by the Blacks and Mulattos. In 1802, a notorious killer named Jean-Jacques Dessalines takes over Haiti by betraying his more reasonable, and actually pro-French, Black predecessor, Toussaint L'ouverture.

Napoleon had previously sent troops to retake Haiti, but as many as 40,000 died of Yellow Fever. Now, pre-occupied with European Wars, there is little he can do to save the Whites of Haiti. The smart Whites get out, but many of the "bleeding heart liberal" types refuse to see the danger of being such a small minority under Black Jacobin rule.

In 1804, Dessalines orders the genocidal massacre of the remaining White population of Haiti. His secretary Boisrong-Tonnere declares:

"For our declaration of independence, we should have the skin of a white man for parchment, his skull for an inkwell, his blood for ink, and a bayonet for a pen!" (16)

Squads of Black soldiers move from house to house, killing entire families. The weapons used are silent ones; such as knives and bayonets rather than gunfire. This is so that the killing can be done more quietly, thus giving no loud gunfire warning to other intended victims. Killings take place on the streets. Plundering and rape also occur. White children are beaten and stabbed to death; and white women are raped and pushed into forced marriages under threat of death.



To flush out Whites who went into hiding, the monster Dessalines proclaims an amnesty for all Whites. When the terrified Whites resurface, they too are murdered. One of the most diabolical of the massacre participants is Jean Zombi, a mulatto known for his brutality. One account describes how Zombi stops a White man on the street, strips him naked, and takes him to the stairs of the Presidential Palace where he kills him with a dagger as Dessalines watches. In the Haitian 'Voodoo' cult tradition, the figure of Jean Zombi is the prototype for the "zombie".

The massacre results in the deaths of between 4,000 to 5,000 people of all ages and genders. (17) But because the victims were White and the perpetrators were Black Jacobins; the historians who serve The New World Order have forgotten them.

Under orders from Dessalines, the "Black Jacobins" of Haiti carried out the first open manifestation of the New World Order's 'War on Whites'. Because of the Yellow Fever outbreak which had devastated his Caribbean forces, Napoleon is unable to save the French of Haiti.

DECEMBER, 1804
NAPOLEON IS CROWNED EMPEROR BY POPE PIUS VII

Napoleon, by a very wide margin, is elected "Emperor of the French" in a November, 1804 plebiscite. He is crowned by Pope Pius VII as Napoleon I at Notre Dame Cathedral. The story that Napoleon seized the crown out of the hands of the Pope during the ceremony, to avoid subjugating to the Pope's authority, is not accurate, as the coronation procedure had been agreed upon in advance.

After a string of stunning victories, France establishes itself as the leading continental power of Europe and builds alliances of its own. Napoleon is now 'larger than life' – a development which has the British and NWO types seething.

1805
NAPOLEON TRIUMPHS AT THE BATTLE OF AUSTERLITZ

On the first anniversary of his coronation, Napoleon defeats Austria and Russia at Austerlitz. This ends the Third Coalition War against him. To commemorate the victory, Napoleon commissions the 'Arc de Triomphe'.

Austria has to concede territory. The subsequent Peace of Pressburg leads to the dissolution of the Holy Roman Empire and creation of the Confederation of the Rhine with Napoleon named as its Protector. Napoleon later states, "The battle of Austerlitz is the finest of all I have fought." (18)

The famous Arc de Triomphe in Paris commemorates Austerlitz.

1807
RUSSIA'S CZAR AND NAPOLEON MAKE PEACE

In 1805 and 1807 Russia suffers major losses in battles with Napoleon's armies. Napoleon's forces, though victorious, are weary from fighting and unable to pursue the Russian armies further. Finally, Czar Alexander I makes peace with Napoleon with the Treaty of Tilsit (1807). The Russian ruler accepts France's continental position, and vows support of Napoleon. For his part, Napoleon believes Alexander has extended him a hand of friendship.

1800's
NAPOLEON WANTS TO ASSIMILATE THE JEWS

Napoleon is very tolerant in his attitude towards the Jews. As a result, he has won the respect of many of them. But he has his motives. Historian Rabbi Berel Wein reveals that Napoleon was primarily interested in seeing the Jews assimilated, rather than prosper as an alien community:

"Napoleon's outward tolerance and fairness toward Jews was actually based upon his grand plan to have them disappear entirely by means of total assimilation, intermarriage, and conversion." (19)

This attitude can be seen from a letter Napoleon wrote in November 1806,

"It is necessary to reduce, if not destroy, the tendency of Jewish people to practice a very great number of activities that are harmful to civilization and to public order in society in all the countries of the world. It is necessary to stop the harm by preventing it; to prevent it, it is necessary to change the Jews. ... Once part of their youth will take its place in our armies, they will cease to have Jewish interests and sentiments; their interests and sentiments will be French." (20)

Again, privately, in an 1808 letter to his brother Jerome, Napoleon makes his assimilation plans clear:

"I have undertaken to reform the Jews, but I have not endeavored to draw more of them into my realm. Far from that, I have avoided doing anything which could show any esteem for the most despicable of mankind." (21)

Napoleon's outreach to the Jews was intended to eventually assimilate them as Frenchmen. To a hard-core Jew, this is a big 'no-no'!

1808
NAPOLEON'S DECREE CANCELS DEBTS OWED TO JEWISH MONEY-LENDERS

In response to complaints about Jewish money lenders, Napoleon had, in 1806, suspended all debts owed to them. In 1808, he goes a step further and issues a decree that the money lenders refer to as "The Infamous Decree."

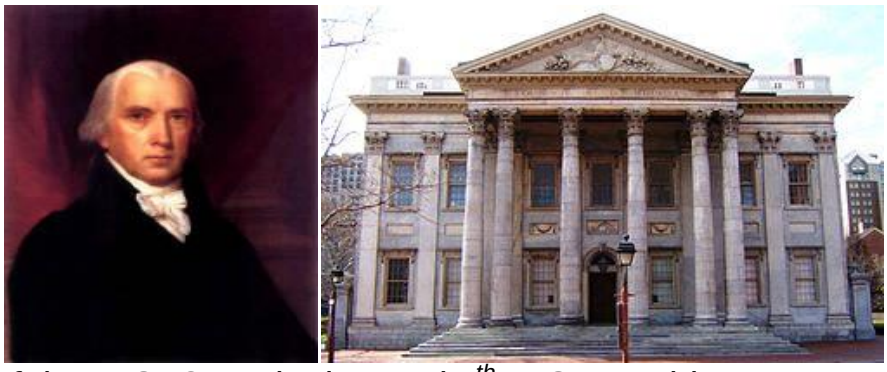
Napoleon wants the Jews to move away from their traditional money lending practices and become farmers and craftsmen instead. His decree severely restricts the practice of lending, and annuls all debts owed by married women, minors, and soldiers. Any loan that had an interest rate exceeding 10 percent is also annulled.

Napoleon's religious tolerance is admired by many of the Jews. But his efforts to regulate usury upset the Jewish money-lenders and seal his fate. That is why, to this day, they refer to Napoleon's decree as "The Infamous Decree." The Rothschilds of Europe must destroy Napoleon before his anti-debt monetary philosophy can take hold in Europe.

1808 -1814
THE PENINSULAR WARS, FRANCE vs SPAIN, BRITAIN & PORTUGAL

British international intrigue draws Spain into war against its former French ally. The years of fighting in Spain take a heavy burden on France's Grande Armée. While the French win battle after battle, their communications and supply lines are severely tested. French units are isolated, harassed, and slowly bled to death by guerilla fighters.

The Spanish armies are repeatedly beaten, but time and again they regroup and hound the French. This drain on French resources leads Napoleon to call the conflict, "the Spanish Ulcer".



At the peak of the French Continental Empire, Spanish Guerrillas take a heavy toll on French forces.

1811
THE U.S. CENTRAL BANK IS KILLED AS BRITAIN THREATENS ANOTHER WAR AGAINST THE U.S.

Meanwhile, back in the fledgling U.S.A., the 20-year charter of Alexander Hamilton's Monster Bank is set to expire. President James Madison had opposed the Bank in 1791, and has no desire to renew the charter. The "Federalists*" (Hamiltonians)* in Congress favor its renewal and close relations with Britain. The "Democratic-Republicans" (Jeffersonians) want to kill the Bank and view Britain with suspicion.

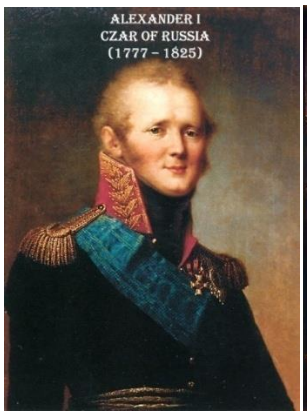
The vote to renew the charter is close, but the anti-Bank faction prevails. The New York-London Bank is allowed to die. At this time in history, the British are "coincidentally" escalating tensions with America. Britain is already at war with Napoleon and is blockading France. Under the blockade, US ships are being harassed and sailors taken prisoner. The young American Republic appears to be headed for a 2nd war with its ex 'Mother Country", which by now belongs to Nathan Rothschild and friends.



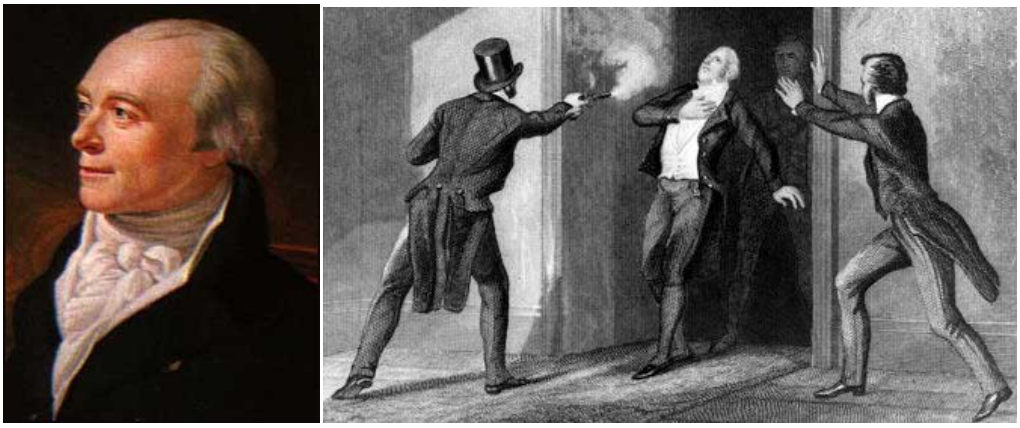
Author of the U.S. Constitution and 4th U.S. President James Madison allows the Philadelphia-based National Bank to die.

1811
BRITISH AND INTERNAL INTRIGUE CAUSE RUSSIA TO BREAK OFF ITS ALLIANCE WITH NAPOLEON

Napoleon and Czar Alexander I of Russia had been enjoying friendly personal relations. By 1811, however, tensions increase as Alexander comes under intense pressure from political forces within the Russian nobility to break off the alliance with France. Fearing another two-front war, Napoleon threatens serious consequences if Russia forms an alliance with Britain.

By 1812, advisers (intriguers) to Alexander suggest an invasion of the French Empire and recapture of Poland (now an ally of France). On receipt of intelligence reports on Russia's war preparations, Napoleon prepares for a preemptive offensive campaign against Russia. The invasion begins on June 23, 1812.

1- Court intriguers persuaded Alexander to break off his alliance with Napoleon and join up once again with Rothschild-Britain instead.



2- Painting depicts meeting between Alexander and Napoleon during happier days.

MAY 11, 1812
BRITAIN'S PRIME MINISTER ASSASSINATED JUST BEFORE HE IS TO MAKE PEACE WITH THE U.S.

British Prime Minister Spencer Perceval enters the lobby of the House of Commons. He is on his way to a meeting whose purpose is to discuss how to calm the rising tensions with the United States – an important goal for Perceval. (22) A man named John Bellingham then draws a pistol and shoots Perceval at close range. Perceval is killed. Bellingham is tried and hanged just one week later.

In 1787, Bellingham had been a midshipman on a vessel that was taken over by mutineers and sunk. In 1803, he briefly worked in Russia, where he was imprisoned for sabotaging a Russian ship, also lost at sea. These incidents suggest that Bellingham is a political radical, and not just a "crazed lone gunman". The odd manner in which Bellingham is so quickly executed, the lack of investigation into a possible broader conspiracy, his link to a mutiny, his arrest in Russia, and the looming Bank War with the U.S., all suggest that the killer is a radical patsy, used by higher authorities to eliminate a disobedient Prime Minister.

Perceval's murder will be the first in a long series of political murders, and attempted murders, which will plague Europe and America for the next 200 years. In many of these cases, it will be an emotionally unstable 'lone' radical who is used to carry out the dirty deed.

The murder of Perceval makes war with the United States inevitable.

JUNE, 1812
THE STRANGE 'WAR OF 1812' BEGINS (1812-14)

The murder of Prime Minister Perceval delays the effort to improve relations with the United States. Had Perceval lived, the British wartime policy of European trade restrictions and harassing of American vessels would have been lifted, and peace maintained.

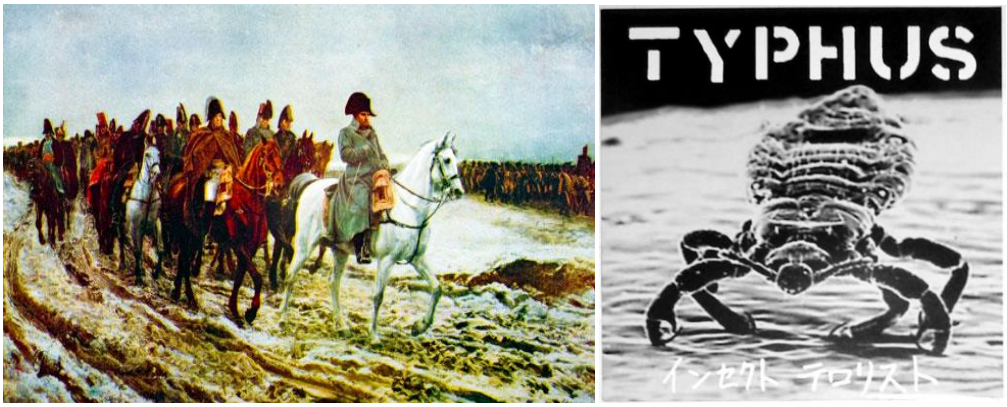
War commences just 5 weeks after the assassination. The same Hamiltonian-Federalists, who wanted to re-charter The Central Bank also oppose Madison's decision to fight the British. After the war ends in 1814, the Federalists will be perceived as unpatriotic and their political party collapses.

Perceval's successor, Robert Jenkinson (Lord Liverpool) will later lift the trade restriction orders, which are the stated cause of the war. But by that time, the gesture is meaningless as the war is already started. Whether Liverpool was being sincere, or whether he was just trying to shift the blame for war onto the United States, is unclear.

What is known is that the House of Rothschild financed both sides of the war! (23)

American General Andrew Jackson will emerge as a heroic figure from The War of 1812. More on Jackson, later on.

1812
NAPOLEON'S INVASION OF RUSSIA PROVES COSTLY / TYPHUS WRECKS HIS GRAND ARMEE



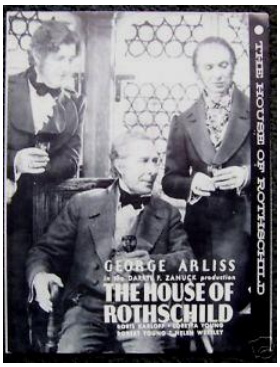
The Russians avoid Napoleon's objective of a decisive engagement and instead retreat deeper into Russia. A brief attempt at resistance is made at Smolensk in August, but the Russians are defeated in a series of battles. Napoleon resumes his advance.

Owing to the Russian army's scorched earth tactics, the French find it hard to forage food for themselves and their horses. The Russians eventually offer battle outside Moscow. The Battle of Borodino results in about 44,000 Russian and 35,000 French dead, wounded or captured.

Although the French win, the Russian army has withstood the major battle Napoleon had hoped would be decisive. Napoleon's own account:

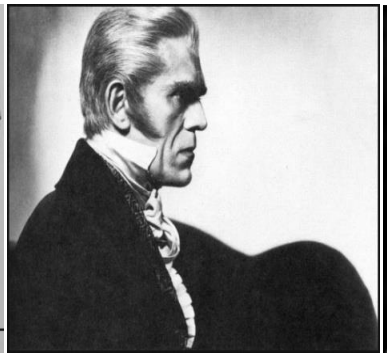
"The most terrible of all my battles was the one before Moscow. The French showed themselves to be worthy of victory, but the Russians showed themselves worthy of being invincible." (24)

Napoleon retreats with most of his Grand Armee intact. On the long march home, typhus wipes out most of his men.



The retreat from Russia proves disastrous for Napoleon. Contrary to popular belief, it was neither the Russian Army, nor hunger, nor the cold that wiped out most of his returning Grand Armee. It was the lice-spread disease of typhus. (25)

1812-1814
ROTHSCHILD'S ARMY vs NAPOLEON'S ARMEE



The Duke of Wellington's Army was funded by Nathan Rothschild

From his base in London's financial district, ("The City") Nathan Rothschild single-handedly continues to finance Britain's war to defeat Napoleon. Shipments of gold to the European continent fund the Duke of Wellington's armies and also those of Britain's allies, Prussia and Austria. The Rothschild brothers co-ordinate their activities across the continent, and develop a network of agents, shippers, and couriers to transport gold across war-torn Europe. Were it not for Rothschild's limitless fortune, the Allies would surely have had to make peace with Napoleon by now.

The 1934 Hollywood film openly portrays the Allies begging Rothschild for finance! Boris Karloff, best known for his 1931 role as the Frankenstein Monster, plays the part of a Prussian (German) "anti-Semitic" Count who despises the Rothschilds. Karloff is deliberately made-up to resemble the monster.

1813
NAPOLEON SCORES MORE VICTORIES, BUT HIS FORCES ARE BEING DEPLETED

There is a lull in fighting over the winter of 1812–13 as both the Russians and the French rebuild their forces. Napoleon is then able to field 350,000 troops. Emboldened by France's failure in Russia, Prussia joins with Austria, Sweden, Russia, Great Britain, Spain, and Portugal in a new coalition. Napoleon assumes command in Germany and inflicts a series of defeats on the Coalition, culminating in the Battle of Dresden in August 1813.

Despite these stunning successes against multiple armies, the losses continue to mount against Napoleon. The French army is eventually pinned down by a force twice it's size at the Battle of Leipzig. This is by far the largest battle of the Napoleonic Wars and cost more than 90,000 casualties in total.

The Battle of Leipzig marks the first time Napoleon was defeated in battle.

SPRING 1814
PARIS IS CAPTURED / NAPOLEON FORCED TO ABDICATE

Napoleon withdraws back to France; his army having been reduced to 70,000 soldiers and 40,000 stragglers, against more than three times as many Allied troops. The French are surrounded as British forces press from the south, and other Coalition forces position to attack from the German states. Paris is captured by the Coalition in March 1814.

On April 2, 1814, the French Senate declares Napoleon deposed. When Napoleon learns that Paris has surrendered, he proposes that the army march on the capital. His Marshals then mutiny. They confront Napoleon and force him to announce his unconditional abdication only two days later.

"Sorry Boss. But you have to step down."

APRIL, 1814
NAPOLEON IS EXILED TO THE ISLAND OF ELBA

The combination of Rothschild's endless money, cunning British intrigue, limitless allied manpower, "the Spanish Ulcer', and the disastrous typhus-infested retreat from Russia were all just too much for the French to overcome. After Napoleon's abdication, King Louis XVIII is installed as ruler of France. Napoleon is exiled to the island of Elba off the Italian coast, where he is given authority over the island's 12,000 inhabitants.

While in exile, Napoleon plans his next move.

AUGUST, 1814
THE BRITISH BURN THE WHITE HOUSE

The Redcoats burn the White House before a storm chases them away.

British forces occupy Washington DC. They set fire to the White House and other important buildings including the Treasury, The Capitol, and the Library of Congress. Less than two days after sacking Washington, the British are forced to leave when a violent hurricane tears through DC. The freak storm extinguishes fires, kills British troops, and damages many of their ships.

President Madison and the rest of the government then quickly return to the Capitol City. Legend has it that a storm sent by “Divine Providence” drove the British away. Later that same year, Britain and the US will make peace.

FEBRUARY, 1815
THE LEGEND CONTINUES. NAPOLEON ESCAPES FROM EXILE!

Separated from his wife and sons, and aware of rumors that he might be shipped to a remote island in the middle of the Atlantic, Napoleon stuns Europe by escaping from Elba with a handful of supporters and soldiers, in February of 1815. Soon after landing on the French mainland, a regiment of French soldiers, under orders to arrest him, confronts their former Emperor. Napoleon approaches the regiment alone, dismounts his horse and shouts:

"Here I am. Kill your Emperor, if you wish." (26)

The soldiers respond with, "Long Live the Emperor!" and march with Napoleon to Paris!

King Louis XVIII flees. Napoleon quickly raises another army. He will once again confront the Rothschild-funded British and Prussians at the decisive Battle of Waterloo in Belgium.

He's back! Defying orders to arrest Napoleon, the troops join him instead.

JUNE, 1815
THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO

Again financed by The House of Rothschild, The British, led by the Duke of Wellington, and the Prussians, led by Gebhard von Blucher, amass their armies near the north-eastern border of France. Napoleon is forced to preemptively attack France's enemies before they can unleash a massive, coordinated invasion of France, along with other members of this latest Allied coalition.

The Battle of Waterloo is fought on Sunday, June 18, 1815, near Waterloo in present-day Belgium. The French army nearly wins the great battle. It is only the late arrival of Prussian reinforcements that suddenly tilts the battle against the French.

The defeat at Waterloo marks the end of Napoleon's Hundred Days return from exile and ends his rule as Emperor once and for all. The very word "Waterloo" has since been synonymous with one's final defeat.

Napoleon's strategy to divide the British and Prussian armies, and then destroy them separately, almost worked.

JUNE, 1815
NATHAN ROTHSCHILD CAPITALIZES UPON THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO

The Rothschild Brothers utilize courier pigeons to rapidly communicate amongst themselves and their agents. The network provides Nathan Rothschild with political and financial information ahead of his peers, giving him an advantage in the financial markets. After the final defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo, Rothschild receives word of the battle's outcome long before anyone else.

Rothschild will use the "insider information" of Wellington's victory to become Britain's supreme master. He orders his brokers to sell off his holdings. Other brokers assume that Rothschild has therefore learned that Britain has lost at Waterloo. A panic sell-off drives the market down to historic lows. Rothschild then buys up the devalued market at bargain prices.

When the public learns of Britain's victory over Napoleon, the stocks skyrocket to new heights. Nathan Rothschild multiplies his massive fortune by 20 times!

Nathan buys up Britain after Waterloo.

The 1934 film does indeed portray Rothschild's buying-up of the London market, but makes it seem like it was the "accidental" consequence of his trying to "save" the market and not "insider trading"!

1- Rothschild's descendants (like Jacob, above) still wield enormous financial and political power.

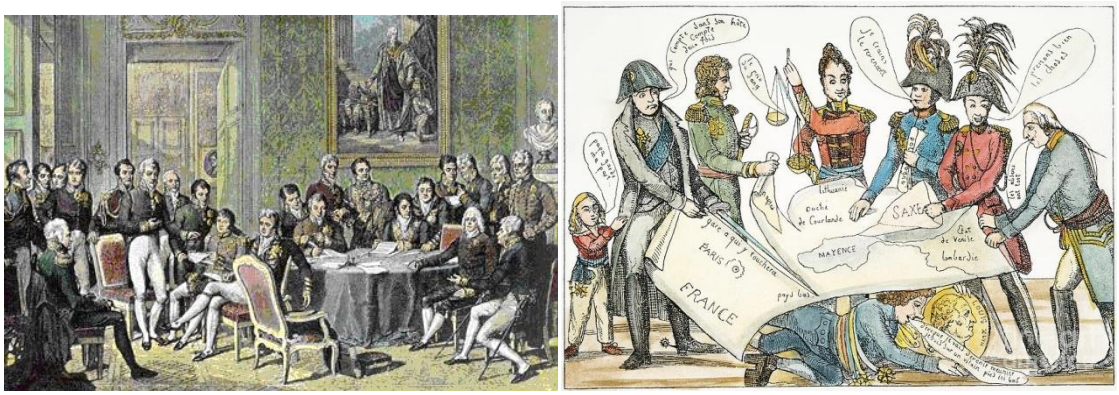
2 – It is enough power to make star-struck groupies like Governor Arnold Schwarzenegger and Billionaire Warren Buffett (shown above with Jacob) seem like nobodies.

1815
NAPOLEON IS AGAIN EXILED, AND PROBABLY MURDERED

After the final defeat at Waterloo, Napoleon is exiled to the island of St. Helena, 1000 miles off the coast of West Africa. King Louis XVIII is installed on the throne and, predictably, allows Napoleon's "Infamous Decree" against usury to expire in 1818. The Rothschilds are back in control!

Rumors of Napoleon returning will continue to occasionally circulate throughout Europe. Napoleon is neglected by his British captors, and will finally die in 1821, at age 51, from what appears to be arsenic poisoning.

Napoleon dies. The legend lives. His coffin is still on display in Paris.



1814-1815
BALANCE OF POWER POLITICS / THE CONGRESS OF VIENNA RESHAPES EUROPE

After Napoleon's defeat, the European powers hold a series of meetings in Vienna, Austria. Political boundaries are redrawn. Old disputes are settled. These conferences are known as Vienna "Though many nations participate, the Congress is run by the "Big Four" (Britain, Prussia, Russia, & Austria). The most notable decision reached at Vienna is the consolidation of 360 small German states, into a German Confederation of 38 states.

Arrangements made by the Four Great Powers ensure that future disputes will be settled in a manner that will avoid the wars of the previous twenty years. Although the Congress of Vienna preserves the "balance of power" in Europe, it does not check the spread of the Red revolutionary movements that are being born, and will spread across Europe some 30 years later.'

"Balance of Power" politics serves the interests of the Globalist planners in that it allows for a disobedient nation, or nations, to be checked, challenged, and controlled by a group of other nations of equal power. The Rothschilds and their agents will soon wield enormous financial influence in 3 of the "Big 4" nations. Only Russia still remains free of Rothchild's reach.

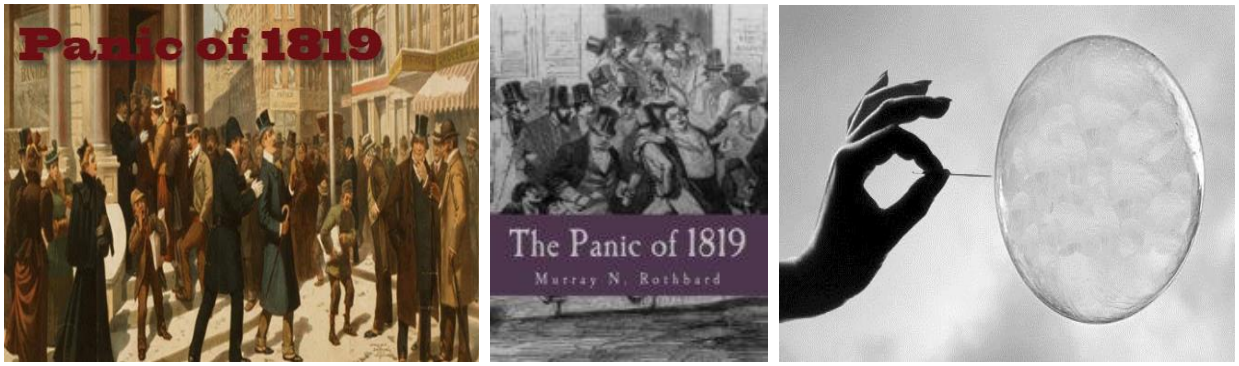
The Congress of Vienna consolidated German states and redrew the borders of Europe.

1816
THE BEAST IS BACK! THE 2nd CENTRAL BANK OF THE U.S. IS ESTABLISHED



Five years after America's Central Bank was killed, and just two years after the White House is burned, the Second Bank of the United States is chartered by many of the same Congressmen who voted against the re-charter in 1811. After the War of 1812, Madison and other anti-Bank Jeffersonians had a "change of heart" when they found it difficult to cover war debts. Was there a deal made to re-establish a Bank in order to call off Rothschild's British attack dogs?

The timing of the re-charter, the timing of the Perceval assassination, the timing of the war, and the sudden decision to now accept a Central Bank, suggest that the very strange War of 1812 was actually a Bank War. Like the first Bank, this one also has a 20 year charter, is also a privately held corporation, and its principal shareholders are also linked to the New York-London axis. The Bank has the power to engineer debt driven "booms" by creating money "out of thin air" and then lending it into the economy at interest.

1819
THE 2nd CENTRAL BANK OF THE U.S. CAUSES A PANIC

By 1819, the Bank has already created its first boom-bust real estate bubble. The Bank's easy debt money drove prices up, and its "tight money" adjustment drove prices down. When the bubble from The Panic of 1819 pops; borrowers are unable to repay their loans and property values crash.

Bankruptcies and bank runs follow.

By 1819, the new Central Bank will already have created its first disastrous bubble – in real estate and also stocks.

1820
THE CATO STREET CONSPIRACY / RED RADICALS PLOT TO KILL THE UK PRIME MINISTER AND HIS CABINET

With the recent death of King George III, Revolutionary Arthur Thistlewood and his gang of conspirators hope to exploit his death and bring a French style revolution to Britain. At their Cato Street meeting place in London, the group plots to kill Britain's Prime Minister as well as all of his Cabinet Ministers. In the ensuing chaos, the radicals would then institute a "Committee for Public Safety" to instigate and oversee a radical Revolution similar to the murderous French Revolution of just 30 years earlier.

After the plot is uncovered, five of the main planners are executed and five others sentenced to prison. As was the case in France, Thistlewood's masters and financial backers remain in the shadows. The Red monster is still alive and growing in Europe.

Britain's Red Revolution was foiled and the traitors were hanged.

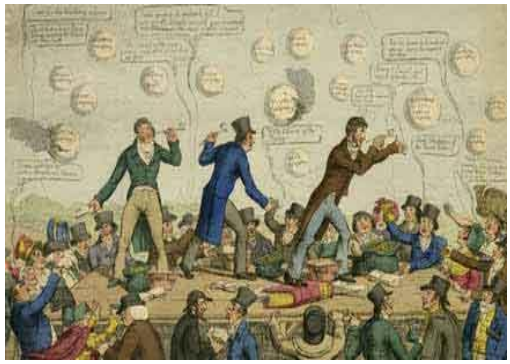
1821 – 1880

DECEMBER, 1823
THE MONROE DOCTRINE

The Monroe Doctrine is aimed at curbing European influence in 'The Americas'. President James Monroe's policy states that the US will not interfere in the colonial affairs of Europe, but would regard further colonization in the America's as an act of aggression, which would trigger US intervention.

As Spanish colonies struggle for independence, Monroe seeks to prevent the establishment of puppet British or French monarchies in their place. Whether or not Spain keeps its colonies does not concern Monroe. His goal is to prevent the "balance-of-power" politics of Europe from spreading to the Americas, and thus threatening the young USA.

"Don't cross this line!"



1825
THE HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD BAILS BRITAIN OUT OF THE "PANIC OF 1825"

The Panic of 1825 is a stock market crash that arises, in part, out of speculative investments in Latin America. As is always the case, the crisis is precipitated by the expansionary monetary policy – in this case from the Bank of England. This fuels a stock market bubble. The inevitable tightening of money pops it.

The crisis leads to the closing of six London banks and sixty country banks in England; but was also manifest in the markets of Europe, Latin America, and the United States. Nathan Rothschild steps up to supply enough coin to the Bank of England to enable it to stay afloat.

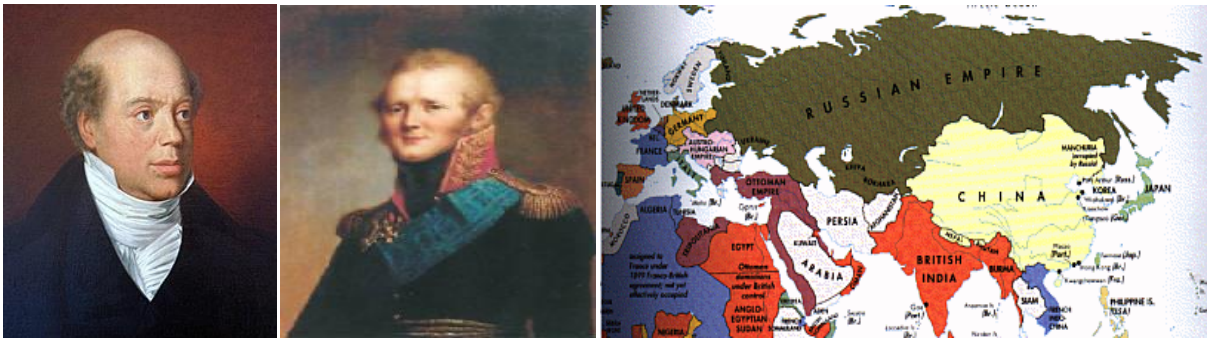
An infusion of gold reserves from the Rothschild-affiliated Banque de France also helps to save the Bank of England from complete collapse. As if the family didn't have enough wealth and power -- the House's bailout / buy up of 1825 makes them even bigger!

The Bubble Game:



With passions inflamed by the Rothschild financial press, greedy fools get all excited over easy money and rising stock prices. When the money supply is tightened, the bubble inevitably pops and stocks crash. Rothschild then steps in and buys everything up…..And the idiots NEVER figure it out.

1825
RUSSIAN CZAR ALEXANDER I DIES MYSTERIOUSLY AS ROTHSCHILD TARGETS RUSSIA FOR DESTRUCTION

After the fall of Napoleon and the Congress of Vienna, the Rothschilds have turned their hateful lust towards the Royal Romanov Family of Russia. The Russian Empire is an up and coming world power, possessing vast territory and resources. Like the young United States of America, Orthodox Christian Russia is also destined for greatness. And also like the USA, it is not under Rothschild's complete control.

Czar (King) Alexander I had already survived a kidnapping attempt made while he was on his way to a conference in Europe. In 1825, the Czar dies of an unexpected illness, contracted while he was again traveling far away from the safe Capital of St. Petersburg. The death is sudden and mysterious, giving rise to "conspiracy theories." The world-shaking events that will occur over the next 100 years add much credibility to the poisoning theory. Coming events will clearly confirm that the Romanovs and their Empire have been targeted for death by the forces of the New World Order and its controlled gang of Red terrorists.

Nathan Rothschild wants the Romanovs dead and the enormous Russian Empire and its resources under NWO control. Czar Alexander's death was shrouded in mystery.

1832-1835
CENTRAL BANK BOSS NICHOLAS BIDDLE BATTLES WITH ANDREW JACKSON

The Charter for the Second Bank of the United States is due to expire in 1836. Nicholas Biddle is the President of the privately owned Central Bank. Biddle is an advocate of big government, public (government) education, and centralized banking.

In 1833, President Andrew Jackson begins his effort to "Kill the Bank" by withdrawing government funds from it and then letting its charter expire without renewal. Jackson hates Biddle's Bank. He accuses it of causing inflation, creating speculative bubbles, and corrupting the nation's politics. He is said to have declared to the bankers':

"You are a den of vipers and thieves. I intend to rout you out, and by the Eternal God, I will rout you out!" (1)

Biddle then deliberately causes the recession of 1834 by tightening the money supply, leaving debtors short of new currency to repay old loans. Biddle is trying to intimidate the ex-General and hero of the War of 1812, but the fiery Andrew Jackson is a fearless defender of the common people. Instead of backing down from banker pressure, Jackson turns up the heat. He threatens the bankers and wins the public to his side in "The Bank War".

When he didn't get his way, Biddle deliberately damaged the economy. Jackson is determined to shut the bankers down and clean them out.

JANUARY, 1835
JACKSON PAYS OFF THE ENTIRE NATIONAL DEBT – THE FIRST & ONLY TIME IN U.S. HISTORY!

The banking dynasties watch in dismay, as Andrew Jackson becomes the first and only President in US history to pay off the entire national debt. US taxpayers are thus spared the burden of paying bond interest on debt to the Central Bankers. Jackson warns America about the danger of debt:

"I am one of those who do not believe that a national debt is a national blessing, but rather a curse to a republic; inasmuch as it is calculated to raise around the administration a moneyed aristocracy dangerous to the liberties of the country." (2)

Deprived of the huge profits that Central Banks generate from the debts of big government, the bankers plot the destruction of Andrew Jackson.

Jackson hated debt and mistrusted the New York Bankers.

JANUARY 30, 1835
BRITISH AGENT ATTEMPTS TO KILL ANDREW JACKSON

As President Jackson leaves the Capitol following a funeral, a "deranged" man from Britain named Richard Lawrence emerges from behind a column and fires his pistol at Jackson. The gun misfires. Lawrence pulls out a 2nd pistol, which also misfires! Jackson attacks Lawrence with his cane. The would-be assassin is then restrained.

Lawrence plays the part of a "deranged" lone gunman, but he does suggest that Jackson's opposition to the Central Bank is what motivated his action, saying that with Jackson dead, "Money will be more plenty." (3)

The assassination attempt on Jackson is the first against an American President who defied the New World Order bankers. Many more attempts against conservative and nationalist Kings, Prime Ministers, and Presidents, carried out by manipulated loner fanatics, are yet to come.

The legend of the General – President Jackson grows stronger by the day.

1836
JACKSON WINS! THE CENTRAL BANK IS KILLED

Biddle's effort to keep the Central Bank alive fails as the charter expires. When asked in later years about what he believed was his greatest accomplishment, Jackson replied: 'I Killed the Bank." (4)

The privately owned bank will go out of business completely in 1841. Biddle is arrested for fraud, but later acquitted. Jackson's heroism set the NWO bankers' efforts back many years. It will be 77 more years before the fraudulent monster of central banking resurfaces in America under the name: "The Federal Reserve System".

1- 1836 Cartoon: Jackson slaying the 'Monster Bank'

2- Jackson is still hated to this day by America's Ruling Financial Class and their prostitute "historians". In 2015, a media-hyped effort to remove Jackson's image from the $20 bill was launched.

1844
WRITER, FUTURE UK PRIME MINISTER USES FICTION TO CONFIRM THE ROTHSCHILD CONSPIRACY

Benjamin Disraeli is a Jewish writer and aspiring politician. He will become Prime Minister of Britain (1868, and 1874) and a dominant player of the 19th century. Long before his rise to power, Disraeli publishes Coningsby: The New Generation. Though fictional, Coningsby is based on British politics (Young England Movement).

A character named Sidonia represents Lionel de Rothschild (son of Nathan). Sidonia describes to the politician Coningsby how unseen forces - the "Sidonias" foremost among them, shape Europe's affairs. Sidonia reveals his dislike for the Romanovs (Russian Czars):

"there is no friendship between the Court of St. Petersburg (Russia) and my family." (5)

Sidonia foretells of the Jewish role in the coming 1848 Revolutions about to engulf Europe.

"You never observe a great intellectual movement in Europe in which the Jews do not greatly participate... that mighty revolution of which so little is as yet known in England, is entirely developing under the auspices of Jews." (6)

Sidonia hints of subverting White nations by making the Whites disappear through "race mixing":

"The fact is you cannot destroy a pure Caucasian race. It is a simple law of nature. The mixed persecuting race disappears*, the pure persecuted race (Jews) remains."* (7)

- "persecution"' = opposition to Rothschild

Sidonia concludes his confession by speaking of the shadow rulers:

"So you see my dear Coningsby, that the world is governed by very different personages from what is imagined by those who are not behind the scenes." (8)

Disraeli was very close to the Rothschild Dynasty which made his career. In 'Coningsby', Disraeli uses fiction to describe the very real power and real plans of Lionel de Rothschild (right) and family.

"The mixed persecuting race disappears."

1848
'SPRING TIME OF THE PEOPLES'; PRE-PLANNED REVOLUTIONS AFFECT 50 COUNTRIES

As foretold by Disraeli, pre-planned uprisings - similar to today's "color revolutions" - begin in Sicily in January of 1848. Soon after, revolts "spontaneously" break out in 50 states throughout Europe and South America. The rebel Reds and other assorted groups demand "democracy" (mob rule manipulated by the Banking Dynasties / Globalists).

Although there are legitimate grievances in any nation, and many of the 1848 reformers are sincere people with noble republican visions, the higher purpose of the revolts is not to improve the lives of the people. The true goal is to subvert the authority of existing governments and install "democratic" governments that can be easily controlled by agents working for The New World Order.

Again, let us reiterate:

The New World Order refers to a movement among banking, media and academic elites - the legendary Rothschild Family foremost among them - with philosophical roots dating back to the days of the French Revolution.

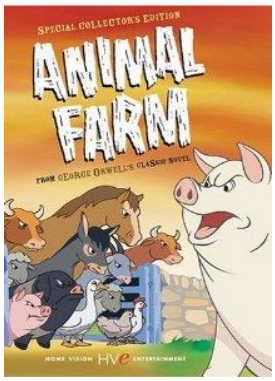
The N.W.O. envisions the future establishment of an integrated system of "Global Governance" to be erected upon the ruins of the "Old World Order" - a world based on sovereign and independent nations.

The controlled revolutions wreak havoc, causing thousands of deaths and leading to political changes in some states. Within a year, the revolutions will have been put down, but the political structure of Europe has now been weakened by the slow poison of "liberalism". Czarist Russia, the hated enemy of the legendary Globalist Rothschild Family, is unaffected by the Red tumult of 1848, but not for long.

1848 was a big year for the Globalists and their controlled 'pro-democracy' mobs of Communists, republicans and assorted dupes of varying stripes.

1848
KARL MARX PUBLISHES THE 'COMMUNIST MANIFESTO'

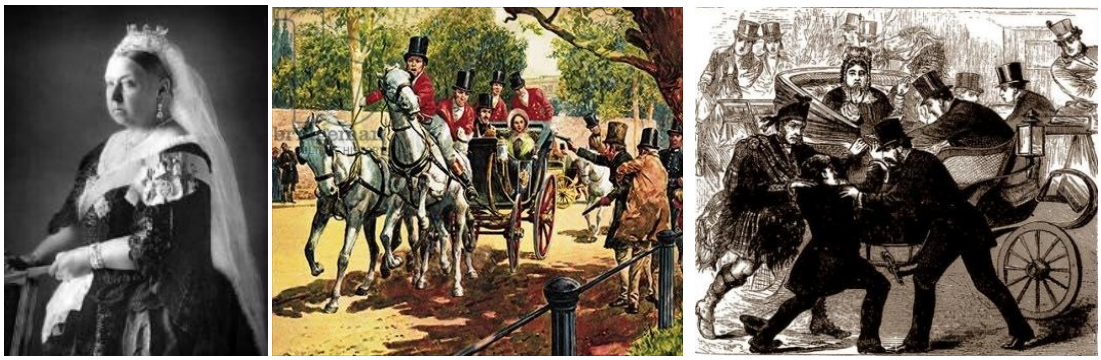
As well-funded and well-organized revolutionary movements spread across Europe, German-Jewish "philosopher" Karl Marx sets forth the goals of the Communists. For all his lofty talk and empty promises of a "workers' paradise" and "social justice", the Communist Manifesto is just an intellectual mask for the Rothschild Family's Globalist plan to enslave humanity under a New World Order. Marx's grandparents were actually related to the Rothschild Family, through marriage.



The Communists call for heavy income taxes, a Central Bank with monopoly on credit, abolition of private land ownership and inheritance, state control over communication, education, manufacturing, agriculture, and medicine. Marx refers to this totalitarian scheme as 'dictatorship of the proletariat (downtrodden masses).

Marx's cult followers promote violence, class envy, and hostility towards free markets, family, business, tradition, and Christianity. In addition to the angry misfits, envious losers and maladjusted criminals who worship Marx; there are many well-meaning idealists who fall for Marx's empty and poisonous promises of a better world with security and prosperity for all.

These "useful idiots" are known, to this day, as "liberals" or "progressives". Their thoughtless idealism will unwittingly help the Reds and Globalists greatly.



1 & 2 - The revolutionary philosophy and false promises of Marx & Engels will destabilize Europe for many years to come. 3- George Orwell's classic, 'Animal Farm' is an allegorical expose of what idealistic Communism is really all about.

1840-1880
SEVEN ASSASSINATION ATTEMPTS ON QUEEN VICTORIA

During the 64 year reign of Queen Victoria (1837-1901), (9) the legendary Monarch will survive an astounding seven assassination attempts! Three of these failed efforts against Victoria occurred during the turbulent 1840's. These attempts, and the many other attempts and murders of European Kings in the coming years, combine to send a clear and intimidating message to the Monarchs of Europe.

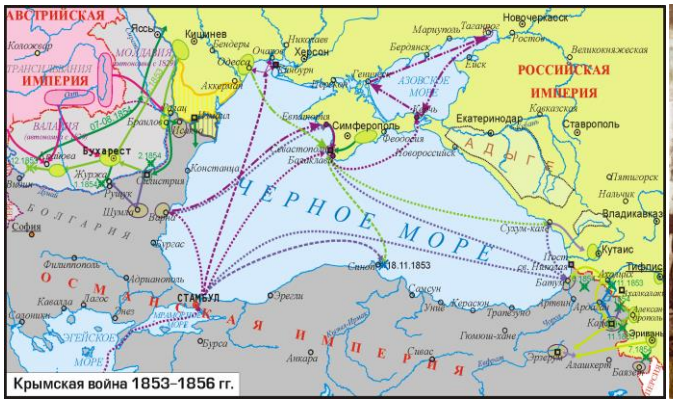
Were the dark forces of the NWO behind any of the attempts on Queen Victoria? We can only speculate, but it does seem plausible. By the end of her reign, the once powerful Victoria and her heirs will have been reduced to a nostalgic sideshow. The Rothschild New World Order is, to this day, run out of London's financial district (AKA "The City" of London.) The symbolic British Monarchy survives only because its members know better than to challenge the Globalist-Zionist Bosses in London.

Victoria's power is usurped by The House of Rothschild and its agents.

FEBRUARY, 1853
ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT MADE AGAINST EMPEROR FRANZ JOSEPH OF AUSTRIA-HUNGARY

The wave of attempted murders of European Monarchs continues with an attempt on Austria-Hungary's Emperor Franz Joseph. The Emperor survives a stabbing by Hungarian "nationalist" Janos Libenyi, who attacks Franz from behind, stabbing him in the neck.

In addition to using Reds (Communist & Anarchists), the NWO Mafia will often use mentally unstable "nationalist" tools to carry out suicidal assassination attempts and destabilize multi-national Empires.



Fortunately for the Emperor, the collar of his uniform is so sturdy that it blunts the effect of the knife. One of the Emperor's officers then strikes down the assassin with his saber, killing him on the spot. Franz Joseph will go on to live a long life. He will still be Emperor when Austria-Hungary, Serbia and Russia are manipulated into World War I following the 1914 assassination of his nephew by a Serbian "nationalist".

1853-1856
ROTHSCHILD, BRITAIN, FRANCE & TURKEY WAGE THE CRIMEAN WAR AGAINST RUSSIA

The Crimean War is fought between Russia, and an alliance of Britain, France, and the Ottoman Empire (Turkey). Most of the conflict takes place on the Crimean Peninsula (Black Sea / Ukraine). On the surface, the war is fought for influence over territory, including control of Ottoman ruled Palestine. Russian Czar Nicholas I seeks to avoid war by assuring Britain that its only interest is to protect fellow Orthodox Christians under Ottoman rule.

But Rothschild's Britain is determined to fight Russia. France will join them. The Rothschild Family finances the British-French war effort against the Czar. (10) After 2& 1/2 years of war, peace negotiations begin in 1856 under Nicholas I's son and successor, Alexander II. Russia and Turkey agree not to establish any naval bases on the Black Sea. The loss of Black Sea ports is disadvantageous for Russia, but she will regain the ports later on.

The results of the Crimean War foreshadow future events. It is the first direct assault on Russia by the forces of The New World Order.

The Crimean War weakens Russia's position.

1859
DARWINS THEORY OF 'EVOLUTION' IS EMBRACED BY THE COMMUNISTS AND HYPED UP BY THE PRESS

When Charles Darwin publishes "The Origins of Species" there is great skepticism over his theory that all life "evolved" from a common ancestor. The un-testable, un-observable "theory of evolution" holds that a self-forming, single-cell creature, over a very long time, evolved into a fish - then an amphibian -then into a tree swinging ape - and then into a human being.

Mistaking observable adaptation for "Evolution", Darwin predicts that in time, fossil evidence will reveal the billion year progression from ocean scum to swimsuit 'super model'. After 150 years of digging, this chain of evidence has yet to materialize.

There are HUGE holes in Darwinism and his works are absolutely riddled with logical fallacies and rhetorical tricks. Yet, from its inception, Darwin has benefited from intense media and academic hype. To even mildly question "evolution" will get one shouted down as "ignorant" and "uneducated". This alone is evidence of its flaws!

The cult-like acceptance of Darwinism has done much to destroy faith in a Supreme Creator - and therefore the moral standards that logically derive from such faith. History shows that a people not rooted in moral principles cannot sustain self-government. They will in time degenerate and fall easy prey to tyrants.

Therefore, the fact that Karl Marx in his 1873 work, "Das Kapital" writes a dedication to Charles Darwin, is not at all surprising:

"Darwin's work suits my purpose in that it provides a basis in natural science for the historical class struggle." (11)

And nor is that the first and only expression of Communist excitement over Darwinism:

November 27-30, 1859: Communist icon Friedrich Engels acquires one of the very first copies and sends a letter to Marx telling him:

"Darwin, by the way, whom I'm just reading now, is absolutely splendid". (12)

December 19, 1860: Marx writes a letter to Engels telling him that Darwin's book provides the natural-history foundation for the Communist viewpoint:

"These last four weeks, I have read all sorts of things. Among others, Darwin's book ….this is the book which contains the basis on natural history for our view. (13) (emphasis added)

January 16, 1861: Marx writes an excited letter to his Communist friend Ferdinand Lassalle, the founder of the International Socialist movement in Germany:

"Darwin's work is most important and suits my purpose in that it provides a basis in natural science for the historical class struggle." (14) (emphasis added)

June 18, 1862: Marx had already re-read Origin of Species, and again writes to Engels: "I am amused at Darwin, into whom I looked again" (15)

1862: Marx quotes Darwin again within his 'Theories of Surplus Value':

"In his splendid work, Darwin did not realize that by discovering the 'geometrical progression' in the animal and plant kingdom, he overthrew the Malthus theory." (16)

German Communist leader Wilhelm Liebknecht later described just how excited the 19th Century Communist leaders all were about the new theory:

"When Darwin drew the conclusions from his research work and brought them to the knowledge of the public, we spoke of nothing else for months but Darwin and the enormous significance of his scientific discoveries." (17) (emphasis added)

Engels, Marx, and Liebknecht. The Big 3 legends of 19th Century Communist subversion were all obsessed with Darwinism. Why?

Indeed, "evolution" is very good for Globalism. That explains the academic and media hype behind it, as well as why we are not allowed to question it.

In spite of its scientific flaws - such as the complete lack of fossil evidence for the transitional species, the impossibility of testing the evolution hypothesis, the impossibility of species adding and losing complex chromosomes, the unobservable event of life coming from non-life, the impossibility of DNA codes writing and re-writing new and never seen before sequences, the lack of any plausible explanation for the "evolution" of integrated complexity present in all living organisms, and the simple fact that cross-species evolution has never been observed (only minor adaptation of traits within a species has been observed) - "evolution" is pushed as an indisputable fact and protected by extreme intellectual bullying as well as the force of law.

The purpose is to destroy man's faith in a Creative Intelligent Designer and the associated higher virtues that logically flow from such knowledge. In the vacuum left by "the death of God", a demoralized and degenerate people 'worship' the Government instead. As traditional families and cash strapped churches fade away, the Atheistic state takes over the charitable duties that strong families & churches used to provide.

God vs Darwin: The Logical Supremacy of Intelligent Design Creationism over Evolution

1- Darwin: Shhhh! You must not question 'Evolution"

2- The insanity of "Evolution" teaches that the lizard and the super-model evolved from the same common spontaneously forming one-cell ancestor.

1859
THE TERRORIST JOHN BROWN

In 1859, the abolitionist-terrorist John Brown attempts to raid a Federal armory in Harper's Ferry, Virginia. His purpose is to start a violent liberation movement among enslaved Blacks. The effort fails and Brown is tried for treason against the Commonwealth of Virginia, murder, and inciting a slave insurrection. A few years earlier, Brown and his men had also massacred five White men in Kansas.

Brown is found guilty on all counts and hanged. Southerners believe that his rebellion is just the tip of the abolitionist iceberg and represented the wishes of the Republican Party to end slavery. The Harpers Ferry raid in 1859 escalates already existing tensions that, a year later, will lead to secession and the Civil War. Had it not been for unreasonable psychopaths like Brown, the South would, in due time, have phased out slavery without bloodshed – as other countries already had done.

The lunatic John Brown remains a heroic figure for modern day Marxists. (Google: John Brown Marxism).

APRIL, 1861
NORTH VS SOUTH: THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR BEGINS

It might be a bit of an oversimplification to say that New World Order gang engineered the entire Civil War, aka The War Between the States, aka (in the South) The War of Northern Aggression. Regional differences of culture, interest and ideology existed since the founding of the American Republic (recall Hamilton vs Jefferson / Jackson vs Biddle).

The American system of mercantilism / protectionism profits the North at the expense of the South. The perpetuation of that system is a cause of friction between the two regions. Another factor is that self-righteous New Englanders despise the more libertarian and sometimes less educated citizens of the South. Southerners are aware of this supercilious attitude, which in turn fuels resentment of the "Yankees".

However, the playing off of the Northern Central Government against a southern Confederacy dovetails very nicely with how the Globalists have always operated (and continued to operate). The United States is now a commercial power mostly outside of Rothschild control. But those political & cultural differences between the industrial North and the agricultural South have long been an issue of concern. When tensions between the South and the U.S. Federal Government come to a boil, the southern states (Confederacy) begin to secede from the Union. In April of 1861, after provoking a Southern attack against the Feds at Fort Sumter (18), President Lincoln orders an invasion of the South.

Contrary to pop- history, the main issue of the Civil War is not about slavery.

At most, only about 3% of southerners hold slaves, and four of the Northern states are actually slave-holding states! President Lincoln does indeed oppose slavery, but he will later use the issue only as a propaganda tool to raise moral support for his true goal; saving and strengthening the Union / Federal government.

INTRIGUERS IN THE NORTH / INTRIGUERS IN THE SOUTH

Apart from those in the North whose sincere desire is to "save the union"; and apart from those in the South whose equally sincere wish is to defend their liberties, there are shady characters maneuvering behind the scenes on both sides – elements without which, the tragic war might never have happened.

THE NORTH

In American Jacobins: Revolutionary Radicalism in the Civil War Era, Jordan Lewis Reed of the University of Massachusetts explains:

"By the late 1830s, this radical edge of the antislavery movement embarked onto two courses, both derived from and influenced by their newfound ideology. The first was towards violent direct action against slavery while the second aimed at legitimizing radical new legal theories and creating the political structure necessary to bring about their enforcement. While on the one hand John Brown and Gerrit Smith pursued militant action, on the other Alvan Stewart and Salmon P. Chase sought a political and legal redefinition of American society through the Liberty and eventually Republican parties.

With the coming of war in the 1860s, these two trends, violence and radical politics, converged in the Union war effort. In the midst of the Civil War and the early fight for Reconstruction, Radical Republicans and their allies in the Union Army displayed themselves as American Jacobins*."* (19)

There were also many Jews energetically supporting the Northern cause. August Belmont a known financial agent of the House of Rothschild (20), is foremost among them. Belmont is a German Jew who had changed his name from Schönberg to Belmont. He is a leader of the war faction of the Democrat Party known as 'War Democrats". The Belmont Stakes horse race is named after Belmont.

THE SOUTH

There is strong Jewish influence supporting the cause of secession as well. Louisiana Senator John Slidell is not Jewish, but his family ties to European Jews run deep. Slidell's daughter is engaged to Baron Frederic Erlanger, a French Jewish financier based in Paris. Erlanger helps to fund the Confederacy, gouging the South with usurious interest rates and fees too! (21)

Erlanger's financing of the South, as confirmed even by today's New York Times (22), is directly linked to the House of Rothschild. Slidell would later serve the Confederate States government as foreign diplomat to Great Britain and French Emperor Napoleon III.

Now the niece of the influential Senator Slidell is married to the aforementioned northern financier August Belmont (Schönberg)- Rothschild's Jewish boy and Democrat boss supporting the Northern cause. After the war, "Confederate" Slidell will make his "Unionist" nephew-in-law his political protégé.

Also hooked up with Senator Slidell in this tangled North-South-Rothschild knot of financial-political intrigue is fellow Louisiana Senator Judah Benjamin, the Jewish big-shot who goes on to become the Confederacy's Attorney General, then Secretary of War, and then Secretary of State. There will be more on Big Benjamin in just a moment.

Through the shadowy fog of 150 years of elapsed history, we can still discern a clear pattern of divide & conquer, balance of power conspiratorial actions being played upon both sides - and with tragic consequences.

Senator Slidell – His Jewish Son-in-Law Erlanger – His Jewish Nephew-in-Law Belmont, and Jewish fellow Senator Benjamin form an incestuous North-South connection with direct links (through Erlanger and Belmont) to the House of Rothschild General Robert E. Lee is critical of politicians on both sides:

"They do not know what they say. If it came to a conflict of arms, the war will last at least four years. Northern politicians will not appreciate the determination and pluck of the South, and Southern politicians do not appreciate the numbers, resources, and patient perseverance of the North. Both sides forget that we are all Americans. I foresee that our country will pass through a terrible ordeal, a necessary expiation, perhaps, for our national sins." (23)

- Confederate General Robert E Lee

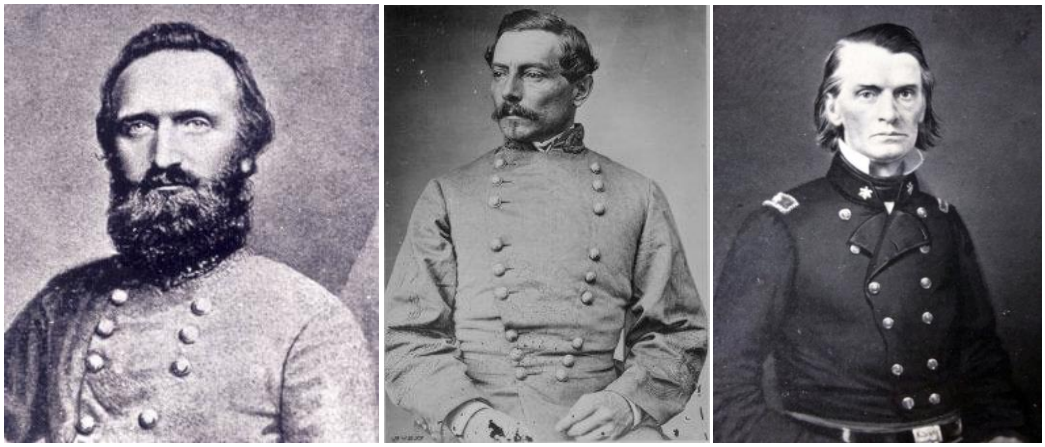
JULY, 1861
THE BATTLE OF BULL RUN / SOUTH WINS THE FIRST BATTLE OF THE WAR, BUT FAILS TO FOLLOW-UP WITH THE 'KNOCK-OUT BLOW'

If the South is to have any chance of gaining its independence, it will have to win early, before the more industrialized and populated North can outlast them. The first battle of the war at Bull Run (Manassas, Virginia) is therefore critical. To make a long story short, the rebels force a Union retreat that soon turns into a full rout. The Battle of Bull Run will soon be referred to by some as "The Battle of Yankee Run" (Yankees are the Northerners).

The Union Capital, Washington DC, is just miles away and now essentially undefended. It is the South's for the taking. The capture of DC and other parts north would have delivered a huge psychological blow to the North. Because many northerners aren't in favor of the war anyway; the capture of DC might very well have ended the war that same year. But instead of finishing the job, someone has decided to save the Capital - a decision that enflames the Southern press and leads to bitter finger-pointing.

The 'fall-guy' for this blunder will be War Secretary Leroy Walker. But in reality, it is the ex-war hero and ex-War Secretary and current Confederate President Jefferson Davis who calls the shots, not the young Walker. But it is also known that Davis relies heavily on the advice from the man whose intelligence and gift-of-gab he was awed by – Jewish Attorney General and former Louisiana Senator Judah Benjamin, referred to by critics as, "Davis's pet Jew". (24)

Was it Judah Benjamin, the man openly admired by Solomon de Rothschild, (25) who may have whispered poison in Davis's ear, telling him not to take DC and thus blowing the chance to win the game early for the South? And after Walker has been made the scapegoat and fired; who replaces him as War Secretary? None other than Judah Benjamin!



After Bull Run turned into a rout, Washington – just 30 miles away – could have been captured. Whose idea was it to halt? That of Davis --.or Benjamin?

Could the new War Secretary Benjamin's subsequent 1861 interference with the Generals, - acts so controversial that they would force a Congressional investigation - and his bizarre refusal to supply them as requested have been a ploy designed to prolong the war until the Rothschild's British and French hit-men could arrive to divvy up' America into two spheres?

Establishment historians will later claim that Benjamin's defiance of the Generals was due to a lack of supplies in the South. But given how early it was in the war, the claim that supplies were low seems like a cover story. If "lack of supplies" had been the cause of Benjamin's decisions, Generals Jackson and Beauregard would not have had reason to dislike Benjamin as they did.

Such a delaying scenario would fit perfectly with a Rothschild plan to have a long war, one in which both sides could be weakened before the British-French can arrive.

Let’s take a closer look at the shady Mr. Benjamin.

Generals Jackson, Beauregard and Wise all hated Judah Benjamin.

1861-1865
JUDAH BENJAMIN – THE JEWISH INTRIGUER BEHIND THE CONFEDERATE 'THRONE'

Outwardly, the esteemed Jefferson Davis is the 'top dog' of the South – the President of the Confederate States of America. But behind the scenes, Judah Benjamin, with his European connections and impressive intellect, is, in the grand scheme of things, more powerful than Davis. What the banking agent Alexander Hamilton had been to George Washington, the trusted Benjamin is to Davis, and then some. Like Hamilton, Benjamin was also born a British subject (West Indies). There is simply no exaggerating the significance of Judah Benjamin.

Biographer Eli Evans wrote that Benjamin:

"…achieved greater political power than any other Jew in the nineteenth century — perhaps even in all American history." (26)

Historian Charles Curran, in a 1967 issue of 'History Today' wrote:

Judah Philip Benjamin must be bracketed with Disraeli, who was his contemporary, as the ablest Jewish politician ever born under the British flag. But his career outdid Disraeli's in audacity. Benjamin lived three lives in one." (27)

Judah was a plantation owner, slave-owner and originally a Senator from Louisiana - as was the aforementioned and equally European-connected John

Slidell. Although he has no military experience, Benjamin is named the South's Secretary of War in 1861, after serving as Attorney General for several months. Many in the South loath and mistrust Benjamin. The great General Stonewall Jackson once threatened to resign over conflicts with Benjamin (28)- who was commonly referred to in the South as "Mr. Davis's pet Jew". (29)

But certain people in Europe had a much higher opinion of Benjamin. In 1861, Salomon de Rothschild - grandson of dynasty founder Mayer Amschel Rothschid - described Benjamin as: "the greatest mind in North America" (30) That pretty much tells us all we need to know about the "southern rebel" Judah Benjamin!

In 1862, Benjamin is forced to resign as War Secretary. But Davis then appoints him as the South's Secretary of State. In this position, Benjamin will work with Swindell and Swindell's French Jewish son-in-Law Erlanger to secure not just financing from the Rothschild syndicate, but also to induce the direct involvement of Rothschild's Britain & France into the war, on the side of the South.

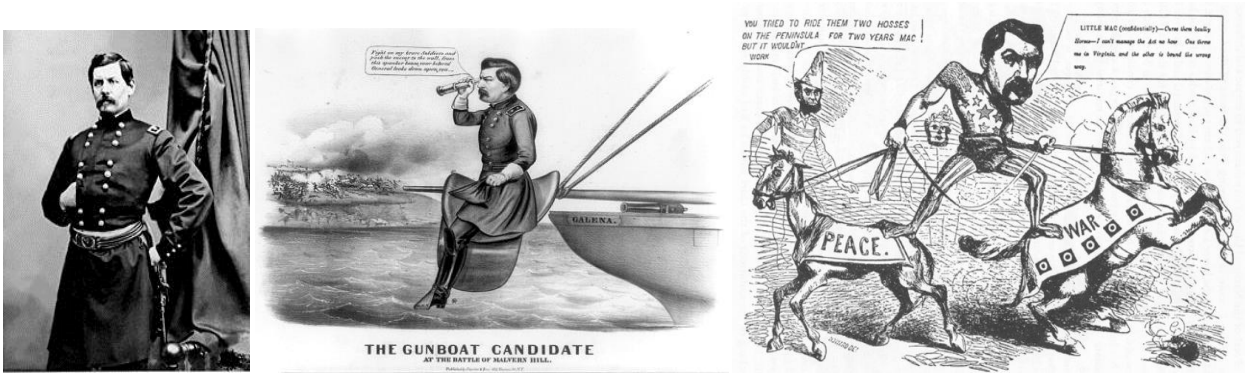
Judah Benjamin's face appeared on Confederate currency and bonds!

NOVEMBER, 1862
LINCOLN FIRES GENERAL McCLELLAN FOR HIS REPEATED DELAYING TACTICS

General George B. McClellan ably built the Union Army in the early stages of the war and achieved some early successes. But by 1862, McClellan's campaigns became notorious for timidity and sluggishness. Just like the Judah Benjamin's Confederate Army passed up a golden opportunity to capture the Union Capital (Washington DC) in 1861, McClellan was poised to take the Confederate Capital (Richmond, Virginia) in 1862 – but chose to retreat to a smaller-numbered force.

After Robert E. Lee defeats the Union at the Second Battle of Bull Run in late August, 1862, he invades Maryland. With the Confederates crashing into Union territory, Lincoln has no choice but to turn to McClellan to stop Lee.

McClellan and Lee battle to a standstill along Antietam Creek near Sharpsburg, Maryland. Lee retreats back to Virginia and McClellan ignores Lincoln's urging to pursue him. For six weeks, Lincoln and McClellan exchange angry messages, but McClellan stubbornly refuses to march after Lee.



In late October, McClellan finally begins moving across the Potomac in feeble pursuit of Lee, but he takes nine days to complete the crossing. Lincoln has seen enough. He finally removes McClellan and names General Ambrose Burnside to be the commander of the Army of the Potomac.

A picture now emerges of players on both sides of the conflict refusing to press advantages that could end the war early. We have already reviewed the intrigues of Judah Benjamin and his links to the Rothschild gang. Is there a Rothschild player that we can connect McClellan too? There is.

Two years after his removal, at a time when the Union is winning the war, McClellan will be named as the Democrat Presidential candidate to run against Lincoln in 1864. The chairman of the Democrat Party, and enthusiastic supporter of McClellan, is none other than Rothschild Jewish boy with the adopted English name – August Belmont; the nephew-in-law of Louisiana Senator and Judah Benjamin crony, John Slidell.

McClellan-Belmont-Slidell-Erlanger-Benjamin--Rothschild.

The North-South circular game is clear now. Neither side was supposed to win the War Between the States, at least not too soon. Both sides were meant to be bled before losing to the New World Order.

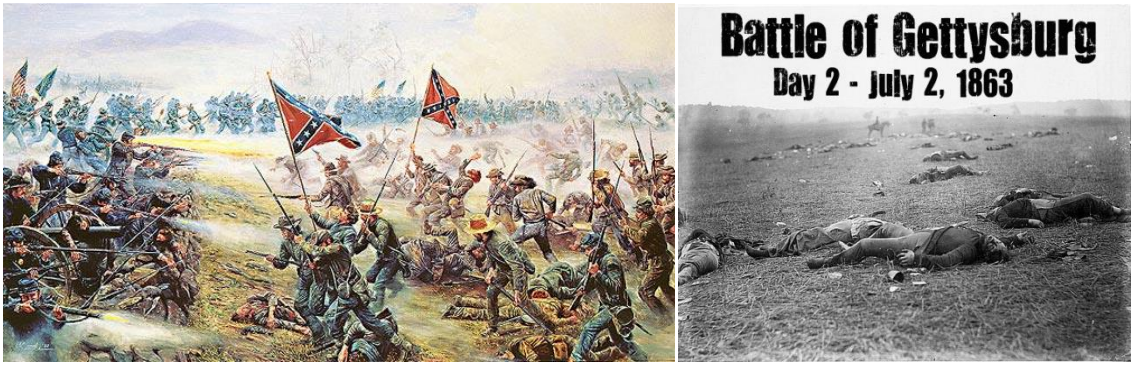
The Northern Press mocked McClellan's unwillingness to fight in numerous stories and cartoons. His past refusal to engage became an issue when he ran for President in 1964.

1861-1865
THE UNION DEFIES THE HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD AND PRINTS ITS OWN 'GREENBACK' CURRENCY

Lincoln needs money to fund the war. He is extorted by the New York bankers, who want the Union to sell high interest bonds to them (20%!), which they can resell to the banking syndicate in London.

Lincoln thwarts the bankers by issuing unbacked currency directly from the Treasury. The currency comes to be known as Greenbacks. The effect is inflationary, but it does prevent the Union from having to crawl to the New York-London syndicate.

Printing your own national currency is forbidden by The New World Order



JULY 1-3, 1863
THE NORTH WINS THE BATTLE OF GETTYSBURG

The Battle of Gettysburg is fought in and around the town of Gettysburg, Pennsylvania. The battle involves the largest number of casualties of the entire war and will mark the turning point of the Civil War – in the North's favor.

After his success in Virginia in May 1863, Gen. Robert E. Lee leads his army through the Shenandoah Valley to begin the invasion of the North. With his army in high spirits, Lee intends to shift the focus of the war away from northern Virginia. The goal is to influence Northern politicians to stop the war by penetrating as far North as Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, or even Philadelphia.

After a grueling tussle back and forth, the Union Army beats back attacks by the Confederates and ends Lee's attempt to invade the North. For a three-day battle, the final casualty numbers are horrific.

North: 3,150 / Killed / 14,500 Wounded
South: 4,700 / Killed / 13,000 Wounded (31)

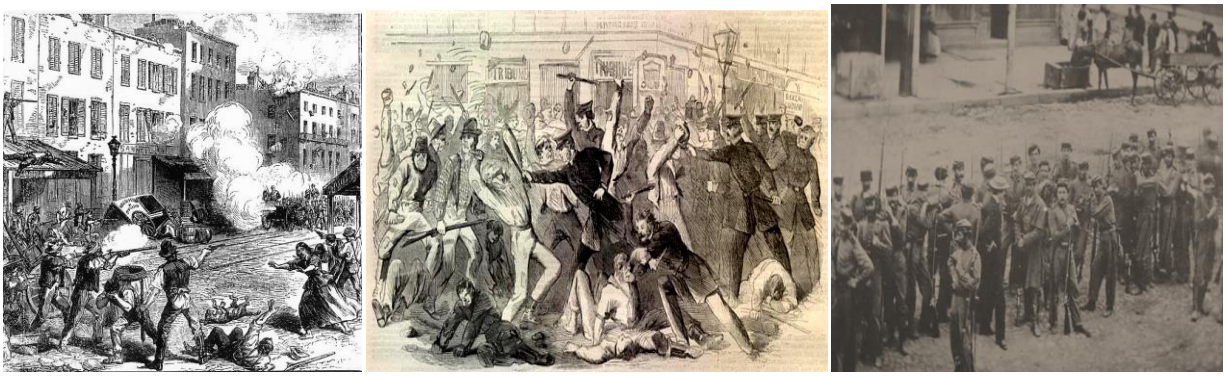
Brother killing brother with Rothschild agents involved in both ends.

JULY, 1863
DEADLY ANTI-DRAFT RIOTS IN NEW YORK CITY



Increasing support for the abolitionists and for emancipation of southern slaves led to anxiety among New York's Irish. From the time of Lincoln's election in 1860, the Democratic Party had warned New York's Irish and German residents to prepare for the emancipation of slaves and the resultant labor competition when southern blacks came north. To these New Yorkers, the Emancipation Proclamation was confirmation of their worst fears.

In March 1863, fuel was added to the fire in the form of a strict federal draft law. All male citizens between twenty and thirty-five and all unmarried men between thirty-five and forty-five were subject to military duty. The federal government entered all eligible men into a lottery. Those who could afford to hire a substitute or pay the government three hundred dollars might avoid enlistment. Blacks, who were not considered citizens, were exempt from the draft.

Initially intended to express anger at the draft, draft protests turned into a 4-day riot, with white Irish immigrants attacking blacks wherever they could find them. The military did not reach the city until after the first day of rioting, when mobs had already destroyed numerous government buildings, two Protestant churches, the homes of abolitionists, many black homes, and a Colored Orphan Asylum, which was burned to the ground. Lincoln had to divert 4,000 troops to control the city.

The official final death toll was listed at 119, with 2000 injured. Pro-Union newspapers later allege that some of the leaders of the riots were funded by foreign interests seeking to split the country. (32)

Irish New Yorkers fight the Federal Army.

1863
LINCOLN AND SECRETARY OF STATE SEWARD TURN TO RUSSIAN CZAR ALEXANDER I FOR HELP

A joint British & French entry into the war would have tipped the scales in favor of the South, and ultimately led to two American nations. Lincoln and his Secretary of State, William Seward block the scheme of Judah Benjamin by turning to Russia.

In a clear message to his old Rothschild-funded foes from the Crimean War, Czar Alexander II stations the better part of his Pacific fleet in San Francisco, and a portion of his western fleet in New York. The British & French instigators of the Crimean War get the message and are forced to back off. Judah Benjamin and the Rothschild financiers are thwarted. Together, Alex and Abe have defied the London Bankers, and will both pay a heavy price for it, as we shall see.

After the war, in recognition of, or payback for, Russia's help in keeping Britain & France out of the war; Seward will arrange for the purchase of Alaska from Russia after the war – an act dismissed at the time as "Seward's Folly". But now we know the reason for the "folly".

1 & 2 - The Czar and the President / UK cartoon mocks both Lincoln and Alexander

3 - The presence of the Russian Navy during the U.S. Civil War sent a strong message to Rothschild Britain & France.

OCTOBER, 1864
THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE ACCUSES AUGUST BELMONT AND THE ROTHSCHILDS OF PLOTTING AGAINST THE UNION

On 16 October 1864 on page 2, The Chicago Tribune reported,

"BELMONT'S CONFEDERATE BONDS (Excerpts)

"It is perhaps somewhat flattering to our national pride to know that the Rothschilds, who hold up every despotism in Europe, have concluded that it would be cheaper to buy up one of our political parties (Democrats), and in that way secure the dissolution of the Union, than to have their agents in England and France interfere and fight us.

But Irishmen and Germans have a something, which for brevity we will all a 'crop,' and this fact sticks in their crop, that the oppressors of Ireland and Germany, the money kings of Europe, not daring to carry out their first pet project of breaking down this Government by the armed intervention, of England and France, Let Belmont state over his own signature, if he can that he and Rothschilds have not, directly or indirectly, in their own name, or in that of others, operated in Confederate stocks during this rebellion. Until he can face the music in that style it matters little what tune any of the Copperhead penny whistles may be authorized to blow, as they are very seldom authorized to state anything that is true." (33)

APRIL 9, 1865
GENERAL LEE SURRENDERS / SOUTHERN WAR EFFORT BEGINS COLLAPSING

With the loss of the Battle at Appomattox Courthouse, General Lee accepts surrender terms. There will be isolated fighting for a few weeks, but in essence, the game is over at this point. True Southerners had fought bravely for "Dixieland" against what they saw as a central government that was usurping the rights of the states. In the end, Northern manpower, industry, and quite frankly, the brutality of Generals such as Sherman and Sheridan gave the Union an advantage which could not be overcome.

The Union is preserved, at a cost of 600,000 dead. Though the differences between the North and South were very real; the bloodbath need not ever have happened. Issues such as States' Rights, slavery, tariffs etc. could all have been worked out intelligently and peacefully by wise men of good faith on both sides.

America has the John Browns, John Slidells, Judah Benjamins, August Belmonts and other assorted dupes and traitors on both sides to thank for the disaster. And above those puppet-players stood the 'usual suspects' - the House of Rothschild.

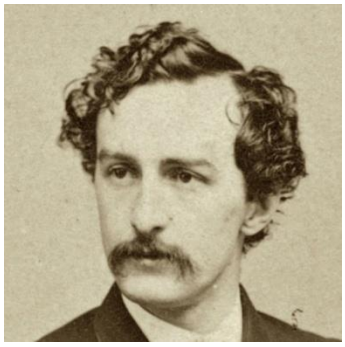
General Robert E. Lee surrenders to General Ulysses S. Grant at Appomattox Court House in Virginia. A sad story for both sides.

APRIL 14, 1865
LINCOLN IS KILLED / SECRETARY OF STATE SEWARD STABBED IN HIS HOME

In the closing days of the American Civil War, a massive conspiracy to decapitate the U.S. government results in the assassination of President Lincoln by an actor with ties to secret societies. John Wilkes Booth shoots Lincoln in the back of the head as Lincoln and his wife watch a play at Ford's Theatre. Booth escapes.

On the same night of Lincoln's murder, Lewis Powell, an associate of Booth, attacks Secretary of State William Seward in his home. Seward is stabbed in the face and neck before other men in the house subdue Powell. Seward's wife Frances dies two months later from stress caused by seeing her husband nearly killed.

Vice President Johnson and General Ulysses S Grant were also to have been killed.



The "conspiracy theorists" of the day point the finger at Judah Benjamin, who burns the official papers of the Confederate Secret Service right about this time. (34) Thanks to Bennie the Burner, the full story of Confederate clandestine services, and most likely the Lincoln assassination, may never be known.

Lincoln was shot from behind as he sat next to his wife. Hours later, Secretary of State Seward is nearly stabbed to death in his home.

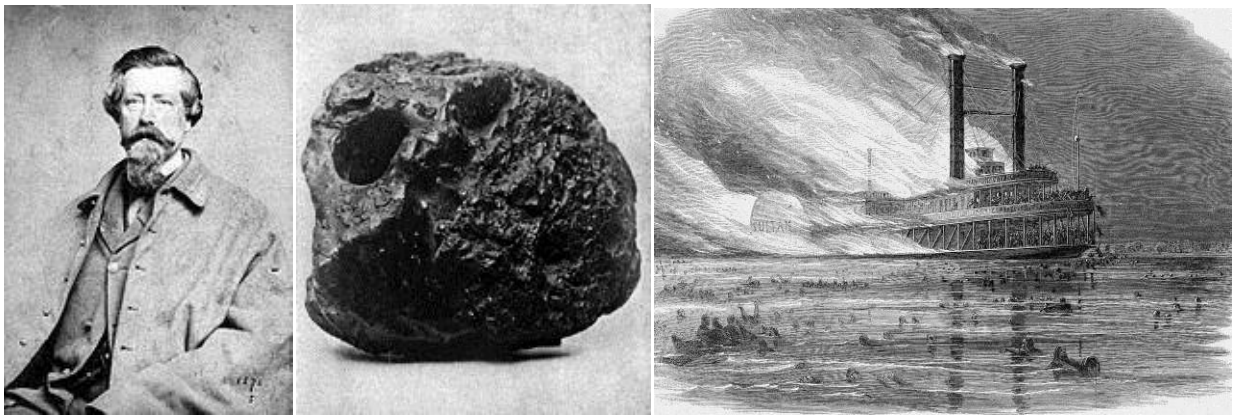
APRIL 26, 1865
DEAD MEN TELL NO TALES! / LINCOLN'S ASSASSIN IS ALSO ASSASSINATED

John Wilkes Booth is tracked down by troops nearly two weeks later. The soldiers set fire to a barn that Booth is hiding in. Instead of taking him alive, Sergeant Boston Corbett shoots Booth in the head as he moves about in the barn. Booth's secrets die with him.

The assassin was shot after soldiers set the barn he was hiding in on fire. Why was he not taken alive so that he could be interrogated?

APRIL 27, 1865
THE SINKING OF THE SULTANA / 1700 DEAD / GREATEST MARITIME DISASTER IN U.S HISTORY

The Sultana is a Mississippi River steamboat that is tied up at Cairo, Illinois when word reaches the city that Lincoln had been shot in Ford's Theater. Immediately, Captain Mason grabs an armload of newspapers and heads south to spread the news, knowing that telegraphic communication with the South had been almost totally cut off because of the war.



While docking in Vicksburg, Mississippi, to pick up a couple of thousand recently-released Union Prisoners-of-War, Sultana also has some repairs done to a leaky boiler. This gives Benjamin's Confederate secret agents access to the ship.

After leaving port in Mississippi, three of the boat's four boilers suddenly explode. Sultana burns to the waterline, sinking near Memphis, Tennessee. An estimated 1,700 of her 2,400 passengers die (35) (more than the death toll of the famous Titanic). The disaster will be overshadowed in the press by the just day-old killings of John Wilkes Booth and recent killing of President Lincoln.

In 1888, a St. Louis resident named William Streetor reveals that his former business partner, Robert Louden, made a death bed confession of having sabotaged Sultana by a weapon known as a coal torpedo (36) - a hollowed out prop that looked like a lump of coal but is actually packed with explosives. Enemy agents would sneak the weapons into a ship's coal supply. When shoveled into the ship's firebox – the boiler goes BOOM! Several Union ships were destroyed in this manner with substantial loss of life.

Louden, a former Confederate agent and saboteur who operated in and around St. Louis, had the opportunity and motive and may have had access to the means. Thomas Edgeworth Courtenay, the inventor of the coal torpedo, was a former resident of St. Louis and was involved in similar acts of sabotage against Union shipping interests. Supporting Louden's claim are eyewitness reports that a piece of artillery shell was observed in the wreckage.

Remember this fiendish little weapon – the coal torpedo – because Sultana will not be the last ship to mysteriously blow up.

Agent Courtenay's invention – the coal torpedo – sank the Sultana.

MAY, 1865
JUDAH BENJAMIN ABANDONS THE SOUTH AND ESCAPES TO GREAT BRITAIN

As the south collapses, Benjamin stays in the home of a Jewish merchant in South Carolina while final surrender negotiations drag on. Here, Benjamin abandons President Davis's plan to fight on, telling him that the cause is hopeless. When negotiations fail, Benjamin remains part of the group around Davis that moves on with the President.

At one point, Benjamin (under suspicion for involvement in Lincoln's assassination) tells Davis that he needs to separate from the Presidential party temporarily, and go to the Bahamas to be able to send instructions to foreign agents. He reassures Davis that he will rejoin him in Texas. According to historian William C. Davis, "the pragmatic Secretary of State almost certainly never had any intention of returning to the South once gone". (37)

When he bids Postmaster Reagan goodbye, the Postmaster asks where Benjamin is going. Benjamin replies: "To the farthest place from the United States, if it takes me to the middle of China." (38)

While other Confederate leaders, including the trusting fool Jefferson Davis, are being jailed and abused, Benjamin arrives in London before traveling to Paris - where his wife and daughter had been sent to live years before the war had even started. Benjamin then moves back to England and will enjoy a very profitable career and "second life" as an attorney, until his death in 1884.

Congressman John Wise, son of Confederate General and Virginia Governor Henry Wise, wrote a highly popular book about the South in the Civil War in 1899, The End of an Era. In it, he stated:

"(Benjamin) had more brains and less heart than any other civic leader in the South ... The Confederacy and its collapse were no more to Judah P. Benjamin than last year's bird's nest." (39)

Unfortunately for historians, and fortunately for the Rothschilds, Benjamin, exactly as he had done with papers pertaining to the Confederacy's secret services in 1865, burned his personal papers shortly before his death in 1884.

1 & 2 - John Wise 'End of an Era' expresses the true Southern feeling toward the scoundrel Judah Benjamin.

3 - After ditching his Confederate colleagues and the people of the South, Benjamin the Barrister went on to enjoy a hugely successful career in Rothschild's Britain.

1865
JEWISH MOGUL ESTABLISHES REUTERS NEWS AGENCY

The Reuters Telegram Company is the world's first major news organization. Established by Paul Reuter (born Israel Bere Josafat), Reuter's builds a reputation in Europe for being the first to report news 'scoops' from abroad, such as Abraham Lincoln's assassination. Almost every major news outlet in the world today subscribes to Reuters' services, which operates in over 200 cities in 94 countries in about 20 languages. The creation of the Reuters media empire marks the critical point in history when Jewish moguls begin to dominate the press of Europe and the US.

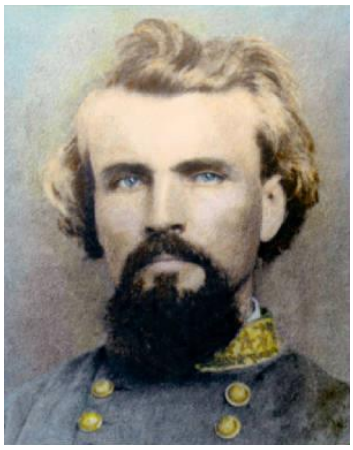
Though the Reuters family founders and heirs have since passed away, the public company today continues to vomit out pro-Globalist and pro-Zionist propaganda.

Jewish domination of the press, and thus, the public mind, began with Reuters

1865-1870
LINCOLN'S DEATH ALLOWS A RADICAL FACTION TO BRUTALIZE THE SOUTH / SOUTHERN VETS FORM THE KKK



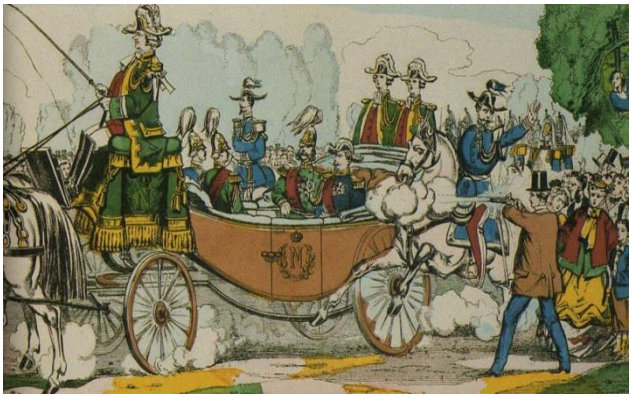
Though his war against the South was brutal and destructive, Lincoln's post-war policy towards the defeated states was to have been one of brotherly reconciliation and rebuilding. With his sudden death, however, a radical Jacobin-like faction of the Republican Party known as the Radical Republicans are free to abuse and punish the southern states for their attempt at succession.

During Reconstruction, many supporters of the Confederacy are banned from voting while newly freed slaves are given the vote before they can be educated. Smooth talking "carpetbaggers" from the North flood the South, promising the ex-slaves "40 acres and a mule" in exchange for their votes.

Once in office, the carpetbaggers and their ex-slave allies raise heavy taxes on the conquered southerners. Criminal acts against southern citizens, as well as rapes of southern women, are common. In this atmosphere of oppressive occupation, Confederate Army veterans form a secret society known as the Ku Klux Klan (KKK). Klan members clad in white robes and hoods, serve as vigilante groups.

They restore order, protect white women from being raped, lynch criminals, attack Radicals, and prevent the ex-slaves from mob voting for carpetbaggers.

More than the Civil War itself, it is the vindictive oppression of the South during Reconstruction that will incite racial tensions and leave lasting scars that will take nearly a century to heal.



1- General Nathan Bedford Forrest was a founder of the KKK

2- 1915 film, "Birth of a Nation' depicts Klansmen chasing off post-war Black Union occupiers.

APRIL, 1866
THE FIRST ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT ON ALEXANDER II IS MADE BY A RED TERRORIST

One year after the murder of President Lincoln, Lincoln's ally, Russian Czar Alexander II also comes under fire. Red Revolutionary Dimitry.Karakozov draws his pistol and attempts to fire at Alexander. The attempt is thwarted when a quick-thinking bystander jostles his arm as he fires.

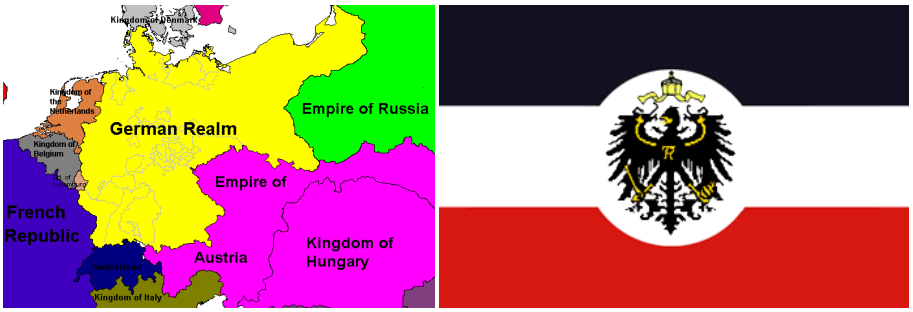
Karakozov is captured and will be executed. Ten of his accomplices are arrested and sentenced to hard labor

Alexander narrowly escaped the same fate as his ally, Abe Lincoln at the hands of a patsy named Karakozov.

1870-71
FRANCE STARTS – AND LOSES – A WAR WITH THE GERMAN STATE OF PRUSSIA

The Franco-Prussian War is a conflict between the French Empire of Napoleon III (a nephew of Napoleon Bonaparte), and the Germanic Kingdom of Prussia. Prussia is aided by a confederation of many smaller German states. The swift Prussian / German victory thwarts French ambitions in central Europe, and brings about the end of Napoleon III's rule.

After the war, the French branch of the Rothschild Family steps up with a massive bail out of the nearly bankrupt French government. The new government (The 3rd Republic) is again a "democracy", bought and paid for by the Rothschilds, and under their influence more so than before.



Imperial France started the Franco-Prussian War, not the Germans. Above: Prussian leader Bismarck (seated right) meets the defeated Napoleon III.

JANUARY, 1871
GERMAN STATES DECLARE UNITY / GLOBALISTS SEEK TO CONTROL NEW GERMAN EMPIRE

The Prussian / German victory over France brings about the unification of the German states under Kaiser (King) Wilhelm I of Prussia. United Germany will soon become the main economic power of continental Europe with one of the most powerful and professional armies in the world.

Meanwhile, back in England, the Globalists plot to control the new German nation. Although Jewish bankers thrive in Germany, Germany (like Tsar Alexander's Russia), has the capacity to shape its own destiny and thwart the ambitions of the "City of London". Not only is German politics outside of Rothschild's total control, but the fact that several German Royals are intermarried with British nobility complicates 'the City's" ability to menace Germany with British power.

It will be 48 years before the new German nation can be brought under the thumb of The New World Order. But the long-range plan goes into effect immediately. Rothschild agent and future (as well as ex) "British" Prime Minister Benjamin Disraeli plots against both Germany and Russia.

The voluntary unification of the German states gives rise to a great German Reich (Empire / Realm)

1871
THE NEW GERMAN REICH GRANTS CITIZENSHIP RIGHTS TO JEWS / THE JEWS OF GERMANY PROSPER

Otto Von Bismarck is the Chancellor of the new German Reich under Kaiser Wilhelm I. Through his skilled and energetic diplomacy, he will keep Germany out of war, and the rest of Europe at peace.

Soon after united Germany is established, Bismarck's government becomes the first European nation to grant citizenship privileges to its Jewish population. (40) Even Rothschild's England has yet to do this. The UK's Jewish Prime Minister (Disraeli) holds office because he had "converted" to Christianity. By 1900, this remarkable people will have obtained massive influence over German commerce, education, press, politics, arts and banking.

Bismarck, the political father of the German Reich, treated the Jews very well. They prospered in tolerant Germany.

1874
REDS ATTEMPT TO KILL CHANCELLOR BISMARCK

A Jewish Red named Frederick Cohen had previously shot Bismarck when he was Prime Minister of Prussia in 1866. Now, in 1874, terrorist Eduard Kullman attempts to assassinate Chancellor Bismarck. Kullman's gunshot strikes Bismarck's hand.

Kaiser Wilhelm I and Chancellor Von Bismarck are the peacemakers of Europe, but Rothschild's New World Order crime gang would like these leaders dead so that mighty Germany can be subdued under their thumb.

Kullmann (on right) nearly killed Bismarck.

OCTOBER, 1873
GERMANY, AUSTRIA-HUNGARY, & RUSSIA FORM 'THE LEAGUE OF THE THREE EMPERORS

Chancellor Bismarck negotiates an agreement between the monarchs of Austria-Hungary (Emperor Franz Joseph), Russia (Czar Alexander II), and Germany (Kaiser Wilhelm I). The alliance, known as The League of the Three Emperors, has three purposes:

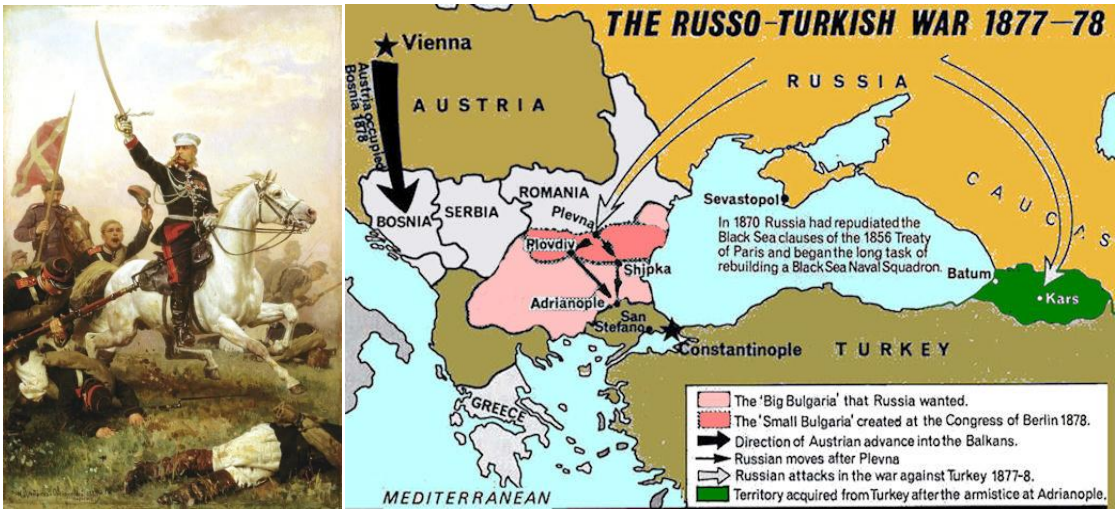
1. The League serves as a mutual defense against the growing Red movements, which have menaced Europe with violence since 1848.

2. The League will avoid war amongst each other when diplomacy can resolve differences.

3. The League opposes the expansion of French and British power, as well as plots to threaten the internal order of their countries.

The military and financial power of these three Empires forms a Central-Southern-Eastern European power base that the Rothschilds and their British & French "hit men" cannot control.

There can be no New World Order until this mighty defensive coalition of Empires is somehow broken up and individually smashed.



British cartoon on left mocks The Three Emperors League. Bismarck is depicted as puppet master of the Emperors.

1877-78
RUSSIA DEFEATS THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE (TURKEY) IN THE RUSSO-TURKISH WAR

There are two main causes of the Russo-Turkish War. First, Russia desires to reclaim vital Black Sea territory lost in the Rothschild-financed Crimean War of 20 years earlier. The other objective, or at least, the other stated objective, is to liberate the Orthodox Christian Slavic populations of the Balkan states. Russia's Orthodox Christian and Slavic allies, Serbia, Montenegro, Romania, and Bulgaria, all rebel against Turkey and fight with Russia. Claims of Turkish mistreatment of Bulgarian Christians further upset the Russians.

Russia dominates the fighting, and begins advancing towards Istanbul (Constantinople). Dismayed that Russia may capture Constantinople and even Palestine from the beaten Turkish Empire, Britain's Jewish Prime Minister Benjamin Disraeli pressures Russia to accept a truce offered by Turkey. Britain sends ships to the area to intimidate Russia and force a peace conference in Berlin, Germany.

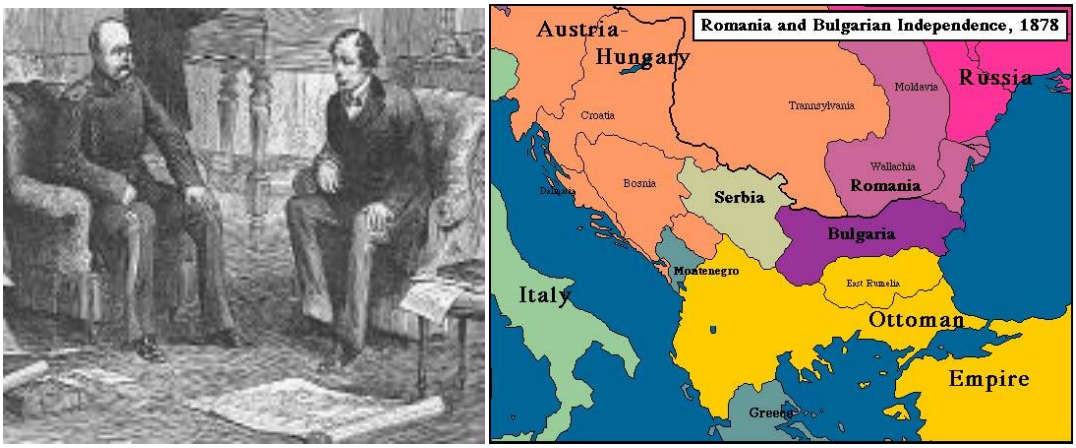
Russia wins the Russo-Turkish War but gets nothing.

MAY 11 & JUNE 2, 1878
REDS MAKE TWO ASSASSINATION ATTEMPTS AGAINST KAISER WILHELM I

In the days just before the important post-Russo-Turkish War international conference (Congress of Berlin) is due to take place in Berlin, two assassination attempts are made against Kaiser Wilhelm I. On May 11, '78, a Red named Emil Max Hodel fires shots at the Emperor and his daughter as they travel in their carriage. Hodel is captured and then executed in August.

Three weeks later, another Red named Karl Nobiling fires a gun at the Emperor. The 82 year old Kaiser is wounded, but he survives. Nobiling then shoots himself, and dies 3 months later. The New World Order's secret war against The Three Emperors League, and all of Europe's Christian Monarchs, is really starting to heat up.



The War on the Three Emperors Leagues heats up with two assassination attempts against German Kaiser Wilhelm in just 3 weeks time.

JUNE, 1878
BENJAMIN DISRAELI PLAYS DIRTY TRICKS IN BERLIN

Rothschild wholly-owned British-Jewish Prime Minister, Benjamin Disraeli, dominates the conference which was called into session to settle the Russo-Turkish war. Britain, Germany, Austria-Hungary, Russia, France, Italy, and Turkey attend the Congress of Berlin. The Ottoman Turks still control the "The Holy Land", but Britain and the Rothschilds wish to ultimately take over Palestine. Russia is committed to the protection of Orthodox Christians throughout southern Europe and Turkey.

Before the Congress opens, Disraeli concludes a secret deal with Turkey against Russia, in which Britain will keep the strategic island of Cyprus. (41) This gives Disraeli an advantage, leading him to issue threats of war if Russia doesn't comply with the demands of the Turks, who had lost the war!

Another dirty pre-Congress deal is struck between Disraeli and Russia's soon-to-be ex-ally, Austria-Hungary. (42) Slavic Orthodox Christians, including the Serbs of Bosnia, are to be put under Austria-Hungary's rule. Russia and its Slavic allies had won the war against Turkey, but now many of the Slavs are to be transferred from Turkish rule to Austro-Hungarian rule. This breeds resentment among the Slavic subjects of Austria-Hungary, especially the Serbs of Bosnia who are forbidden from uniting with the independent nation of Serbia. Court intriguers on all sides have put a permanent wedge between Russia and Austria-Hungary.

Devious Disraeli (right) dominated the Berlin Congress and undermined its host, Bismarck (left). The "victorious" Russians weren't happy about the deal, nor were their Bulgarian allies, and nor were the Serbs living in Austro-Hungarian Bosnia.

JUNE, 1878
DISRAELI'S DIRTY TRICKS CAUSE THE BREAKUP OF THE THREE EMPERORS LEAGUE

Chancellor Bismarck tries to keep the Disraeli-engineered controversies from breaking up the Three Emperors League, but the humiliation of Russia at the hands of Britain, Turkey, and Austria-Hungary is too much to bear. Russia pulls out of the League. Instead of being allied with Germany (whom Disraeli also wants to isolate), Russia is now cut off from her, and placed in a position where it can be played off against Germany's ally, Austria-Hungary - a classic divide & conquer scheme.

The foundation of the Great War of 1914-1918 (World War I) was laid at the Congress of Berlin, thanks to the dirty work of the Globalist-Zionist-Rothschild agent Benjamin Disraeli.

Upon returning to England, Disraeli boasts to Queen Victoria of how he killed the Three Emperor's League. (43)

By causing the Three Emperors League to split, dirty Disraeli laid the foundation for the Global bloodbaths of the coming century.

NOVEMBER 1878
DISRAELI PROVOKES RUSSIA BY INVADING PEACEFUL AFGHANISTAN

With the Three Emperors League disbanded, Rothschild & Disraeli escalate their assault on Russia. Disraeli plots to project British power along Russia's long Asian border with Afghanistan. He must sell his Afghan plot to the Parliament, the public, and to a foolish Queen that he has charmed and wrapped around his finger. Two years earlier, the deceitful flatterer had bestowed the title of "Empress of India" upon Queen Victoria.

Disraeli falsely accuses Russia of planning to conquer India (a British colony) via Afghanistan. The charge is ridiculous. Russia has no intention of attacking India and the Afghan and Himalaya Mountains make conquest virtually impossible. To counter the non-existent Russian threat Disraeli proposes a British occupation of Afghanistan. He writes to Victoria of his plan to: "to clear central Asia of Muscovites (Russians) and drive them into the Caspian Sea." (44)

The appeal to patriotism leads Britain into an invasion of Afghanistan, a campaign that ends very badly for the British. They withdraw in 1880 and Disraeli's influence is finally checked.

The "Great Game" in Afghanistan will be played again in 2001. Instead of a fictitious threat against India, it will be the NWO-orchestrated attacks of 9/11/2001, and the fictitious threat of "Al Qaeda" that will be used as the excuse to encircle Russia (and China) by way of Afghanistan and other Asian nations.

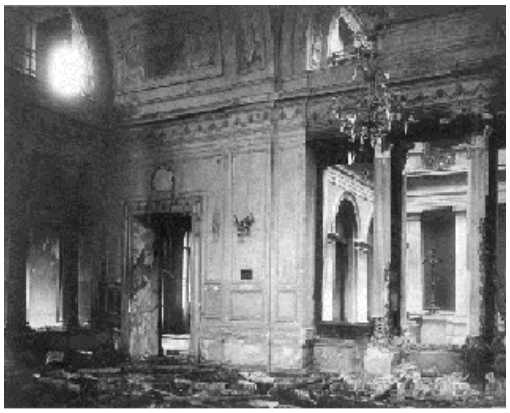
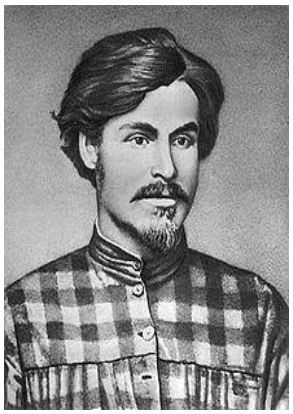
Rothschild's evil flattering agent has the foolish Queen wrapped around his finger. Cartoon depicts Disraeli crowning Victoria as Empress of India.





APRIL 1879, DECEMBER 1879, FEBRUARY 1880: THREE MORE ASSASSINATION ATEMPTS ON ALEXANDER II

The New World Order Red crime gang is relentless in its obsession to murder Czar Alexander II. One attempt had already failed in 1866. In April of 1879, a Red named Alexander Soloviev makes an attempt on the Czar in St. Petersburg.

In December of the same year, a Red group calling itself "The People's Will" tries to blow up the Czar by planting explosives.

Two months later, Red terrorist Stephan Khalturin detonates a bomb intended to kill the Czar at a dinner party. The Czar is late for dinner, but 11 others are killed and 30 wounded.

While Britain's Disraeli wages war against Russia on the diplomatic and military fronts; Rothschild's insane Red Revolutionaries attack Romanov Russia internally.

1- Soloviev fired five shots at the Czar and missed.

2- ‘The People’s Will” blew up a train station but didn’t get the Czar either.

3- Khalturin's bomb failed to kill the Czar, but it did kill 11 others.

1881– 1910

MARCH, 1881
COMMUNIST TERRORISTS FINALLY KILL ALEXANDER II

After four previous attempts, Rothschild's Red terrorists finally succeed in assassinating Czar Alexander II of Russia. With his son Alexander III, and grandson Nicholas watching, the Marxists hurl bombs at the Czar. Alexander's legs are blown off and he bleeds to death.

Due to the presence of so many Jews in the revolutionary movement, anti-Semitic violence sweeps across Russia after the Czar's murder. These "pogroms", though exaggerated for propaganda purposes, help to trigger a wave of Jewish immigration to the United States, England, and Germany.

Many of these new immigrants bring their radical politics with them, as they continue to agitate against Christian Russia from their newly adopted nations.

The killing of Alexander II triggered massive Jewish immigration to America. Alexander is remembered as the man who liberated the serfs.

JULY 2, 1881
U.S PRESIDENT JAMES GARFIELD IS SHOT / DIES FROM WOUND INFECTION IN SEPTEMBER

The civilized world is still reeling from the brutal murder of Czar Alexander II just a few months earlier. Now America will lose its 2nd President in 16 years to an assassin's bullet. James Garfield is an Ohio Republican who has only been in office 4 months. The state of Ohio will earn the reputation for producing Constitutionalist, Republican Presidents (Garfield, McKinley, Taft, Harding)

.

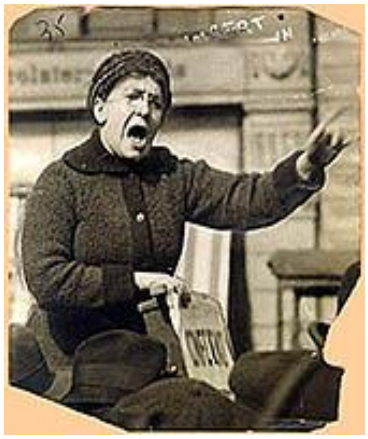
Garfield is a brilliant scholar, talented orator, and an advocate of interest-free "hard money" (gold) as a national currency. Like Napoleon, Andrew Jackson and Abe Lincoln before him, Garfield mistrusts the international bankers. Garfield warns:

"Whoever controls the volume of money in any country is absolute master of all industry and commerce." (1)

On July 2, '81, Garfield is shot at a railroad station by "crazed lone gunman" Charles Guiteau. Garfield survives and is slowly recovering, but his condition worsens after weeks of doctors needlessly probing him to find the now harmless bullet. Garfield finally dies on September 19, not from the bullet, but by infection caused by "incompetent" doctors. Garfield is the first of 4 Ohio Republican Presidents who, over the course of the coming 40 years, will either be killed, or cheated out of an election.

Garfield is shot in the back and dies 10 weeks later.

1880 - 1900
THE RED 'REFUSE' OF EUROPE INVADES AMERICA



In the wake of Czar Alexander's murder, anti-Jewish & Anti-Red uprisings sweep across the Russian Empire. Having watched his father blown apart by a Red bomb, Czar Alexander III does little to quell the public outrage (or so it is said). The outbreaks, known as "pogroms", lead many Jews to flee to Germany, Britain, or the U.S. The Jews adapt well to their new lands, but the Red Jews bring their radical politics with them. In 1885, Emma Goldman, the notorious anarchist who will terrorize America for 30 years, arrives in New York.

In 1883, Jewish writer Emma Lazurus pens the 'The New Colossus', a poem still on display at the Statue of Liberty. She forever changes the original theme of the Statue (liberty), to what most people believe it now represents (immigration). The poem includes the famous line welcoming the "wretched refuse":

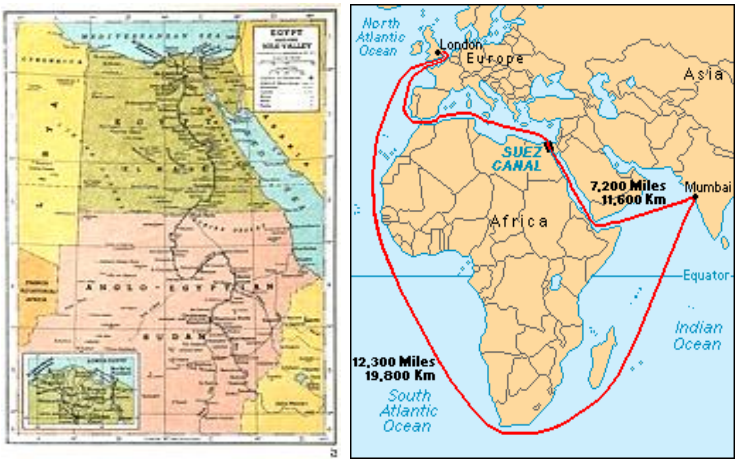
"Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free, the wretched refuse of your teeming shore." (2)

Of course, many good European people arrive during this period, but so does much of "the wretched refuse." An overlapping collection of Zionists, Communists, Anarchists, and money-lenders will soon spread Europe's violent Red plague throughout America's free society.

1- 'Red Emma' Goldman began agitating as soon as she arrived in the U.S.

2- Emma Lazurus called for more "wretched refuse" to be let into America.

3- Both good people and bad Reds stared pouring into America



1882
THE ANGLO - EGYPTIAN WAR / ROTHSCHILD'S BRITAIN ADVANCES TOWARDS PALESTINE

The Zionists dream of one day capturing the Holy Land (currently under Ottoman Turkish control). Recall how years earlier, with Ottoman Turkey on the brink of total defeat, Benjamin Disraeli intervened to keep the Russians away from Palestine. Now, the Zionists are positioning their "chess pieces" towards the next step.

When the British-French Suez Canal opens in 1869, it is Benjamin Disraeli's Britain; with Rothschild financing that purchases enough shares to make Britain the main shareholder of the waterway linking the Mediterranean to the Red Sea.

By 1882, the Canal's host nation, Egypt, is being treated like a colonial subject of Britain. Always waging war under false pretenses, Rothschild's UK attack-dog picks a fight with Egypt, under the pretext of "protecting the Suez Canal." During the Anglo-Egyptian War, the British bomb Alexandria and invade Cairo. Rothschild's Britain becomes master of Egypt. During World War I, Egypt (which borders Palestine) will be a useful staging post to launch attacks on Turkey. Palestine (Israel) is now within the Zionist Rothschild Family's reach.

Egypt's strategic location and proximity to Palestine (future Israel) are coveted by the Zionist Rothschilds.

1884
THE SOCIALIST / COMMUNIST FABIAN SOCIETY IS FORMED

Like their openly Communist cousins, Fabian Socialists are followers of Karl Marx. The Fabian Society takes its name from Quintus Fabius Maximus, an ancient Roman general famous for his stealth delaying tactics. The difference between Fabians and Communists is one of tactics.

Communists work towards their goal through murder, terror, and revolution. The Fabians however, use stealth, gradualism, and 'democracy' to establish a Red world. Fabians practice evolution instead of revolution. Fabian homosexuals soon capture the British Labor Party. The disease spreads to the U.S. under the name of "progressivism", eventually taking over the Democrat Party and gaining a foothold in the Republican Party.

1- The stained glass window from the Headquarters of the Fabian Society depicts leading members (Sydney Webb & George Bernard Shaw) molding the world. (Inscription reads: "Remold it nearer to the heart's desire."). Beneath the floor of the workshop, gullible 'useful Idiots' worship the books that Fabians above feed to them.

2- Fabian Society symbol depicts a wolf in sheep's clothing

3- The patient Fabian Turtle's motto: "When I strike, I strike hard!"

MAY 4, 1886
MAY DAY RIOTS AT HAYMARKET SQUARE / IMMIGRANT REDS MURDER 8 CHICAGO POLICEMEN

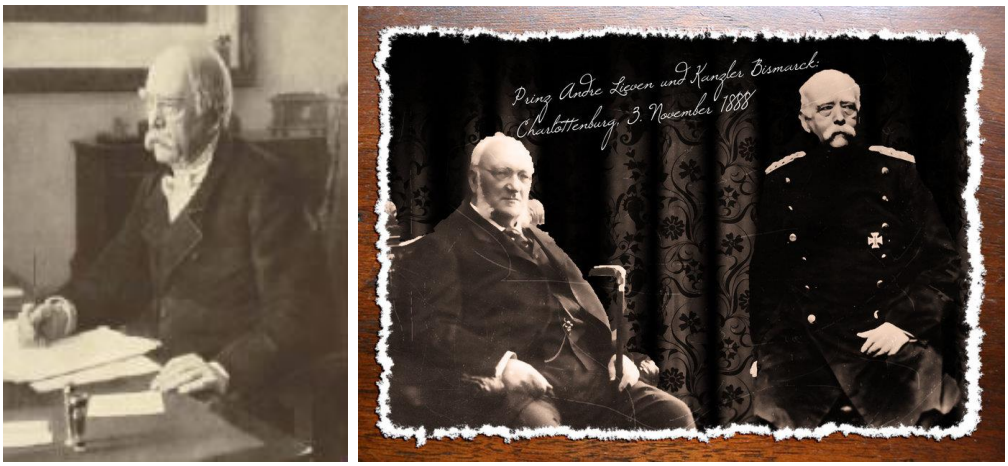
American Reds organize massive May Day (Illuminati Founding Day) demonstrations in Chicago. On May 3rd, August Spies, a German born Anarchist Labor leader and self-styled "hero of the working man" addresses a crowd of striking union workers. The agitated mob then attacks a group of non-striking workers of the McCormick Harvesting Machine Company. To protect the non-strikers ("scabs"), and themselves, the police fire shots on the frenzied mob; killing two of the Red union thugs.

Red agitators then spread the false rumor that the police killed the strikers in cold blood. The Reds print fliers calling for the workers to take up arms and attend a mass meeting in Chicago's Haymarket Square.

.

The following day, a line of police officers maintains order as Red speakers address the crowd. Suddenly, a pipe bomb is thrown at police lines. Reds begin firing pistols at the police and the police return fire. When the smoke clears, eight policemen lay dead and 60 others are wounded. Four of the Reds are also killed. Seven Red leaders (most of them European immigrants) will be tried and executed.

The monument to the dead policemen will be bombed in 1968 by terrorist Bill Ayers; the Communist friend and ghost-writer of future President Barack Obama.

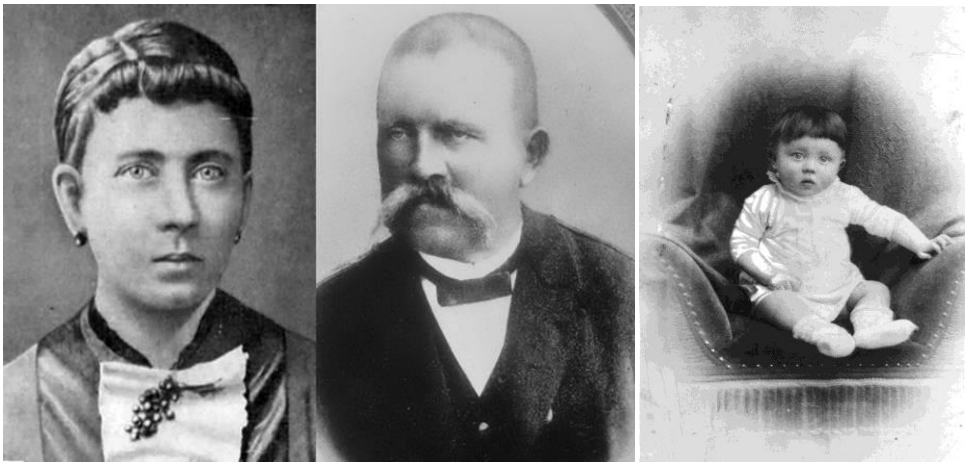


JUNE, 1887
'THE REINSURANCE TREATY' / GERMANY AND RUSSIA FORM A SECRET ALLIANCE

Although the British-Rothschild agent Disraeli had destroyed The Three Emperors League (Russia / Germany / Austria-Hungary) back in 1878, German Chancellor Bismarck continues to work for peace. To "reinsure" the peace of Eastern Europe, and to prevent British or French intrigue from starting more wars, Bismarck's

Germany and Tsarist Romanov Russia agree to a secret treaty known as "The Reinsurance Treaty".

Under the terms of the agreement, Germany and Russia agree to remain neutral should either become involved in war with a third nation. However, neutrality would not apply if Russia attacks Germany's ally, Austria-Hungary.



The two powers remain vulnerable to the Balkan controversy in Austria-Hungary (Russia is the protector of the minority Slavic/Orthodox community under Austrian rule, and also of small Slavic states like Serbia) Nonetheless, the Reinsurance Treaty is a very good sign that Russia and Germany will be able to work out any future differences diplomatically.

Bismarck worked to keep France & Britain from getting Germany and Russia to fight. Right: Bismarck with Russian Prince Andrey Lieven

APRIL 20, 1889
ADOLF HITLER IS BORN

At a time when the dark forces of the New World Order were already setting the chess pieces for the future war to enslave Germany, Adolf Hitler, the man who would become their greatest nemesis, is born into a very simple Austrian family.

Klara Hitler, Alois Hitler and baby Hitler

1890
NEW GERMAN KAISER DISMISSES BISMARCK / TURNS DOWN RUSSIAN OFFER TO RENEW THE REINSURANCE TREATY

Kaiser Wilhelm I passes away in March of 1888 at the age of 91. He is succeeded by his son Frederick I, who dies of throat cancer after a reign of just 3 months. Frederick's 29 year old son Wilhelm II then becomes Kaiser in June of 1888.

Like many young, "educated" Europeans, Wilhelm II is partially infected with the poison of "liberalism". Whereas 'Iron Chancellor"' Bismarck wants to smash the Reds of Germany, young Wilhelm is hesitant to crush the Communists. He believes that if Germany becomes more "democratic", it will pacify the Red agitators. Wilhelm II also wants better relations with the UK, the enemy of Russia. To that end, Wilhelm, (possibly under the influence of NWO court intriguers) turns his back on Russia, refusing repeated Russian requests to renew Bismarck's Reinsurance Treaty.

These irreconcilable differences lead Wilhelm to dismiss the legendary Bismarck in 1890. As the grandson of Britain's Queen Victoria, Wilhelm evidently believes that he can trust and befriend Britain (which really belongs to the Rothschilds, not Victoria). He also believes that he can solve problems with Russia by negotiation.

Russia now feels isolated and mistrusts Germany's ally, Austria-Hungary. This leaves Russia very vulnerable to French and British intrigue. History will prove that wise old Bismarck was right, and naive young Wilhelm was wrong.

"Dropping the Pilot" - British cartoon mocks the dismissal of the great statesman and peacemaker. Bad move Kaiser Wilhelm!

1892
PENNSYLVANIA STEEL STRIKE TURNS VIOLENT / JEWISH RED SHOOTS AND STABS CHAIRMAN OF CARNEGIE STEEL

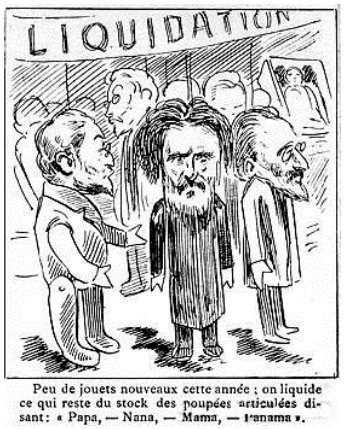
The Homestead Steel Strike turns deadly when members of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers threaten non-striking workers of the Carnegie Steel.Corporation. Pinkerton Security men are called in to secure the plant. Union thugs fire upon them as they arrive. The Pinkertons fire back and a 10-minute shootout leaves 2 dead from each side.

.

In nearby Pittsburgh, steelworkers gather in the streets, listening to accounts of the attacks at Homestead. Hundreds of them, many armed, move toward the town to assist the strikers. The Pinkertons confront the angry mob and beat them back.

The strike, and the Steel Union itself, are finally broken when the state militia arrives. Soon afterwards, Alexander Berkman, a Russian-born Jewish anarchist from New York, arrives and attempts to murder Henry Clay Frick, Carnegie's Chairman. Berkman had plotted with his lover, Russian-born Jewish anarchist Emma Goldman, to carry out the murder. Frick is shot and stabbed, but survives.

Berkman will serve 14 years in prison. "Red Emma" Goldman remains free and continues to openly call for violence against prominent Americans.



1- Berkman - the lover of Red Emma Goldman (yikes!) - nearly killed Frick.

1890-1894
'ANTI-SEMITISM' BREAKS OUT IN FRANCE OVER 'THE PANAMA AFFAIR' & 'THE DREYFUS AFFAIR'

The collapse of the Panama Canal Company in 1889, due to corruption, causes 800,000 French investors to lose their savings. Two Jews, Cornelius Herz and Jacques Reinach, play prominent roles in the political bribery aspect of the massive scandal. Their role in the massive fraud leads to a breakout of anti-Semitism.

Then, in November of 1894, a Jewish French army captain named Alfred Dreyfus is convicted of treason for passing military secrets to German agents. Amidst an international firestorm and charges of "anti-Semitism", the conviction is later overturned. But many French still believe that Dreyfus was guilty. The Dreyfus Affair deeply divides the people of France.

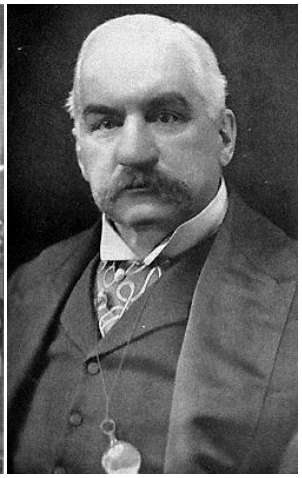
1 – The Panama Canal investment scandal rocked France

2 & 3- French postcard: "Museum of Horrors" depicts Dreyfus as a snake & Dreyfus is ceremonially shunned by his fellow soldiers

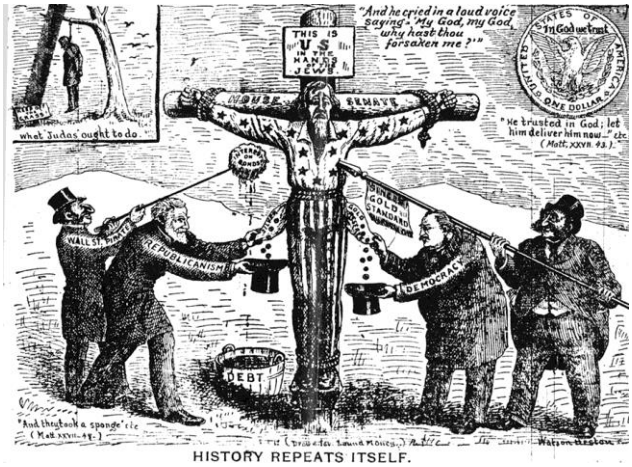
1893
GLOBALIST BANKERS ENGINEER THE U.S. PANIC OF 1893

Like all bursting bubbles of economics, the U.S. Panic of 1893 is a serious economic depression caused by excessive lending of bank notes (monetary expansion) followed by the inevitable tightening of loans. As always, when there is not enough new money flowing into the system to support the repayment of old loans, the end result is stock market crashes, bank runs and bank failures.

Compounding the panic is a run on the gold supply. Even though the currency is gold-backed, and although there is no Central Bank, bankers had still been able to artificially balloon the money supply with 'paper gold' issued through the scam of "fractional reserve banking".



The Democrats and President Cleveland are generally blamed for the Depression as the decline of the gold reserves stored in the Treasury fell to a dangerously low level. This forces Cleveland to borrow $65 million in gold from legendary Wall-Street banker J.P. Morgan and the Rothschilds of England. (3) Crawling to Morgan & Rothschild is the only way to support the gold standard. Morgan is an immensely wealthy and powerful man in his own right; but he is a "made man" - his maker being the House of Rothschild.

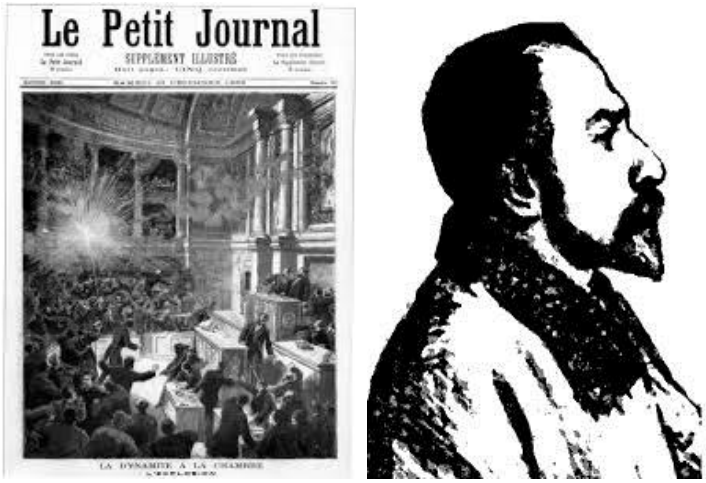


The simple-minded blame “Capitalism” for the distress. Many of them will turn leftward politically, even radically so. But the more astute observers place the blame elsewhere. Jewish historian Hasia Diner notes:

"Some Populists believed that Jews made up a class of international financiers whose policies had ruined small family farms. Jews, they asserted, owned the banks and promoted the gold standard, the chief sources of their impoverishment. Agrarian radicalism posited the city as antithetical to American values, asserting that Jews were the essence of urban corruption.” (4)

Like all previous and future monetary crashes & panics, 1893 is a very good year for the Rothschilds. It marks a major American power grab for the House of Rothschild and its American agents and allies.

1- Drawing of panic at the stock exchange



2- House of Rothschild Rothschild front man J.P. Morgan

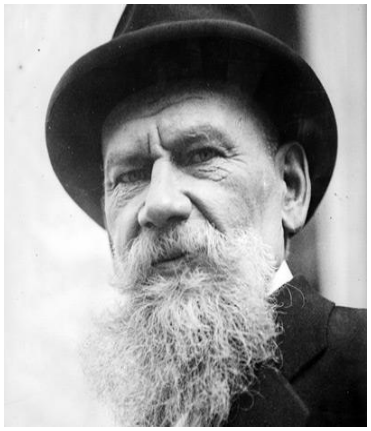
3- An “anti-Semitic” political cartoon in an issue of "Sound Money" magazine which appeared in the 1800’s. Caption reads: "This is the U.S. in the Hands of the Jews", portraying Uncle Sam being crucified like Jesus.

DECEMBER, 1893
FRENCH RED BOMBS THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES

French Anarchist Auguste Vaillant throws a home-made bomb device from the public gallery of the French Chamber of deputies. The explosion injures 20 French deputies but fails to kill anyone.

Vaillant is sentenced to death and executed in February 1894. His last words were "Death to the Bourgeoisie! Long live Anarchy!"

French society was shocked by the brazenness of the Red attack.



JANUARY, 1894
RUSSIA ENTANGLED INTO A 'FRANCO-RUSSIAN ALLIANCE

Isolated from Germany and suspicious of Austria-Hungary, Russia (which wants another crack at Turkey), falls into a clever trap set by France (which wants another crack at Prussia/Germany) and Rothschild NWO agents (who have a much bigger picture in mind). The Franco-Russian Alliance creates an entangling military alliance between the two nations. The Russian giant can now be used to create a deadly 2nd front in any future war with Germany. This is what German Chancellor Bismarck had worked so hard to avoid!

The great Russian novelist Leo Tolstoy (War and Peace) passionately condemns the Franco-Russian Alliance as a French trick to entangle Russia in a future war against France's enemy (Germany). Tolstoy sarcastically describes the suddenly friendly French as "people who, without reason, suddenly professed such spontaneous and exceptional love for Russia". (5)

1- Bismarck's nightmare; French magazine glorifies the Franco-Russian Alliance.

2 & 3: Tolstoy warned of the danger: "The Franco-Russian alliance cannot now present itself as anything else than what it is: a league of war." (6)

JUNE, 1894
REDS ASSASSINATE PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

The popular French President Marie Francois Sadi Carnot has a reputation for honesty and was untouched by the massive Panama Canal scandal of the 1890's. He establishes a friendship with Russian Czar Alexander III, receiving the Order of St. Andrew from the Czar himself. (7)

Carnot's popularity, immunity to blackmail, and close friendship with the hated Czar make him difficult for the Rothschilds to control. At this point in history, it appears that the Zionists are "removing some of their eggs" from the increasingly anti-Semitic French basket, and placing them in the increasingly Jewish-influenced German basket (as suggested by Jewish-French Captain Dreyfus passing secrets to Germany and the attack on the French deputies). The one constant that remains is Rothschild's hatred for Russia.

This may explain why Carnot was stabbed to death by Italian Anarchist Sante Geronimo Caserio. The murder arouses horror and outrage throughout France. No King or President is safe from the Red beasts and their New World Order masters.

Like U.S. President Abe Lincoln before him, President Carnot befriended a Russian Czar. Carnot is then stabbed to death by the Italian Red, Caserio.

1896
GLOBALIST - ZIONIST PURCHASES THE NEW YORK TIMES

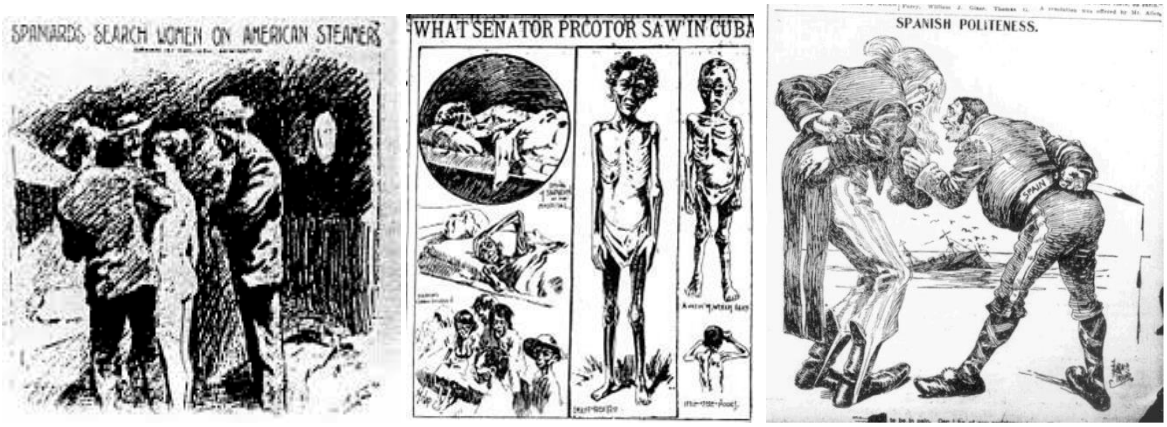
Since its founding in 1851 by Republican Henry Jarvis Raymond, The NY Times has been a big player in shaping public opinion. In 1896, the Times takes a turn to the internationalist left when it is purchased by a German-Jew named Adolph Ochs. In 1897, Ochs himself coins the paper's self-serving slogan: *"All the News That's Fit to Print"

Ochs' daughter marries Arthur Hays Sulzberger, who becomes publisher when Adolph dies. Ochs' great grandson Arthur Ochs Sulzberger, Jr. is the publisher of the NY Times today. For 117 years, America's most influential rag has been in the hands of the same Zionist-Marxist family. Count on The Times to promote big government, Globalism, phony environmentalism, Israel, the Fed, and endless wars.

The New York Times

Above: Adolph Ochs / The awesome power and influence of the New York Times Jewish Ochs & Sulzberger dynasty cannot be denied.

1896-1898
THE 'YELLOW PRESS' AGITATES FOR WAR AGAINST SPAIN



Beginning on a small scale in 1896, and building up to a comical climax in 1898, the very same New York 'Yellow Press', whose propaganda had already invented the legend of Superman Police Commissioner Roosevelt, agitates relentlessly for war with Spain, ostensibly over the "liberation" of Cuba.

Our High School History fables taught us that the Spanish-American War of 1898 was a meaningless war instigated by the Yellow Journalist William Randolph Hearst for the purpose of selling newspapers. Here's a typical history-book sample of the retarded drivel that is still being spoon-fed to captive audiences of dumbed-down students:

"It is arguable that the Spanish-American War was perhaps the most pointless war in the history of the United States. Although it was not known at the time, the war was not truly fought for territory, for markets, for principle, or even for honor. Rather, it began because William Randolph Hearst, editor of the popular New York Journal sought sensational material to print." (8)

Certainly, Hearst and his propaganda rival at the New York World, Joseph Pulitzer, are helping to poison the public mind against Spain while selling a lot of papers in the process. But this idiotic and incomplete analysis ignores the "big picture" of the geopolitical hand which is moving the chess pieces. The point of the imperial game is to project U.S. imperial power over the Asian Pacific. To that end, it is necessary to kick Spain out of The Philippines and Guam so that U.S. naval bases can be established there instead. It is a dirty game and, as we shall soon see, the cowboy-turned-super-cop will become a key player in the game.

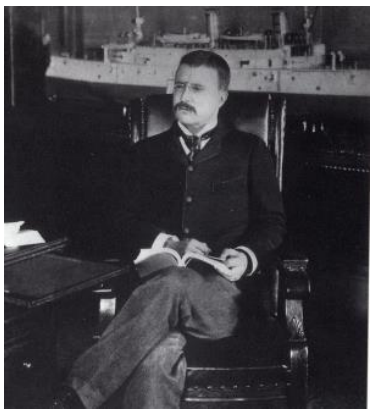
The phony, absurd, and vile atrocity stories of the warmongering Yellow Press created the momentum needed for the Spanish-America War.



APRIL, 1897
TEDDY ROOSEVELT IS NAMED ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE U.S NAVY / AGITATES FOR WAR WITH SPAIN

With war propaganda heating up, the charmed life and meteoric rise of Theodore Roosevelt (TR) continues with an appointment to the Office of Assistant Secretary of the U.S. Navy. Clearly, somebody is puffing-up this still young man, and in a big way.

Near the end of 1897, TR explains his warmongering priorities to one of the Navy's planners. Behold the chilling talk of a social-engineering psychopath who views Americans as his personal clay, and military men as cannon-fodder to be sacrificed for "the governing class." TR:

"I would regard war with Spain from two viewpoints: first, the advisability on the grounds both of humanity and self-interest of interfering on behalf of the Cubans, and of taking one more step toward the complete freeing of America from European dominion; second, the benefit done our people by giving them something to think of which is not material gain, and especially the benefit done our military forces by trying both the Navy and Army in actual practice." (9)

As for the pious rubbish about "liberating Cuba", we shall address that self - aggrandizing bit of bullshit shortly.

The rapid career rise of the new Assistant Naval Secretary was fueled by the same political and journalistic forces agitating for war with Spain.

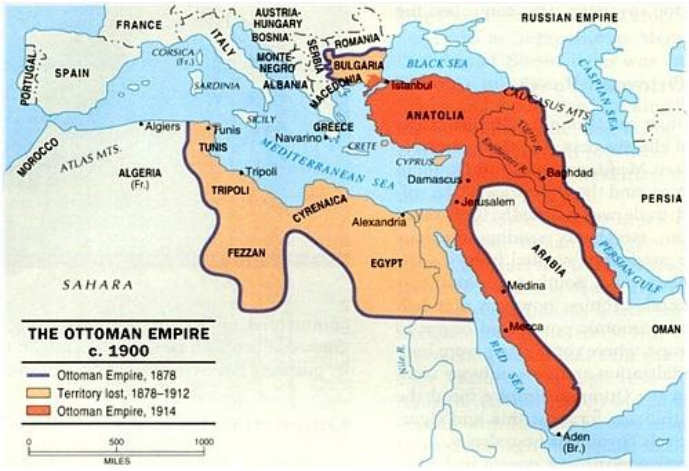
.

AUGUST, 1897
REDS MURDER PRIME MINISTER OF SPAIN

The New World Order crime gang wants to destabilize Catholic Spain and turn it into a controllable "democracy." Antonio Canovas is Prime Minister of Spain. He is an advocate of a Constitutional Monarchy, and a supporter of the Catholic Church. This makes him a target of the Christian-hating Reds and their Rothschild masters. Red terrorists had previously hurled a bomb at Canovas in 1896 but the attempt failed.

While internal Red turmoil weakens Spain from within, external U.S. Globalists agitate for war with Spain over control of its Cuban and Philippines Naval Bases. Canovas will not live to see the disastrous Spanish-American War. He is shot dead by Italian Red, Michele Angiolillo, before the war begins.

Add Canovas to the growing list of dead Kings, Presidents, and Prime Ministers



AUGUST, 1897
THE 1ST ZIONIST CONGRESS MEETS IN BASEL SWITZERLAND / THE PLOT TO STEAL PALESTINE IS HATCHED

The First Zionist Congress is held in Basel, Switzerland and is chaired by Theodore Herzl. Jewish delegates from across Europe agree that Palestine should be given to them. The idea of a Jewish takeover of Palestine had been floating around for decades. Whenever Russia advanced its interests in the area, Rothschild's Britain would keep Russia out.

The problem is, Palestine is 90-95% Arab, and falls under the sovereignty of the Ottoman Turks. Unless the Turks agree to give Palestine to the Jews, the Zionist dream cannot be realized.

In 1901, the Zionists will offer to arrange a reduction of Turkey's foreign debt (owed to Zionist bankers) in exchange for Palestine. The Sultan of Turkey bluntly refuses. Giving away the Holy Land to the Zionists would be a betrayal of Turkey's, and Palestine's, Muslim population.

Herzl refuses to give up. The British offer to give the Jews part of the African colony of Uganda. The Zionists refuse, insisting upon Palestine. Prior to his death in 1904, Herzl predicts that a world body will one day give Palestine to the Jews, and that he will go down in history as father of the Jewish State. For Herzl's dream to come true, a European military power will have to be manipulated into taking Palestine away from the Ottomans by force.

Palestine lies deep within Ottoman territory. But Herzl has a long range plan. He speaks of a "future world body" that will give the Jews a homeland in Palestine.

DECEMBER, 1897
THE DYING BISMARCK'S FINAL WARNING AND PREDICTION

Former German Chancellor Bismarck is now 83 years old and in poor health. Kaiser Wilhelm II visits Bismarck for the last time in December of 1897. Again, the wise old man warns the Kaiser to beware of the intrigues of courtiers around him, and of a European disaster that may yet still come.

.

Bismarck warns Wilhelm not to trust court advisors: "Your Majesty, so long as you have this present officer corps, you can do as you please. But when this is no longer the case, it will be very different for you." (10)

Subsequently, Bismarck makes these accurate predictions: "... the crash will come twenty years after my departure if things go on like this." ....."One day, the great European War will come out of some damned foolish thing in the Balkans." (11)

This prophecy will be fulfilled almost to the year! Bismarck knew that a Balkan crisis could result in a 2-front war against Britain & France in the west, Russia in the east, plus an internal Red uprising on the home front.

Bismarck foresaw the evil plot against Germany.

FEBRUARY 15, 1898
THE CONVENIENT SINKING OF THE USS MAINE

In January, 1898, with war propaganda now at fever pitch, Assistant Secretary Roosevelt, on his own initiative, orders the armored cruiser USS Maine to provocatively sail into Cuba's Havana Harbor (controlled by Spain). In an amazing "coincidence", the ship just blows up, resulting in the deaths of 266 men. The warmongers of the New York Yellow Press, stirred up by Roosevelt's false accusation of Spain, finally have the 'casus belli' (cause for war) that has eluded them. What good "fortune", eh?

Without a trace of evidence, and in spite of strong Spanish denials, the treacherous TR proclaims Spain as the guilty party. Pressure grows on a reluctant President McKinley to ask Congress for a Declaration of War. Knowing that Spain is innocent, McKinley resists.

The official position of the U.S. government today is that "coal dust accumulation" caused the horrific, and unprecedented, explosion. But astute students of history understand how such events are often engineered by the clandestine services of the "victim" nation itself.

Speaking of "coal dust" and clandestine services, recall how during Civil War days the secret service of the Confederacy developed a "coal torpedo" – a hollowed-out device that resembled a lump of coal, but was actually packed with explosives. Enemy agents sneak the weapons into a ship's coal supply. When shoveled into the ship's firebox – the boiler goes BOOM! This nasty little weapon caused great loss of life during the Civil War; and was probably the means used by Secretary Roosevelt used to blow up the Maine.

$50,000 REWARD—WHO DESTROYED THE MAINE?—$50,000 REWARD

EDITION FOR GREATER NEW YORK

NEW YORK JOURNAL

AND ADVERTISER

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1898

DESTRUCTION OF THE WAR SHIP MAINE WAS THE WORK OF AN ENEMY

$50,000!
$50,000 REWARD!
For the Detection of the Perpetrator of the Maine Outrage!

Assistant Secretary Roosevelt Convinced the Explosion of the War Ship Was Not an Accident.

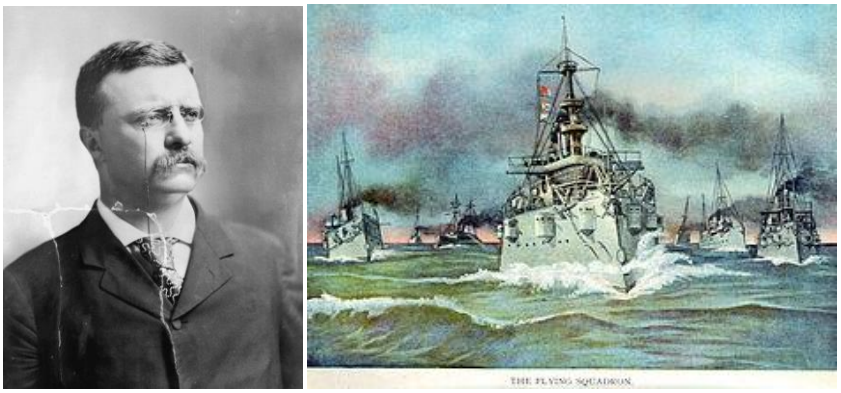
The Journal Offers $50,000 Reward for the Conviction of the Criminals Who Sent 258 American Sailors to Their Death. Naval Officers Unanimous That the Ship Was Destroyed on Purpose.

$50,000!
$50,000 REWARD!
For the Detection of the Perpetrator of the Maine Outrage!

Source: "Crucible of Empire," PBS Online (adapted)

The World.

MAINE EXPLOSION CAUSED BY BOMB OR TORPEDO!



Capt. Sigsbee and Consul-General Lee Are in Doubt—The World Has Sent a Special Tug With Submarine Divers, to Havana to Find Out—Lee Asks for an Immediate Court of Inquiry—260 Men Dead.

1- The mysterious and deadly blast was immediately followed by the false accusations of the Yellow Press and their darling Teddy Roosevelt.

2- Was it a coal torpedo? You know it was!

FEBRUARY 25, 1898
TR ORDERS THE U.S. NAVY TO PREPARE FOR WAR

Just 10 days after the battleship Maine explodes, the Secretary of the Navy leaves his office and Roosevelt becomes Acting Secretary for four hours. TR wastes no time in cabling the Navy worldwide to prepare for war, ordering ammunition and supplies, bringing in "experts" and going to Congress to ask for authority to recruit as many sailors as needed. All the while, Spain continues to protest its innocence.

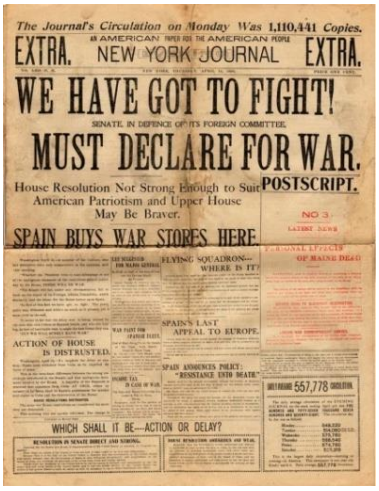
THE FLYING SQUADRON.

TR orders the squadrons to prepare for the war that he wants so badly.

APRIL, 1898
McKINLEY CAN NO LONGER RESIST / ASKS CONGRESS FOR DECLARATION OF WAR

Even after the strange explosion on the Maine, President McKinley, Speaker of the House Thomas Brackett Reed, and America's business community had all urged a negotiated solution to the manufactured crisis in Cuba. McKinley even communicates with the Pope in hopes for a peaceful mediation. (12)

But the warmonger coalition in Congress and the New York Press is now too strong. Feeding off of Roosevelt's vile slanders, the Yellow Press runs headlines such as "Spanish Murderers" and "Remember the Maine". It is interesting to note that when McKinley finally surrenders to the inevitable, he never mentions the sinking of the USS Maine. That's because he knows that Spain is innocent and, unlike Roosevelt, isn't willing to lie to the American public.



NIGHT SPECIAL NEW YORK JOURNAL NIGHT SPECIAL

BOTH HOUSES.

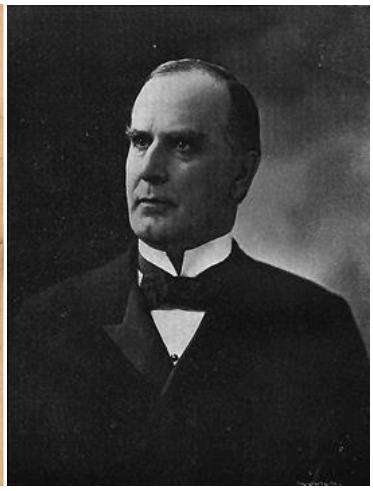
IN UPROAR, THREATENING REVOLT.

WARN M'KINLEY.

EXTRA

The Journal's Circulation on Monday Was 1,110,441 Copies.

EXTRA. NEW YORK JOURNAL EXTRA.



WE HAVE GOT TO FIGHT!

MUST DECLARE FOR WAR.

POSTSCRIPT.

House Resolution Not Strong Enough to Suit American Patriotism and Upper House May Be Braver.

SPAIN BUYS WAR STORES HERE.

Neither the Pope, nor the innocent Spaniards, nor the U.S. President was able to beat back the insane war mania and press propaganda which followed the destruction in the Maine. The Congressional and media pressure on McKinley forced him to finally ask for a war declaration.

APRIL 12, 1898
TR ORDERS NAVY TO ATTACK SPAIN'S PACIFIC FLEET

Within hours of the war declaration, "Assistant" Secretary Roosevelt again takes matters into his own hands by issuing an order for America's Asiatic Squadron, stationed in British Hong Kong, to "protect commerce" - by destroying the Spanish fleet based in the Philippines. Try not to laugh, dear reader; but some warmongers justify this outrageous act of aggression as a necessary defensive strike aimed at preventing a Spanish attack on California!

The Battle of Manila Bay takes place on May 1 and it is an absolute rout. Commodore Dewey not only destroys the Spanish fleet, but also captures the harbor of Manila - effectively a U.S. body of water ever since. On June 20, a U.S. fleet commanded by Captain Henry Glass, also captures the island of Guam - a U.S. territory ever since.

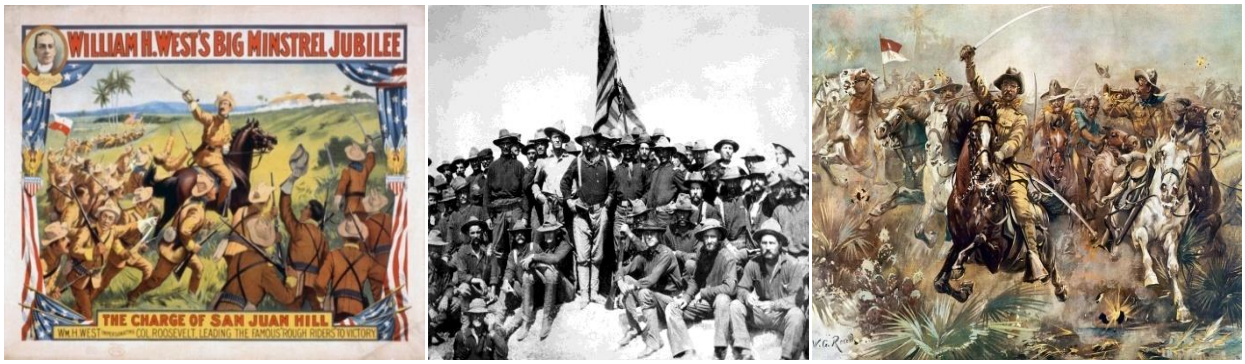
And finally, in July, the House and Senate work their way around the 2/3 Senate requirement for annexing Hawaii by voting on a joint resolution instead. The "emergency" of the war is what finally enables the establishment of a huge base in Hawaii (Pearl Harbor). This is against the wishes of most native Hawaiians.

Philippines, Guam, Hawaii; yes, the war with Spain turned out to be very good for the warmongering Globalist imperialists of that era. Hey Teddy! Wasn't this holy war of yours supposed to be about "liberating" Cuba?

The war for "Cuba's freedom" was really all about controlling Asia.

MAY 6, 1898
TR RESIGNS AS ASSISTANT NAVAL SECRETARY TO BECOME A FAKE "WAR HERO'

The totally lopsided war will end in August, after just 3 and 1/2 months. But not before the war's most important instigator, Teddy Roosevelt, steps down from his position and volunteers to "fight". The grand-standing clown serves just long enough to build his resume as a "war hero". His mythical achievements as the fearless, horse-mounted leader of the "The Rough Riders" and "hero of San Juan Hill" will be hyped by the very same Yellow Press which propagandized for the wicked little war in the first place.



In reality, the Battle of San Juan Hill, which actually took place at Kettle Hill, was only a minor supporting skirmish, fought on foot, in which Americans outnumbered Spaniards 15-1! It was actually the Buffalo Soldiers of the 10th Cavalry and 24th Infantry Regiments that had already done the heavy fighting, not TR's "Rough Riders". (13)

Prior to charging up the essentially undefended hill, the dramatic little Caesar, who had the only horse, rode back and forth between rifle pits at the forefront of the advance up Kettle Hill, an advance that he urged despite the absence of any orders from superiors. He was forced to walk up the last part of the hill when his poor horse became entangled in barbed wire.

The mythical "war hero" later wrote about his imaginary role in the non-battle:

"On the day of the big fight I had to ask my men to do a deed that European military writers consider utterly impossible of performance, that is, to attack over open ground an unshaken infantry armed with the best modern repeating rifles behind a formidable system of entrenchments. The only way to get them to do it in the way it had to be done was to lead them myself." (14)

The great glory-hound recalled the Battle of Kettle Hill (part of the San Juan Heights) as "the great day of my life" and "my crowded hour". But it will not be until 2001 that "the war hero" is posthumously awarded the Medal of Honor for his actions. The reason why TR's request for the Medal of Honor was denied at the time was because Army officials, who knew the truth about his headline-grabbing, make-believe "heroism", blocked his nomination. (15)

Idiotic false propaganda turned TR into an instant "war hero". But TR's commanding officers knew the San Juan Hill story was fake.

"I am entitled to the Medal of Honor and I want it."

- Teddy Roosevelt, in a letter to a friend, written upon his return to New York (16)

SEPTEMBER, 1898
REDS MURDER EMPRESS ELISABETH OF AUSTRIA-HUNGARY

Elisabeth of Austria is the wife of Emperor Franz Joseph I, and thus Empress of Austria and Queen of Hungary. Despite warnings of possible assassination attempts, the sixty-year-old Elisabeth is traveling incognito to Switzerland.

On September 10, 1898, Elisabeth and her lady in waiting leave their hotel on the shore of Lake Geneva, on foot, to catch the steamship. The two walk along the promenade when a 25-year-old Italian Anarchist named Luigi Lucheni approaches them. Lucheni suddenly stabs Elisabeth with a 4-inch file inserted into a wooden handle.

Lucheni had originally planned to kill the Duke of Orléans, but the French noble had left Geneva earlier. Failing to find him, the assassin selects Elisabeth when a Geneva newspaper reveals that the elegant woman traveling under the pseudonym of "Countess of Hohenembs" was the Empress Elisabeth of Austria.

After Lucheni strikes her, the Empress collapses and dies soon afterwards. Lucheni is soon apprehended as anger and grief sweep Autria-Hungary.

Murderous Reds of unstable mind are being incited by propaganda and unseen handlers to blindly serve the bloodlust of The New World Order.

NOVEMBER, 1898
THE "WAR HERO" IS ELECTED GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK

Almost immediately after leaving the Army in August, 1898, the legend-in-his-own-mind is tapped by the kingmakers of New York to run as the Republican Party candidate for governor. As one would have come to already expect of the raging narcissist, TR campaigns vigorously on his war record as the "hero" of San Juan Hill. The mendacious mythology is multiplied by the Yellow Press. 'Colonel" Roosevelt wins the election by the historically narrow margin of just 1%. So many good things happening for Theodore Roosevelt!

His brief 2-year Governorship is marked by a flurry of busy-body activity in which TR casts himself as the champion of "little guy" against the big bad corporations. Like his mythical charge into the imaginary gunfire of San Juan Hill, this simplistic narrative is based on smoke and bullshit. In reality, TR was a wholly-owned creation of the very Wall Street Finance Kings that he claims to be crusading against.

The other notable, and typical, development of TR's Governorship was the very strange innovation of holding press conferences not on a weekly basis; not on a daily basis, but twice each day! Ostensibly, this was done to "stay connected with the middle-class". In reality, the two-a-day pressers serve as further evidence that

TR is a self-obsessed, attention-seeking megalomaniac who should never have been allowed anywhere near the levers of state power.

Then, as now, the gullible public loves a "war hero". TR shamelessly rode his fictitious battlefield heroism into the Governorship of New York.

1899-1900
U.S. VICE PRESIDENT GARRET HOBART DIES / TR IS IMPOSED UPON McKINLEY AS NEW VICE PRESIDENT

Just 55 years of age, Vice President Garret Hobart dies of strange heart ailment in November, 1899. Hobart is a constitutional conservative. His untimely death conveniently creates an opening for the Progressive-Globalist faction that has infiltrated the Republican Party.

The very same faction of warmongers that had imposed the phony Spanish-American War upon McKinley will soon impose TR onto the Presidential ticket for the 1900 election. This effort is also supported by some in New York who wish to be rid of the meddlesome do-gooder Governor and his excessive interference in commerce.

The Globalists are now "just one heartbeat away" from having their first puppet installed in the White House. Was Hobart poisoned to pave the way for the Globalist TR's stunning rise? Subsequent events suggest that Hobart's oddly convenient death was likely part of a plan.

Step 1: TR's military record is exaggerated by the Yellow Press (San Juan Hill).
Step 2: The "War Hero" is then rocketed into the Governorship of New York
Step 3: When Hobart dies, the "the war hero" is forced upon a reluctant McKinley.

The popular McKinley is re-elected. In September, Roosevelt coins the phrase for which he is best known: "Speak softly and carry a big stick, and you will go far." (17) Spoken like a true sociopath. So many good things are happening for Theodore Roosevelt!

An unexpected death (poison?) turns McKinley-Hobart into McKinley-Roosevelt. The Yellow Press cartoon image at center depicts a "reluctant" TR, in "war hero" uniform, having to be seduced by the 4 maidens (North, South, East, West) into joining the McKinley 1900 ticket as Vice President.

1899-1902
THE BOER WARS / ROTHSCHILD INVADES SOUTH AFRICA

The 2nd Anglo-Boer War is the first major war of the 20th century. (The 1st war was a brief conflict won by the Boers in 1881) Boers are descendants of German, French & Dutch settlers who arrived in South Africa in the 1600's. Hard working Boers develop the virgin land and build prosperous, free republics. Like flies to feces, the discovery of diamonds in the 1800's attracts British/Zionist immigration and intrigue.

Rothschild agent Cecil Rhodes (for whom the Globalist "Rhodes Scholarship" is named) and Jewish mogul Barney Barbato establish the DeBeers company, which will control the world's diamond production. In December of 1895, a band of 500 British adventurers had attempted to seize control of South Africa in an "unofficial" armed takeover. The failed raid is led by Rhodes's personal friend, Leander Starr Jameson.

Undaunted by the raid's failure, the aggressors continue to foment war against the Boers, with Zionist newspapers in the UK being the most vocal. The Boers ask Britain to withdraw its troops. The Brits refuse. The 2nd Boer War begins in October of 1899.

The British wage a cruel war, even starving women and children in filthy concentration camps. They instigate and arm Black tribes to "kill the Boers." The Boers finally submit and accept British rule, (up until 1961). The Jewish Oppenheimer Family - whose business ties with the Rothschilds go back more than 100 years (18) -, will dominate DeBeers, and South Africa's media. To this day, the Globalists are using Blacks to wage war against Boers.

Many women & children died in Rothschild Britain's concentration camps.

JULY 29, 1900
REDS ASSASSINATE THE KING OF ITALY

In May of 1900, Red terrorist Gaetano Bresci leaves his home in Paterson, NJ and returns to Italy. He proceeds to stalk King Umberto, arriving in the town of Monza on July 26. The King, who had survived a Red assassination attempt in 1878, arrives on the evening of the 29th in an open air carriage and begins distributing medals to the Italian athletes gathered.

After a short word of congratulations, Umberto descends the platform and gets back into his carriage. As he sits, Bresci bursts from the crowd brandishing a revolver and fires four times. The King dies seconds later, having been hit three times in the chest. Bresci is tackled by police agents and arrested.

Mamma Mia! The King of Italy is dead!

SEPTEMBER, 1901
REDS ASSASSINATE PRESIDENT McKINLEY / GLOBALIST TEDDY ROOSEVELT BECOMES PRESIDENT

The charmed political life of the cowboy-super cop-war hero Roosevelt continues when Leon Czolgosz, a Red terrorist, shoots President McKinley at close range. It was the speeches of the notorious Red subversive, Emma Goldman, which moved Czolgosz to "do something heroic" and thus become famous.

McKinley appears to be making a strong recovery, before suddenly weakening and dying on September 14, 1901. Just shy of his 43rd birthday, the ultra-ambitious Theodore Roosevelt becomes the youngest President in U.S. history. A Red bullet has put a "progressive" in the White House.

And again, so many good things are happening for Theodore Roosevelt!

CHIEF EXECUTIVE THE VICTIM OF MOST COWARDLY ANARCHIST

JOYOUS THRONG SHOCKED

Many Witness the Assault on Guest.

President Strives to Calm Enraged People.

When Serious Nature of Wounds Appear an Uproar Ensues.

SHOOTER PROMPTLY ARRESTED

Saved From the Enraged Populace.

Attempt Is Made to Lynch Fiendish Assassin.

Officers of the Law Lose No Time in Jailing the Prisoner.

McKinley dies. TR is sworn-in as President. The rapid rise of TR is complete.

1- Leon Czolgosz: The immigrant Red's bullet put a big government "Progressive" into the White House.

2- Cartoon later depicts TR and Wall Street bosses welcoming Karl Marx.

1901-1907
TR FIGHTS THE PHILIPPINES WAR AND MORO REBELLION

The shameful Philippines War and subsequent Moro Rebellion grow out of the equally shameful Spanish-American War – the "splendid little war" as TR refers to it.

During TR's war of Asian aggression, 5,000 Americans and 20,000 Filipinos are killed, with as many as 100,000 more natives dying of disease. (19) This is the Philippine independence movement's reward for rising up against Spain, based on America's empty promises. The formerly Spanish-speaking natives are then converted to the English language, which they speak to this day.

1- TR's long-since forgotten Philippines War got 5,000 Americans killed
2- American troops waterboard-torture a Philippine rebel.

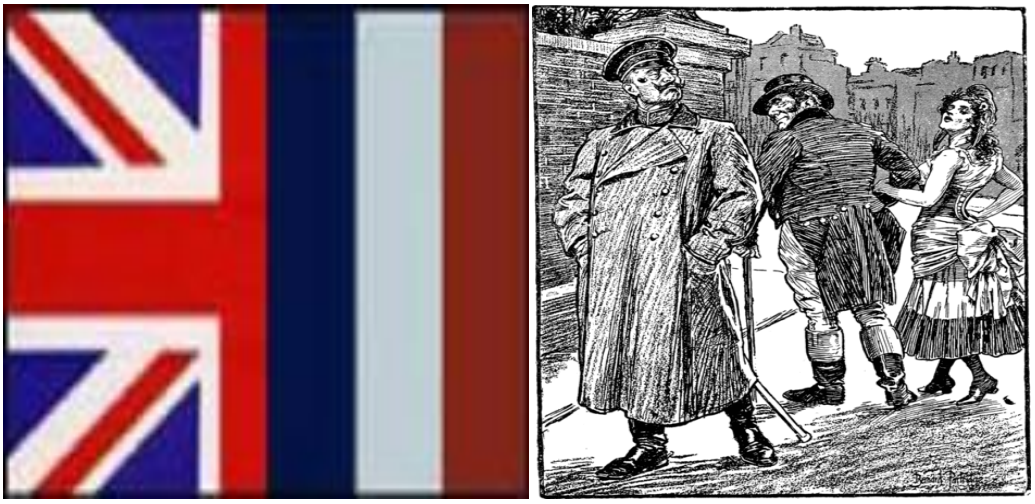
1903
TR ORCHESTRATES A REVOLUTION IN COLUMBIA

Contrary to TR's post-Presidency boasts, and also contrary to official U.S. history fables, the phony Pharaoh of America did not "build the Panama Canal". The concept was long in the works before TR even arrived on the scene. At most, TR can be credited with expediting the stalled project; but the manner in which he did this amounts to yet another shameful and uncalled for episode of Rooseveltian "big stick" bullying.

Irritated by Colombia's reasonable request for better terms for what is to become the Panama Canal, TR foments a fake revolution in the Panama region of Colombia. As a show of intimidation, TR also orders battleships into the area. The result is the newly formed puppet state of Panama. Colombia ends up being screwed out of any lease payments for the Canal! (20)

1- Cartoon depicts TR's militaristic bullying of Columbia.

2- The Yellow Press and modern court historians would have you believe that TR single-handedly conceived and built the canal with his own two hands!



3- Cartoon mocks TR's intrigues which broke up Columbia and created the Panama puppet state.

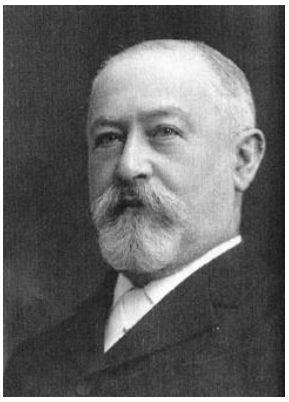
APRIL, 1904
THE 'ENTENTE CORDIAL' / UK & FRANCE FORM AN ALLIANCE / GERMANY IS SUSPICIOUS

The Entente Cordiale is a series of agreements signed between France and Great Britain. The agreements settle issues regarding colonial expansion and also mark the end of a centuries-old era of on and off conflict between France and Britain.

Germany views the new alliance with great suspicion, especially because France had already allied itself with Russia in 1892. The "chess pieces" of Europe are clearly being set in preparation of the Big Game to come.

The Rothschild-Anglo-French alliance will one day entangle the U.S. These nations will serve as the military "hit men" of the New World Order.

German cartoon: John Bull (UK) walks by with his French whore as Germany, saber at the ready, looks on with suspicion.



1905
ZIONIST BANKERS & REDS ATTEMPT REVOLUTION IN RUSSIA

The attempted Russian Revolution of 1905 is a wave of political uprisings, massive labor strikes, and terrorist acts against the government of Russia. The Reds (under orders from their Rothschild / Schiff masters) use the discontent surrounding the lost war with Japan (financed by Schiff) to foment the revolution. From 1905 to 1909, Red terrorists will kill 7,300 people and wound about 8,000.

Though the Jewish-inspired Red Revolution is suppressed, Tsar Nicholas II is forced to make "democratic" concessions which weaken his power and set him up for a future attempt. Nicholas makes a critical mistake by showing mercy to Red leaders such as Lenin and Trotsky. Instead of executing the Marxist leaders, the Russians merely arrest or deport them.

Lenin finds his way to Switzerland, and Trotsky ends up in New York after escaping from prison. The exiled Communists will one day return, with more money from the Zionist bankers, to terrorize Christian Russia once again.

1- Trotsky (center) and his Jewish-Marxist gang hung out in New York.

2- Jewish Wall Street banker Jacob Schiff weakened Russia by financing Japan's victorious war effort

FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"The Jews have undoubtedly to a large extent furnished the brains and energy in the revolution throughout Russia."* (21)

George von Longerke / US Ambassador to Russia

FEBRUARY 17, 1905
REDS MURDER GRAND DUKE OF RUSSIA (The Czar's Uncle)

Russia's Grand Duke Sergei Alexandrovich is the brother of the late Czar Alexander III. Their father, Alexander II (Lincoln's ally), is murdered by the Reds in 1881. The Grand Duke is a very influential figure during the reign of his nephew and current Czar, Nicholas II.

The Grand Duke meets the same sad fate as his father when a Red terrorist named Ivan Kalyayev hurls a bomb at the Duke's carriage. The bomb lands on his lap, obliterating the Duke and his carriage beyond recognition. Duchess Elizabeth, the Grand Duke's wife, withdraws from public life, founding a convent and dedicating herself to helping the poor. The Reds will eventually murder her and her nun-maid in 1918.

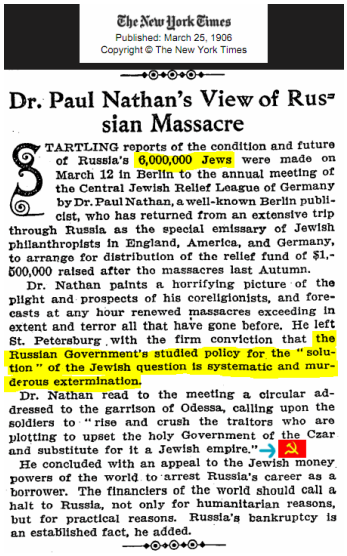
Another Romanov is murdered. The Communist killer got so close that the Duke's blood splattered on his own face.

1905
THE MYSTERIOUS PROTOCOLS OF THE LEARNED ELDERS OF ZION IS PUBLISHED IN RUSSIA

Russian Professor Sergei Nilus publishes a full version of The Protocols of the Learned Elders of Zion, a controversial document discovered a few years earlier. The Protocols are alleged to be the minutes of a secret meeting of Jewish elites in which a master plan for world domination, to be completed over the next 100 years, is laid out in chilling detail.

The Protocols tell of Jewish control of world banking, world media, Communism, liberalism, and political parties of every type. The master plot includes plans to:

- Destroy the Catholic Church and all Christianity
- Promote Atheism
- Wage class warfare / labor against management
- Overthrow Tsarist Russia



- Corrupt the morals of the people
- Promote senseless “modern art” and dirty literature
- Use anti-Semitism to keep "lesser Jews" cohesive
- Manipulate women with ideas of "liberation"
- Create economic depressions and inflations
- Create "controlled opposition" to themselves
- Use state debt as a weapon to enslave countries
- Subvert and control all existing governments
- Install tainted politicians that can be blackmailed
- Manipulate college students with phony idealism
- Assassinate world leaders
- Spread deadly diseases
- Use balance of power politics to control nations
- Commit acts of terrorism
- Promote sports and games in order to divert people from politics
- Start a World War which will include the USA
- Set up world government after an economic crash

Some allege that the Protocols were forged by Russian security agents in order to convince the Tsar Nicholas II of the New World Order's existence. Although the authenticity of the document remains in question, world events of the coming decades will match the Protocols so closely that the document becomes a worldwide sensation during the 1920's and '30's. Forgery or not, whoever wrote it had an unusual knowledge and spooky prescience.

Professor Nilus translated the Protocols; since re-translated widely.

MARCH 25, 1906
ZIONIST-OWNED NEW YORK TIMES PUBLISHES FALSE CLAIM THAT 6 MILLION JEWS FACE EXTERMINATION IN RUSSIA

The New York Times
Published: March 25, 1906
Copyright © The New York Times

Dr. Paul Nathan's View of Russian Massacre

STARTLING reports of the condition and future of Russia's 6,000,000 Jews were made on March 12 in Berlin to the annual meeting of the Central Jewish Relief League of Germany by Dr. Paul Nathan, a well-known Berlin publicist, who has returned from an extensive trip through Russia as the special emissary of Jewish philanthropists in England, America, and Germany, to arrange for distribution of the relief fund of $1,500,000 raised after the massacres last Autumn.

Dr. Nathan paints a horrifying picture of the plight and prospects of his coreligionists, and forecasts at any hour renewed massacres exceeding in extent and terror all that have gone before. He left St. Petersburg with the firm conviction that the Russian Government's studied policy for the "solution" of the Jewish question is systematic and murderous extermination.

Dr. Nathan read to the meeting a circular addressed to the garrison of Odessa, calling upon the soldiers to "rise and crush the traitors who are plotting to upset the holy Government of the Czar and substitute for it a Jewish empire."

He concluded with an appeal to the Jewish money powers of the world to arrest Russia's career as a borrower. The financiers of the world should call a halt to Russia, not only for humanitarian reasons, but for practical reasons. Russia's bankruptcy is an established fact, he added.

WENATCHEE DAILY

VOLUME I.—NO. 300. WENATCHEE, WASHINGTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 20, 1906

MAY EXTERMINATE JEWS IN RUSSIA

Bloody Anti-Jewish Campaign is so Well Organized That Few Jews and Very Little Jewish Property Will Survive

London, June 20.—Leopold J. Greenburg, honorary secretary of the English Zionist Federation, received a telegram this morning from a member of the Russian douma, stating that the bloody anti-Jewish campaign in Russia is so well organized and so vigorously supported by the bureau of an attempt on the life of General Trepoff, commandant of the palace, by a well dressed woman masquerading as Princess Nariahbin.

According to the rumor, the woman gained admittance to the palace and when Trepoff appeared she drew a revolver, but before it was fired she was seized.

The story is denied by the police.

BEVERIDGE BILL PASSES THE HOUSE

Washington, D. C., June 20.—The beef inspection bill passed the House today.

Senator Beveridge and the President

PASSAGE OF RATE BILL STILL IN DOUBT

Three Amendments are Giving Trouble and Arguments Have not Yet Been Reached on Several More

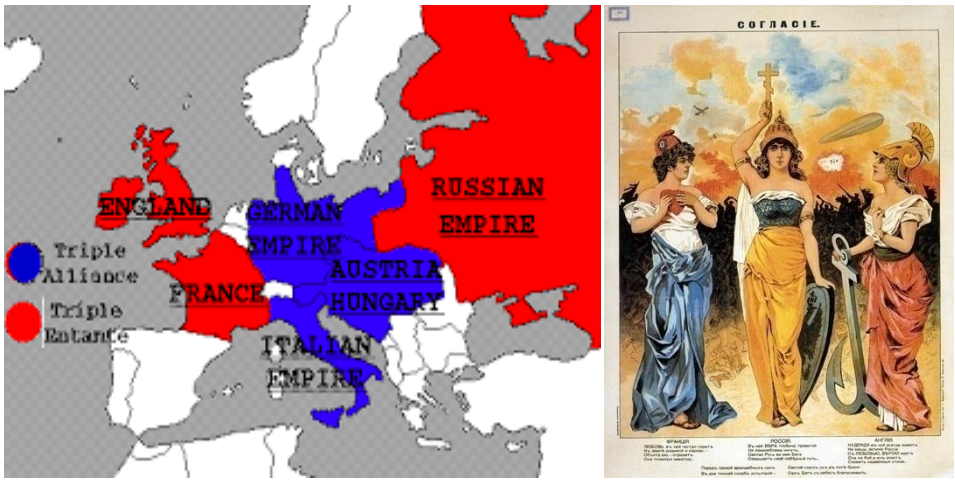
Washington, June 20.—From present indications the conferees on the railroad rate bill will not reach an agreement until some time next week, which in all probability will be the last week of the session. The purpose of withholding their report, it is said, is to avoid a repetition of the long de-

Smaller newspapers later picked up the "6,000,000" claim too.*

MAY 31, 1906
REDS NEARLY ASSASSINATE KING & QUEEN CONSORT OF SPAIN ON THEIR WEDDING DAY

The wedding day of the popular King Alphonso XIII of Spain and Queen Consort Victoria Eugenia (granddaughter of England's Queen Victoria) is marred by yet another Red assassination plot. Mateu Morral Roca's bomb is concealed in a bouquet of flowers, which he launches at the Royal couple from a nearby balcony. The deadly flower-bomb misses its mark, but several bystanders are killed.

The New World Order's murderous war against Spain, and all of western civilization, continues.



The King & Queen-to-Be were almost killed, in church, on their wedding day, by yet another crazed Anarchist dupe of the New World Order.

1907
TRIPLE ENTENTE BRINGS EUROPE CLOSER TO WAR!

The Triple Entente (from French entente, "agreement") is a military alliance between the UK, France, and Russia, concluded after the signing of the British-Russian Entente in 1907. Of course, Rothschild Britain is not allying with Russia out of any friendship. The Globalist goal is to draw Russia into fighting Germany & Austria-Hungary from the east. After Russia, Germany, and Austria-Hungary exhaust themselves, all three former allies can then be subverted from within by Communists and/or liberals, controlled by the Globalists.

The Triple Entente is the counterweight to the 1882 Triple Alliance (or Central Powers) of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy. Rothschild & Warburg agents are also at work within The Triple Alliance. Italy later switches sides and is replaced by the Ottoman Empire (Russia's nemesis). The two alliances have been cleverly set up as mechanisms for the purpose of triggering the coming world war to rearrange Europe, and the world. One little incident in the Balkan region of southern Austria-Hungary is all that it will take to ignite the two alliance powder kegs, and drag the powers of Europe (and America) into a massive war.

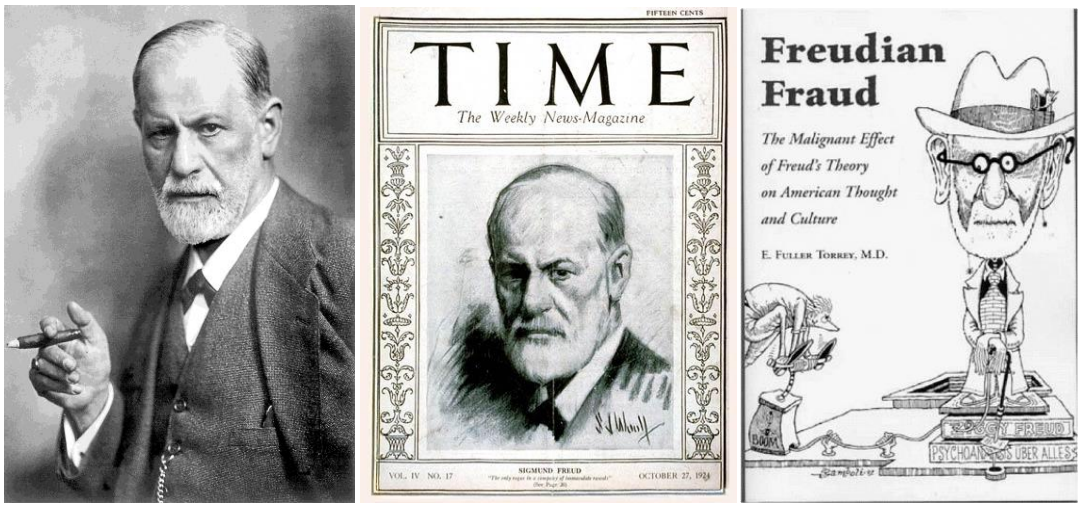
The New World Order and its agents will skillfully manipulate the patriotic passion of the various nations so as to bring about a disaster that will benefit Zionism, Communism, and Globalism.

Germany & Austria-Hungary boxed-in by The Triple Entente. The 3 ladies in the Russian propaganda poster represent France, Russia and Britain.

1907-1909
TR SHOWS OFF THE 'GREAT WHITE FLEET'

The Great White Fleet was the popular nickname for the U.S. Navy battle fleet that TR ordered to sail around the world from December 1907 to February 1909. TR's ostentatious and unnecessary "big stick" intimidation consists of 16 battleships divided into two squadrons, along with various escorts. The vulgar display of military power marks the completion of America's Rooseveltian transition from a peaceful republic to a violent global bully that is prepared to intervene around the world.

"USA! USA! USA!"....The jingoistic and militaristic ugliness that is modern "American exceptionalism" originated with the mad Globalist TR.



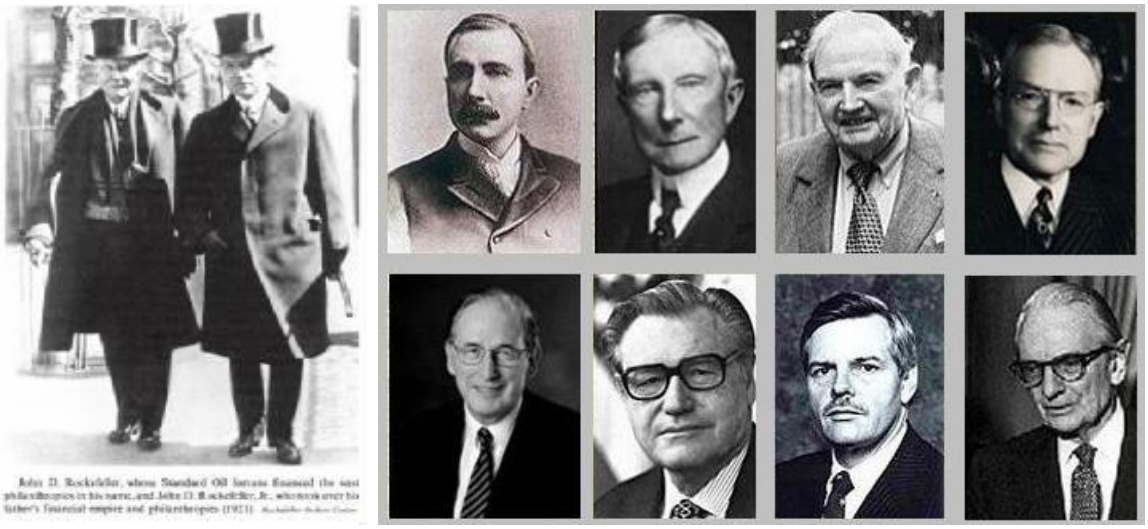
EARLY 1900's
SIGMUND FREUD SEXUALIZES PSYCHOLOGY

Jewish psychologist Sigmund Freud is a press-hyped charlatan whose "insights" will play a major role in breaking down and obliterating the sexual mores needed to stabilize a family-based society – a critical objective that The New World Order has always promoted.

Freud is a neurotic himself who projects his own weird obsessions onto his patients and into his writings. He smokes 20 cigars a day, and does not quit even when he is diagnosed with cancer of the jaw. (22) Freud will be operated upon many times before the disease finally kills him.

Freud's "Seduction Theory" claims that many mental disorders are due to repressed, or even imagined memories of seeing or hearing adults engaging in various forms of sexual activity. Schizophrenia, he argued, was caused by unresolved feelings of homosexuality.

Everything with Freud is about penis envy, sexual desire for one's mother, and the alleged evils of "repression" (sexual self-control). His imagination is his only check in reality. In short, Freud's destructive message to the West is that "repressed sexuality" is the root of insanity. Indulge. Indulge. Indulge. That's bad for society – but good for those who wish to destroy it.



Hyped by the Globalist press, Freud's sex-obsessed fraud has done great damage to European and American thought and culture.

EARLY 1900's
THE RISE OF THE HOUSE OF ROCKEFELLER

In the early 1900's, wealthy non-Jewish, "Anglo" elites (JP Morgan, Rockefeller, etc.) have formed alliances with Jewish Dynasties such as the Rothschild, Warburg, and Schiff Families. Drunk on their power and wealth, these families believe it is their birthright to control humanity under their New World Order.

The most prominent of the U.S. Globalists is John D Rockefeller Sr., who founded Standard Oil in 1870. Rockefeller's fortune, adjusted for inflation, makes him the richest American in history (net worth of 700 billion in 2013 dollars!) His son, John Jr. inherits the Rockefeller Empire and expands it into banking. He will raise 5 sons who take the family's crime operation into the 21st century.

'Puttin' on the Ritz.'John D. and his son, John Jr. Their offspring would influence world affairs for the next 100 years.

OCTOBER, 1907
WALL STEET BANKERS ENGINEER THE PANIC 1907

The New York bankers have artificially inflated the stock market with easy loans. When lending is then tightened, the bubble pops. Stocks crash nearly 50% and bank runs follow. The New York Times and the Wall Street bankers use the Panic of 1907 to make a case for establishing a European-style Central Bank (as Karl Marx envisioned).

A few years later, Senator Robert Owen (OK) accuses the Bankers,

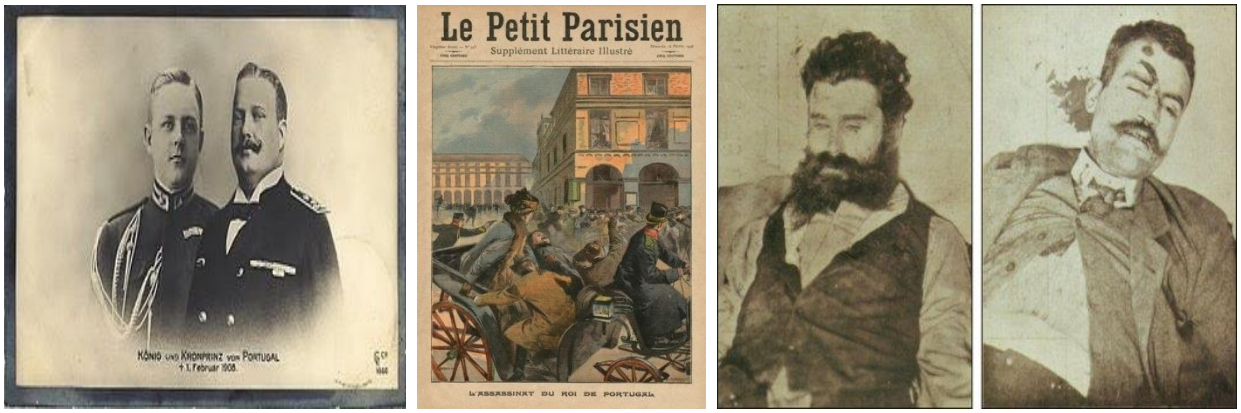
"The Panic was brought about by a deliberate conspiracy for the enrichment of those who engineered it." (23)

JP Morgan, John D Rockefeller, Jacob Schiff, and Paul Warburg, all declare that the lesson of the Great Panic is that the U.S. needs a Central Bank. In fact, nine months before the crisis, Schiff warned, in a speech to the Chamber of Commerce:

"unless we have a central bank with control of credit resources, this country is going to undergo the most severe and far reaching money panic in its history." (24)

How "prophetic" indeed!

Rothschild-connected Jacob Schiff and friends engineered the bank runs of 1907 in order to set the stage for the re-establishment of the Central Bank that Andrew Jackson had killed 70 years earlier. Senator Owen (right) figured this out.



FEBRUARY 1908
RADICALS ASSASSINATE BOTH THE KING AND CROWN PRINCE OF PORTUGAL

The Royal bloodbath in Europe continues as assassins murder King Carlos of Portugal along with his son and heir to the throne, Prince Luis Filipe. The assassins, Alfredo Costa and Manuel Buiça, are linked to the secret Carbonari Society. They had also wanted to murder the Queen. Their hope was to provoke a revolution.

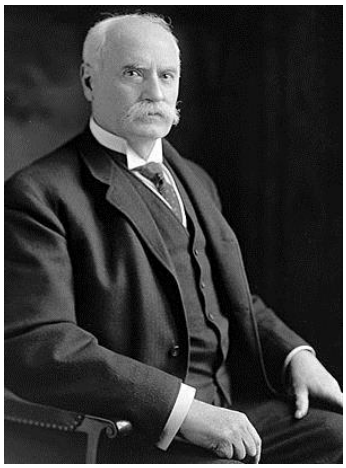
Similar to the case with Abe Lincoln's murder, the assassins are executed on the spot before they can talk, suggesting that the conspiracy may have included elements within the government. Although panic ensues, a revolution does not materialize. Prince Manuel (younger son of the King) succeeds his father.

The heads of Europe are revolted, partly due to King Carlos's popularity, and also the brutal manner in which the assassination was planned and orchestrated.



Father and son, killed by radicals; both of whom were immediately killed.

1908
TR APPOINTS WALL STREET FRONT MAN TO MONOPOLIZE AMERICA'S CURRENCY & CREDIT

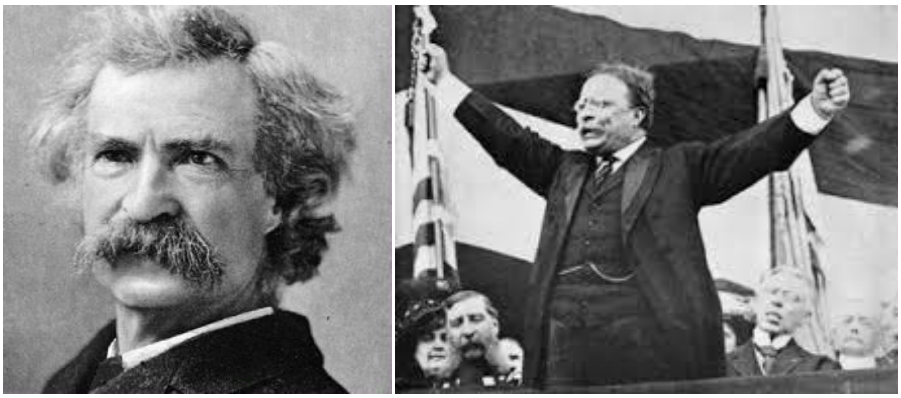
One year after the seemingly engineered Panic of 1907, TR and Congress establish the "National Monetary Commission" to study the crash and make suggestions. In stark contradiction of Roosevelt's careful crafted image as "the scourge of the Wall Street Robber Barons"; Senator Nelson Aldrich, the son-in-law of John D. Rockefeller, is named as Chairman. The NMC later suggests the establishment of a privately owned Central Bank for America - which will eventually come into being in 1913 as "The Federal Reserve".

The on-again and off-again harm that the Fed has caused to America ever since is beyond the scope of this work and too far removed from the direct subject matter. The essential takeaway point here is that TR's well-publicized battles against the New York "Robber Barons" are a publicity sham. Indeed, TR's NMC, assembled during TR's final months in office, aims to hand over the whole damn money supply to the Rockefellers ,Warburgs, Schiffs, Morgans and Rothschilds!

1- The Yellow Press myth of TR as the slayer of the giant "capitalists" is as phony as the "cowboy" and "war hero" legends. It was Wall Street fat cats who were behind TR all along. TR's National Monetary Commission began the process of handing over the money supply to the Global Banking Mafia.

2- Nelson Aldrich, an in-law and trusted agent of the Rockefellers 3- Papa Rockefeller and son John D. Jr. strolling in their top hats.

1905-1908
MARK TWAIN NAILS TR TO THE LITERARY CROSS



One thing that great writers all have in common is the uncanny ability to read human nature and to see through the facades of our behavior. The legendary Mark Twain had TR all figured out. His brutal and illuminating words, accumulated over a period of 6 years, speak for themselves.

"He is magnificent when his ears are pricked up and his tail is in the air, and he attacks a lightning express, only to be lost in the dust the express creates. (25)

Mr. Roosevelt is the Tom Sawyer of the political world of the twentieth century; always showing off; always hunting for a chance to show off; in his frenzied imagination the Great Republic is a vast Barnum circus with him for a clown and the whole world for audience; he would go to Halifax for half a chance to show off and he would go to hell for a whole one. (26)

We are insane, each in our own way, and with insanity goes irresponsibility. Theodore the man is sane; in fairness we ought to keep in mind that Theodore, as statesman and politician, is insane and irresponsible. (27)

Our people have adored this showy charlatan as perhaps no impostor of his brood has been adored since the Golden Calf, so it is to be expected that the Nation will want him back again after he is done hunting other wild animals heroically in Africa, with the safeguard and advertising equipment of a park of artillery and a brass band. (28)

Great writers instinctively sense the flaws and facades of the human character. That is why Mark Twain despised the show-off "circus clown" Roosevelt.

1908
ROTHSCHILD'S 'YOUNG TURKS' REVOLUTION WEAKENS THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE

The Young Turks, (like Young England years earlier) are a group of Globalist backed "progressives" who work to undermine the Sultan of the Ottoman Empire and bring about "democracy". In 1908, the Young Turks, supported by elements within the military, stage an uprising against the Sultan. Because the Young Turks have penetrated the army, the Sultan is forced to submit to concessions which weaken his power.

The "Committee of Union and Progress"(CUP), emerges from its previous conspiratorial darkness and becomes a powerful force in Turkish parliamentary politics. As is the case in Europe, Jewish reformers play a leading role in the Young Turks/CUP (Carasso, Bey, Russo, Jabotinsky etc.)

This latest "chess move" advances Globo-Zionist plans. The Sultan had strongly opposed the establishment of a Jewish state in Ottoman Palestine. Now, with so many prominent Jewish Young Turks on the rise, the Zionists have some friendly partners in Turkey to work with.

1- Jewish 'Turk' Carasso worked for Rothschild.

2- Young Turk leader Mustafa Kemal Atatürk preaches Globalism:
" Mankind is a single body and each nation is a part of that body."

1909
RETIRED PRESIDENT TR GOES ON A SAFARI RAMPAGE

After 7 years in office, TR decides to not seek re-election. He entrusts his 'Progressive' agenda to his friend, William Howard Taft. Ever-hungry for the limelight, the fake tough-guy with the childhood inferiority complex goes on an African safari and again proves his manhood by killing every majestic creature that he can point a rifle at. The numbers of animals that TR and his group, including his son, kill for "science" is staggering.

More than 1000 large animals, including 512 big game animals and six rare White Rhinos, are gunned down in TR's great expedition. (29) Tons of salted animals and their skins are shipped to Washington's Smithsonian Museum, which has to pass some off to other museums. When criticized for the shocking number of animals so senselessly slaughtered, Roosevelt, in typical narcissist fashion, replies: "I can be condemned only if the existence of the National Museum, the American Museum of Natural History and all similar zoological institutions are to be condemned". (30)

Although the safari was ostensibly conducted in the name of science, it was really a self-aggrandizing political and social event as it was a hunting excursion. In 1910, TR, as expected, publishes a book about his great adventure, African Game Trails. Theodore Roosevelt is truly a sick man.

After a 10 year run of killing U.S. sailors and Philippine natives, ex-President Roosevelt took to killing elephants, rhinos, giraffes and lions as a hobby.

"He is hunting wild animals heroically in Africa, with the safeguard and advertising equipment of a park of artillery and a brass band."

- Mark Twain (31)

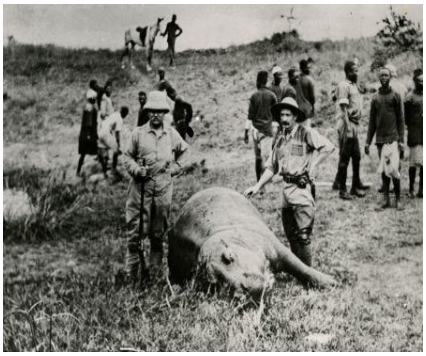
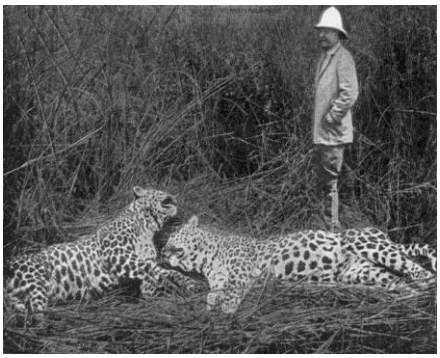
Edward Gibbon's description of the shocking excesses of the megalomaniac and degenerate Roman Emperor Commodus (depicted by Joachim Phoenix in the 2000 movie 'Gladiator'), is very similar to TR's well-publicized safari slaughter:





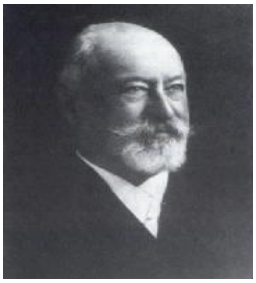
From the Wikipedia entry on Commodus:

"Commodus was also known for fighting exotic animals in the arena, often to the horror of the Roman people. According to Gibbon, Commodus once killed 100 lions in a single day. Later, he decapitated a running ostrich with a specially designed dart and afterwards carried the bleeding head of the dead bird and his sword over to the section where the Senators sat and gesticulated as though they were next. Dio notes that the targeted senators actually found this more ridiculous than frightening, and chewed on laurel leaves to conceal their laughter. On another occasion, Commodus killed three elephants on the floor of the arena by himself. Finally, Commodus killed a giraffe, which was considered to be a strange and helpless beast." (32)

Commodus also had an inferiority complex for he could never measure up to his learned philosopher-king father, Marcus Aurelius. Likewise, the Columbia Law School dropout TR knows that he can never measure up to American Presidents of the past.

More proud photos from the great American Emperor-Gladiator:

Hippo – Cheetahs – Antelope



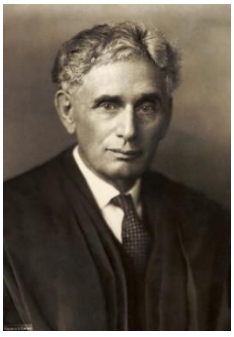
Giraffe – Zebra – Decapitated Bull Elephant "Trophy"

1900-1920
NEW AMERICAN ZIONIST KINGPINS EMERGE

The Rothschild orbit includes other Zionist bankers who emerge as giants in their own right. These "American" moguls will dominate the coming 8-year Presidency of their pathetic puppet, Woody Wilson.

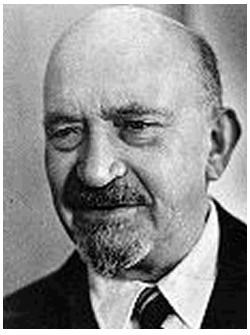
- JACOB SCHIFF: The Schiff Family shared a home with the Rothschilds in the 1700's. Schiff helped Japan defeat Russia in 1905. He will also help to found / fund the comig NAACP and the ADL.
- BERNARD BARUCH: Baruch first introduced Woodrow Wilson to the wealthy Jewish community of New York City. According to one account, "Baruch led Wilson as one would a poodle on a string". (33) During World War I, Baruch will head up Wilson's War Industries Board, making him the most powerful figure in U.S. industry.

- THE WARBURG BROTHERS: German banker Paul Warburg will soon become the "Father of the U.S. Federal Reserve" – a private banking and stock manipulation syndicate which collects interest for the privilege of printing the nation's currency. His son James will set up the United World Federalists in 1947 to openly promote world government. (34) His brother, Max is a very powerful banker in Germany, and his other brother, Felix, a 'philanthropist', uses his fortune to promote Globo-Zionist causes.



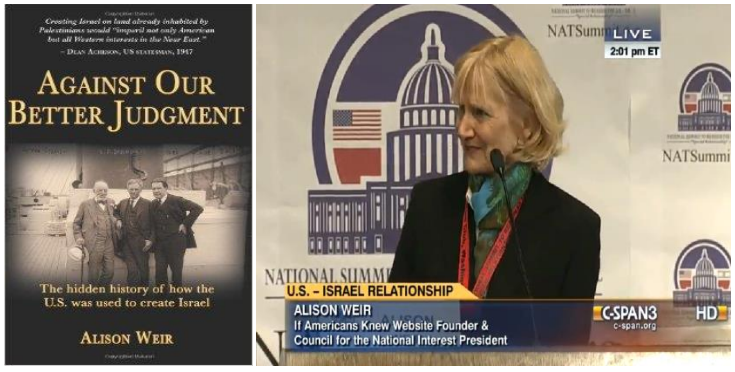
Jacob Schiff

Paul Warburg



Felix Warburg

Bernard Baruch



Other Zionist power players of that era

Louis Brandeis

Samuel Untermyer

Chaim Weizmann

Rabbi Wise

"Against Our Better Judgment" by journalist and historian Alison Weir reveals how early Zionists manipulated Wilson, and others.

FEBRUARY, 1909
WEALTHY GLOBO-ZIONISTS ESTABLISH THE N.A.A.C.P. IN ORDER TO CONTROL BLACK AMERICANS

The NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) is the most well-known Black American organization. What is not widely known is that its founders are all Jewish! (35) Early Jewish founders include Julius Rosenwald, Lillian Wald, Rabbi Emil Hirsch, and Rabbi Steven Wise. A black Communist named W.E. Dubois is cleverly put up as the NAACP's front man.

In 1914, Jewish Professor Joel Spingarn becomes Chairman and recruits for its board Jewish leaders such as Jacob Billikopf, Rabbi Stephen Wise, and the all mighty Jacob Schiff. Zionist money has long controlled this "civil rights" group.

By design, the Zionist run NAACP draws blacks away from the positive influence of the Black-American conservative Booker T. Washington., a popular Black leader who believes in America's founding principles and seeks to build bridges between whites and blacks.

The liberal Democrat NAACP represents the opposite of what the Republican Booker T. stands for. The NAACP is a Globalist Marxist tool that serves to divide and incite Americans while herding black voters (who they do not care about!) into the left-wing political camp. As a result, even today, 90-95% of black voters blindly vote for Democrat Party candidates.

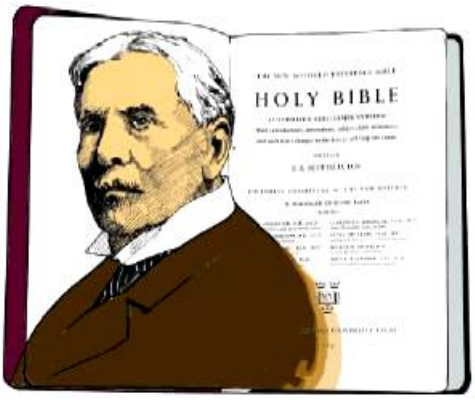
Conspirators such as the "Red Rabbi" Stephen Wise created and controlled the NAACP for their war against Whites. Communist WE Dubois (center)) was the front-man used to neutralize the influence of Booker T Washington.

1909
NATHAN ROTHSCHILD IS DESCRIBED AS THE MOST POWERFUL MAN IN BRITAIN

After amassing huge fortunes during the 19th century, the name Rothschild is now synonymous with power and wealth. The family is known for its art collecting and palaces. By the end of the 19th century, the Rothschild Family owns about 40 palaces, of a scale and luxury unparalleled even by the Royal families..The soon-to-be British Prime Minister Lloyd George states, in 1909, that Lord Nathan Rothschild *(son of Lionel) "is the most powerful man in Britain". (36)

The French and Austrian branches of the Rothschild syndicate also hold similar power (though to a lesser degree) over those nations. Their agents also influence American and German politics and finance. Together with other Jewish banking dynasties (Schiff, Warburg, Baruch, Lazard et al) and also Anglo-American allies and agents (Rockefeller, JP Morgan et al.) the Globo-Zionist House of Rothschild is the beating heart of the self-perpetuating New World Order crime syndicate that carries on to this day.

'Lord' Nathan Rothschild (left) - the son of Lionel (center) became the new patriarch of 'The Family'. His great great grandson Nathan is a rising superstar of International Finance today



1909
THE SCOFIELD BIBLE TURNS CHRISTIANS INTO ZIONISTS!

Cyrus Scofield is a small time politician and career criminal. In 1873, he is forced to resign his position as a District Attorney because of crooked financial transactions which include accepting bribes, stealing political contributions, and securing bank notes by forging signatures. He serves jail time for forgery charges.

A heavy drinker, Scofield later abandons his wife and two daughters. His wife finally divorces the drunken crook in 1883.As so many con-men do, Scofield then claims to have "found Jesus". He is ordained as a Minister and then claims to have a Doctor of Divinity degree, but this degree is never verified.

After several mysterious trips to Europe and New York; Scofield publishes the notated reference Bible that bears his name. The added side notes in Scofield's Bible inject a very weird "End Times" prophecy into Christianity. Because of Scofield's altered Bible, many Christians today believe that Jesus will return to save his followers from the "end times" (The Rapture), only after Israel is established, and that "God will bless those who bless Israel."

This biblical alteration, at the hands of a known criminal, marks the beginning of a powerful force in American politics known as "Christian Zionism." Many millions of "Evangelical" Christians have been mentally infected with Scofield's poison. Christian Zionists are even more fanatical in their support of Israel than the Jewish Zionists are. The Scofield Bible is very good for Zionism! The question is; who did the con-man Scofield meet with while in New York and Europe?

Con Man Scofield warped Christianity to serve his paymasters. Christian-Zionist pastors like John Hagee will later wield influence on Israel's behalf.

1909
THE 'MELTING POT' OPENS ON BROADWAY! WARM & FUZZY GLOBALIST PROPAGANDA CONTAINS A 'POISON PILL'

Jewish Globalist writer Israel Zangwill coins the demeaning term "Melting Pot" to describe an America in which all races and cultures are blended into a new people. When 'The Melting Pot' opens on Broadway, it is critically acclaimed (hyped) by the Zionist Press, and publicly praised by Teddy Roosevelt. (37)

Like all Globalist schemes, this concept sounds like a noble ideal, but, in reality, the "multi-cultural" dissolution of the European people (Whites) is a critical long range goal of the "anti-racist" Globalist & Zionist elite - who keep their bloodlines intact as they seek to dominate a de-Europeanized, non-White new world.

The long-term vision of Israel Zangwill and his type is to 'melt' (and even kill) Whites out of existence.

1910-1912
MONEY KINGS OF NEW YORK USE TR TO RUN A 3RD PARTY CAMPAIGN TO REMOVE TAFT

To thwart the Republican Taft's re-election bid, TR, with backing from some big Wall Street financiers, quits the GOP and runs again for President as a 3rd party candidate (Progressive / Bull Moose Party). Many years later, a well-connected businessman named Benjamin Freedman tells the real story of how the historic election plot of 1912 originated in his father's home.

From a Freedman speech given in 1974:

Benjamin Freedman's speeches and writings reveal the "inside story" of that period in history

"Jacob Schiff came back to New York - he was at that time head of The American Jewish Committee, - and in my father's home - I was a young man then- in the presence of many prominent men , names that are familiar to many people that are here. That is a fact. Now, what happened?

They ganged up in New York, to get rid of Taft. I was a protégé of Mr. Bernard Baruch - a name that I think you are all familiar with. His father was a doctor, Dr. Simon Baruch, who had brought me into the world, and Bernard Baruch was a visitor at our home all the time. He courted my sister; one of my sisters. So the stage was set to get rid of the Republican Party and the Republican President and put in their own party and their own President. But it was very difficult, because, after the Cleveland Depression -President Cleveland was a Democrat- we had the worst depression ever seen anywhere. And that swept the Republican Party into power, because they advocated protective tariffs to protect the working man against the cheap labor of Europe and to protect the infant industries of the United States against foreign competition.

Mr. Schiff came back to New York and the stage was set. And I, as a young man, got into the act. What I am telling you now, I saw with my own eyes, heard with my own ears, but I make it brief. The stage was set: "How can we get rid of the Republican Party; how can we get rid of Taft" - and Mr. Baruch was picked out as the leg man. He was a smart man!

They set up the National Democratic Headquarters at 200 Fifth Avenue, which was the site of the old Fifth Avenue Hotel, now an office building, and Mr. Henry Morgenthau, Sr., the old man, the father of the one you all know, was made chairman of the Finance Committee. I was made his confidential assistant in liaison with the Treasurer, who was Mr. Rollo Wells of St. Louis, - the Andrew Mellon of his time. And I was right in the middle! I saw everything that went on, because I handled all the books that had the cash contributions in them. Mr. Jacob Schiff and the Jews put up the money to launch this Party and they looked around for a man to put up as President. To make a long story short, they got Woodrow Wilson, a rascal who wasn't worth the powder to blow him to hell!

They got Woodrow Wilson, the man who had more ego than any man I have ever read about, they got him to head the Democratic Party. And they got into difficulties, because the Democrats only got the Electoral votes in the South; where the people in agriculture wanted cheap goods from Europe. But the North wanted the Republicans. They found out they could not elect a President in the United States. So, I handled the money; I was the leg man, the errand boy.

They trotted Theodore Roosevelt out of the political "moth-balls". They told him, "You are the indispensable man. You are the only man who can save the United States." And with his ego they formed the "Bull Moose Party" and Mr. Jacob Schiff and the Jews throughout the world - they got plenty of money from England - they formed the Bull Moose Party. And in that way they split the Republican vote between Roosevelt and Taft, and Mr. Wilson walked in with a minority of the popular vote - the lowest man -and I knew the inside of his private life, which I don't want to go into here-. But never was a lower rascal in the White House, and I've known plenty of them since that time! (38)

1- Seated behind TR is New York financier and Rothschild agent, Jacob Schiff (gray beard) - America's richest and most well-connected Money King at the time.

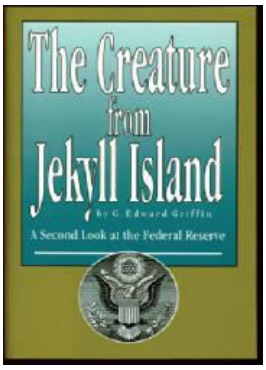
2- Financier Bernard Baruch set up TR's 'Bull Moose' scam.

3- The famous photo of TR riding a Bull Moose has since been confirmed as a doctored-up FAKE. (39)

NOVEMBER, 1910
SECRET MEETING ON JEKYLL ISLAND PLOTS THE CREATION OF A NEW U.S. CENTRAL BANK

The same forces that deliberately created the Panic of 1907, and the Monetary Commission of 1908, continue to advance their plot to impose a "solution" to the very crises that they engineered. Senator Nelson Aldrich (maternal grandfather of Nelson & David Rockefeller) invites top bankers to attend a secret conference at the Jekyll Island hunting club in Georgia. Meeting under the ruse of a duck-shooting excursion, the conspirators plot to recreate a privately owned Central Bank for America.

The "duck hunt" on Jekyll Island includes Senator Aldrich, Henry P. Davison (the front man for financier J.P. Morgan), National City Bank President Frank A. Vanderlip, and the "Father of the Fed", the recent German Jewish immigrant and Rothschild agent, Paul Warburg. From the start, the group proceeds covertly. They avoid the use of last names as they meet quietly at Aldrich's private railway car in New Jersey.



Details of the secret Jekyll Island meeting will not emerge until years later. It is later openly acknowledged that the Warburg-Rothschild Central Bank, (which will be established in 1913 as the Federal Reserve System), was conceived at the Jekyll Island meeting.

Writing in his autobiography 25 years later, Jekyll Attendee Frank Vanderlip reveals:

"There was an occasion, near the close of 1910, when I was as secretive—indeed, as furtive—as any conspirator. ..I do not feel it is any exaggeration to speak of our secret expedition to Jekyll Island as the occasion of the actual conception of what eventually became the Federal Reserve System. We were told to leave our last names behind us. We were told further that we should avoid dining together on the night of our departure. We were instructed to come one at a time and as unobtrusively as possible to the railroad terminal on the New Jersey littoral of the Hudson where Senator Aldrich's private car would be in readiness attached to the rear-end of a train to the south.

Once aboard the private car we began to observe the taboo that had been fixed on last names. We addressed one another as Ben, Paul, Nelson and Abe. Davison and

I adopted even deeper disguises abandoning our first names. On the theory that we were always right, he became Wilbur and I became Orville after those two aviation pioneers the Wright brothers. The servants and train crew may have known the identities of one or two of us, but they did not know all and it was the names of all printed together that would've made our mysterious journey significant in Washington, in Wall Street, even in London. Discovery we knew simply must not happen." (40)

1- 'The "Creature from Jekyll Island": by Edward Griffin is a must read!

2- FLASH FORWARD 100 YEARS*…The 'Banksters'* OPENLY celebrate the 100th anniversary of the conspiratorial meeting at Jekyll Island. Zionist Fed Chairman Ben Bernanke and Zionist ex-Chairman Alan Greenspan are both in attendance at the conference entitled "A Return to Jekyll Island: The Origins, History, and Future of the Federal Reserve" - held exactly 100 years after the original 1910 meeting, and in the exact same building! Ben Bernanke (l) / Alan Greenspan (r)

1911 – 1920

1910-1912
TR VICIOUSLY TURNS ON PRESIDENT TAFT

TR had groomed Taft to be his "progressive" successor. But he is disappointed when Taft turns out to be his own man on issues such as tariffs and "trust busting". Ironically, Taft actually breaks up more monopolistic trusts than Roosevelt ever did -- a fact which should have made him beloved by the "progressives". But Taft ran afoul of TR when he tried to break up J.P. Morgan's U.S. Steel, which happened to be a trust that TR supported. Roosevelt accuses Taft of not knowing a "good" trust from a "bad" one. Once again, the exaggerated myth of TR being the arch-enemy of the Rockefeller-Morgan crowd reveals itself as public propaganda.

Taft had also angered Jacob Schiff by refusing to apply economic sanctions to Czarist Russia. With the Rothschild-Schiff gang behind him Roosevelt turns against his old friend and viciously criticizes his successor. Taft is hurt and stunned by TR's venom, but he remains firm in his Constitutionalism. Taft hits back at the Progressives, stating, "They (Progressives) are seeking to pull down the temple of freedom and representative government." (1)

Due to TR's petty vindictiveness, the ideological differences undermine the friendship and personally hurt Taft to his core. The friendship between the two men is destroyed when TR launches continuous insults at the honorable Taft and then, at the urging of Baruch, Schiff and company, runs for President as third party spoiler.

Never before, and never since, has an ex-President so publicly interfered and undermined the Presidency of his successor. The Taft-Roosevelt split is the beginning of a deep divide in the Republican Party that still exists (though Constitutionalist Republicans are very few now.)

Taft was a good man and a good President. The cartoons above mock the hypocrisy of TR's "good trust / bad trust" comment; and his attacks on Taft.

1912
A STAGED ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT ON TR RUINS TAFT'S CHANCES

In the fall of 1912, Taft still has a chance to win reelection; but that chance is about to disappear. Just 3 weeks before the election, an "October Surprise" comes in the form of an "assassination attempt" against TR.

On October 14, 1912, just moments before he is set to deliver a typically Rooseveltian 50-page speech, TR, we are told, is shot with a Colt .38 by an Anarchist fanatic named John Flammang Schrank. The bullet is first said to be a "flesh wound" that "lodged in his chest". Afterwards, the story changes to that of a bullet "safely lodged" against TR's rib, after having been slowed down by both his steel eyeglass case and the thick speech he was carrying in his jacket.

As far as bullet sizes go, the .38 caliber (a measure of diameter) is one of the larger size bullets. But "Superman" TR felt no pain?

TR takes a clean handkerchief to cover the "wound" as he heads for the stage, where one of his bodyguards is attempting to explain what has just happened to the audience. Someone in the crowd shouts out: "Fake! Fake!" (2)

True to his self-promoting form, TR the drama queen wastes no time in proclaiming to the crowd:

"Friends, I shall ask you to be as quiet as possible. I don't know whether you fully understand that I have just been shot." (3)

The horrified audience in the Milwaukee Auditorium gasps as the theatrical TR unbuttons his vest to reveal his bloodstained shirt. Then comes the proud boast: "It takes more than that to kill a bull moose." (4)

Now the crowd is really buzzing as the legend of TR reaches new heights of super-humanism. The babbler continues before launching into yet another 90-minute speech about nothing:

"But fortunately I had my manuscript, so you see I was going to make a long speech, and there is a bullet - there is where the bullet went through - and it probably saved me from it going into my heart. The bullet is in me now, so that I cannot make a very long speech, but I will try my best." (5)

Right on cue, Schrank claimed that the spirit of President McKinley had told him to avenge his murder by killing TR. In an open letter to the American people, Schrank writes:

"To the people of the United States: In a dream I saw President McKinley sit up in his coffin pointing at a man in a monk's attire in whom I recognized Theodore Roosevelt. The dead president said—'This is my murderer'—avenge my death." (6)

There were indeed some Taft supporters who believed that the murder of McKinley in 1901, also carried out by a deranged "Red", was part of a plot to install TR as President. This event makes Taft supporters look bad. Schrank's "dream", coupled with TR's whining about the "vicious attacks" against him, damages the Taft campaign while creating sympathy for the "wounded" and "tough" TR.

The very strange event is directly responsible for drawing many votes away from Taft. A reasonable person has to wonder if the assassination stunt and the McKinley murder were both staged by the same invisible hand that has guided fanatical 'Red' assassins since the days of the French Revolution; and has also guided the rocket-like career of TR all along.

Should the disbelieving reader be inclined to dismiss the staged shooting scenario as an irresponsible "conspiracy theory", your suspicious author here invites you to jam a .38 thick screwdriver through your chest and to your rib. Then, attempt to speak loudly for a full 90 minutes. Go ahead. Try it; and do let us all know how you make out.

TR will not win the election, but he will, with the help of this oh-so-convenient "October Surprise", and exactly as Schiff & Baruch had intended all along, steal enough votes to propel fellow "progressive" Woodrow Wilson into the Presidency with just 41% of the vote. Schrank is committed to a mental hospital for the remaining years of his life. The alleged bullet in TR is "never removed". That figures!

HE ATLANTA CONSTITUTIO

WOULD-BE ASSASSIN SHOOTS COL. ROOSEVELT
BUT LATTER DISREGARDS BULLET IN HIS BREAST AND DELIVERS SPEECH TO MILWAUKEE CROWD

FLESH WOUND, SAY DOCTORS

Bullet Somewhere in Roosevelt's Chest Wall.

MAN IS CAPTURED AND ANGRY CROWD WANTED TO LYNCH

HATRED OF THIRD TERM APPARENTLY MOVED MAN TO ATTEMPT TO MURDER

1- After the "shooting", the sympathetic press hyped the "wounded" TR's "heroic" speech.

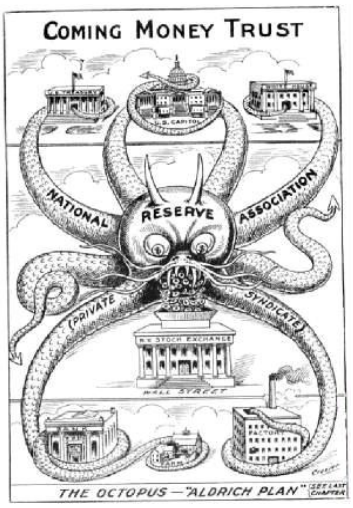
2- The would-be "assassin" Schrank and the police officers share a good laugh. What's the joke, gentlemen?

SEPTEMBER, 1911
REDS ASSASSINATE THE PRIME MINISTER OF RUSSIA

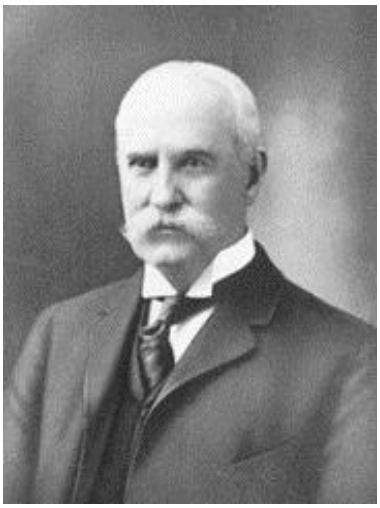
More bloodshed in Europe! The Russian Prime Minister Pyotr Stolypin is a dedicated reformer who wants to improve the quality of life for Russia's peasants. Stolyypin is a hard-liner when it comes to dealing with violent Red revolutionaries. But he also understands that a thriving and growing middle class is the real key to depriving the Reds from gaining support among the poor and uneducated.

While attending a performance at the Kiev Opera House, the popular Prime Minister is shot at close range by a Jewish double agent named Dmitri Bogrov (born Mordekhai Gershovich). Bogrov is a member of the Ohkrana, a Russian police force that has been infiltrated by Red spies. The murder of Russia's Prime Minister is carried out in front of the Czar and his two eldest daughters.

Prime Minister Stolypin (left) – killed at the Opera by another Red.



1912
THE 'ALDRICH PLAN' FOR A CENTRAL BANK IS QUICKLY KILLED IN THE U.S. CONGRESS



Senator Nelson Aldrich introduces his bill to establish a Central Bank (The Aldrich Plan). The scheme (hatched at Jekyll Island) is transparent, and Aldrich's name is too closely linked to the Money Masters of New York. Congressman Charles A Lindbergh Sr. (father of the famous aviator) declares:

"The Aldrich Plan is the Wall Street Plan. It means another panic, if necessary, to intimidate the people. Aldrich, paid by the government to represent the people, proposes a plan for the trusts instead." (7)

Opposition to Aldrich's scheme is so strong, that the bill to create a Central Bank is never even brought to the floor for a vote.

1- Charles Lindbergh Sr. and Jr. 2- 1912 anti-Bank cartoon

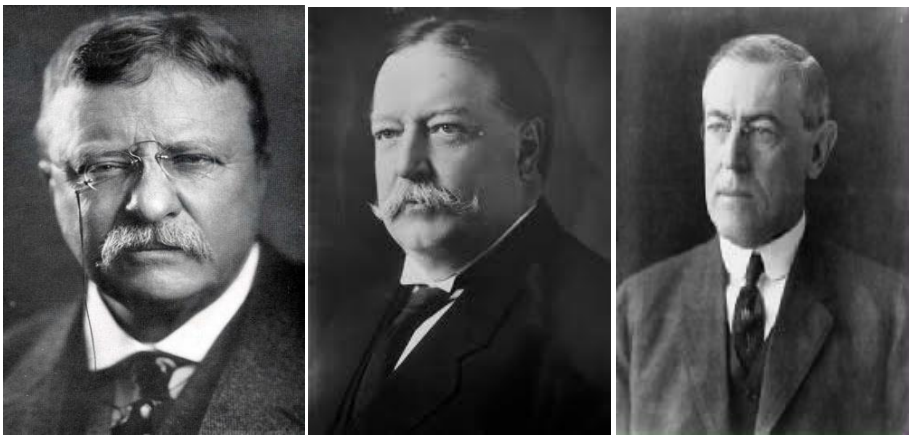
3- A known Wall Street stooge; Senator Aldrich's name was too toxic.



NOVEMBER, 1912
NEW WORLD ORDER GANG RE-CAPTURES THE U.S. PRESIDENCY WITH THE ELECTION OF WOODROW WILSON

Understanding that popular U.S. President William Howard Taft would never involve America in Rothschild' schemes; the Globalists had recruited Woodrow Wilson, a Princeton professor who had been rocketed to Governor of New Jersey, then to Democrat nominee for President.

To steal Republican votes from Taft, ex-President Roosevelt runs as the Progressive Party candidate (aka Bull-Moose). The divide & conquer trick works. Due to TR's meddling; Wilson wins with just 41% of the vote.

After decades of strategic political preparation, the New World Order now has 7 major goals its wants to achieve in the coming decade, and the right puppet in the White House to do it:

1. Establish a Central Bank in the U.S.
2. Impose an Income Tax on America so that State debt to the Central Bank can be collateralized with human labor
3. Trigger the long planned Triple Entente-Triple Alliance war to reshape Europe
4. Entangle the U.S. in the coming war and World Organization
5. Finish off Russia and convert the Eurasian giant into a Red tyranny
6. Establish a World Political Body under the pretext of "world peace"
7. Carry out Herzl's plan to steal Palestine from the Turks and Arabs.

TR's interference undermined Taft (center) and enabled Puppet Wilson (right) to become President and make a HUGE mess of the world.

NOVEMBER, 1912
REDS MURDER ANOTHER PRIME MINISTER OF SPAIN

The liberal reformer Jose Canalejas became Prime Minister in 1910. While in office, he works to turn Spain into a more democratic state. But that's not good enough for the Reds. On November 12, 1912, while shopping in a Madrid bookstore, Canalejas is fatally shot by anarchist Manuel Pardiñas.

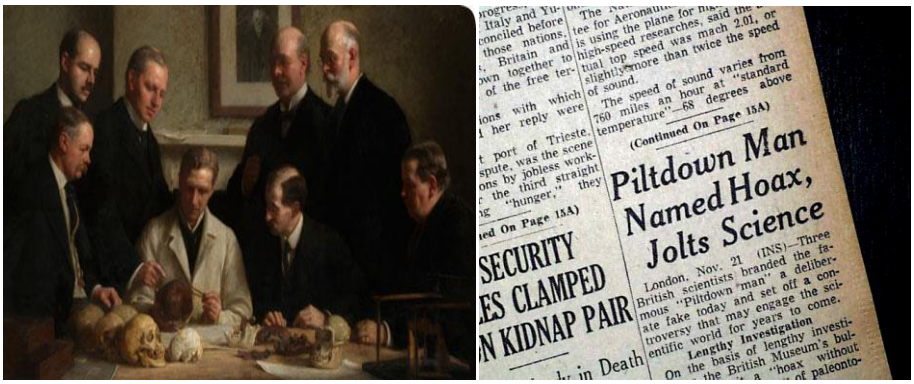
Even liberals like Canalejas (left) aren't safe from the never-ending Anarchist bloodbath. Pardinas on right.

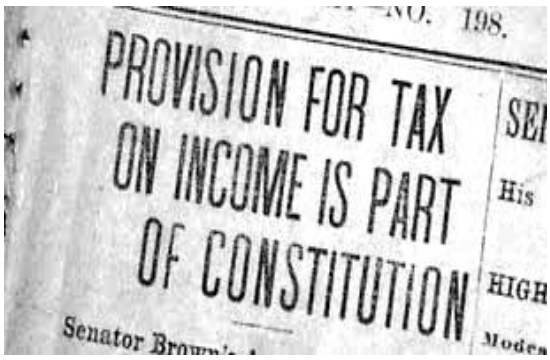


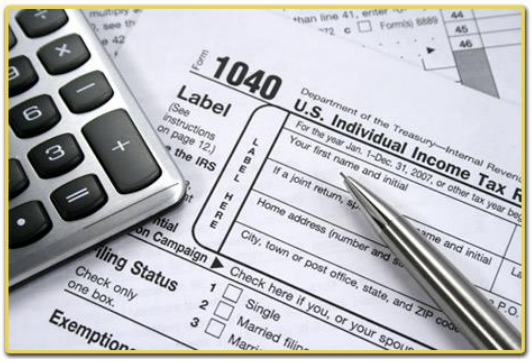
DECEMBER, 1912
WORLD PRESS HYPES THE 'PILTDOWN MAN' HOAX

Much of the world press excitedly hypes the discovery of the fossilized remains of an "apelike human ancestor". The skull and jawbone of this "missing link" are found at a gravel pit in Piltdown, England. It will be another 40 years before "Piltdown Man" is exposed as a hoax, a combination of an orangutan jawbone and a human skull.

Up until the Global Warming Hoax of the present day, Piltdown Man is the most famous scientific hoax ever. During its 40 year run, the Piltdown Hoax will do much to undermine public faith in God - an important goal for the Globalists who always work to break down the civilizing and stabilizing influences of religion and morality.

'Reconstruction' of the Piltdown skull by J.H. McGregor (1914)





Respected scientists fell hook, line and sinker for the 40-year hyped hoax!

OCTOBER, 1913
WOODROW WILSON SIGNS THE INCOME TAX AMENDMENT INTO LAW

A new bill for establishing a new Central Bank for the United States is already pending. If the government is to now borrow counterfeited money from a privately owned Central Bank, (by selling Bonds to the Bank) the Central Bankers must have assurance that the Government can pay them back, plus interest.

A Marxist style 'Progressive Income Tax" will now turn American workers into human collateral for the Zionist bankers. The Revenue Act of 1913 adjusts American tariffs, and it also institutes an Income Tax of 1-7%, but only for the wealthiest Americans. Naturally, empty promises are made that the initial rates, as well as the income ranges subject to tax, will not be changed.

It's hard to believe, but about 100 years ago, self-reliant Americans paid ZERO income tax – and still had roads, courts, schools, police, & military!

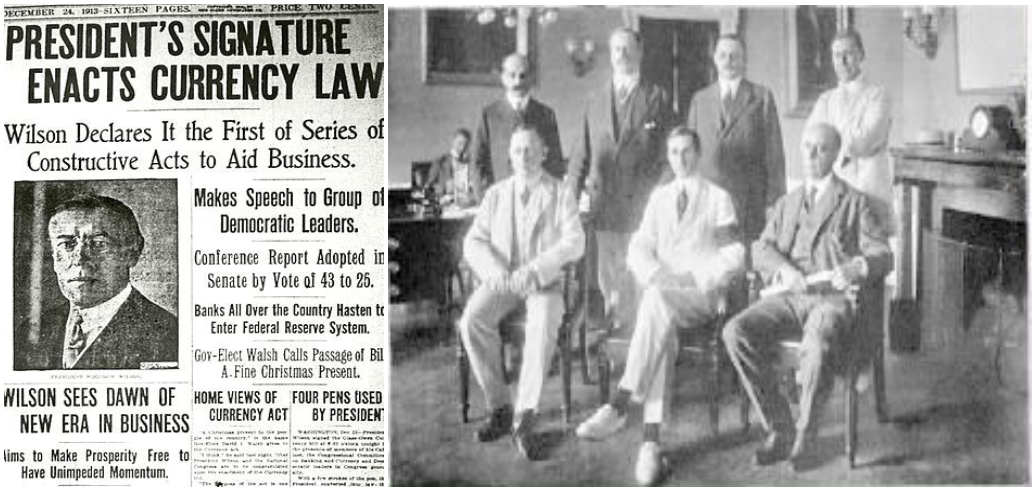
OCTOBER 1913
ZIONIST CROOKS ESTABLISH THE A.D.L. (ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE)

The ADL (Anti-Defamation League) is founded by Sigmund Livingston in response to the 1913 trial of Leo Frank. Frank is a Jewish factory manager in Georgia who raped and murdered a young employee named Mary Phagan, and then tried to frame a black man for the crime. After oddly being spared the death penalty, angry Georgians would later storm the prison and hang Frank themselves.

The charter of the ADL states:

"The immediate object of the League is to stop, by appeals to reason and conscience and, if necessary, by appeals to law, the defamation of the Jewish people. Its ultimate purpose is to secure justice and fair treatment to all citizens alike and to put an end forever to unjust and unfair discrimination against and ridicule of any sect or body of citizens." (8)

The ADL's true purpose is to protect Rothschild's Mafia from exposure. Anyone who dares to call attention to the workings of the New World Order or the Federal Reserve will be denounced by the ADL as "anti-Semitic." The ADL continues, to this day, to destroy political and journalistic careers.



Rapist killer Leo Frank is lynched. The ADL still claims he was innocent!

DECEMBER 23, 1913
WOODROW WILSON SIGNS THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANK INTO LAW

A few cosmetic changes are made to the old Aldrich Bill and the bill is then renamed 'The Federal Reserve Act'. Minnesota Congressman Lindbergh Sr. is not fooled:

"This is the Aldrich Bill in disguise ...This Act establishes the most gigantic trust on earth. When the President signs this bill, the invisible government by the Monetary Power will be legalized. The people may not know it immediately, but the day of reckoning is only a few years removed. The worst legislative crime of the ages is perpetrated by this banking bill." (9)

The bill passes anyway, on December 23, after many Senators and Congressmen had left town for Christmas! Puppet President Wilson quickly signs the bill creating the privately owned Federal Reserve System. Weeks earlier, Wilson had already enacted the nation's first Income Tax (needed to pay interest to the bankers after they set up their Central Bank!)

DECEMBER 24, 1913—SIXTEEN PAGES. PRICE TWO CENTS

PRESIDENT'S SIGNATURE ENACTS CURRENCY LAW

Wilson Declares It the First of Series of Constructive Acts to Aid Business.

Makes Speech to Group of Democratic Leaders.

Conference Report Adopted in Senate by Vote of 43 to 25.

Banks All Over the Country Hasten to Enter Federal Reserve System.

Gov-Elect Walsh Calls Passage of Bill A Fine Christmas Present.

WILSON SEES DAWN OF NEW ERA IN BUSINESS

Aims to Make Prosperity Free to Have Unimpeded Momentum.

HOME VIEWS OF CURRENCY ACT

FOUR PENS USED BY PRESIDENT

The Fed Board: Warburg (standing-left) Frederic Delano, uncle of FDR (seated-right)

After the Fed is up and running, Lindbergh adds:

"The financial system has been turned over to the Federal Reserve Board....The system is private, conducted for the sole purpose of obtaining the greatest possible profits from the use of other people's money." (10)

The "Federal Reserve System" is neither "Federal", nor does it contain "reserves", and nor is it part of a decentralized "system" The new Central Bank now has the power to create money out of thin air, and then lend it to the nation's banks and U.S. Treasury at interest. To this day, the 'Fed plagues America with constant inflation, housing & stock bubbles, artificial booms, recessions, and depressions. Its money-creating tricks enable Big Government to borrow endlessly from the Fed. Behind its academic façade, the Fed is just a counterfeiting, loan sharking, and insider trading operation all in one.

The member banks which own the Fed are controlled by the Rothschild-Warburg-Schiff Axis. To conceal the Jewish influence, Paul Warburg, (the Fed's true founder) is not named Chairman. Instead, he is appointed Chairman of the New York Branch of the Fed (the most important seat). Today however, there is no need to conceal the Fed's Zionist face. Every Fed Chairman since 1970 (with exception of William Miller's 1 year term in 1978-79) has been Jewish.

(Burns, Volcker, Greenspan, Bernanke, Yellen).*

 Volcker is Jewish by lineage, not by practice.* (11)

Left to Right: Yellen, Volcker, Greenspan, Bernanke. Why can't non-Jews serve as Fed Chairmen anymore?

JUNE 28, 1914
A DOUBLE MURDER LIGHTS THE BALKAN FUSE

To kick off their long-awaited, pre-planned World War, the New World Order uses "Serbian Nationalists." A secret society known as Young Bosnia, possibly working with The Young Turks, plots the murder of an Austrian Royal.

Serbia is an Orthodox Christian nation under the protection of Russia. Due to Disraeli's past schemes, many Serbs also live under Austro-Hungarian rule (in Bosnia) instead of under Serbian sovereignty. This situation has always caused friction, both within Austria-Hungary, and also between Russia and Austria-Hungary.

Archduke Franz Ferdinand is heir to the Habsburg Family throne of Austria-Hungary. While traveling through the Bosnian city of Sarajevo with his wife, Sophie, a bomb is thrown at the Archduke's open car. He deflects the bomb with his arm and it explodes behind him. The royal couple insists on seeing all those injured at the hospital. After traveling there, they decide to go to the palace, but their driver takes a wrong turn onto a side street, where another assassin named Gavrilo Princip spots them. He shoots Sophie in the stomach and Franz in the neck. Franz is still alive when witnesses arrive to give aid. His dying words to Sophie are, "Don't die darling. Live for our children." (12)

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

The New York Times.

THE WEATHER

NEW YORK, MONDAY, JUNE 29, 1914.—EIGHTEEN PAGES.

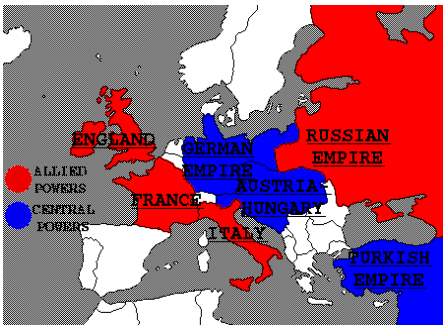
CALIFORNIA GOES ON ROCKS IN FOG

FEDERALS DESERT AGUASCALIENTES

OUR GUNS FIRE ON SANTO DOMINGO

HEIR TO AUSTRIA'S THRONE IS SLAIN WITH HIS WIFE BY A BOSNIAN YOUTH TO AVENGE SEIZURE OF HIS COUNTRY

Francis Ferdinand Shot During State Visit to Sarajevo.



TWO ATTACKS IN A DAY

Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his Consort, the Duchess of Hohenberg

Slain by Assassin's Bullets.

The world is shocked. The fateful prophecies of Tolstoy and Bismarck are about to come to pass.

SUMMER 1914	POST ASSASSINATION CHAIN-REACTION SETS EUROPE ON FIRE
JUNE 29	Anti-Serbian riots erupt in the Austro-Hungarian city of Sarajevo.
JULY 7	Austria-Hungary convenes a Council of Ministers to discuss the situation.
JULY	The Zionist Austro-Hungarian press of Vienna fans the flames of anti-Serbian sentiment. False reports of a Serbian conspiracy are circulated.
JULY	Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany, at the request of Russian Tsar Nicholas (his cousin), attempts to restrain his Austro-Hungarian ally by encouraging Austria-Hungary to talk with Serbia. (13)
JULY 28	Austria-Hungary gives in to war hysteria and declares war on Serbia.
JULY 29	To defend its Serbian ally, Russia mobilizes it armies against its former 'Three Emperors League' ally Austria-Hungary.
AUGUST 1	Beyond both the Tsar and the Kaiser's control, the Triple Alliance / Triple Entente time bomb is triggered. Germany declares war on Russia for its mobilization against its ally Austria-Hungary.
AUGUST 1	Ignoring German pleas to not enter the conflict, France begins advancing towards Austria-Hungary in support of its Entente ally, Russia.
AUGUST 3	Facing the dangerous 2-front war that France & England had engineered, (and that Bismarck had feared) Germany quickly advances towards France, through Belgium, while at the same time confronting Russia in the east.
AUGUST 4	Great Britain enters the war on the side of France & Russia.
SEPTEMBER 5	London Agreement: Triple Entente allies France, Russia, & UK agree that no member shall make separate peace with Germany or Austria-Hungary.
OCTOBER 28	Russia's southern rival, the Ottoman Turkish Empire, enters the war on the side of Austria-Hungary and Germany.
In just a few weeks' time, Europe is now aflame in war as the Globalist-Zionist press in France, England, Austria, and Germany whip up a mutually destructive nationalist fervor among the European nations.

1 & 2: Surrounded by the Great Powers of the Triple Entente, peaceful Germany was forced to quickly advance in two directions.

3: The 'Willy-Nicky" cables clearly reveal how the Russian and German Emperors both tried to avoid war, (14) but were powerless to stop the dark forces controlling events.

1914-18
EARLY GERMAN VICTORIES / FOLLOWED BY STALEMATE

After Germany's westward march towards Paris stalls, the Western Front bogs down into a bloody stalemate with trench lines that change little until 1918. In the East, the Russian army successfully fights against the Austro-Hungarian forces but is then forced back by the German army. Additional fronts open after the Ottoman Empire (Turkey) joins the war (on Germany's side) in 1914. Italy switches sides and joins the Entente powers in 1915.

At sea, the British Navy blockades Germany. German U-boats will counter the blockade, and sink many British merchant ships carrying arms and supplies.

Not one inch of German territory was ever lost during the Great War.

1914
THE MANIFESTO OF THE 93 / GERMANY'S LEADING INTELLECTUALS AND ARTISTS CONDEMN THE WEST'S ANTI-GERMAN PROPAGANDA

To counter the lies of the Allied propagandists, 93 of Germany's leading scientists, scholars and artists sign their name to "The Manifesto of the 93". The document denounces the lies aimed at Germany, and declares unequivocal support of German military actions. Perhaps the most notable of the accomplished signatories is Wilhelm Roentgen, the Nobel Prize winning physicist who discovered "X-rays".

The Manifesto reads:

"As representatives of German Science and Art, we hereby protest to the civilized world against the lies and calumnies with which our enemies are endeavoring to stain the honor of Germany in her hard struggle for existence—in a struggle that has been forced on her.

The iron mouth of events has proved the untruth of the fictitious German defeats; consequently misrepresentation and calumny are all the more eagerly at work. As heralds of truth we raise our voices against these.

It is not true that Germany is guilty of having caused this war. Neither the people, nor the Government, nor the Kaiser wanted war.

It is not true that we trespassed in neutral Belgium. It has been proven that France and England had resolved on such a trespass, and it has likewise been proved that Belgium had agreed to their doing so. It would have been suicide on our part not to have preempted this.

It is not true that the life and property of even a single Belgian citizen was injured by our soldiers without the bitterest defense having made it necessary.

It is not true that our troops treated Louvain brutally. Furious inhabitants having treacherously fallen upon them in their quarters, our troops with aching hearts were obliged to fire a part of the town, as punishment. The greatest part of Louvain has been preserved..

It is not true that our warfare pays no respects to international laws. It knows no undisciplined cruelty. But in the east, the earth is saturated with the blood of women and children unmercifully butchered by the wild Russian troops, and in the west, dumdum bullets mutilate the breasts of our soldiers.

It is not true that the combat against our so-called militarism is not a combat against our civilization, as our enemies hypocritically pretend it is. Were it not for German militarism, German civilization would long since have been extirpated..

We cannot wrest the poisonous weapon—the lie—out of the hands of our enemies. All we can do is to proclaim to the entire world, that our enemies are giving false witness against us.

Have faith in us! Believe that we shall carry on this war to the end as a civilized nation, to whom the legacy of a Goethe, a Beethoven, and a Kant, is just as sacred as its own hearths and homes." (15)

As the discoverer of 'X-rays', Wilhelm Roentgen was able to 'see through' the Allies' anti-German atrocity propaganda.

DECEMBER 2, 1914
JEWISH-OWNED NEW YORK TIMES REPORTS ON THE PLIGHT OF 6 MILLION JEWS

Again with the 6 million???

APPEAL FOR AID FOR JEWS
New York Times; Dec 2, 1914

APPEAL FOR AID FOR JEWS.

American Committee Tells of Suffering Due to the War.

The American Jewish Relief Committee, called into being at a conference of more than 100 national Jewish organizations which was held at Temple Emanu-El on Oct. 25 to consider the plight of more than 6,000,000 Jews who live within the war zone, has elected Louis Marshall Chairman, Cyrus L. Sulzberger Secretary, and Felix M. Warburg Treasurer, and has issued the following appeal:

MAY 7, 1915
UK LORD OF THE ADMIRALTY WINSTON CHURCHILL SETS UP THE LUSITANIA TO BE SUNK / 1200 CIVILAINS KILLED

The UK wants to draw America into the war. Lord of the Admiralty Winston Churchill and Wilson's Marxist advisor, Edward Mandell House, believe that if Germany can be baited into sinking a British ship with Americans on board, the U.S. will be forced into the war. (16) Unbeknownst to its passengers, the luxury liner Lusitania is carrying arms and explosives destined for Britain. (17)

Sailing from New York, Lusitania is loaded with 600 tons of explosives, 6 million rounds of ammunition, 1200 cases of shrapnel shells, and some American passengers. The German embassy in Washington is aware of this and tries to warn American travelers by placing ads in U.S. newspapers, which are refused in most cases. (18)

As Lusitania approaches the Irish coast, it is ordered to reduce speed, and its military escort ship, Juno, is withdrawn. (19) Churchill knows that German

U-Boats are in the area. He purposely slows down the Lusitania and calls off Juno, leaving the Lusitania as a sitting duck. A German torpedo hit ignites the munitions, causing a secondary explosion which sinks the massive liner in just 18 minutes! Nearly 1200 of its 1959 passengers are killed, including128 Americans. The American press vilifies Germany, but makes no mention of the smuggled munitions (or perhaps a pre-planted bomb?) which really sank the Lusitania.

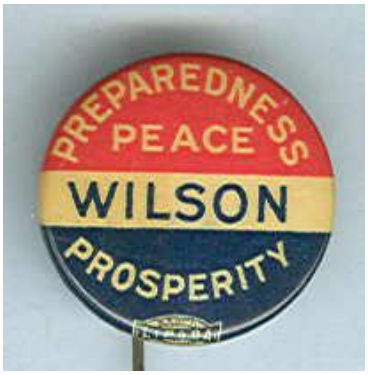
During the 1950's, the British Navy attempts to destroy the historical evidence of the Lusitania explosion by dropping depth charges onto the sunken liner.

The New York Times. EXTRA 6:30 A.M.

LUSITANIA SUNK BY A SUBMARINE, PROBABLY 1,260 DEAD; TWICE TORPEDOED OFF IRISH COAST; SINKS IN 15 MINUTES; CAPT. TURNER SAVED, FROHMAN AND VANDERBILT MISSING; WASHINGTON BELIEVES THAT A GRAVE CRISIS IS AT HAND

1- Mad Dog Churchill

2 & 3 - Globalist NY Times, claimed TWO torpedoes hit.



1915-16
IN SPITE OF THE LUSITANIA SINKING, WILSON DELAYS U.S ENTRY INTO THE WAR

The Lusitania incident plays a role in turning American sentiment against Germany, but it is not yet time for America to make its entry. The Zionists are waiting to achieve maximum leverage before ordering Wilson to finally pull the trigger. For the time being, Wilson will just verbally condemn the Lusitania attack, while keeping America out of the war and cruising towards re-election in November, 1916.

The British are disappointed. UK politicians, journalists, and the certifiably insane Teddy Roosevelt all mock Wilson as being timid. In an effort to keep America inflamed, the British fabricate a story about German school children being given a holiday to celebrate the sinking of the Lusitania. Other false tales tell of German soldiers nailing babies to church doors in Belgium!

The British know that they will eventually need American help if they are to gain the advantage over The Triple Alliance / Central Powers. The Zionists know this too, but they are biding their time, setting up the UK and the US for the right moment, and the right deal.

Wilson intends to drag America into the war, but his 1916 re-election campaign promises say otherwise.

1915
ROTHSCHILD'S 'YOUNG TURKS' COMMIT GENOCIDE OF 1.5 MILLION ORTHODOX CHRISTIAN ARMENIANS

During and after the Great War, Jewish-led, "Young Turks" take advantage of the fact that both Christian Russia and the Ottoman Sultan are now unable to protect the Christian minorities of the Ottoman Empire.

A policy of mass killings, burnings, and deadly forced marches kills off most of the Armenian population of Turkey. Orthodox Assyrians and Greeks are also murdered by the Young Turks.

To this day, the systematic genocide of 1915-16 is ignored or denied by the current government of Turkey.

Rothschild's 'Young Turks" got away with genocide! To this day, Armenians still seek recognition of the event, but in vain.

DECEMBER, 1916
GERMAN KAISER TRIES TO STOP THE WAR

The Battle of Verdun rages for 10 months, resulting in 306,000 battlefield deaths (163,000 French and 143,000 German) and 500,000 wounded. That's an average of 30,000 deaths for each of the 10 months of the battle!

Taking place in north eastern France, Verdun is the longest and most devastating battle of The Great War. By the end of Verdun, the war has broken down into a stalemate, but Germany still holds an advantage. In December of 1916, Kaiser Wilhelm offers to negotiate peace with The Entente Powers. But Britain and France deliberately make impossible demands upon Germany as a condition for even negotiating.

In spite of Germany's sincere efforts to stop the madness, somebody wants this senseless bloodbath to continue. But who? ..... And why?

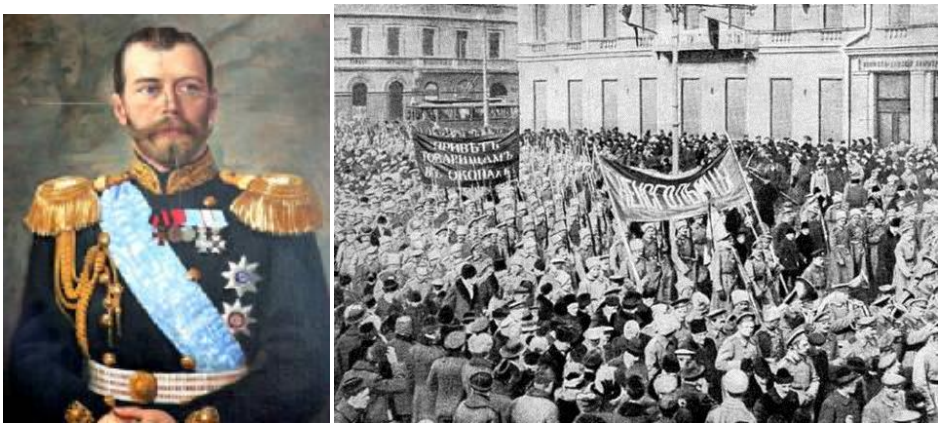
Battle of Verdun / Kaiser Wilhelm wanted peace all along.

DECEMBER, 1916
DIRTY BACK-ROOM DEAL KEEPS WAR GOING / ZIONISTS TO BRITAIN: "WE CAN BRING THE U.S. INTO THE WAR!"

By December 1916, the Central Powers have a clear advantage. France has suffered horrible losses. Russia is facing internal Red revolutionary chaos. Britain is under U-Boat blockade, and not one square inch of Germany has been occupied. Germany offers generous peace terms. Basically, Kaiser Wilhelm is willing to just call off the war and return to how things were.

That's when the Zionists make their move to fulfill Herzl's plan! Chaim Weizman and Nathan Sokolow approach the British with a dirty deal. The Zionists offer to use their international influence to bring the U.S. into the war on Britain's side, while undermining Germany from within. The price that Britain must pay for U.S. entry is to steal Palestine from Ottoman Turkey (Germany's ally) and allow the Jews to settle there. (20)

Though the official declaration of British support for a Jewish homeland is not to be made public until 1917 (Balfour Declaration), the agreement was, in fact, reached in December of 1916. Soon after that, Zionist agitated anti-German propaganda was unleashed in the U.S. while the Zionists and Marxists of Germany begin to undermine Germany's war effort from within.



Chaim Weizman made the British an offer they couldn't refuse. In return, the Zionists want to see the Turkish Empire busted up and Palestine given to the Jews.

FEBRUARY, 1917
THE 'FEBRUARY REVOLUTION' TOPPLES RUSSIA'S ROYAL ROMANOV FAMILY

As the Russian economy deteriorates and the war becomes unpopular, the 'February Revolution' begins. Communists, Progressive Socialists, and disaffected soldiers combine to destabilize the already weakened reign of Czar Nicholas. The Tsar is forced to abdicate his throne and put under house arrest pending exile. Jews worldwide celebrate the abdication of the Russian Czar.

A "center-left" coalition government consisting mainly of Socialists and Communists is established. A power struggle between the Democratic Socialists and the hard-core Communist (Soviet-Bolshevik) faction follows.

The Romanov Dynasty is over – conquered by The House of Rothschild.

APRIL, 1917
WILSON BREAKS HIS PROMISE AND BRINGS THE U.S. INTO THE WAR

During the weeks following the Zionist-UK dirty deal to steal Palestine, the Zionists deliver on their end of the bargain. An intense propaganda campaign is suddenly unleashed in America. The 1915 Lusitania incident is resurrected, along with hype over German U-boat warfare. A German contingency plan to ally with Mexico if the U.S. enters the war (Zimmerman Note) is falsely portrayed as a plot to attack America.

Citing various phony pretexts, on April 2nd, 1917, Wilson, who, according to Benjamin Freedman, was under blackmail over an affair he had when he was a Princeton professor, asks Congress for a Declaration of War. Congress complies. Regular forces of the small US military begin arriving in Europe, but it will be months before the full force of drafted men can be deployed.

The Chicago Daily Tribune FINAL EDITION

U. S. AT WAR: WILSON

"WE MUST FIGHT FOR JUSTICE AND RIGHTS"

BOTH HOUSES HASTEN WORK ON PROGRAM

Zionist Fred Rothman's iconic poster portrays Germans as monster "Huns"

APRIL, 1917
EXILED REDS BEGIN RETURNING TO RUSSIA

The terrorist Red leaders that Czar Nicholas had only exiled in 1905 now begin returning to Russia. Vladimir Lenin arrives from Switzerland, via Germany, with a stash of Zionist banker gold. Leon Trotsky arrives from New York with more money and a gang of Marxist-Jewish thugs. (21)

The Zionist-funded Communists immediately undermine the new provisional government. A violent coup is attempted in July, but the Bolshevik Reds are held back. Democratic Socialist Alexander Kerensky becomes Prime Minister as Bolshevik leaders go underground.

Back from Brooklyn, the killer Leon Trotsky (left) will join Lenin (center) in seeking to oust Kerensky (right)

APRIL, 1917
EDWARD BERNAYS FORMS PROPAGANDA COMMITTEE

Wilson establishes the Committee on Public Information (CPI) for the purpose of manipulating public opinion in support of the war. Edward Bernays, "the father of American propaganda" is a CPI member. A nephew of the psychoanalyst Sigmund Freud, Zionist Bernays boasts of his ability to control the public mind. He calls his scientific methods for controlling public opinion, "the engineering of consent." In his 1928 book, Propaganda, Bernays explains:

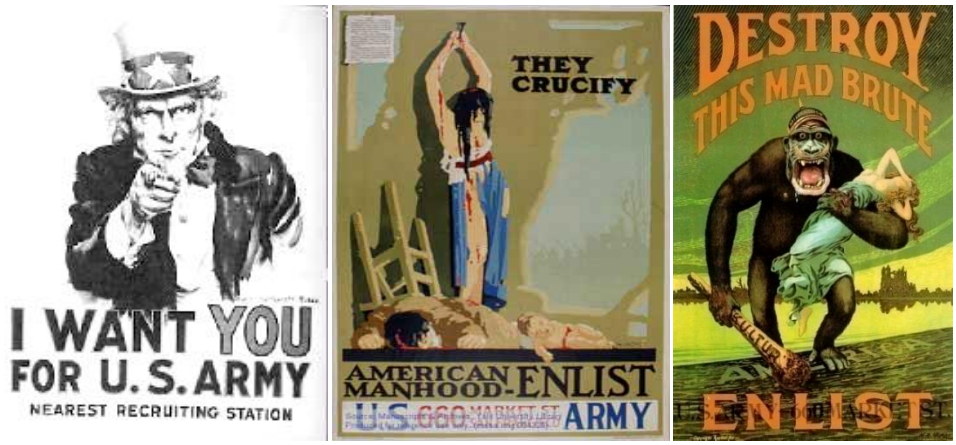
"The conscious and intelligent manipulation of the habits and opinions of the masses is an important element in democratic society. Those who manipulate this unseen mechanism of society constitute an invisible government which is the true ruling power of our country. - We are governed, our minds are molded, our tastes formed, our ideas suggested, largely by men we have never heard of. It is they who pull the wires that control the public mind." (22)

Bernays and his CPI co-conspirators portray the American war effort as a holy crusade "to make the world safe for democracy", while at the same time spreading hate-filled propaganda directed towards Germany and its Emperor, Wilhelm II.

"Babies & Bayonets."



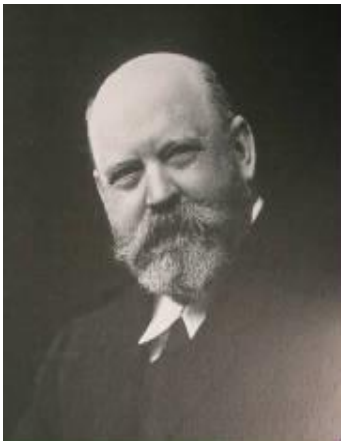
In Europe and America, Germany was now the target of hateful and ridiculous war propaganda.

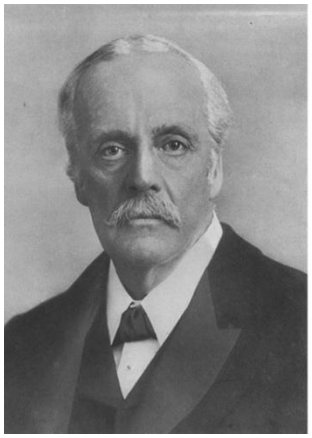
Bernays wrote the book on propaganda and manipulation; literally.

JUNE, 1917
WILSON SIGNS MILITARY DRAFT INTO LAW / VICIOUS HATE PROPAGANDA USED TO ATTRACT VOLUNTEERS

America's military is very small, but its capacity to field and equip an army is great. The unpopular draft is instituted in 1917. By the war's end, under the idiotic pretext of "making the world safe for democracy" (Bernays' slogan), more than 2 million unsuspecting American men will have been sent to fight for Globalism and Zionism.

U.S. propaganda posters encouraged men to enlist by accusing the German "mad brutes" of crucifying women and children.





NOVEMBER, 1917
BRITAIN ISSUES 'THE BALFOUR DECLARATION' TO BARON WALTER ROTHSCHILD

The Zionists have delivered on their end of the dirty deal made with the British in 1916. American entry into the war was delivered as promised. By formally, and publicly, issuing "The Balfour Declaration", Lord Balfour is assuring the Zionists that Britain will fulfill its end of the deal after the war– the theft of Palestine!

The Declaration is delivered to the 'Baron' Walter Rothschild. It reads, in part:

"His Majesty's government views with favor the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of this object." (23)

The extraction of this promise from the British is one of the main reasons why the senseless war was kept going, and why America was finally dragged in. In Israel today, Balfour Day (November 2nd) is widely celebrated. The Palestinian Arabs observe it as a day of mourning.

Foreign Office,
November 2nd, 1917.

Dear Lord Rothschild,

I have much pleasure in conveying to you, on behalf of His Majesty's Government, the following declaration of sympathy with Jewish Zionist aspirations which has been submitted to, and approved by, the Cabinet.

"His Majesty's Government view with favour the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and will use their best endeavours to facilitate the achievement of this object, it being clearly understood that nothing shall be done which may prejudice the civil and religious rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine, or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in any other country."

I should be grateful if you would bring this declaration to the knowledge of the Zionist Federation.

"Dear Lord Rothschild" - Baron Walter Rothschild (left) received the Balfour Declaration from Lord Balfour.

*OCTOBER 25, 1917
'RED OCTOBER' / COMMUNISTS SEIZE CONTROL OF ST. PETERSBURG! NEW STYLE GREGORIAN CALENDER: NOV 7, 1917

Socialist Prime Minister Kerensky struggles to keep a bad economy afloat, an unstable coalition government together, and a tired Russian nation in the war. The time is ripe for the Reds to stage another violent attempt at power. This time, Trotsky, Lenin and their evil gang will succeed. With backing from some Red troops - many of whom had been brainwashed in 1905 Japanese POW camps by communist reading materials paid for by Jacob Schiff (24) - the Capital City of Petrograd (St. Petersburg) is seized during the October Revolution, (aka "Red October").

Kerensky flees for his life and the new Soviet regime immediately moves to pull Russia out of the war (before Germany can beat them). Outside of Petrograd, the pre-dominantly Jewish Red government is not recognized as legitimate. A bloody civil war between the Jewish-led Reds and the Christian "Whites" is now in the making.

Red rabble-rouser Vladimir Lenin incites the hungry mobs.

FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER:

"The Bolshevik leaders here (Russia), most of whom are Jews and 90 percent of whom are returned exiles, care little for Russia or any other country but are internationalists and they are trying to start a world-wide social revolution." (25)

David R. Francis, U.S. Ambassador to Russia, January 1918

1918-1921
'REDS' vs 'WHITES' / CIVIL WAR IN RUSSIA

After the fall of St. Petersburg to the Reds, a counter-revolutionary civil war will tear Russia apart for three more years. The various opponents of the 'Reds' are collectively referred to as 'The Whites', led mainly by Admiral Kolchak.

When it becomes apparent that a Red revolutionary army composed solely of workers and some ex-Tsarist troops is far too small to put down the counter-Revolution, Trotsky institutes mandatory conscription of the peasantry into the Red Army. Opposition to Red Army conscription is overcome by terror tactics. Hostages and their families are tortured and killed when necessary to force compliance.

Admiral Kolchak's Whites vs Trotsky's Reds

JANUARY, 1918
WILSON LAYS OUT A 14 POINT PEACE PROGRAM / GERMANY AND AUSTRIA-HUNGARY RESPOND POSITIVELY

Had it not been for America's 1917 entry into the war, the stalemated parties would have ceased fighting on their own and millions of lives would have been saved. But it would not be until 1918 that sufficient numbers of trained American recruits would be ready to deploy in combat operations.

Before fresh new rivers of American blood would be shed (117,000 Americans would die of combat or disease-related causes between April and November of 1918), both Germany and Austria-Hungary again communicate their desire for a peaceful resolution; just as they had previously been proposing to make a mutually acceptable peace with Britain and France all along.

In an address before the U.S. Congress, the puppet warmonger Wilson is forced to admit that, in response to his recent "14 Points" Statement, Germany and Austria-Hungary have indeed expressed general agreement with Wilson's high-sounding proposals. (26) But in the very next breath, Wilson casually dismisses these promising peace overtures (referring to them as 'peace utterances') as unacceptable.

Wilson's New York handlers (Baruch, Schiff, Warburg, Morgenthau, Brandeis etc) want their long-awaited war for Globalism (the pre-planned 'League of Nations') and Zionism (the British theft of Palestine); and they certainly are not about to allow Germanic peace proposals to derail the NWO Express.

The most astonishing of Wilson's lies is his rosy description of what the eventual post-war peace is to be like. The fact that so many naive and war-weary Germans will later buy into Wilson's empty promises, will contribute to Germany's bizarre unconditional surrender and disarmament in November of that same year, 1918.

The New York Times.

PRESIDENT SPECIFIES TERMS AS BASIS FOR WORLD PEACE;
ASKS JUSTICE FOR ALSACE-LORRAINE, APPLAUDS RUSSIA, TELLS GERMANY SHE MAY BE AN EQUAL BUT NOT A MASTER

Text of President Wilson's Speech

1- Wilson "Tells Germany She May Be Equal"
2- Wilson's phony peace talk carried the poison pill of the Globalists' "League of Nations". (World Government)

1918
GLOBALIST BIO-WEAPON? / MYSTERIOUS 'SPANISH FLU' KILLS 50 – 60 MILLION PEOPLE WORLDWIDE

The 1918 Flu Pandemic (Spanish Flu) is an unusually severe influenza pandemic. The virus originates at a military base in Kansas. It spreads to Europe, then Asia and Africa. Victims suffer horribly. Within hours of feeling the first symptoms of fatigue, fever, and headache, they turn blue. Sometimes the blue color is so dark that it is difficult to determine a patient's original skin color! Victims cough with such force that they tear their abdominal muscles, as foamy blood exits from their mouths, noses, and ears.

The final death toll of the disaster is higher than that of the War! In India, 17,000,000. In the U.S. 600,000, UK: 250,000, France: 400,000, Japan: 390,000, Germany: 400,000.

Several oddities suggest that the epidemic may be a bioweapon, aimed at the Central Powers, which somehow backfired and infected everyone! Consider the following:

1. Place of its origin (a military base in Kansas)
2. Coincidental timing of the flu's beginning (same time that the full US force arrives in Europe)
3. Strange effects of the illness (blue skin / blood from nose & mouth)
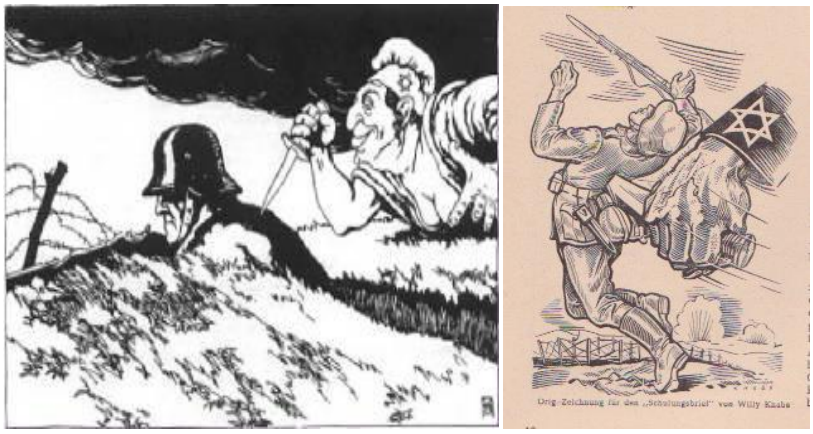
4.Odd way in which it targets 20-35 year olds (military age) instead of weak infants and elderly
5.The odd way in which it struck in 3 separate waves
6. German soldiers affected in greater numbers worse than Entente troops.
7. Inexplicable, coincidental manner in which epidemic abruptly ends as soon as the war ends

Scientists have never explained why the virus mutated into such a deadly form, why it suddenly stopped without a cure, why it targeted the young, and why it has never reappeared.

Globalist bio-weapon gone out-of-control?

SPRING, 1918
AFTER SUCCESFUL SPRING OFFENSIVE, GERMAN TROOPS 'STABBED IN THE BACK' BY HOMEFRONT JEWS



The Reds of Russia can't fight a civil war at home and an external war at the same time. Lenin and Trotsky have no choice but to take Russia out of the war. Before the American troops can be deployed in large numbers, Germany diverts its troops from the pacified eastern front and stages a major western offensive.

The operation begins in March with an attack on British forces in France. The Germans advance 40 miles and Paris is just 75 miles away! The Spring Offensive is so successful that Wilhelm declares March 24 a National Holiday.

At this exact critical point, Marxists & Zionists in Germany stab their countrymen in the back. Marxist Trade Union leaders order factory strikes which deprive German troops of critical supplies. (27) The Jewish owned press, which had fanned war passions in 1914, suddenly turns sour on the war and begins ripping on the German military. German morale begins to fall quickly, as does industrial output. Recent recruits arrive at the frontline with a defeatist attitude as anti-war protests and general discontent spread throughout Germany.

The Great Offensive comes to a halt just as the Americans begin to arrive. German Zionists are betraying Germany so that Palestine can be taken from Germany's Turkish ally and given to the Jews (Balfour Declaration). German Jewish Marxists and "Democratic Socialists" also see a German defeat as a means to destabilize the nation and stage a revolution.

After the war, the treasonous betrayal of 1918 becomes known as "The Stab-in-the-Back." Modern liberal "historians" dismiss this allegation as a "legend", but there is nothing mythical about it. On the brink of final victory, Germany was betrayed from within - plain & simple.

Post-war cartoons depict Zionist-Marxists stabbing German soldiers in the back.

SUMMER, 1918
'THE YANKS ARE COMING!

It had taken about a year for America to get its military drafted, trained, and deployed under American command. By summer of 1918, 10,000 fresh troops arrive daily at the front. About 120,000 of them will die in the Great War, 90,000 in combat, 30,000 from disease. In addition to the badly needed fresh blood, the French and British war machines are now being re-supplied by the industrial output of mighty America.

With the breakdown of the Spring Offensive, the tide turns against Germany and its allies. The Allied counter attack, (*100 Days Offensive) begins in August. At the Battle of Amiens, the Allies advance 7 miles into German-held territory in just 7 hours. Back in Germany, the Jewish Press ignores the devastating effects of the Jewish-led factory strikes and Jewish-inspired defeatism. Instead, the newspapers blame General Erich Ludendorff for the recent German setbacks!

Fresh American boys arrived to kill German boys as the Jewish press of Germany shamelessly shifted the blame onto General Ludendorff.

1- Come on man! Join me in dying for Wilson's lies!

2- Dead American trapped in barbed-wire. If his mother, father, wife, kids could have watched him die -what would they say to Professor Wilson?

JULY, 1918
TR'S SON IS KILLED IN EUROPE

Little did TR know that Wilson and the British had already been plotting to drag America into Europe's war. Wilson just needed to wait until after his 1916 reelection was secured. Among the young Americans to die is 20-year old Quentin Roosevelt, the youngest son of Theodore Roosevelt, who was killed in aerial combat over France in 1918. Roosevelt is said to have been deeply affected by his son's death. TR dies himself just 6 months later.

The wartime death of TR's youngest son finally gave TR a taste of the pain that his warmongering had dished out to so many others.

JULY 16, 1918
CZAR NICHOLAS AND HIS ENTIRE FAMILY ARE BRUTALLY MURDERED

Czar Nicholas II had hoped to be exiled to the UK while Kerensky was in power, but his British "ally" had refused to take him in. The Bolsheviks (Communists) now hold Nicholas, his wife Alexandra, his four daughters and young son under house arrest. Their Red captors force them to live on rations.

As a boy, Nicholas had witnessed the bombing murder of his grandfather, Alexander II, in 1881. Nicholas's tragic error was in failing to execute the Red scum, such as Lenin and Trotsky, after their failed 1905 revolution. Now, his misguided mercy returns to haunt him, and his family.

On the evening of July 16/17, 1918, the royal Romanov Family is awakened at 2AM, told to dress, and then herded into the cellar of the house in which they are being held. Moments later, Jewish Reds storm in and gun down the entire family, their doctor, and three servants in cold blood. Some of the Romanov daughters are stabbed and clubbed to death when initial gunfire fails to kill them. News of the brutal murder of the Romanovs will send shock waves throughout Russia, and all of Christian Europe.

A beautiful family - shot and stabbed to death like animals! As the shooting began, the Czar tried to shield his young son.

1918
BRITISH DIVERT MANPOWER SO AS TO FINISH OFF THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE AND STEAL PALESTINE

Britain's previous campaign against the Turks had ended in failure (Gallipoli). Now, with fresh and strong Americans arriving to fight the Germans in Western Europe, British troops are freed-up to concentrate on the Ottoman Empire. Britain covets the oil fields of the Middle East, but the UK also has a debt to repay to the Zionist bosses who dragged the U.S. into the war.

Assisting the Brits in the effort to steal Palestine are 10,000 American Jews who enlist to fight not alongside their fellow Americans in Europe, but with the British, who intend to seize their future home, Palestine. (28) See: The Jewish Legion

During this time, British airplanes drop leaflets over Germany. Printed in Yiddish, the Balfour leaflets seek to win Jewish support in Germany by promising the Jews a 'homeland' in Palestine after they have won the war. (29)

1- Vladimir Jabotinsky (left) led Jewish units in the fight against Turkey.
2- Leaving the Americans to do the heavy lifting against Germany, the British head south to dismantle the Ottoman Empire.

1918
LENIN & TROTSKY ESTABLISH THE 'COMMUNIST INTERNATIONAL' / VIOLENT RED PLAGUE GOES GLOBAL

"All Power to the Workers" really means all power to the New World Order!

With the Russian Civil War raging, the Communist International, known as "The Comintern", is established in Moscow, Russia. The Comintern states openly that its intention is to fight "by all available means, including armed force, for the overthrow of the international "bourgeoisie" (the entrepreneurial class) and for the creation of an international Soviet republic (world government)." (30)

From 1918-1922, Comintern-affiliated Parties form in France, Italy, China, Germany, Spain, Belgium, the U.S. and other nations. All Communists operate under the direction of the Soviets, who are themselves financed by the same international bankers that created the Federal Reserve and brought about the Great War.

SEPTEMBER, 1918
THE 'RED TERROR' IS ANNOUNCED IN RUSSIA

The Russian Communists plan to strategically use terror to intimidate their White adversaries into submission. On orders from Lenin and Trotsky, the "Red Terror" is announced by the Jewish Red Yakov Sverdlov. The Red Terror is marked by mass arrests in the middle of the night, executions, and hideously creative tactics of torture. As many as 100,000 Russians are murdered in the Red Terror, carried out by Jewish-run Cheka (secret police).

Among the atrocities committed, often in view of victim's family members, are:

- 40,000 White prisoners publicly hanged in the Ukraine
- Burning coals inserted into women's vaginas
- Crucifixions
- Rapes of women of all ages
- Victims submerged in boiling oil or tar
- Victims doused with petrol and burned alive
- Victims placed in coffins filled with hungry rats
- Victims soaked with water and turned into human ice-cubes in winter
- Priests, monks, and nuns have molten lead poured down their throats

(31)

The demoralizing terror takes a heavy psychological toll on the frightened Russian people. By 1922, many are broken into submission to the Cheka monsters.

1 & 2 - The horror of the Jewish Red Terror frightened Europe. Not since the days of Genghis Khan have so many Europeans been so brutally murdered.

3- Yakov Sverdlov was a mass murdering beast.

NOVEMBER 11, 1918
THE GREAT WAR ENDS / 'THE NOVEMBER CRIMINALS' BETRAY GERMANY TO THE GLOBALISTS

By the fall of 1918, it is clear that Germany can no longer win the War. Its policy now is "to not lose it either." As he had in 1916, the Kaiser offers to negotiate peace on terms favorable to all. Though Germany cannot win, the Allies are not able to win either. Germany's Eastern front with Russia is closed. There are no Allied troops on German soil, the Capital, Berlin is 900 miles safely away from the front, and the German military is very capable of defending the homeland from any invasion.

But the home front is collapsing. Treasonous politicians, Marxist labor union leaders, and Zionist media moguls, combine to demoralize the people and destabilize Germany. The Kaiser is forced to step down, exiling to Holland. On November 11, '18, Marxists and liberals of the newly formed "Weimer Republic" (formed in the city of Weimar) lie down and roll over for the Allies!

Incredibly, at a time when the Allies do not have a single soldier on German soil, the Weimar traitors order the military to lay down their arms and withdraw from the front.

Based on Wilson's empty promises of "peace without victory", the 'November Criminals' place Germany at the total mercy of the New World Order.

The New York Times.

ARMISTICE SIGNED, END OF THE WAR!
BERLIN SEIZED BY REVOLUTIONISTS;
NEW CHANCELLOR BEGS FOR ORDER;
OUSTED KAISER FLEES TO HOLLAND

1- The armistice trap was signed in a railway car in Compiegne, France. 2- Patriotic German cartoon depicts politicians stabbing German troops in the back. 3- Jewish Reds seize Berlin that very day

NOVEMBER 11, 1918
AS JEWISH COMMUNISTS CAPTURE BERLIN / KAISER FLEES TO HOLLAND

The New York Times.

ARMISTICE SIGNED, END OF THE WAR!
BERLIN SEIZED BY REVOLUTIONISTS;
NEW CHANCELLOR BEGS FOR ORDER;
OUSTED KAISER FLEES TO HOLLAND

WAR ENDS AT 6 O'CLOCK THIS MORNING

The State Department in Washington Made the Announcement at 2:45 o'Clock.

ARMISTICE WAS SIGNED IN FRANCE AT MIDNIGHT

Terms Include Withdrawal from Alsace-Lorraine, Disarming and Demobilization of Army and Navy, and Occupation of Strategic Naval and Military Points.

BERLIN TROOPS JOIN REVOLT

Reds Shell Building in Which Officers Vainly Resist.

"Berlin Seized by Revolutionists" (Reds)

In 1915, Jewish Reds Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht founded the "Spartacus League" (named after NWO / Illuminati founder Adam Weishaupt's code name of "Spartacus"). In 1919, the group becomes the Communist Party of Germany.

That same month, the Spartacists, aided by Jewish-Hungarian Red Bela Kun, take advantage of the post-war chaos, and stage a coup in Berlin. Kaiser Wilhelm, fearing the same fate as Tsar Nicholas, flees to Holland. He now regrets his past liberalism and denounces the "Jewish influence" that ruined Germany.

The Communist takeover of Berlin is short-lived as veterans known as the 'Freikorps' reclaim control from the Reds and their followers. Luxemburg and Liebknecht are captured and executed. The "Freikorps" has saved Germany from the same deadly fate that has befallen Russia, but the new "democratic socialist" Germany will soon face other serious problems. Just like the hard core Reds of Russia pushed aside the socialist Kerensky, the Reds of Germany will keep trying to grab absolute power from the "democratic socialists" of Weimar.

The German Freikorps saved Germany from the Soviet-style Communist bloodbath that Jewish Reds Luxemburg and Liebknecht were planning.

NOVEMBER, 1918
INJURED GERMAN ARMY CORPORAL REACTS BITTERLY TO NEWS OF THE SURRENDER

As a 25-year-old 'starving artist', Adolph Hitler had volunteered to fight for Austria in 1914. By that time, both of his parents had passed away. Afflicted with tuberculosis during youth, Hitler was rejected for military service. Hitler then pleaded with Bavarian authorities to allow him to fight for Germany. He served with great distinction, and was promoted to Lance Corporal after being awarded the German Iron Cross 2nd Class for bravery. In October '16, he was badly wounded and spends two months in a military hospital. He could have stayed home but chose to return to the frontlines.

In August of '18, Hitler is awarded the prestigious Iron Cross 1st Class. In October 1918, he is blinded by a British poison gas attack. While recovering his eyesight, Hitler hears of Germany's shameful capitulation. He is confused and outraged. The sacrifice and suffering of the German soldiers had been for nothing. The brave unknown painter from Vienna wants answers, and he won't rest until the 'November Criminals' (his term) are exposed and Germany's honor restored.

Hitler, seated left, was a heroic and highly decorated soldier.

JANUARY, 1919
THE PARIS PEACE CONFERENCE

The Paris Peace Conference is the meeting of the Allied victors to financially crush Germany and determine the new borders of the defeated nations. The Globalists devise a series of treaties (Paris Peace Treaties) that reshape Europe and the world. At its center are the leaders of the three 'Great Powers': Woodrow Wilson (U.S.), Prime Ministers David Lloyd George (U.K.) and Georges Clemenceau (France). Germany is not invited and will have no say in the final decisions.

The Globalists will dismantle existing nations and create new ones. Austria-Hungary and Turkey are carved up; their disparate peoples re-assigned to new states. The Conference also creates the framework for a future World Government, The League of Nations.

A Zionist delegation is also present. They had brought America into the war, and now it is time to collect payment for services rendered (Balfour Declaration). Former Arab territories of the Ottoman Empire are separated from Turkish rule and broken up into small states. Palestine is to become a British protectorate. See: British Mandate

The Zionist statement establishes the Jew's claim to a piece of Palestine, guaranteed by The League of Nations and exactly as Herzl had predicted in 1897! Jews from all over the world may now immigrate to British Palestine, but in controlled numbers. The Arabs of Palestine (a 95% majority) were not consulted about this deal, and they are angry.

Clemenceau, Wilson, & George front for the Globalist gangsters in Paris.

MARCH 1919
JEWISH REDS ESTABLISH COMMUNIST REGIME IN HUNGARY

During the Russian Civil War, Jewish-Hungarian, Bela Kun fights for the Reds. As a commander, Kun orders the killings of thousands of anti-Communists.

With the collapse of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, Kun sees an opportunity to impose Communism in Hungary. In November '18, his Red gang returns to Hungary with money given to him by the Russian Reds. He founds the Hungarian Communist Party on November 4, '18.

The Hungarian Soviet Republic is soon established. Kun reports directly to Lenin and is the dominant personality in the government during its brief existence. Kun's first act is to nationalize (confiscate) all private property. After an anti-communist coup attempt in Hungary in June '19, Kun organizes a response in the form of a Red Terror, carried out by secret police and mostly Jewish irregular units. Red Tribunals condemn 600 prominent Hungarians to death. Kun's Reds are removed from power after an invasion by Romania. Kun flees to The USSR.

Bela Kun: Yet another Rothschild rabble-rouser on a soap box.

JUNE, 1919
GERMANY IS GANG-RAPED BY THE 'TREATY OF VERSAILLES'

Out of the Paris Peace Conference comes the barbaric and infamous "Treaty of Versailles". The cruelty of the Treaty is today recognized even by liberal historians. With Germany disarmed by its new government, the Globalists & Zionists proceed to rape the German nation; a nation that did not want war, had tried to avert the war, and had offered to make peace on numerous occasions after the war had begun.

The Treaty contains 440 clauses, 414 of which are dedicated towards punishing Germany for a war that was imposed upon her.

Among the key provisions that a disarmed Germany and Austria (Treaty of St. Germaine) are forced to accept at gunpoint and while under a hunger blockade are:

1. Germany must accept 100% responsibility for the war.
2. German armed forces restricted to 100,000 men.
3. The industrial German Rhineland will be occupied by French troops for 15 years.
4. Kaiser Wilhelm II (safe in Holland) should be tried for "offenses against international morality".
5. The German region of West Prussia is given to the new nation of Poland.

Two million West Prussians are forcefully expelled from their homes, and East Prussia is left isolated from the rest of Germany!

6. The German Sudetenland region is put under the rule of the new nation of 'Czechoslovakia'.
7. The new state of Austria is forbidden from uniting with their brothers in Germany.
8. Germany is stripped of African colonies. Britain, France, & Belgium take them.
9. The coal-rich Saar region of Germany is placed under League of Nations control for 15 years. During this time, its coal is to be shipped to France.
10. The Baltic Sea port city of Danzig is separated from Germany and declared a "free city."
11. Germany is forced to pay massive war reparations in the form of money and natural resources. The crushing debt payments (equal to 1 Trillion dollars in modern currency) will devastate the German economy and soon cause a hyperinflationary monetary collapse. (32)

Defenseless Germany is kept under the hunger blockade until she agrees to the harsh terms. About 100,000 Germans die as a result of the post-armistice food blockade. (33) The unjust and inhumane Treaty of Versailles will breed resentment and anger for year to come.

1- West Prussia is given to the new state of Poland. East Prussia is cut off from the rest of Germany!

2- German Sudetenland is assigned to the new state of Czechoslovakia

OCTOBER, 1919
PRESIDENT WILSON IS PARALYZED BY A STROKE / THE PUBLIC IS KEPT UNAWARE FOR 1 ½ YEARS!

The Zionist-Globalist pressure on Woodrow Wilson is too much for the feeble Princeton Professor to handle. The New World Order Bosses have ridden their blackmailed puppet very hard since 1912. Now, Wilson is being ordered to undertake an intense, year-long cross-country campaign to win public support for US entry into the world government blueprint known as 'The League of Nations' (established at the Paris Peace Conference).

During his grueling propaganda train tour, Wilson suffers a massive stroke that leaves him paralyzed. For the next 17 months, the enfeebled President lies in bed on the brink of death, barely able to write his own name. The outside world knows nothing of this.

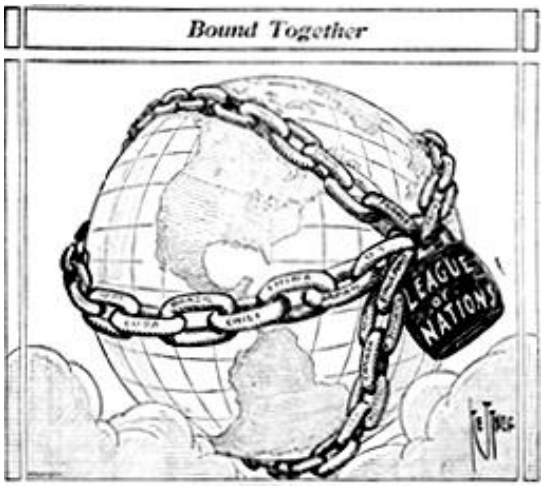
All communication with the "dummy" President goes through his wife, Edith. Wilson never fully recovers and will die in 1924. His horrible legacy of treason (The Fed, Income Tax, Zionism, World War I & Globalism etc.) haunts America to this very day.

Even when healthy, the dummy was only good for ceremonies. Wilson's grueling 'League of Nations' train tour campaign wore him down.

NOVEMBER, 1919
MAJOR SETBACK FOR GLOBALISM! U.S. SENATE REFUSES TO JOIN THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS



After an intense, yearlong campaign to win support for entry into the League of Nations, the now incapacitated President Wilson and his Rothschild-Globalist masters are dealt a devastating blow when the Senate fails to approve U.S. membership. Globalist pressure forces the Senate to vote three times, but the necessary 2/3 majority still cannot be reached.

Leading the opposition to membership in the infant World Government are Senators Henry Cabot Lodge (R-MA), Warren Harding (R-OH), and William Borah (R-ID).

The American people now realize that the very strange war that they had just fought served no American interest at all. Americans want no more of Europe's affairs and just want to "return to normalcy." But the Globalists will keep on scheming against the people until they finally get their New World Order.

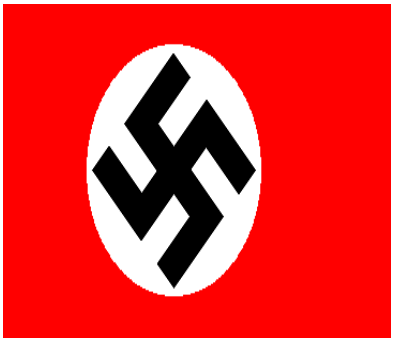
1- Senator Borah led the opposition to the New World Order trap.



2- 'Bound Together": even then, certain cartoonists smelled the global trap.

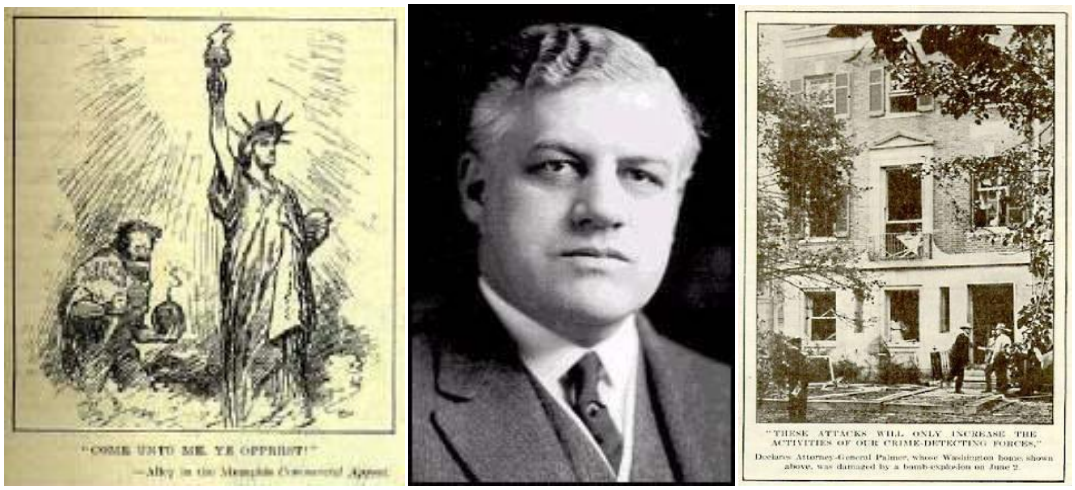
1919
UNKNOWN ADOLF HITLER SPARKS A MOVEMENT

When Adolf Hitler joins the German Workers Party (DAP) in 1919, he becomes only the 7th member of the nationalist group. The now 30-year old, self-educated artist from Austria has little money and no political connections. But his oratorical, organizational, and marketing talents propel him to leadership of the tiny band of brothers. Hitler's mesmerizing beer-hall speeches stop onlookers in their tracks. He denounces the Versailles Treaty, the occupation, the 'November Criminals', the Marxists, the Press, and the international bankers.

DAP membership then grows rapidly, recruiting unemployed young men and disgruntled ex-soldiers betrayed during the war. Hitler appeals to veterans because he himself was a frontline soldier, twice decorated for serious injuries sustained, and twice more for conspicuous bravery on the battlefield.

To draw recruits away from both the rival "right" Nationalist and "left" Socialist Parties, Hitler simply adds 'National' and 'Socialist' to the Party's name, making it NSDAP. (They never called themselves "Nazis"!). To draw people away from the Reds, Hitler also uses red flags, with a symbol of the ancient Aryans of Asia.

Hitler designed the NSDAP flag. The "swastika" was a symbol of the ancient Asian Aryan peoples who settled in Europe.



Adolf Hitler: A talented painter with a dream to save Germany.

1919
RED TERROR EXPLODES ACROSS AMERICA!

What modern day liberal historians mockingly refer to as "The First Red Scare", is nothing to laugh about. Coming just 18 years after the Reds murdered President McKinley, the 1919 "Red Scare" is marked by a campaign of Communist/Anarchist terror and radical political agitation, set against the backdrop of Lenin's ongoing bloodbath and Wilson's crashing economy.

In April, 30 booby-trap mail bombs are sent to prominent Americans. After the 1st bomb fizzles, and the 2nd injures the wife of a US Senator, the remaining 28 are intercepted by postal authorities. On May 1 (May Day), Reds stage large rallies that lead to violence in Boston, New York, and Cleveland. Two die and 40 are injured as patriots clash with immigrant Reds.

Later that year, 8 more bombs are mailed, killing 2 innocent people. The home of anti-Red Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer is also bombed, and heavily damaged. Fortunately for Palmer and his family, the bomb detonates prematurely, killing Aldo Valdinoci, the Italian anarchist planting it. In September, Marxist Union leaders organize steel strikes, soon followed by coal strikes. The 'Red Scare' is no joke! The Reds mean business, and Americans are rightfully concerned.

1- Cartoon: Anarchist Bomber sneaks up on Lady Liberty

2- Attorney General Palmer's home was bombed by Reds.

1919 -1920
THE 'PALMER RAIDS' CRIPPLE THE U.S. REDS

The efforts of Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer weaken the Reds greatly. Opposed by the pro-Red ACLU, undermined by some in the Wilson Cabinet, and undeterred by the bombing of his own home, Palmer presses on with his roundups and investigations. Palmer's Federal Agents often rough up the foreign Reds, including many Russian-Jewish radicals, as well as Italian and East European Anarchists.

In November 1919, Palmer deports 249 foreign Reds, including top leaders such as "Red Emma" Goldman, who inspired and praised the 1901 McKinley murder. Palmer then focuses on the Marxist labor strikes, leaving his young assistant (and future FBI Director) J. Edgar Hoover, to fight the foreign Reds. Hoover rounds up 3000 more radicals. In all, 5000 radicals are arrested, 556 of which are booted out of America. (34) Good riddance!

Palmer's efforts to contain the murderous Red cancer were heroic.

FEBRUARY, 1920
WINSTON CHURCHILL WARNS OF A WORLDWIDE JEWISH COMMUNIST CONSPIRACY

Lord of the Admiralty and Lusitania war criminal Winston Churchill is a supporter of Zionism (Jewish state in Palestine), but opposed to Jewish Communism. Although both movements trace back to the same Rothschild Crime Family, they sometimes appear - to this day- to operate at cross-purposes, and in conflict with each other.

In an editorial appearing in the Illustrated Sunday Herald entitled, 'Zionism vs Bolshevism', Churchill argues that Jews should support Zionism as an alternative to Communism; missing the fact that both movements emanate from the same source. The future Prime Minister rails against "the schemes of the International Jews":

"This movement among the Jews is not new. From the days of Weishaupt to those of Karl Marx, and down to Trotsky (Russia), Bela Kun (Hungary), Rosa Luxembourg (Germany), and Emma Goldman (United States), this worldwide conspiracy for the overthrow of civilization and for the reconstitution of society on the basis of arrested development, envious malevolence, and impossible equality, has been steadily growing. It played, as a modern writer, Mrs. Webster, has so ably shown, a definitely recognizable part in the tragedy of the French Revolution……It has been the mainspring of every subversive movement during the Nineteenth Century; and now at last this band of extraordinary personalities from the underworld of the great cities of Europe and America have gripped the Russian people by the hair of their heads and have become the undisputed masters of that enormous empire." (35)

ZIONISM versus BOLSHEVISM.

A STRUGGLE FOR THE SOUL OF THE JEWISH PEOPLE.

By the Rt. Hon. WINSTON S. CHURCHILL.

Zionism vs Bolshevism is a precursor of today's Neo-cons vs. Globalists rivalry.

SEPTEMBER, 1920
AMERICAN REDS BOMB WALL STREET / 38 DEAD

In New York, a horse drawn carriage stops on the Wall Street Financial District's busiest corner. The driver leaves the scene. Inside of the carriage, 100 pounds of dynamite with 500 pounds of iron shrapnel are set to explode in a timer-set detonation. The horse and wagon are blasted into small fragments. The 38 victims, most of who die within moments of the blast, are mostly young people who work as messengers, clerks, and brokers. Many of the wounded suffer severe, disfiguring injuries.

Prior to the blast, flyers were found in a nearby Post Office. Written in red ink, the flyers promised violence if political prisoners were not released. At the bottom was written: “American Anarchist Fighters.” The actual perpetrators will never be caught, but the terrorist Red movement in America is clearly behind the mass murder.

NEW CASTLE NEWS

VOLUME XLI No. 30. NEW CASTLE, PA., THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1920 —16 PAGES

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION WRECKS BANKING HOUSE OF MO

PROFITEERING RESTAURANTS MUST CUT DOWN PR

24 Dead And 200 Injured With Chances That Death Record Will Mount Higher

Believed To Have Been Bomb At First, But Later Investigation Indicates That Wagon Load Of Dynamite Was Hit By Automobile

HOSPITALS IN DOWN TOWN SECTION OF CITY ALL FILLED WITH INJURED

Claims Explosion Was A Time Bomb Loaded On Wagon

Expert Gives Sound Advice To Merchants

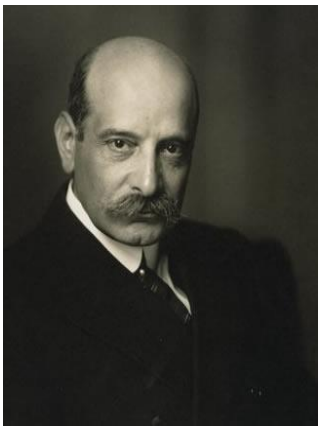
LET EMPLOYEE SHARE TROUBLES

Primaries Featured By Murder And Many Arrests In Chicago

Break In Strike

Gigantic Upheaval

The Red bomb overturned automobiles. The nation was shocked.



1920 - 21
GLOBALIST ‘THINK TANKS’ FORM IN BRITAIN AND AMERICA / ELITES RECRUITED TO JOIN THE NEW WORLD ORDER

At the Paris Peace Conference, Globalists from the U.S. & Britain had agreed to establish sister “think tanks” that will dominate the affairs of both nations. In 1920, the Fabian dominated Royal Institute of International Affairs (now Chatham House) is founded in London. In 1921, the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) is established in New York with “Father of the Fed” Paul Warburg serving as its first Director.

"Chatham House Rules" of secrecy govern the members of both clubs. Membership is by invitation only. Members may discuss generalities of group meetings, but are expected to remain discreet concerning who attends the meetings and what is said.

Up until the present day, the membership rolls of CFR & Chatham have included top names from politics, media, banking, business, and academia. The membership rolls include a variety of Globalists, Communists, Zionists, ambitious careerists, and well-meaning dupes. The chosen few recruited by the world government builders often find themselves on a fast track to greater fame and fortune.

1- The Manhattan based CFR is the seat of America's Oligarchy. Rothschild ally Paul "Father of the Fed" Warburg is its first Director.

2- Obama speaks before his Council co-conspirators.

1921 – 1930

1921 - 22
'WAR COMMUNISM' STARVES 10 MILLION TO DEATH

Lenin's oppression of the Russian people breaks their strength and will to resist. The Famine of 1921 is partly due to the folly of central economic planning, as well as to a deliberate effort to kill off any Russians still not willing to support the Red takeover. The Communists ran the money-printing presses to finance their civil war and welfare schemes. When inflation follows, they impose price controls, causing farmers to lose money by farming. Compounding the shortage is the Red seizure of seeds.

The horrific famine is then used to selectively feed those regions submissive to the Reds, and starve out those loyal to the Whites.

Starving Russians and Ukrainians resort to eating grass, or even cannibalizing the dead. The horror escalates when Lenin deliberately blocks foreign relief efforts. When the death toll reaches 10 million, Lenin finally allows relief. Were it not for the mostly American aid, the death toll for Lenin's cruelty would have doubled.

Starving children and corpses of the 1921 Soviet Famine

MARCH, 1921
FOR THE THIRD TIME IN 23 YEARS, REDS MURDER A PRIME MINISTER OF SPAIN

Eduardo Dato became Prime Minister of Spain for the first time in 1913. In 1915, he left that position, but would return to it for a short while in 1917, and then, for a third time in 1920.

On March 8, 1921 in Madrid, while being driven from the parliament building and in front, Dato was assassinated by three anarchists, Lluís Nicolau, Pere Mateu, and Ramon Casanelles, who were riding a motorcycle.

1 & 2- Dato was killed in a motorcycle drive-by shooting.

3- The bullet riddled car.

JULY, 1921
NEW YORK TIMES PUBLISHES SOVIET CLAIM THAT 6 MILLION JEWS FACE EXTERMINATION BY 'WHITE' COUNTER-REVOLUTIONARIES

BEGS AMERICA SAVE 6,000,000 IN RUSSIA
New York Times (1857-Current file); Jul 20, 1921; ProQuest Historical Newspapers The New York Times (1851 - 2006)
pg. 2

BEGS AMERICA SAVE 6,000,000 IN RUSSIA

Massacre Threatens All Jews as Soviet Power Wanes, Declares Kreinin, Coming Here for Aid.

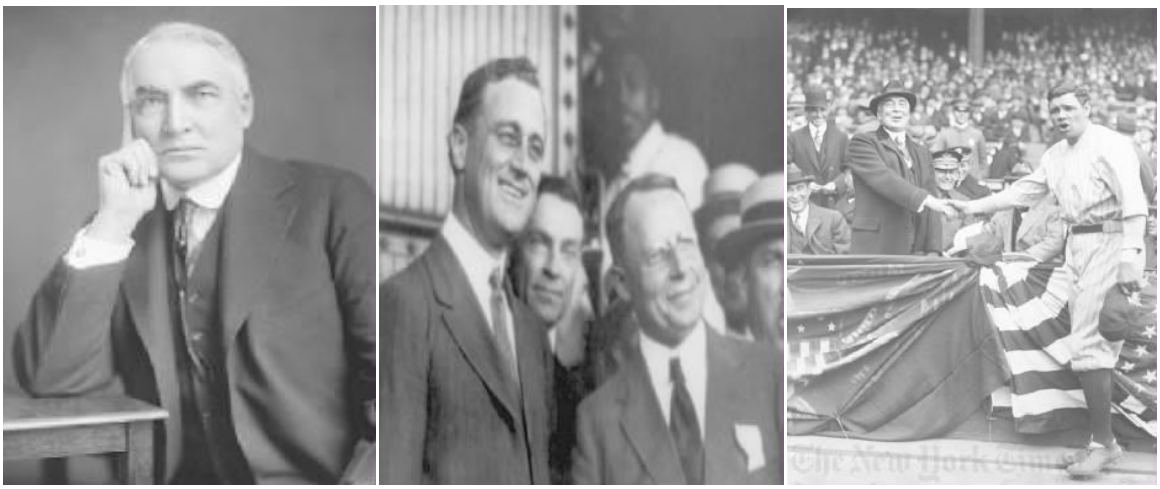
Copyright, 1921, by The Chicago Tribune Co.

BERLIN, July 19.—Russia's 6,000,000 Jews are facing extermination by massacre. As the famine is spreading, the counter-revolutionary movement is gaining and the Soviet's control is waning. This statement is borne out by official documents presented to the Berlin Government, which show that numerous pogroms are raging in all parts of Russia

Yet again!

1921 - 23
THE BRIEF AND VERY SUCCESSFUL PRESIDENCY OF WARREN G HARDING

Pledging a “return to normalcy”, Warren Harding (R-OH) is elected President in 1920. An opponent of entry into the League of Nations, his victory over James Cox (D-OH) and his VP running mate Franklin D Roosevelt (TR's cousin), is the largest Presidential landslide in U.S. history (60%-34%)



In his inaugural address, Harding lays the smack-down upon the Wilsonian Zio-Globalists:

"The recorded progress of our Republic, materially and spiritually, proves the wisdom of the inherited policy of noninvolvement in Old World affairs. Confident of our ability to work out our own destiny, and jealously guarding our right to do so, we seek no part in directing the destinies of the Old World. We do not mean to be entangled. We will accept no responsibility except as our own conscience and judgment in each instance may determine.

We sense the call of the human heart for fellowship, fraternity, and cooperation. We crave friendship and harbor no hate. But America, our America, the America built on the foundation laid by the inspired fathers, can be a party to no permanent military alliance. It can enter into no political commitments, nor assume any economic obligations which will subject our decisions to any other than our own authority." (1)

Harding inherits a severe Wilsonian Economic Depression. He quickly moves to slash income taxes, and will cut government spending by 50%. With the private economy now freed from the parasitic dead weight of big government, an historic economic boom soon follows. Harding is undoing Wilson's damage, and returning the country to the days of William Howard Taft (who he names as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court).

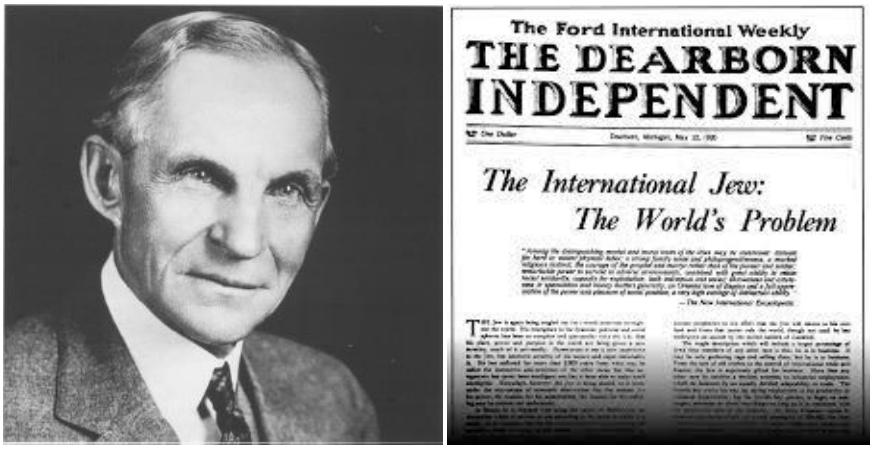
Harding's support for free markets, limited government, low taxes, neutral foreign policy, and his refusal to grant diplomatic recognition to the murderous Soviet Union, are all positions that anger the Globalists. An intense newspaper smear campaign regarding "scandals" in Harding's administration is unleashed against the highly popular President. In spite of the hate campaign, Harding remains extremely popular.

1- Harding (left) crushed Cox & FDR in the 1920 election and put America back on the road to recovery and happiness.

2- American glory days: Harding with baseball legend Babe Ruth

*

1- Harding's inaugural address rejected Globalism.



2- Globalist owned "Yellow Press" discovered "scandals" on Harding.

1920 – 1922
HENRY FORD PUBLISHES 'THE INTERNATIONAL JEW: THE WORLD'S PROBLEM'

American auto manufacturer and icon Henry Ford publishes a 4-volume set of booklets exposing the operations of the Globalist Jewish elite. Ford's investigations reveal a hidden influence over American politics, the Fed, the press, organized crime, theatre, art, and music. German NSDAP members read and distribute translated copies of Ford's work. Hitler himself has a copy in his office, along with a photo of Ford.

Because of Ford's national stature and vast wealth, many take the warnings of The International Jew very seriously. After withstanding years of intense pressure and a libel suit aimed at him, Ford eventually backs off of his crusade, even closing his newspaper, The Dearborn Independent, in 1927.

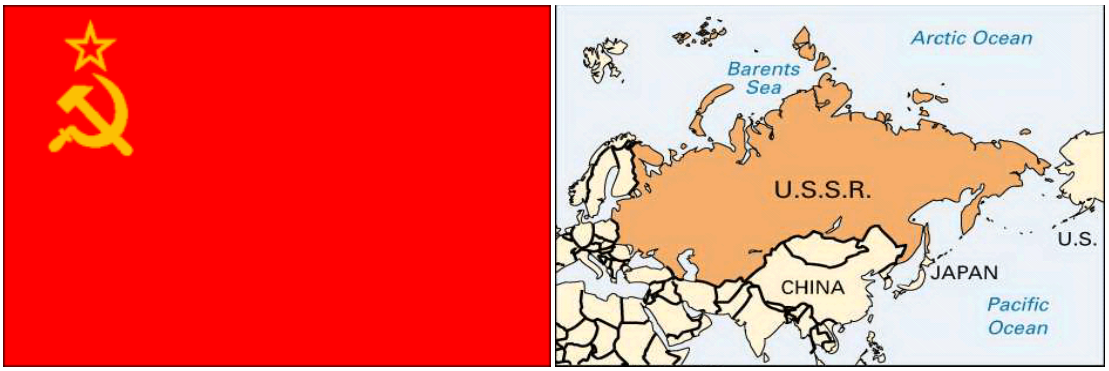
Ford knew all about the New World Order.

JULY, 1922
REDS ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THE PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

Alexandre Millerand is the President of France. On July 14, 1922, an anarchist named Gustave Bouvet makes an attempt to assassinate him.

As Millerand and other dignitaries travel in a procession of three carriages along the Champs-Élysées; Bouvet draws a revolver from his pocket and fires two shots at the second car, which he mistakenly believes the President is riding in. Both shots go wide due to a bystander grabbing Bouvet's arm before he can aim.

Bouvet drops the gun and is quickly subdued. He is found to be carrying another revolver and 25 cartridges in his pockets. Upon interrogation, he declares that he intended to shoot the President "in order to make an example."



Millerand & Bouvet The Reds have an endless supply of disaffected and brainwashed young assassins who show no fear of being captured or executed.

1922
THE REDS WIN THE RUSSIAN CIVIL WAR / THE 'SOVIET UNION' (U.S.S.R.) IS FORMALLY ESTABLISHED

At the conclusion of the Red Terror, Red Famine, and Red-White Civil War in 1922, Lenin and Trotsky formally establish the Soviet Union with its capital city in Moscow. The former Russian Empire is now also known as the USSR (Union of Soviet Socialist Republics).

The Communist giant spans Eurasia. Of its multi-ethnic "republics" the Russian republic is by far the largest and most populated. The well-known criminal brutality of the Soviets shocks the world, as do the Communist declarations to overthrow all other nations. For these reasons, three consecutive Republican Presidents (Harding, Coolidge, Hoover), will refuse to diplomatically recognize the Soviet Union.

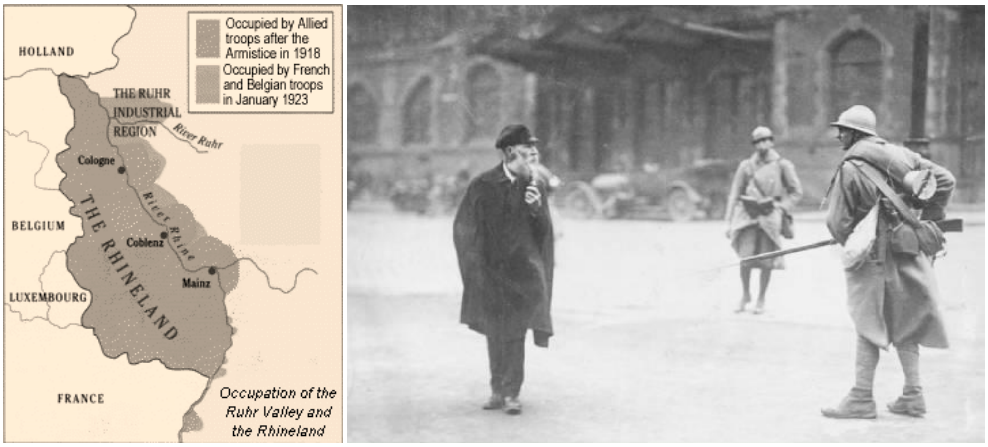
Phony symbolism: the Hammer & Sickle on Soviet flag symbolize Communist love for "the workers." The enormous Russian Empire is now the evil Soviet Empire.

OCTOBER, 1922
'THE MARCH ON ROME' / BENITO MUSSOLINI'S FASCISTS SAVE ITALY FROM THE COMMUNISTS & LIBERALS

The global economic Depression that follows World War I gives the Reds and socialists an opportunity to agitate in post war Italy. Benito Mussolini and his Fascist Party decide to act before the "democratic" Reds can get any stronger.

In October of '22, Mussolini declares before 60,000 people at the Fascist Congress in Naples: "Our program is simple: we want to rule Italy." Fascist "Black-shirts" capture the strategic points of Italy. Mussolini then leads a March of 30,000 men on the Capital City of Rome. On October 28, a sympathetic King Victor Emmanuel III, whose father had been murdered by a Red in 1900, grants political power to Mussolini. Mussolini is supported by veterans and the business class.

The corrupt left-wing political parties are eventually shut down. Under "Il Duce's" rule, the pro-business Fascist Party takes control and restores order to Italy. Fascism combines an honest and sound monetary system with a mix of free enterprise and state regulated corporatism.



Mussolini's 'March on Rome': "Communism is a fraud, a comedy, a phantom, a blackmail." (2)

JANUARY 11, 1923
FRANCE INVADES GERMANY'S RUHR REGION AFTER GERMANY IS LATE ON EXTORTION PAYMENTS

More than four years have passed since Germany's complete and total surrender at the end of The Great War. The poor & hunger-stricken German nation is now having difficulty in making the massive reparations extortion payments imposed by The Treaty of Versailles. Having already destroyed the value of Germany's currency, the Allies now demand to be paid in timber and coal. Extortionist allied troops move in for a "shakedown."

In a further humiliation of an already occupied Germany (Rhineland), 60,000 troops from Belgium, France, and the French African colonies expand the occupation into the defenseless Ruhr (an industrial region of Germany). While German children go hungry, the Allies collect their stolen loot of physical German commodities. Machine gun posts are set up in the streets as Allied troops take food and supplies from German shopkeepers. Other than stage passive demonstrations, there is nothing the disarmed, humiliated, and hungry German people can do about the French abuse.

Shaking down Germany! France and Belgium expanded the occupation of industrial parts of Germany. The invaders killed 132 disobedient Germans.

AUGUST 21, 1923
THE SUDDEN AND STRANGE DEATH OF PRESIDENT HARDING

While recovering from a strange sickness that had stricken him in San Francisco, President Harding shudders and dies suddenly during a conversation with his wife. Doctor's cannot agree on the cause of his strange death. Within an hour of his demise, Harding's body is embalmed and placed in a casket. The following morning, the body is on a train, headed back to Washington Incredibly, no autopsy is performed. (3) The suspicion of a deliberate poisoning plot rages throughout America.

The sudden death of the 57-year-old statesman, who successfully reversed Wilson's damage in just 29 months, remains a mystery. Of course, liberal 'historians' today rate Harding as "the worst President ever."

Crowds of mourners watched the train carry the body of President Harding back to DC.

1923
GERMAN SUPER-INFLATION WIPES OUT MIDDLE CLASS

With Allied troops occupying the Ruhr, and the German Mark losing its value to inflation, Germany in '22-23 goes through a horrific hyperinflation. The socialist Weimer Government and the Warburg/Rothschild Central Bank resort to massively expanding the money supply, mostly to cover the crushing debt imposed by the Versailles Treaty, but also to keep the Weimar Republic's welfare state afloat.

The life savings of the German people is wiped out as prices double every 2 days for 20 straight months! Workers are paid daily, so that they may go food shopping before prices double again. Many Germans refer to their devalued money as "Judefetzen", (Jewish confetti). (4)

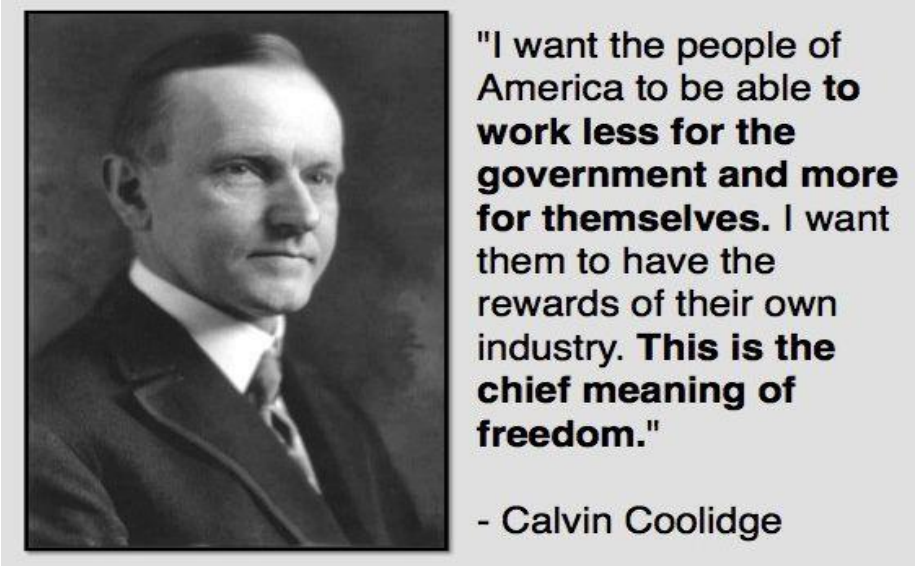
This leads to more chaos and another attempt by the Communists to stage a revolution. As they had during the war, the Marxist Trade Unions call for strikes at a time when Germany is most vulnerable. To pacify the striking workers, the Weimar / Reichsbank complex pumps even more paper debt money into the economy.

1- Germans needed wheelbarrows full of paper money to go shopping.
2- 20 BILLION Marks for a postage stamp! 3- Mark wallpaper.

NOVEMBER, 1923
'THE BEER HALL PUTSCH' / HITLER ATTEMPTS A COUP IN BAVARIAN CITY OF MUNICH

Righteous anger is boiling over the hyper-inflation and the new French-Belgian occupation. Hitler decides that the time is right to seize power from the local government in Munich. Hoping that war veterans will join the revolt and move against the national government in Berlin, Hitler uses a rally in a Munich 'Beer Hall' to launch a coup.

The local uprising, or "putsch", is ignited by Hitler's moving speech, but fails to sustain itself as troops open fire on the nationalist rebels, killing 16 of them. Hitler and others are arrested and tried for treason. At his trial, Hitler uses the occasion to spread his ideas, which are then published in the newspapers. The judge is impressed, and issues a lenient sentence for the rebels. Though the Munich coup has failed, the legend of the great orator grows, attracting new followers by the day. Membership in Hitler's NSDAP tops 20,000 by year's end.



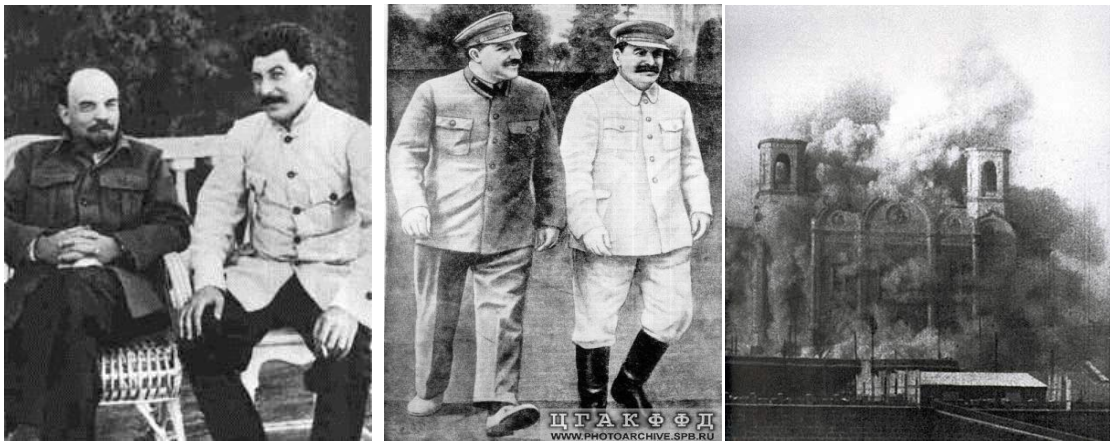
A crowd turned out to support Hitler. Hitler and Ludendorff were arrested.

1923-1928
CALVIN COOLIDGE, THE ROARING 20's, AND THE DEMISE OF THE GLOBALISTS

After Harding's sudden death/assassination, America doesn't know what to make of Calvin Coolidge ("Silent Cal"), the new President. It is believed that Coolidge will serve the remaining 19 months of Harding's term, and then be replaced at the Republican Convention in 1924. But after continuing Harding's policies, Coolidge is now very popular. He is nominated to run against Democrat John Davis. Remarkably; Davis is also a conservative!

The Globalists put up Robert La Follette (R-WI) as the Progressive nominee. On Election Day 1924, Coolidge carries 35 states, Davis wins 12, and La Follette wins only his home state!

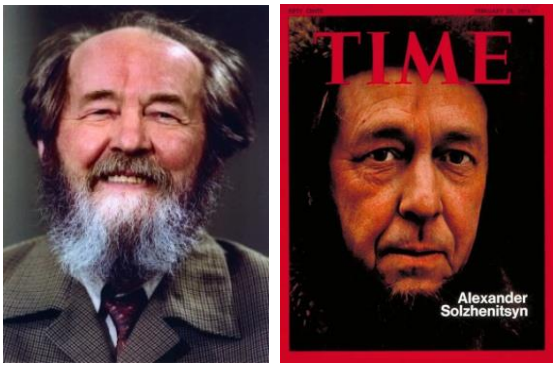
A period of peace & prosperity known as "The Roaring Twenties" has the Constitutional Republicans riding high. What's a Globalist to do? They can't just keep killing Presidents! The "Fed" will begin laying a financial time bomb beneath the nation's prosperity. When the bomb finally explodes in 1929, the era of Constitutional Republicanism will be swept away for good.



The unknown "Silent Cal" turned out to be just as good as Harding!

JANUARY 21, 1924
LENIN DIES / PSYCHOPATH KILLER JOSEPH STALIN TAKES OVER THE USSR

When Lenin dies in 1924, Joseph Stalin, Secretary of the Communist Party Central Committee, skillfully outmaneuvers Red Army leader Lev Trotsky to take leadership of the USSR. Stalin will eventually expel Trotsky from the Party, then from the USSR itself. Finally, he will have his Marxist rival axed through his brain by a Soviet agent in Mexico.

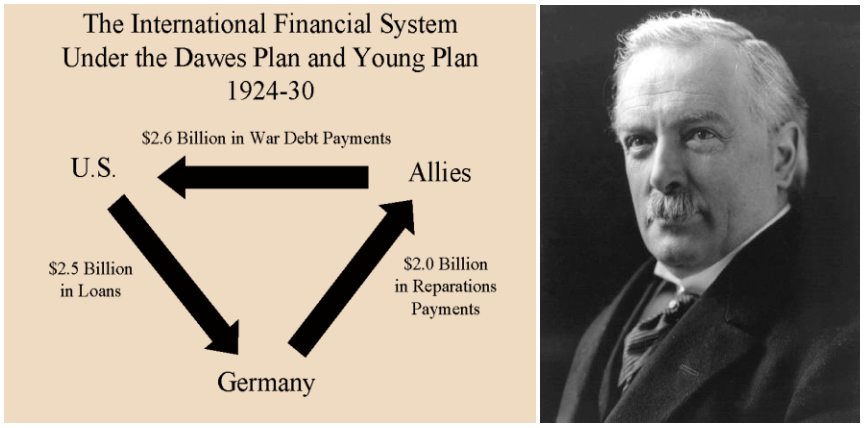


Stalin's brutality instills fear not only in the enslaved people of the Soviet Union, but also in the hearts of fellow Communists that the paranoid Stalin believes may challenge his leadership. The egomaniac renames a city after himself (Stalingrad), and erects statues of his likeness in town squares. From time to time, Stalin will "purge" many of his own Red comrades, as well as wives. He dumps his first wife, and drives his second, (as well as one of his sons) to suicide.

In years to come, Stalin's chilling crimes against humanity will make Lenin's Red Terror and Red Famine seem like minor infractions by comparison.

Lenin (l) was a pussycat compared to the genocidal Stalin and his Jewish 'right hand man' Lazar Kaganovich. It was Kaganovich who ordered the demolition of Russia's grand and historic Christ the Savior Cathedral (right).

FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER:



"You must understand, the leading Bolsheviks who took over Russia were not Russians. They (Bolshevik Jews) hated Russians. They hated Christians. Driven by ethnic hatred they tortured and slaughtered millions of Russians without a shred of human remorse. It cannot be overstated. Bolshevism committed the greatest human slaughter of all time. The fact that most of the world is ignorant and uncaring about this enormous crime is proof that the global media is in the hands of the perpetrators."

Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, Russian historian and literary figure (5)

AUGUST, 1924
THE DAWES PLAN / ZIONIST BANKERS REFINANCE GERMANY'S DEBT

In 1924, a refinancing of Germany's reparations debt, as well as Allied debt to the US Treasury (which in turn is indebted to the Fed) is worked out. The terms are still harsh, but the German economy and currency are temporarily stabilized. In 5 years the Dawes plan will also fail, and be replaced by the Young Plan. The reality of the Dawes Plan, named after US Vice President Charles Dawes, is that Dawes himself has little to do with it. It was the Zionist-Globalist bankers imposing the new plan. Former UK Prime Minister David Lloyd George reveals:

"The international bankers dictated the Dawes reparations settlement. The protocol, which was signed between the allies and Germany, is the triumph of the international financier. Agreement would never have been reached without the brutal intervention of the international bankers. They swept statesman, politicians, and journalists aside, and issued their orders with the imperiousness of absolute Monarchs, who knew there was no appeal from their ruthless decrees. The Dawes report was fashioned by the Money Kings." (6)

The circular Dawes Scam reworked Germany's debt. David Lloyd George confirmed that it was the International Bankers, not the politicians, who dictated the terms.

1925
HITLER PUBLISHES 'MEIN KAMPF'

During his imprisonment of 1924, Hitler had dictated 'Mein Kampf' (My Struggle). His close associate Rudolf Hess, imprisoned with Hitler, typed out the dictation for the book, which was published in 1925. In it, Hitler places the blame for Germany's sorry condition upon a Global conspiracy of Marxists and Finance Capitalists.

According to Hitler, this global conspiracy for world government, directed by Jewish bankers, engineered Germany's loss of The Great War, the Russian Revolution, the Versailles Treaty, and the resulting hyperinflation that devastated Germany. He accuses the elite Marxist Jews of Germany of controlling newspapers and banking, fomenting wars, and corrupting the art, culture and morality of Europe.

Mein Kampf combines elements of a political manifesto and an autobiography along with discussions of history, philosophy, and economics. Originally written for the followers of National Socialism, Mein Kampf quickly grows in popularity, making Hitler a wealthy man.

Mein Kampf was first written in prison. Hitler spoke while Hess (4th from left) typed. The book is still banned in U.S. occupied Germany today.

1926
ZIONIST DAVID SARNOFF ESTABLISHES NBC RADIO

David Sarnoff was born in a small Jewish village in Tsarist Russia and immigrated to New York in 1900. At the age of 15, he joined the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company of America, starting a 60-year career in electronic communications.

By 1919, Sarnoff is General Manager of RCA radio. In 1926, Sarnoff's RCA forms NBC, the first major broadcast network in the U.S. Sarnoff is instrumental in building the AM broadcasting radio business which became the preeminent public radio standard for the majority of the 20th century. During World War II, he will serve under General Eisenhower as a "Communications Consultant" (psychological warfare). (7) Sarnoff, who had no military experience, would be awarded the rank of Brigadier General.

When television in America is born under the name of the National Broadcast Corporation, the first TV show aired at the New York World's Fair and was introduced by Sarnoff himself. Leadership of RCA-NBC eventually passes down to Sarnoff's eldest son, Robert Sarnoff, one of the husbands of Felicia Schiff-Warburg of the two famous banking families. Franklin Roosevelt Jr. (son of FDR) was also an ex-husband of Felicia Schiff-Warburg.

The Sarnoff Family will control RCA-NBC TV for more than 60 years.

Sarnoff was an immensely powerful media giant of the 20th century. He will later serve as a Psychological Warfare specialist during World War II.

APRIL, 1927
CIVIL WAR IN CHINA / MAO's REDS vs CHIANG's NATIONALISTS

A major civil war breaks out in China between the governing Kuomintang (KMT or Chinese nationalist Party) and the Communist Party of China (CPC). The anti-Communist Chiang Kai Shek leads the KMT. The Red guerillas are led by Mao Tse Tung, who himself is supported by Comintern boss Joe Stalin. This bloody civil war will eventually blend into the Asian theater of World War II vs Japan, and finally end with Communist victory in 1949.

Mao was Stalin's agent in China. Combined, the 2 monsters murdered as many as 100 million people. Right: Chiang Kai Shek

MAY 21, 1927
CHARLES LINDBERGH JR. BECOMES 1ST MAN TO FLY ACROSS THE ATLANTIC OCEAN

Charles Lindbergh, the 25-year-old son of the Anti-Fed Congressman of the same name, becomes a world hero when he completes the first solo flight across the Atlantic. His plane "The Spirit of St. Louis" departs New York on May 20, arriving to a hero's welcome near Paris on May 21.

In 1938, Hermann Goering, Chief of the German Air Force, will present Lindbergh with a German Medal of Honor. Lindbergh's acceptance of the medal causes an outcry in the United States among critics of "Nazism". Lindbergh's politics mirror those of his father. 'Lucky Lindy" will use his fame to speak out on the issues of the day. In future years, Lindbergh's stature will make him a leader in the "America First" movement.

1- Young Lindbergh, an American patriot idolized in America and Europe.
2- Papa Lindbergh, with boy Charles, was hated by the Rothschild bankers.

1928
ZIONIST WILLIAM PALEY TAKES OVER CBS RADIO

William S. Paley (Paloff) is the son of Jewish immigrants who came from the Ukraine region of the Czarist Russian Empire. In 1928, the 27-year old businessman secures majority ownership of the CBS radio network (of which his father Samuel Paloff had been part owner). Within the next decade, Paley expands CBS into a national powerhouse with 114 affiliate stations.

During World War II, Paley, like Sarnoff of NBC, will also serve under General Eisenhower as a colonel in the Psychological Warfare branch of the Office of War Information. (8)

As the King of the CBS radio (and later TV), Paley is without question, one of the most powerful figures of the 20th Century. With David Sarnoff already controlling RCA-NBC, and Paley now in control of CBS, the important pre-TV medium of radio is now mainly under Zionist control.

Like Sarnoff's NBC, Paley's CBS will shape what Americans believe for many years to come. Paley lived until 1990.

1928
STALIN SEIZES THE LAST OF RUSSIA'S FARMS / RESISTERS ARE KILLED

As part of Stalin's first "5 Year Plan", the small farmers of the Soviet Union are forced into a collectivization scheme. The government, not the market, now controls output and sets prices. Land, livestock, and equipment become property of "the people" (the State). Reluctant farmers (kulaks) are smeared in the Soviet press as "greedy" "capitalists." Those who continue to resist the state's directives are murdered or imprisoned.

Thousands of private farmers are killed, but the really massive death tolls will occur during the famine of the early 1930's. Like all centrally planned economic schemes, in which "intellectuals" think they know better than the actual farmer, Stalin's collectivization, and other "5-Year Plans", yield only low living standards for the Soviet people.

The bestial Stalin cruelly dispossessed the Kulak farmers. Quote attributed to Stalin: "One death is a tragedy. One million deaths is a statistic." (9)

OCTOBER, 1929
THE FEDERAL RESERVE CRASHES THE STOCK MARKET / ENGINEERS 'THE GREAT DEPRESSION'

In the late 1920's, the privately owned U.S. Federal Reserve's policy of "easy money" had made it profitable for investors to borrow money at artificially low interest rates, and then purchase stocks with the money. Like two con men working a 'mark', the Zionist Fed pumps out credit while the Zionist press hypes the Stock Market "rally". As surely as night follows day, a massive bubble is inflated.

In 1929, the Fed suddenly hits the brakes on the money supply with a "tight money" policy. When the adjustment to the Fed's bubble occurs, the Stock Market collapses. Investors big and small are ruined. Instead of loosening up the money supply to enable debtors to pay down old debt, the Fed tightens even more. The sudden shortage of currency creates a tidal wave of bankruptcies across the U.S., as debtors cannot get their hands on enough money to pay off old loans. The well connected then swoop in to buy up assets at bargain prices.

The press, the Reds, and the idiot liberals will blame "capitalism" and Republican policies for the coming worldwide Great Depression, while deceitfully ignoring the deliberate role of Warburg/Rothschild Federal Reserve.

The Milwaukee Leader
HOME EDITION
BILLIONS LOST IN NEW STOCK CRASH
May Punish Senator for Aiding Tariff Lobbyists

1- Every newspaper in America led with the story of the October crash.

2- In later years, future Fed Chairman Greenspan admitted that the Fed actually caused the Great Depression. (10) ("Inadvertently" according to him)

SEPTEMBER, 1930
HITLER'S NSDAP BECOMES 2ND LARGEST PARTY IN GERMANY

The worldwide Great Depression hits debt-heavy Germany especially hard as loans from U.S. banks dry up. The people had already been worn out by the Versailles reparations, the unjust war guilt, the 1920's inflation, and chronic unemployment. There is a real fear among many that a hungry Germany may yet fall to Communism.

As a result, the NSDAP makes its first major electoral breakthrough. Hitler's party wins 6 million votes (18% of vote), increasing its number of seats in the Reichstag (German parliament) from 12, to 107. NSDAP is now second only to the 143 seats held by Germany's socialist party, the Social Democrats. The Communist Party also gains 23 seats, raising its Reichstag representation to 77 Reds in the Reichstag, plus any secret members posing as Social Democrats.

On his way up; supporters salute Hitler after the NSDAP's success in the elections. His message is spreading fast, but so are the empty promises of the Communists.

General Leon Degrelle on the education of Adolf Hilter

Belgian SS volunteer General Leon Degrelle with Hitler

"Hitler was self-taught and he made no attempt to hide the fact. The smug conceit of intellectuals, their shiny ideas packaged like so many flashlight batteries, irritated him at times. His own knowledge he had acquired through selective and unremitting study, and he knew far more than thousands of diploma-decorated academics.

I don't think anyone ever read as much as he did. He normally read one book every day, always first reading the conclusion and the index in order to gauge the work's interest for him. He had the power to extract the essence of each book and then store it in his computer-like mind. I have heard him talk about complicated scientific books with faultless precision, even at the height of the war.

His intellectual curiosity was limitless. He was readily familiar with the writings of the most diverse authors, and nothing was too complex for his comprehension. He had a deep knowledge and understanding of Buddha, Confucius and Jesus Christ, as well as Luther, Calvin, and Savonarola; of literary giants such as Dante, Schiller, Shakespeare and Goethe; and analytical writers such as Renan and Gobineau, Chamberlain and Sorel.

He trained himself in philosophy by studying Aristotle and Plato. He could quote entire paragraphs of Schopenhauer from memory, and for a long time carried a pocket edition of Schopenhauer with him. Nietzsche taught him much about willpower.

His thirst for knowledge was unquenchable. He spent hundreds of hours studying the works of Tacitus and Mommsen, military strategists such as Clausewitz, and empire builders such as Bismarck. Nothing escaped him: world history or the history of civilizations, the study of the Bible and the Talmud, Thomistic philosophy and all the masterpieces of Homer, Sophocles, Horace, Ovid, Titus Livius and Cicero. He knew Julian the Apostate as if he had been his contemporary.

His knowledge also extended to mechanics. He knew how engines worked; he understood the ballistics of various weapons; and he astonished the best medical scientists with his knowledge of medicine and biology.

The universality of Hitler's knowledge may surprise or displease those unaware of it, but it is nonetheless a historical fact: Hitler was one of the most cultivated men of this century. Many times more so than Churchill, an intellectual mediocrity; or than Pierre Laval, who had a merely cursory knowledge of history; or than Roosevelt; or Eisenhower, who never got beyond detective novels."* (11) - Leon Degrelle (1993)

1931 – 1939

DECEMBER, 1931
SHOCK CLAIM OF 6 MILLION JEWS FACING STARVATION IN SOUTH-EASTERN EUROPE

MONTREAL, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 29, 1931.

WAY LAUNCHES W DEPARTMENT

n of Communications naugurated by Canadian Pacific

NEIL NAMED CHIEF

Covers Supervision All Lines — Other notions and Retirements Noted

ing with the new year, an- sion will be added to the nts of the Canadian railway, the Department of ications. This inform- announced yesterday by ail, vice-president of the he department will have on over the company's telephone and radio ling services. ad of the department will . Neil, who succeeds John on his retirement. hanges are announced by nt Hall, as follows:

SIX MILLION JEWS FACE STARVATION

Bad Conditions in South-Eastern Europe Reported by Rabbi Wise

FEARS CRISIS AT HAND

Chairman of American Joint Distribution Committee Makes Appeal to Canadian Jewry for Help

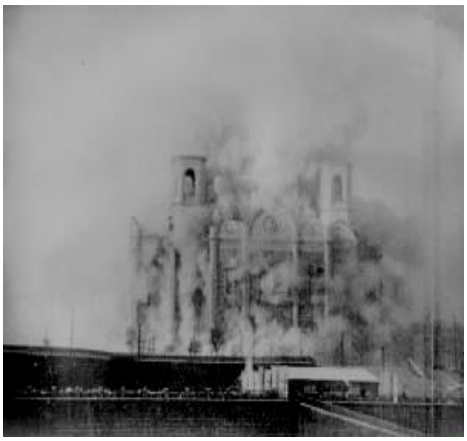
Six million Jews in Eastern Europe face starvation, and even worse, during the coming winter. If additional funds are not collected by the American Joint Distribution Committee to meet an estimated budget of $2,500,000 unprecedented havoc and misery will rule to the everlasting shame of humanity at large, Rabbi Jonah Wise, of New York, chairman for 1931, told a large gathering of leaders in Montreal Jewish communal life at a luncheon meeting at the Montefiore Club, Guy street, yesterday.

themselves and t responsible for th The Christmas of Mrs. Rutherfo S. T. Blaiklock Sutherland; whil home present Inc Angus, president; berton, honorary Mrs. W. A. Gra treasurer. The 60 children between the ages a splendid Chris On Friday they formal dinner with pudding. At thi presented prizes and obedience du senior and junio donated by Mr. six dolls for the given by Forbes great surprise, a ent for each child. Christmas seals much appreciated ren Hale.

Rotarians'

The first family real Rotary Club day in the Windso wives, sons and d the members of th ular weekly lu Over 200 guests the meeting will instead of 12.45. The speaker wil Douglas, and Mrs. ing several solos. will be broadc CKAC at 1.10 p.m.

AWARD OF $



Decision Rende

Yet again, another baseless newspaper claim of 6 million Jews facing death:

DECEMBER 5, 1931
SOVIET JEW KAGANOVICH ORDERS DEMOLITION OF THE CATHEDRAL OF CHRIST THE SAVIOR

The 340 ft. tall Cathedral of Christ the Savior is the grandest Orthodox Christian Church in the world. Completed in 1883, it had taken nearly 20 years to build, and 20more to decoratively paint its interior. But after Lenin's death, the Reds choose the location to be the site of the 'Palace of the Soviets'. By order of Stalin's Jewish minister and brother-in-law, Lazar Kaganovich, the Cathedral is dynamited and reduced to rubble. Jewish Reds watch and laugh as horrified Christians grieve over the destruction of their religious and cultural icon. Due to poor planning and lack of funds, the Palace of the Soviets never materializes. The site is turned into a swimming pool.

In 1990, the Russian Orthodox Church receives permission, from what is by then a more open Government, to rebuild the Cathedral of Christ the Savior. Though the interior is not as elaborate as the original, the massive new Cathedral is still a very impressive structure.

Christ the Savior Cathedral was dynamited, but Jewish synagogues were untouched. This is the same cathedral (since rebuilt) that will, in 2012, be defiled by the U.S. / CIA -funded feminist band, "Pussy Riot."

MARCH, 1932
THE STRANGE KIDNAPPING & MURDER OF CHARLES LINBERGH'S BABY BOY

Because of his heroism, fame and family history of political activism, the anti-Fed, anti-Globalist, Charles Lindbergh is someone the Globalists need to "keep an eye on". The kidnapping of Charles Augustus Lindbergh, Jr., the first-born son of the great aviator, becomes one of the most highly publicized crimes of the 20th century.

The 20-month-old toddler was abducted from his family home in New Jersey, on the evening of March 1, 1932 and held for ransom. Over two months later, on May 12, 1932, his body is discovered a short distance from the Lindberghs' home. A medical examination determines the cause of death as a massive skull fracture.

A German immigrant named Bruno Hauptmann is framed for the crime. In addressing his last words to his spiritual advisor, Rev. James Matthiesen, Hauptmann declares, "Ich bin absolut unschuldig an den Verbrechen, die man mir zur Last legt", which Matthiesen tells Gov. Hoffman means, "I am absolutely innocent of the crime with which I am burdened." (1)

Was this horrible crime intended as a message to Lindbergh? Some have noted that the murder occurred just before the Jewish observance of Passover (an event based on the killing of the first-born of ancient Egypt), suggesting that the killing may have had ritualistic implications.

The case against the German Hauptmann was full of holes.

1932-1936
LOUIS McFADDEN EXPOSES THE FED…THEN HE DIES

Louis McFadden became the latest enemy of the NWO to die suddenly.

U.S. unemployment tops 23%. The Zio-Globo press blames Hoover, the Republicans, and "unregulated capitalism" for the crisis. There are calls for more government action.

A prominent Congressman who dares to accuse the Fed is the Chairman of the House Banking Committee: Louis McFadden (R-PA). McFadden puts the blame directly on the international bankers for fomenting the Russian Revolution, crashing the US economy, and robbing the American people. McFadden pulls no punches:

"(The Fed) was deceitfully and disloyally foisted upon this country by the bankers who came here from Europe and repaid us for our hospitality by undermining our American institutions. Those bankers took money out of this country to finance Japan in a war against Russia. They financed Trotsky's passage from New York to Russia so that he might assist in the destruction of the Russian Empire. ...What king ever robbed his subjects to such an extent as the Federal Reserve has robbed us?" (2)

In 1933, McFadden introduces articles of impeachment for the Secretary of the Treasury, two assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, the entire Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve, and the officers and the directors of its twelve regional banks. In 1936, McFadden dies of a "sudden illness" after dining at a banquet while on a visit to New York.

1932
STALIN & KAGANOVICH ENGINEER ANOTHER FAMINE

The Holodomor (Ukrainian translation: Killing by hunger) was a man-made famine occurring mainly, but not exclusively, in the Ukrainian Republic of the Soviet Union during 1932-33. The famine was caused partly by the folly of Stalin's latest economic scheme, and partly due to a deliberate, strategic terror plan engineered by Stalin's powerful Jewish brother-in-law, Lazar Kaganovich.

Encyclopedia Britannica estimates 8 million people, 5 million of them Ukrainian, were starved to death by the Stalin-Kaganovich famine. Some estimates run as high as 10 million. The famine-genocide is aimed at stamping out anti-communist resistance as well as starving anti-Red peasants in Belarus, Kazakhstan and Russia.

Despite Soviet denials of the famine and a news blackout in most of the US Zionist/Globalist press, the truth of the Holodomor was indeed known to the West. Unlike Lenin's terror famine of 1921, this time no outside assistance is permitted into the Soviet Union. Millions die a slow death and people resort to cannibalism. With this famine, Stalin and his henchmen destroy any remaining resistance to the Red Revolution.

Lazar Kaganovich: "The Butcher of Ukraine" had also blown up the Cathedral of Christ the Savior.

JULY & NOVEMBER, 1932
NSDAP SCORES BIG IN TWO ELECTIONS / BECOMES LARGEST PARTY IN REICHSTAG

German elections in 1932 are held under violent conditions. NSDAP "brown shirts" clash in the streets with Red paramilitary. Hitler's party scores major gains, winning 230 Reichstag seats. It is now the largest political body, but it is still not a majority in the 608 member body.

Political deadlocks trigger another election in November: NSDAP: 196, Social Democrats: 121, Communists: 100, Center Party: 70, and 9 minor parties split 100 seats. Germany's chaotic politics are paralyzed and divided.

The brutal "austerity" policies of Chancellor Heinrich Brüning had shrunk the economy by about 25%, but still did not prevent the German budget deficit from growing. Unemployment tops 30% as desperate Germans commit suicide by the 10's of 1000's.

In addition to a Parliamentary Reichstag and a Chancellor, Germany has a President with unique powers. President Paul von Hindenburg was a World War I Field Marshall and is a national hero. Politically, he is a non-Party Independent. On the basis of the NSDAP's 196 seats, and in order to end the gridlock, Hitler asks Hindenburg to appoint him as Chancellor. Hindenburg refuses Hitler's request.

1932 Parade: As economic conditions in Germany worsen, NSDAP becomes the largest political party. Hitler now has a platform for addressing the nation.

1933
PRESIDENT HINDENBURG NAMES HITLER AS CHANCELLOR / REDS IMMEDIATELY CALL FOR LABOR STRIKES

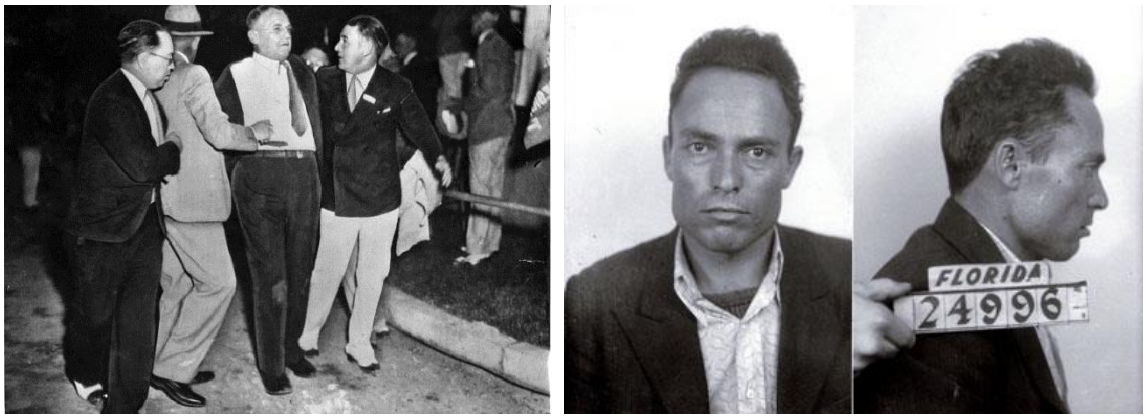
After two parliamentary elections in 1933, Germany remains ungovernable as the Socialist and Communist Parties continue to oppose the NSDAP. President Hindenburg is concerned that the Reds will exploit the chaos and attempt another revolution in Germany. Hitler's NSDAP is the only group that can prevent this.

To protect Germany from Communism, Hindenburg relents and allows Hitler to become Chancellor of Germany. Hitler's powers are limited, but the NSDAP now holds the upper hand in what is still a very unstable government.

The Communist Trade Union leaders move quickly to destabilize Hitler, calling for massive strikes. Meanwhile in the U.S., the Zionist Sulzberger-owned New York Times kicks off an anti-Hitler campaign on its front page of January 31, 1933. Zionist Sarnoff's NBC and Zionist Paley's CBS soon follow.

1- Chancellor Hitler shows his respect for Marshal Hindenburg

2- A Communist propaganda poster threatens violence against the Hitler-Hindenburg system.



FEBRUARY, 1933
RED MURDERS THE MAYOR OF CHICAGO AS HE SHAKES HANDS WITH PRESIDENT-ELECT FDR

While shaking hands with President-elect Roosevelt in Miami, Florida, Chicago Mayor Anton Cermak is fatally wounded when anarchist Giuseppe Zangara, fires multiple shots. In addition to Cermak, Zangara hits four other people, one of whom, a woman, also died of her injuries.

Official history holds that Zangara, who had been an expert marksman in the Italian Army, was really intending to kill Roosevelt but suddenly forgot how to shoot properly – killing Cermak and hitting four others instead. But why would the Reds want to kill the man who was just about to be sworn-in as the reddest President in U.S. history?

A more plausible explanation is that the Red patsy fanatic was put forth for the purpose of "sending a message" to FDR – "obey, or next time it will be you".

On March 20, 1933, after spending only 10 days on Death Row, Zangara is executed in Old Sparky, the electric chair at Florida State Prison.

Cermack after the shooting and Red assassin Zangara's mug shots.

FEBRUARY, 1933
RED TERRORIST SETS FIRE TO THE REICHSTAG / HITLER IS GRANTED EMERGENCY POWERS

Four weeks after Hitler's appointment as Chancellor, angry Reds set the Reichstag (Parliament) on fire. Local police catch a Dutch Communist named Marinus Vander Lubbe on the premises. He had just arrived in Germany a few weeks ago. The fire was to have been the start of the Red-instigated civil war, aimed at toppling the crumbling Weimar state before Hitler and the NSDAP could establish themselves.

Hindenburg and Hitler act fast. Emergency decrees are issued and Communist leaders are rounded up. The Red Revolution backfires. Instead of plunging Germany into civil war, the Reichstag Fire starts a chain of events that leads to the The Enabling Act and Hitler's consolidation of power. NSDAP becomes Germany's only Party as the Weimar Republic is swept away by The Third Reich, led by "The Fuehrer" (leader).

Some modern historians promote the theory that Hitler staged the fire himself and then blamed the Reds for it. There is no evidence at all to support this theory. It is a baseless claim that ignores both the violent history and the standard destabilization tactics that the Communists are well known for.

The Reichstag fire backfired on the Communists! Above: Brainwashed Red drifter Marinus Vander Lubbe

MARCH, 1933
FDR BECOMES PRESIDENT AND SERVES THE NEW WORLD ORDER

New York Governor and Globalist puppet Franklin Delano Roosevelt, (FDR) defeats President Hoover in a 1932 landslide. Upon taking office in 1933, FDR (a cousin of Teddy Roosevelt) moves quickly to remake America into a welfare state. His expensive schemes, known as "The New Deal" take shape in "the first 100 days".

FDR uses the economic crisis, which was created by his handlers, as the pretext for this expansion of government power, ignoring the fact that it was the Federal Reserve's artificial manipulation of currency and stocks, not the free market that caused the crisis.

The New Deal will be a colossal failure. It's reckless spending, high taxes, and ballooning deficits will only prolong the Depression and lead to even more expensive schemes, exactly what the Globalist Fed bankers want. The debt-driven economic calamity that the U.S. is headed towards today has its roots in FDR's fundamental transformation of the American Republic into a perpetual warfare and welfare state.

1- The grinning phony will surpass the warmongering evil of cousin Teddy.

2- FDR with billionaire backer and unofficial "advisor", Bernard Baruch. At that time, Baruch was the most powerful of the New York Jewish financiers.

MARCH, 1933
HITLER BECOMES FUEHRER AND DEFIES THE NEW WORLD ORDER

Like FDR, Hitler came into true authoritative power in March 1933. Like FDR, Hitler inherits an economic disaster. Like FDR, Hitler's "first 100 days" in office are marked by a flurry of determined activity. But the similarities end there.

Whereas FDR is implementing all of the Globalists' economic and foreign policy plans, Hitler is openly defying the Globalists. He implements the following policies:

 Pulls Germany out of the Globalist League of Nations
 Bans the Communist Party and arrests its leaders
* Replaces the national Marxist Trade Unions with company unions
* Implements the "Strength Through Joy" affordable luxury vacation program
* Establishes NSDAP as Germany's only political Party
* Ends reparations payments from the Versailles Treaty/Dawes Plan
* Takes control of Germany's Reichsbank and issues National currency
* Restricts Jewish ownership of radio and newspapers
* Cuts taxes and provides incentives for mothers to stay home and raise children

* Relaxes the strict “gun control” laws of the previous government
* Rebuilds German infrastructure and initiates the Autobahn Highway system

The Globalists & Marxists have lost control of Germany!

Hitler becomes a living legend as his policies begin to put Germany back on its feet. Meanwhile, a subtle propaganda campaign is launched against him in the West.

MARCH, 1933
INTERNATIONAL JEWRY DECLARES WAR ON GERMANY

Jewish leaders formally issue a "Declaration of War" against Germany. On March 23, 1933, 20,000 Jews protest at New York's City Hall. Rallies and boycotts are directed against German goods. The front page of the March 24, London Daily Express carries the headline: “Judea Declares War on Germany”.

Jewish leaders are quoted as calling for “Holy War" against the German people:

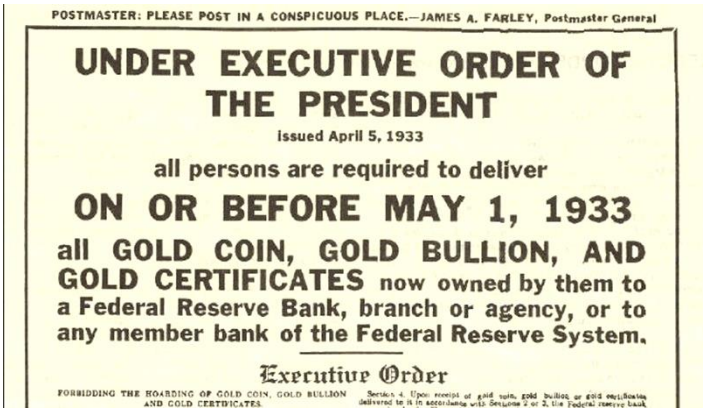
"The Jewish wholesaler will quit his house, the banker his stock exchange, the merchant his business and the beggar his humble hut, in order to join the holy war against Hitler's people. ....Germany is now confronted with an international boycott of its trade, its finances, and its industry.” (3)

On March 27, '33, 40,000 Jews and other assorted Reds gather in Madison Square Garden to protest the new Chancellor. The NY Daily News front page blares: "40,000 Roar Protest Here Against Hitler."

Worldwide Jewish leadership is firing the opening propaganda shots of what, in due time, will escalate into World War II. Hitler responds to the false "atrocity" charges being made against the new Germany, stating on March 28: "Lies and slander of positively hair-raising perversity are being launched against Germany." (4)

1- 1933 / Daily Express (London): "Judea Declares War on Germany."

2- 1933 / NY Daily New: 40,000 Roar Protest Against Hitler



International Jewry openly declares a sanctions war on Germany.

APRIL, 1933
FDR BANS THE PRIVATE OWNERSHIP OF GOLD / FED STEALS THE GOLD

Citing an "emergency", as all tyrants do, FDR signs Executive Order 6102 "forbidding the Hoarding of gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates within the continental United States". (5) Under the false pretext of "economic stabilization", the order criminalizes the possession of monetary gold by any individual, partnership, or corporation.

Americans are required to deliver all but a small amount of gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates owned by them to the privately owned Federal Reserve, in exchange for $20.67 (equivalent to $372.75 today) per troy ounce. Violation of the order is punishable by fine up to $10,000 (equivalent to $180,334 today) or up to ten years in prison, or both!

Numerous Americans are arrested and imprisoned for possession of Gold. In those cases, their Gold is seized without compensation.

POSTMASTER: PLEASE POST IN A CONSPICUOUS PLACE.—JAMES A. FARLEY, Postmaster General

UNDER EXECUTIVE ORDER OF THE PRESIDENT

issued April 5, 1933

all persons are required to deliver

ON OR BEFORE MAY 1, 1933

all GOLD COIN, GOLD BULLION, AND GOLD CERTIFICATES now owned by them to a Federal Reserve Bank, branch or agency, or to any member bank of the Federal Reserve System.

Executive Order

FORBIDDING THE HOARDING OF GOLD COIN, GOLD BULLION AND GOLD CERTIFICATES

FDR to America: "Turn your coins in to my friends at the Fed, or go to jail!"

JUNE, 1933
ZIONIST – GLOBALIST FEDERAL RESERVE CHAIRMAN BUYS THE WASHINGTON POST

The Washington Post is one of many businesses to go bankrupt during the Great Depression. Owner Ned McLean unloads The Post at a bankruptcy auction. The buyer is Zionist Federal Reserve Chairman Eugene Meyer Having just stepped down from the Federal Reserve; Meyer immediately changes The Post's editorial policy, transforming the influential newspaper into a pro-FDR, anti-Germany, and soft-on-Stalin propaganda sheet. In 1940, Meyer will fire the Post's pacifist editor for refusing to endorse U.S. intervention in World War II (6).

The Post will lose money for 20 more years, but Meyer doesn't care. He bought the Post for influence, not profit. The Post will later be handed down to Meyer's daughter, the late Katherine Meyer-Graham.

With tension between International Jewry and Germany building, it is ESSENTIAL to note that the four most powerful media sources in America are now ALL under Jewish ownership.

CBS: Paley, NBC: Sarnoff, NY Times: Ochs-Sulzberger, Washington Post: Meyer

A CLEAN SWEEP! When Fed Chairman Eugene Meyer (right) purchased the Washington Post, it gave the Globalist-Zionist moguls a clean sweep of the Big 4 major media giants; and the ability to distort the truth about Hitler and Germany.

FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER

Count Potocki leaving the White House

"Above all, propaganda here (in the U.S.) is entirely in Jewish hands. When bearing public ignorance in mind, their propaganda is so effective that people have no real knowledge of the true state of affairs in Europe. President Roosevelt has been given the power to create huge reserves in armaments for a future war which the Jews are deliberately heading for." (1934) (7)

Count Jerzy Potocki / Polish Ambassador to the U.S.

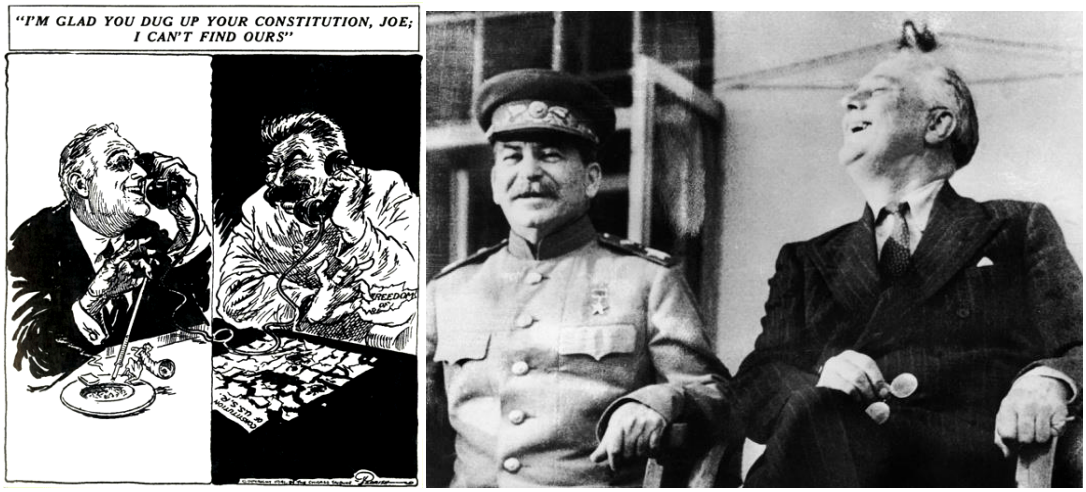
1930's
THE TYRANNICAL AND STUPID EDICTS OF THE NEW DEAL

Whether they are pro or con, when most people think of the New Deal, massive 'relief' programs and 'make work' schemes come to mind. But the New Deal's dictatorial aspects are often overlooked. The totalitarian and counterproductive, dictates associated with the National Recovery Act (NRA) include wage-controls, price-controls, production-controls, as well as mandates governing agriculture and industry.

To manipulate prices upward so that un-payable business loans can be repaid, farmers are ordered to kill livestock as millions go hungry during the Great Depression! In one well known case, a New Jersey tailor named Jacob Maged is arrested and convicted for charging too little to press suits. Upon his release after 3 days, Maged is forced to increase his prices and display a blue NRA sticker on his shop window. (8)

In addition to the NRA, there is the Communist Harry Hopkins' Works Progress Administration (WPA) - referred to by its critics as "We Piddle Around". The WPA does build some useful infrastructure, but is, at its core, an expensive and inefficient 'make-work' scheme that becomes the object of many sarcastic stories about digging and filling up holes.

Left: The "criminal" tailor Maged was arrested, fined, forced to raise his prices, and obediently put an NRA sign in his shop window.



Right: New Deal insanity. Killing and wasting cattle is good for the economy?!

NOVEMBER, 1933
FDR GRANTS DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION TO THE SOVIET UNION (USSR)

Ever since the Reds seized power in Russia, three consecutive U.S. Presidents have refused to recognize the criminal regime. Apart from its genocidal actions towards its own captive people, the Communist International (Comintern) openly states that its' goal is to overthrow all "bourgeois" governments, including America's.

FDR ignores these realties and pleases his Globalist masters by reversing this policy. The normalization of relations is a great benefit to the USSR, and will help the Soviets, and international communism, to grow stronger.

As Hitler's Germany continues to be vilified for imaginary offenses; the real crimes of Stalin & Kaganovich are ignored by the media.

1930's cartoon notes the ideological similarities between FDR and Stalin. The two will forge a close relationship during the coming war years.

JUNE 30, 1934
'THE NIGHT OF THE LONG KNIVES' / LEFT WING COUP ATTEMPT IS SUPPRESSED

More than one year into Hitler's rule, Nationalist Marxist and homosexual Ernst Roehm is threatening a 2nd revolution to "redistribute wealth". Roehm commands the massive paramilitary organization known as the SA (Brownshirts), whose members have a reputation for street violence. German military brass despises Roehm and fears his ambition to absorb them into the SA under his own leadership.

Facing an imminent coup attempt from these former allies, Hitler's government carries out 'Operation Hummingbird'; the purge of Roehm's out-of-control left-wing faction. Many of the coup plotters are executed and hundreds are arrested. The SA now comes under Hitler's command and control as western Jewish newspapers squeal about what they refer to as "The Night of the Long Knives".

Coup-plotter Roehm and his 'brownshirts' had their own agenda for Germany.

MAY 12, 1935
THE SUDDEN DEATH OF POLISH MARSHAL PILSUDSKI IS BAD NEWS FOR GERMANY

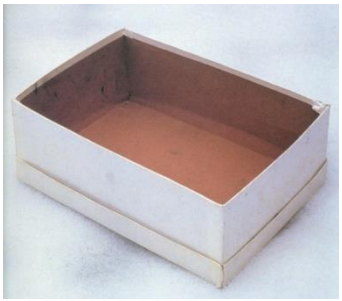
Polish leader Marshal Jozef Pilsudski had been on good terms with Hitler. Pilsudski had actually congratulated Hitler on winning the 1933 elections, and the German-Polish Non-Aggression Pact was signed just 10 months afterwards. Not surprisingly, the Polish Communist Party denounced Pilsudski as a "fascist and a capitalist".

According to the Non-Aggression Pact, both countries pledge to resolve their problems through negotiations, not armed conflict. Just before his death, Pilsudski re-emphasized that Poland should maintain neutral relations with Germany.

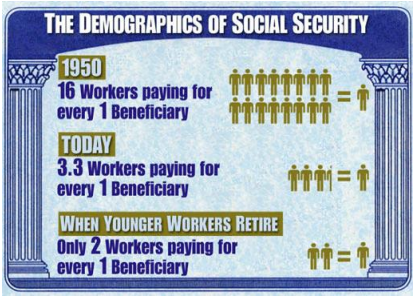
The popular Marshal will eventually be succeeded by the pompous warmonger, Marshal Edward Rydz-Smigly. Pilsudski's death, and Smigly's rise, will prove to be great setbacks for Germany - facts which Hitler will reiterate during the closing weeks of World War II.

1- Hitler attends a Berlin Memorial Service held in honor of Pilsudski, whom he respected greatly.

2- Pilsudski and his Foreign Minister Beck (left) make peace with German Minister for Propaganda & Public Enlightenment, Joseph Goebbels, and German Ambassador to Poland, von Moltke.



AUGUST, 1935
FDR SIGNS THE SOCIAL SECURITY PYRAMID SCHEME INTO LAW



FDR promises the American people that a forced savings plan ("like a shoebox"), with dollar for dollar employer matching will be there for them in old age. In reality, Social Security TAXES have never funded old age. The sneaky taxes that are collected are used to pay current SS recipients; with any excess used to purchase the government bonds that fund America's out-of-control welfare and warfare state. There is no "shoe-box" and there never was!

Every current American senior citizen has therefore been cheated out of what would have been a privately self-funded small fortune at retirement. Just imagine what nearly 50 years of employee-employer forced savings, intelligently diversified and with a reasonable rate of compound growth would have accumulated to in our "shoe-boxes".

Instead, FDR's monstrous pyramid scheme is now busting America's multi-trillion dollar budget and can only be kept afloat by more debt and currency debasement caused by the Fed's printed money. Many Seniors barely survive as younger people already know that FDR's SS will not support them in old age.

1 & 2: The 'shoe-box' is empty! It was a Pyramid Scheme all along.

3- Chile's Social Security system truly is a mostly self-funded private "shoe box", and the people LOVE it!

SEPTEMBER, 1935
THE INVESTIGATION AND ASSASSINATION OF HUEY LONG

Nicknamed "Kingfish", the colorful Huey Long served as Louisiana Governor of Louisiana ('28–'32) and U.S. Senator ('32 -'35), He was noted for his honesty and populism. Long had backed FDR, but split with him over FDR's ties to the New York Bankers. Long accuses FDR of being a liar. FDR comes to despise Huey Long, referring to him and General Douglass Macarthur as "the two most dangerous men in America". To intimidate and discredit him, FDR has Long investigated by the IRS. The Feds fail to find any illegality.

At the height of his fame, Long lashes out at the NWO bankers in his "Barbeque Speech":

"How many men ever went to a barbecue and would let one man take off the table what's intended for nine-tenths of the people to eat? The only way you will be able to feed the balance of the people is to make that man come back and bring back some of that grub he ain't got no business with. How are you going to feed the balance of the people? What's Morgan and Baruch and Rockefeller gonna do with all that grub?" (9)

Long prepares to mount a 1936 challenge to FDR from within the Democrat Party. But on Sept. 8, '35, Dr. Carl Weiss confronts Long at the State Capitol and is said to have fired a bullet into Long's abdomen. Rather than take Weiss alive, bodyguards shoot him 60 times! (He won't be talking!) One theory is that Weiss was set up as a patsy to punch Long in the face while a guard actually shoots Long in the back.

1: Long denounces FDR and the Eastern banking class.

2: Carl Weiss, the patsy "assassin" is needlessly shot to death (ala Lee Harvey Oswald and John Wilkes Booth)

3: Long was actually recovering before his condition "worsened'.

1930's
FDR'S ORDERS THE IRS TO ABUSE HIS CRITICS

Like Cousin Teddy, the egomaniac FDR does not respond well to criticism. The tyrant uses the IRS against a host of political rivals and opponents, ranging from populist Sen. Huey Long (D) of Louisiana, United Mine Workers leader John Lewis, Rep. Hamilton Fish (R) of New York, Chicago Tribune publisher Robert "Colonel" McCormick, Philadelphia Inquirer publisher Moses Annenberg (a fierce opponent of the New Deal), and, most notably, former Republican Treasury Secretary Andrew Mellon. (10)

FDR's IRS inspectors and prosecutors focused on Mellon's financial records, especially whether deductions for his philanthropic activities amounted to tax evasion. The great philanthropist, who had given so much back to society, strongly denied the accusations. Even after IRS agents found nothing irregular, FDR's Justice Department pursued the investigation.

A federal grand jury acquits Mellon of tax fraud in 1934. But the IRS is still pursuing claims against Mellon for at least $3 million in back taxes. Mellon's "tax trial" lasts a grueling 14 months. Possibly as the partial result of the enormous stress that FDR's had imposed him, the 82 year old Mellon dies the next year.

Writes former New York Times reporter David Burnham, author of A Law Unto Itself: Power, Politics, and the IRS:

"Although Richard Nixon was notorious for treating the I.R.S. as though it were his private domain, the records show that Franklin Delano Roosevelt may have set the stage for the use of the tax agency for political purposes by most subsequent Presidents," (11)

1- Beneath the phony smile, FDR was a cruel bastard who destroyed anyone who opposed him. His abuse may have even killed Richard Mellon.

2- As Treasury Secretary following World War I, Richard Mellon was one of the key architects of President Harding's 1920's debt reduction and National recovery. Mellon's generous philanthropy – with HIS money - amounts to far more than what FDR ever did with public money.

NOVEMBER, 1935
WINSTON CHURCHILL PRAISES HITLER, THEN DROPS A 'POISON PILL'

By November of 1935, it has become clear to the world that the anti-German atrocity stories were baseless. The Jewish boycott effort has failed; Hitler has renounced any claims to the disputed Alsace-Lorraine region (France); and the rapid economic and social recovery of Germany is self-evident. There are Monarchs, Prime Ministers, politicians, clergymen, artists and poets from across Europe who are publicly singing the praises of 'The Fuehrer'. Even some Americans have come to admire him from afar.

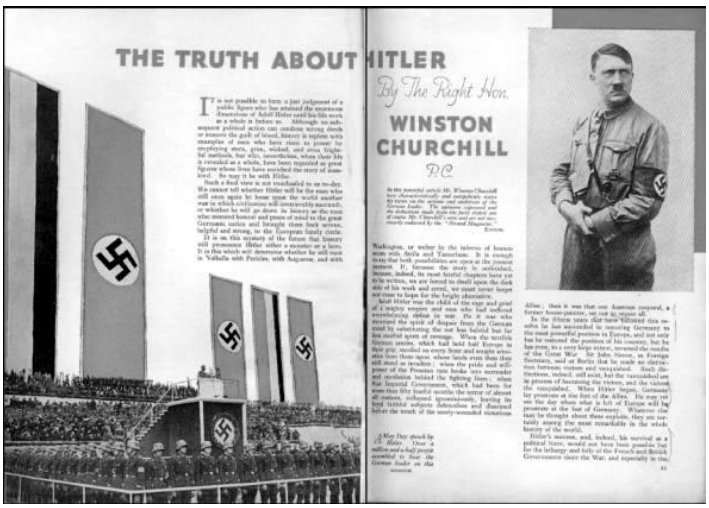
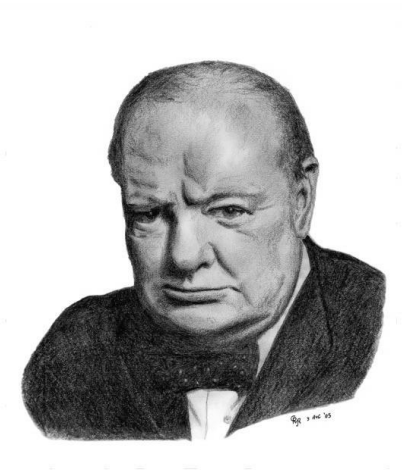
Therefore, in order for the Globalist warmongers to impose their second war against Germany, they must reboot their hate campaign gradually. Toward that end, Zionist puppet Winston Churchill pens an article for Strand Magazine, entitled, 'The Truth About Hitler'. So as not to sound like the raving, warmongering lunatic that he truly is, Churchill, in order to *appear "*objective", makes a remarkable concession:



"One may dislike Hitler's system and yet admire his patriotic achievement. If our country were defeated, I hope we should find a champion as indomitable to restore our courage and lead us back to our place among the nations." (12)

But further down in the article, the "objective" Churchill drops the other shoe by suggesting that Germany may, possibly, yet turn out to be a threat to world peace:

"We cannot tell whether Hitler will be the man who will once again let loose upon the world another war in which civilization will irretrievably succumb, or whether he will go down in history as the man who restored honour and peace of mind to the great Germanic nation and brought them back serene, helpful and strong, to the European family circle.



It is on this mystery of the future that history will pronounce Hitler either as a monster or a hero. It is this which will determine whether he will rank in Valhalla with Pericles, with Augustus, and with Washington, or welter in the inferno of human scorn with Attila and Tamerlain. It is enough to say that both possibilities are open at the present moment." (13)

The German press and Foreign Ministry are quick to express displeasure with Churchill's under-handed and baseless speculative comparison of Hitler to genocidal Hun and Mongol leaders from antiquity. But Churchill's anti-German hate campaign is just getting started, along with his rise to political influence.

THE TRUTH ABOUT HITLER

By The Right Hon.
WINSTON CHURCHILL
P.C.

Strand Magazine Nov 1935, Churchill: The Truth about Hitler Page 10-11

Slowly but surely, the ambitious killer of the Lusitania is coming back from the political graveyard he had been banished to.

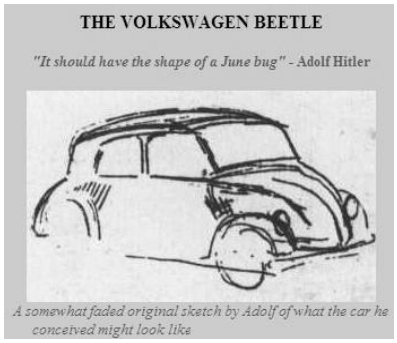
FEBRUARY 4, 1936
THE MURDER OF WILHELM GUSTLOFF

Wilhelm Gustloff had founded the Swiss branch of the NSDAP in 1932. A Jewish student named David Frankfurter, heeding the worldwide call for Jewish "Holy War" against the German people, visits Gustloff's home. Hedwig Gustloff shows the killer into the study, asking him to wait since her husband was on the telephone. When Gustloff comes to meet his unexpected guest, Frankfurter draws his pistol and shoots him 5 times. Hedwig screams and cries hysterically.

Germans and German Swiss are outraged at the murder. Hitler attends Gustloff's funeral and then names a luxury ship, christened by his widow, in Gustloff's honor. The Swiss sentence Frankfurter to 18 years, but he will be pardoned after World War II, before moving to Israel. In 1945, on what would have been Gustloff's 50th birthday, the ship named after him will make history as the greatest sea disaster ever.

Wilhelm Gustloff (left) was murdered by David Frankfurter as his wife watched in horror. After the war, Frankfurter (center & right) was allowed to live out the rest of his life in Israel.

1933-1936
THE MIRACLE OF THE GERMAN RECOVERY



It has been 3 years since Hitler began his program for economic recovery. It is now the most stunning economic revival in world history. (14) While the world remains mired in the Great Depression, Germany's once dead economy booms.

Unemployment, which had been over 30% a few years ago, is now under 5%. Productivity is way up, as are wages. By freeing Germany from the heavy taxation of the Weimar Republic, the cruel burden of the Versailles Treaty, and the perpetual interest costs of Weimar's debt-based Central Bank currency, Hitler has unleashed the private economy while using public spending very wisely.

Unlike FDR's wasteful public works programs, Hitler's public works are useful investments, such as the national highway system which Hitler began building in 1933 (The Autobahn). Hitler, a great admirer of Henry Ford, sketched the original prototype for the Volkswagen (The People's Wagon) and suggested to Ferdinand Porsche that, "It should have the shape of a June bug". Hitler wanted every German family to be able to buy a car and take a vacation.

Low taxes, responsible debt, intelligent planning, lean government, sound currency, and a business friendly environment are the secrets of Hitler's economic miracle, and of his extraordinary popularity among a grateful German people, including many former liberals who were once Communist voters.

1- Hitler understood the basic principles of automotive engineering. He consulted with Ferdinand Porsche on the manufacture of the Volkswagen; the prototype for which Hitler drew himself (Image # 2)

3 -Henry Ford receives the Grand Cross of the German Eagle from the German consul-general of Cleveland

Along with economic revival, the re-born Germany experiences a cultural and moral rebirth. The NSDAP, whose membership is open to all Germans of sound character, cleans up the pornography and debauchery that thrived under the Weimar State. Classic art makes a comeback, as "modern art" is relegated to its proper status as an object of ridicule. The future is looking bright for Germany. Before the German model can spread to other nations, the dark forces of The New World Order must destroy it.

By 1936, support for Hitler in Germany is near universal. Even the formerly pro-Marxist liberals have been won over by his achievements. Photos and films of happy Germans and of Hitler smiling are deliberately censored by the Zionist-Globalist media.

1- Hitler turns first shovel of dirt for the Autobahn project.

2- Overjoyed adoring German crowds greeted Hitler everywhere.

3- Vacation-loving Germans were now the happiest people in Europe.

BEFORE & AFTER

1- The 1970's Broadway play and Hollywood film, 'Cabaret', depicts the depraved "transgender" night life of pre-Hitler Berlin. 2- Hitler's youth groups promoted virtue, discipline and clean living.

Due to the war, Hitler's grand vision (models above) to make Berlin the architectural and cultural wonder of the world would never be realized.

FEBRUARY, 1936
IN AN INTERVIEW WITH LONDON'S 'DAILY MIRROR', HITLER OFFERS FRIENDSHIP TO THE WORLD

Daily Mirror

THE DAILY PICTURE NEWSPAPER WITH THE LARGEST NET SALE

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 29, 1936

HITLER'S "LET'S BE FRIENDS" PLEA TO WORLD

An Exclusive Interview with "Daily Mirror"

"I APPEAL TO REASON"

Passionately ... fervently ... in the plain words of a Man of the People, Adolf Hitler, Leader and Master of Germany, in an exclusive interview with the "Daily Mirror" yesterday, pleaded with the world—

"LET'S BE FRIENDS"

"I appeal to reason in international affairs," he said. "I want to show that the idea of eternal enmity is wrong. We are not hereditary enemies."

The "Daily Mirror" challenged his views with those in his book, "My Struggle." "My justification," said the Leader, "I shall write in the great book of history."

Man of Destiny Speaks

Rest of the News

"I appeal to reason in international affairs. I want to show that the idea of eternal enmity is wrong. We are not hereditary enemies." - Hitler

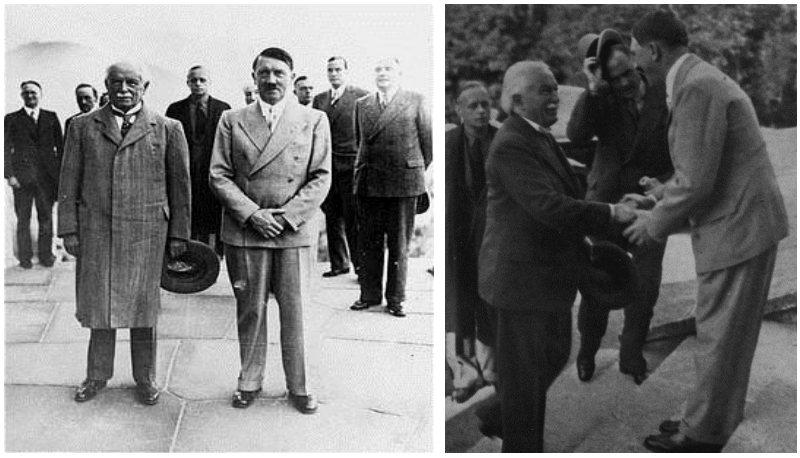
FORBIDDEN PHOTOS OF ADOLF HITLER

The images of Hitler shown by the western Yellow Press of his day, as well as the modern day history books and TV documentaries, are careful never to show a smiling Hitler with children, animals, women, or adoring German crowds. This serves to conceal the fact that he had a soft heart and a warm fondness for children and animals; so much so that he was a vegetarian.

www.prussianpoland.com

© Wide World Photos

Focal Point Publications



FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"It is not the Germany of the decade that followed the war- broken, dejected and bowed down with a sense of apprehension and impotence. It is now full of hope and confidence, and of a renewed sense of determination to lead its own life without interference from any influence outside its own frontiers. One man has accomplished this miracle. He is a born leader of men. A magnetic and dynamic personality with a single-minded purpose, a resolute will and a dauntless heart.

As to his popularity, there can be no manner of doubt. The old trust him; the young idolize him. It is not the admiration accorded to a popular leader. It is the worship of a national hero who has saved his country from utter despondence and degradation..... I have never met a happier people than the Germans."

-David Lloyd George, Ex-Prime Minister, UK, 9-17-36 (15)

MAY, 1936
IN NEW YORK TIMES, GERMANY IS ACCUSED OF A "HOLOCAUST" FIVE YEARS BEFORE THE JEWS WERE EVEN INTERNED!

AMERICANS APPEAL FOR JEWISH REFUGE

Pro-Palestine Federation Asks Britain to Take a Strong Course in Holy Land.

AIMS OF MANDATE CITED

Petition Urges It Be Made Clear to "Turbulent Element" That Those Will Be Carried Out.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 30—A petition addressed to Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin expressive of the hope that Great Britain will steer a course favoring the establishment of a free Jewish nation in Palestine such as would provide refuge for millions of persecuted Jews in Eastern Europe and Germany was presented to Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, today by a Christian delegation representing the Pro-Palestine Federation of America. The petition, stressed the intolerable sufferings of the millions of Jews in the European holocaust.

Virgin Islands Policy

It is suggested that such a step by the British Government by the Pro-Palestine federation would be in line with the policy of the United States in the Virgin Islands, where slavery and the slave trade were abolished by the Danish Government over a century ago and the islands are now governed by the United States as a possession.

The petition, signed by Secretary Harold Ickes, president of the Pro-Palestine Federation of America; Felix Frankfurter, associate justice of the Supreme Court; John Haynes Holmes, Commander Richard E. Byrd, Senator Robert F. Wagner, Governor Herbert H. Lehman of New York and Governor Harry W. Nice of Maryland, was presented to Sir Ronald by Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, chairman of the Pro-Palestine Federation of America, and Rabbi Abba Hillel Silver, both of Cleveland. Rabbi Silver is also president of the Zionist Organization of America.

Seat of Politics

The text of the petition follows: "Whereas, the Jewish people throughout the world has proved its loyalty, and whereas many Jews have given their lives in the defense of the countries of persecution and particularly in the defense of Germany in the World War, and whereas the Jewish people throughout the world has made great contributions to the culture and civilization of the countries in which they live, and whereas England was one of the great champions of the rights of the Jewish people throughout the world in the past, and whereas the Jewish people throughout the world recognizes that the right to establish a Jewish National Home in Palestine was granted to the Jewish people as a matter of right and not of favor, be it therefore resolved

The New York Times
Published: May 31, 1936
Copyright © The New York Times

Europe is at peace and the Jews who have remained in Germany are prospering in the revitalized economy; 75% of them being middle class or higher. Even the legendary Max Warburg, though stripped of his dominance over Germany's Central Bank, chose to stay in Germany until 1938.

A group of "Christians" fronting for the Chicago and New York Zionists now makes the ridiculous claim of a "European Holocaust". This claim forms the basis of the case for the establishment of a Jewish State in Palestine; which the British had conquered as part of a World War I payoff to the Zionists for their help in dragging the U.S. into the war on Britain's side. Not content with mass immigration to Palestine (The British Mandate), the Zionists, speaking through their "Christian" front men and dupes, now want the British to crack down on the oppressed Arabs and give the Jews an actual nation of their own. The New York Times reported on this bizarre allegation:

"WASHINGTON, May 30 - A petition addressed to Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin expressive of the hope that Great Britain will steer a course favoring the establishment of a free Jewish nation in Palestine such as would provide refuge for millions of persecuted Jews in Eastern Europe and Germany was presented to Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, today by a Christian delegation representing the Pro-Palestine Federation of America ... The petition, stressed the intolerable sufferings of the millions of Jews *in "the European holocaust."* (16)

Oops! It appears as though some over-eager Zionist went off the script and let the fake ‘Holocaust” cat out of the bag a full 5 years too soon!

AUGUST, 1936
THE BERLIN OLYMPICS / HITLER AND JESSE OWENS

The 1936 Olympics had been awarded to Germany before Hitler became Chancellor. So despite the protests of Jewish groups, it is too late to take the games away. The games showcase the new Germany. Visitors are impressed at the spirit and positive outlook of the German people. Germany wins more medals than any other nation, but black American Jesse Owens is the biggest star of the games.

The German crowd cheers wildly for Owens as he wins 4 Gold Medals as both a sprinter and long jumper. But the Zionist media uses Owens to vilify Hitler. It was reported then, and repeated endlessly ever since, that Hitler "snubbed" Owens because he was black, storming out of the stadium in a fit of rage when Owens won his first race. This "snub" makes Hitler seem petty and rude in the eyes of the world. But the story of the Owens' “snub” is a big lie.

Owens himself confirms that the “snub” story is a hoax, stating:

“When I passed the Chancellor, he arose, waved his hand at me, and I waved back. I think the writers showed bad taste in criticizing the man of the hour (Hitler) in Germany.” (17)

Years later, in his autobiography, Owens again clarifies:

"Hitler didn’t snub me -it was FDR who snubbed me. The president didn’t even send me a telegram." (18)

DAY LONG TO HEAR ABOU

THE AFRO-AMERICAN

NATIONAL

"ADOLF" SNUBS U.S. LADS

Hitler Won't Shake Hands

Intentional Discourtesy Is Shown Owens, Johnson

Stockholders of Bank Must Pay $30,000

Longest, Legs Longest Stride

Joe Louis and Sharkey in Gay Good Humor

1- The "snub" of Jesse Owens was a false propaganda story.

2- Owens was befriended by German long-jump competitor Luz Long. They became pen pals.

1936 – 1939
THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR / NATIONALISTS vs REDS

Nationalist General Francisco Franco leads a rebellion against a democratic socialist government in Spain. The country is deeply divided, with Socialists, Communists, and liberals fighting for the government, and Nationalists, conservatives, and the Catholic Church favoring Franco. The war becomes a proxy war between Nationalism and Globalism. Germany, Portugal and Italy provide military aid to Franco as Stalin sends arms to the Spanish government.

The Comintern sends volunteers to fight for the Spanish regime. American Communists of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade arrive to fight alongside the Reds. As usual, Red fighters commit atrocities against civilians, such as setting fire to the wives and children of Nationalist officers after dousing them with petrol. Determined to stamp out Christianity, they rape nuns, torture priests, and set fire to churches with the worshippers locked inside.

The Spanish Civil War finally ends in victory for Franco, but the war between New World Order Globalism and European Nationalism is only just beginning.

1- Hitler helped Franco to defeat Stalin's Communists in Spain

2- Intolerant Spanish Reds "execute" a statue of Jesus.

DECEMBER 10, 1936
THE PRO-HITLER KING OF ENGLAND IS FORCED TO ABDICATE HIS THRONE

England's King Edward VIII is an admirer of Adolf Hitler. This creates a dilemma for the Globo-Zionists who wish to instigate a war with Germany. Six months into his reign, there is an assassination attempt against him. Jerome Bannigan produces a loaded revolver near the King. After being quickly pounced upon by police and arrested, he claims to have been recruited by "a foreign power".

Weeks later, Eugene Myers' Washington Post reports that Edward plans to marry an American woman who has still not divorced her husband. British politicians use the "crisis" to squeeze Edward out, giving him a choice between Ms. Wallis Simpson, or abdicating his thrown. As the story goes, it is for love of Ms. Simpson that Edward gives up the throne. The real reason for the silent coup is concealed from the public.

Hitler will later state: "I am certain through him permanent friendly relations could have been achieved. If he had stayed, everything would have been different. His abdication was a severe loss for us." (19) With Edward gone, the Globalists proceed with plans to wage war on Germany. Edward is replaced by his stuttering, stammering idiot brother -George VI - ("The King's Speech"), who will spend the coming war years making 'patriotic' radio speeches.

Anderson Daily Bulletin
KING ABDICATES THRONE
EDWARD RENOUNCES BRITISH MONARCHY
Duke Of York To Assume Rule As King George VI
Self-deposed Ruler And Successor
XMAS TRADING STIMULATED BY SANTA PARADE
WARD-STELSON PARTY TO TAKE MAN DIES OF INJURIES IN AUTO WRECK
PUBLIC OPINION EXPRESSED
POPE SUFFERS RELAPSE FROM SUBORNATION
Well, I'll Tell You —
Edward And 'Bertie' Are Far Apart In Personality

Many in England defended their King and opposed abdication. After stepping down from the throne of England, Edward and his American bride visit Hitler in 1937.

FEBRUARY, 1937
FDR ATTEMPTS TO PACK THE SUPREME COURT WITH 6 OF HIS STOOGES

FDR proposes the Judicial Procedures Reform Bill (AKA the "court-packing plan") to add more justices to the U.S. Supreme Court. Roosevelt's purpose is to obtain favorable rulings regarding New Deal schemes that the court has ruled unconstitutional. The bill will grant FDR the power to appoint an additional "rubber stamp" Justice to the Supreme Court, up to a maximum of six, for every member of the court over the age of 70 (who FDR openly mocks as "nine old men").

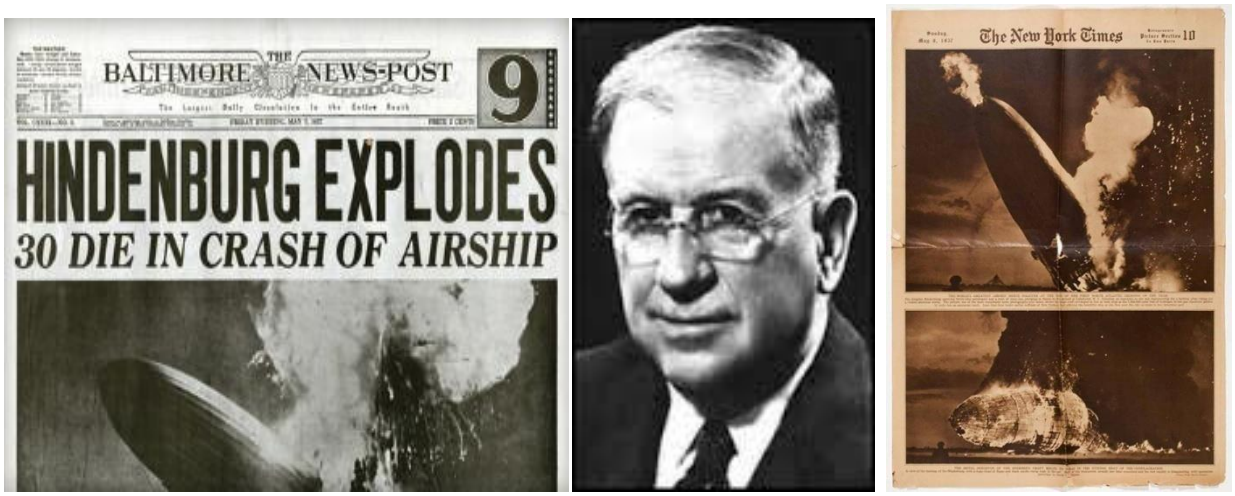
FDR's outrageous scheme is so unpopular that many fellow Democrats begin to distance themselves from him. The horrible power grab fails.

Even many of FDR's Democrat supporters and the press were shocked by FDR'S infamous 'Court Packing Scheme'. Cartoonists mocked FDR.



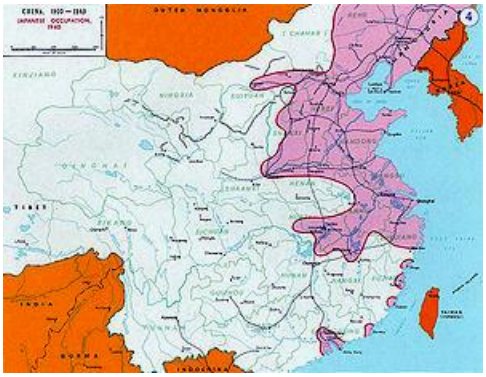
MAY 6, 1937
THE HINDENBURG DISASTER

The Hindenburg Airship, named after the man who helped Hitler become Chancellor, is the pride of Germany's fleet. American crowds marvel as the air-ships passes over New York, saluting them with the German "Sieg Heil". The airships are designed to float using Helium. But after FDR's Jewish Interior Secretary, Harold Ickes, slaps a Helium embargo on Germany; the Zeppelins are redesigned to use highly flammable Hydrogen instead.

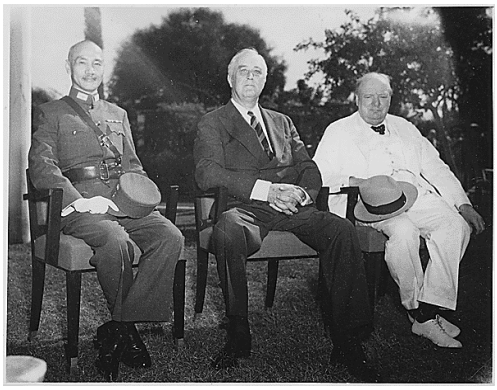
The moment Hindenburg begins to dock in Lakehurst, NJ, it bursts into flames and crashes, killing 35 of the 97 passengers. "Static electricity" is blamed, yet Hindenburg had previously endured direct lightning hits!

The cause of the explosion remains unknown to this day. But the unusual amount of news reel cameras present that day, the Helium embargo, the timing of the mysterious ignition just as the ship is mooring, the hyping of the idiotic "static electricity" theory, and the anti-German hysteria being whipped up by the press, suggest that the Hindenburg disaster was actually an act of sabotage.

Theories range from an onboard suicide-bomber to an incendiary rifle-bullet fired from the nearby woods. The incident shatters confidence in Germany's airships and marks the end of the airship era.



A suspicious blast at the exact moment of mooring destroys Germany's Airship industry. It was Harold Ickes who cut off helium exports to Germany.



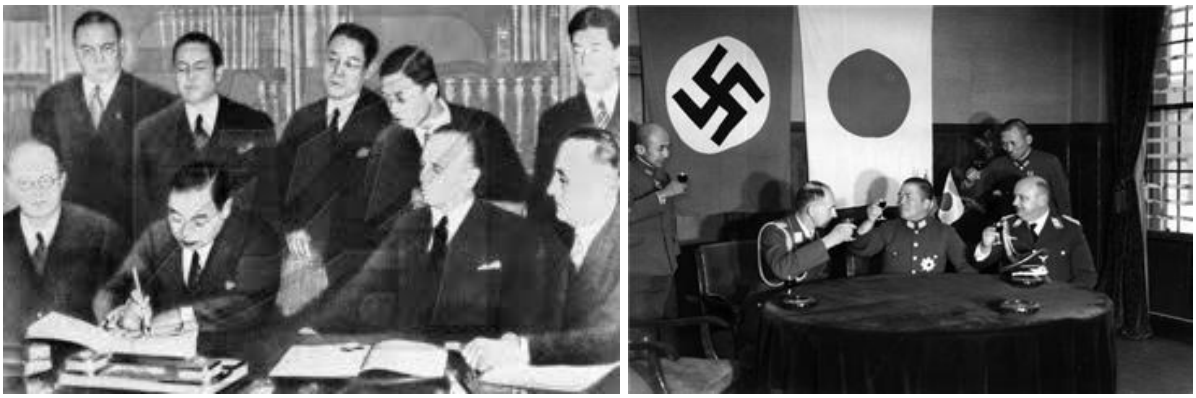
JULY, 1937
WAR BREAKS OUT BETWEEN CHINA & JAPAN

The Japan-China War starts when the Japanese claim to have been fired on by Chinese troops at the Marco Polo Bridge near modern day Beijing. Tensions escalate and Japan launches an invasion of China, using Japanese bases in Manchuria, as a launching point.

Manchuria is rich in resources and has strategically vital ports on the Sea of Japan. It is located in Northeastern Asia, bordering China, Korea, and also western Russia. Manchuria was once Chinese controlled, then part of the Russian Empire. Japan won Manchuria from Russia in the war of 1905, but Nationalist Chinese view Manchuria as historically Chinese. The Japan-China war blends into the ongoing Chinese Civil War raging between the Chinese Communists and the Chinese Nationalist government. At the same time that Japan is fighting the Chinese nationalists (led by Chiang Kai Shek) the Japanese must also fight the guerilla Reds (led by Stalin's agent Mao Tse Tung).

The US, though still officially neutral, clearly favors Chiang Kai Shek over Japan. But Chiang is only a disposable tool for the Globalist's Asian ambitions; a fact that will serve to prolong the Japan-China War. It's Japan vs. China Reds vs. China Nationalists in a 3-way Far Eastern Battle Royale that will shape the course of Asian history.

1- Part of Manchuria (region on right) was won by Japan in the Russo-Japanese war of 1905.



2- FDR & Churchill will later play their boy Chiang (seated left) for a fool and sell him out at the Yalta Conference.

NOVEMBER 25, 1937
GERMANY & JAPAN AGREE TO AN ANTI-COMMUNIST DEFENSE PACT

Germany and Japan agree to the Anti-Comintern Pact, a mutual defense Treaty directed at the Soviet controlled Communist International. Italy will join the following year. The pact states:

"recognizing that the aim of the Communist International, known as the Comintern, is to disintegrate and subdue existing States by all the means at its command; convinced that the toleration of interference by the Communist International in the internal affairs of the nations not only endangers their internal peace and social well-being, but is also a menace to the peace of the world desirous of co-operating in the defense against Communist subversive activities." (20)

In case of an attack by the Soviet Union against Germany or Japan, the two countries agree to take measures "to safeguard their common interests". Mussolini's Italy will soon join the anti-Comintern and several other nations join later on. Germany also invites Britain and Poland to join the Anti-Comintern Alliance. Both nations decline.

German and Japanese officials sign the Anti-Comintern pact.

DECEMBER, 1937
THE IMAGINARY "RAPE" OF NANKING

The alleged Rape of Nanking is said to have been committed by the Japanese military in the city of Nanking, then capital of China. China has long claimed that the Japanese massacred 300,000 Chinese people in just six weeks.

But newspaper accounts, photos, documentary films, records and testimonies in those days all suggest that neither a large-scale massacre, nor even a small-scale massacre, ever took place. During the battle for Nanking, every civilian remaining in the city is urged to take refuge in the internationally monitored Safety Zone. This Safety Zone is managed by the International Committee for the Nanking Safety Zone, which is a group of professors, doctors, missionaries and businessmen from Europe and the U.S.. They remain in the city throughout the battle.

On the day that Japanese troops enter Nanking, more than 100 press reporters and photographers enter with them. The press is not only from Japan, but also from Europe and America, including Reuters and AP. However, none of the journalists report the occurrence of a civilian massacre. If the Japanese military had wanted to massacre the citizens of Nanking, it would have been very easily done by simply bombing the very narrow and crowded Nanking Safety Zone.

The most telling indicator is the fact that most of the alleged details of the "massacre" will only surface after the unconditional surrender of Japan in 1945. During the war itself, Chinese leader Chiang Kai-Shek broadcasts 100's of radio addresses to the Chinese people. But he never mentions that 300,000 people had supposedly been killed! Furthermore, many of the "massacre" photos which surface later on are clearly fakes. (21)

Many Chinese are however killed by Chinese Supervisory Units, whose job is to kill Chinese soldiers trying to escape from the battlefield. Many pro-Japanese Chinese (who saw Japan as pro-Asian liberating force) are also killed by these units, not by the Japanese military.

1- Japanese soldiers distribute food and sweets.

2- After the battle, many Nanking citizens, who abhorred the Chinese military, welcomed the Japanese. The citizens are wearing armbands of the flag of Japan, which were given to all civilians of Nanking to distinguish them from Chinese soldiers hiding in civilian clothing.

JANUARY 9, 1938
NEW YORK TIMES PUBLISHES ANOTHER FALSE CLAIM OF 6 MILLION JEWISH VICTIMS OF PERSECUTION

As the 'Four Tops' of Motown fame used to sing: "Now it's the same, old song, with a different ….

9 MONTHS BEFORE KRISTALNACHT, JEWS CLAIM 6 MILLION TOTAL EUROPEAN JEWS. (VICTIMS, OF COURSE)

PERSECUTED JEWS SEEN ON INCREASE

New York Times (1857-Current file); Jan 9, 1938;
ProQuest Historical Newspapers The New York Times (1851 - pg. 12

PERSECUTED JEWS SEEN ON INCREASE

Dr. Kahn Returns With Report of Rise in Europe of Those Deprived of Rights

6,000,000 VICTIMS NOTED

25,000 Refugees Said to Be in Need—Rumania Menaces 800,000 With Anti-Semitism

The number of Jews deprived of their rights and economic opportunity in Europe increased greatly last year, Dr Bernhard Kahn, European director of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, said on his arrival here last week from Europe.

The new Government of Rumania has threatened to outlaw 800,000 Rumanian Jews, "disregarding peace treaties, minority treaties and the constitution of the country," said Dr Kahn.

government except sometimes in cases of physical violance and public disturbance," he said.

"It is a matter for encouragement, however, that many outstanding personalities and some political parties in Poland are courageously raising their voices against the inhuman treatment of the Jews and the poisonous atmosphere of anti-Semitism.

"In Germany the Jews are being driven out of the last economic positions. Increased oppression is swelling the number of refugees and emigrants. More than 15,000 Jews had to leave Germany during the last year and in the middle of the year the German laws of racial discrimination were extended to the 12,000 Jew in Upper Silesia (the Danzig corridor)."

Dr Kahn said there are 25,000 refugees in Europe, the greater number of them living in need and in demoralizing uncertainty. He expressed the hope that the intergovernmental conference at the League of Nations would take up the refugee problem again in February.

"Five to six million in all are today the victims of governmental anti-Semitism and policies of unchecked anti-Semitic propaganda and persecution. All these millions are in danger of losing their rights as citizens. Their economic existence is constantly menaced and for thousands upon thousands their

7 YEARS BEFORE THE END OF WW2, JEWS CLAIM 6 MILION VICTIMS.

MARCH 12, 1938
THE ANSCHLUSS / AUSTRIA IS INCORPORATED INTO THE GERMAN REICH

The Anschluss is the voluntary incorporation of Austria into the German Reich. The merger with their Germanic brothers is supported by 99% of Austrians and Germans (22), but opposed by the puppet Austrian government instituted by the Allies after World War I.

The Versailles Treaty broke up the Austro-Hungarian Empire and forbid the new nation of Austria from uniting with Germany. But after seeing the great success of Germany, there is no stopping the Austrians desire to unite with their happy brothers and sisters. Without a shot being fired, German forces move in unopposed and are greeted as liberators by the joyous Austrians. As a brotherly gesture towards the Austrians, Hitler invites Austrian troops to march inside of Germany as well.

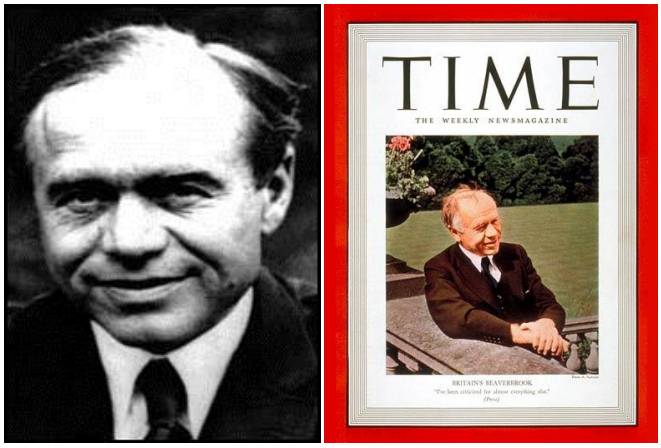
When Hitler himself comes to visit the land of his youth, he is given a hero's welcome by the frenzied Austrian crowds. Not surprisingly, the western Globo-Zionist media portray the joyful unification as "Germany conquers Austria."

Happy Austrians turn out to welcome Hitler, their hometown boy. Image #4, Hitler lays a wreath at the gravesite of his parents.

MARCH, 1938
UK NEWSPAPER BOSS: "I AM SHAKEN. THE JEWS MAY DRIVE BRITAIN INTO A WAR WITH GERMANY."



Lord Beaverbrook is the top newspaper mogul in Great Britain. His Daily Express is the most widely read newspaper in the world. During World War I, he served as UK's Minister of Information.

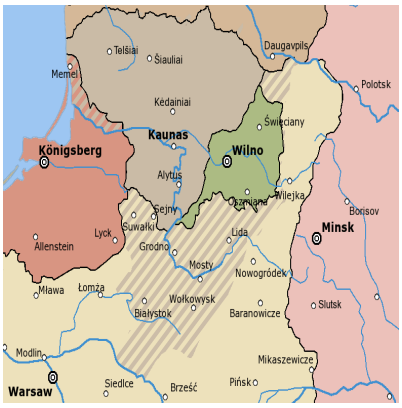
In a private letter written in 1938, Lord Beaverbrook voices concern over Jewish influence leading the UK towards war with Germany. He writes:

"There are 20,000 German Jews in England – in the professions, pursuing research. They all work against an accommodation with Germany." (23)

In a subsequent letter he adds:

"The Jews have got a big position in the press here. ... At last I am shaken. The Jews may drive us into war." (24)

Lord Beaverbrook was a big name media player. In private letters, he wrote what he would not dare say publicly.



MARCH, 1938
THE MILITARY DICTATORSHIP OF POLAND STRONG-ARMS LITHUANIA AND INVADES CZECH TERRITORY

Poland's Marshal Rydz-Smigly issues an ultimatum to the tiny Baltic State of Lithuania. Lithuania had refused to have diplomatic relations with Poland after 1920, protesting the annexation of the Vilnius Region by the new Polish state. The ultimatum demands that Lithuania unconditionally agree to establish diplomatic ties with Poland within 48 hours. The establishment of diplomatic relations would mean a renunciation of Lithuanian claims to the region containing its historic capital, Vilnius.

Tiny Lithuania, preferring peace to war, accepts bully-boy Smigly's ultimatum and conditions. Had Lithuania stood firm, it's quite possible that Stalin would have used the ensuing war as pretext to take the Baltic States (which he eventually will in 1940) and start the 2nd Polish-Soviet war. Such is the recklessness of Marshal Rydz-Smigly of Poland. Many in the "democratic" West, including the New York Times, express dismay over Poland's militaristic bullying of Lithuania; a development deemed so dangerous that it causes jitters among Wall Street investors. (25)

1 & 2- The megalomaniac Smigly dreams of restoring the old Polish Empire from centuries past.

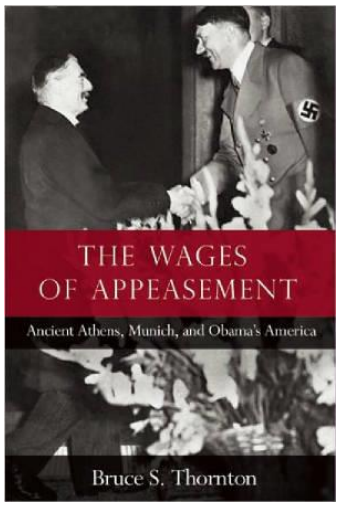
3 – Tiny Lithuania is Poland's first victim of bullying.

SEPTEMBER, 1938
THE MUNICH CONFERENCE / SUDETENLAND IS REUNITED WITH GERMANY

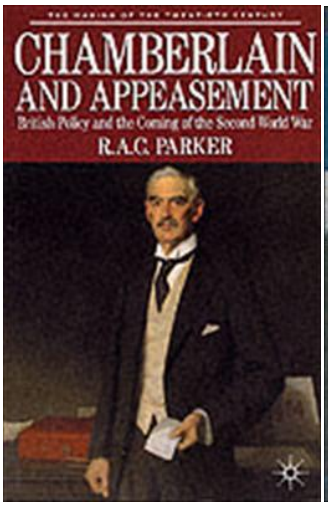
When the Treaty of Versailles dismantled Austria-Hungary, it combined Czechs, Slovaks, Germans and Hungarians into an artificial state called "Czechoslovakia". The German region (*Sudetenland), lies south of Germany and has 3.5 million inhabitants. Like the Austrians, The Sudetenlanders also wish to unite with the Reich; but Czechoslovakia's pro-Communist President, Edvard Benes, will not allow it. The Sudetenlanders are politically disenfranchised and severely mistreated by the Globalist-owned state of Czechoslovakia. The role assigned to Benes is to pick a fight with Hitler; a fight which will draw in the UK, France and the USSR.

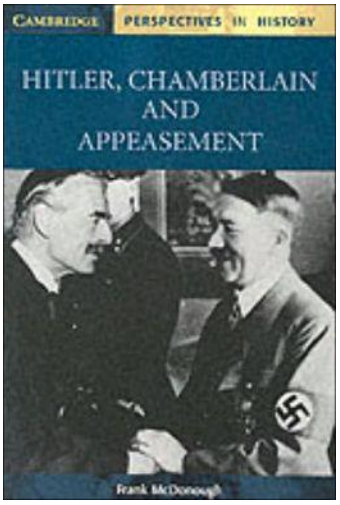
To resolve the matter peacefully, Hitler calls for an emergency conference in Munich with England, France, and Italy. The parties agree that the German Sudetenland should rightfully be a part of Germany, and that the Slovaks will have their own state (Slovak Republic 1939-1945). As the artificial Czechoslovakian state is dissolved, Germany establishes autonomous protectorates over what remains (Bohemia and Moravia). Again, without a shot being fired or a drop of blood being shed, Germans are welcomed into the Reich while other ethnic groups are given their own states; a win-win-win for all parties!

As was the case in Austria, Hitler receives a hero's welcome upon visiting the Sudetenland. UK Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain applauds the deal as "peace in our time." But his rival, the drunken cigar chomping Winston Churchill, and the Jewish Press denounce the deal as "Hitler's latest conquest". Simply for agreeing to what was fair and just, Neville Chamberlain has since been unfairly branded by history as "an appeaser". In fact, a Google search of just the term "appeasement" yields pages and pages of references and images to poor Neville Chamberlain!



For his part, Benes relocates to Britain and becomes part of Churchill's circle. After the war, he will again serve as President of the Communist-dominated government of a reconstituted Czechoslovakia; using his position to confiscate the property of three million Germans.





Very happy Sudetenland women salute Hitler. Women often wept at the sight of Hitler. In western versions of this photo, the two women on the left are cut out so as to make it seem that the woman on the right is crying tears of sadness.

The eternal stupidity of the "Neville Chamberlain appeased Hitler" lie has been enshrined in false history.

Benes with Churchill / Benes with Stalin

OCTOBER, 1938
POLAND GRABS A PIECE OF CZECH TERRITORY

The Polish regime continues its aggressive foreign policy by taking advantage of the Sudetenland Crisis and demanding a portion of Zaolzie and some other smaller Czech areas. The Czechs are powerless to stop the forced annexations.

The Polish Army annexes areas with a population of 227,399 people. Again, the "democratic" West shakes its head in dismay, but has to hold its nose and bite its tongue because it was understood that the fool Rydz-Smigly and his gang would be needed for bigger things; namely, picking a fight with Hitler's Germany.

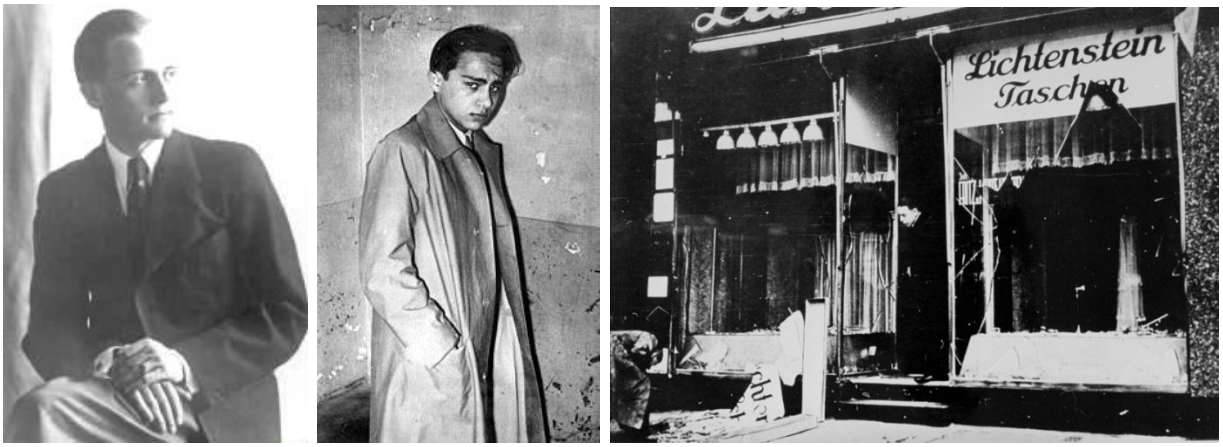
Polish tanks roll into annexed Czech territory. The Czechs join the Lithuanians as the latest victims of Polish bullying. 'Emperor' Smigly will soon set his sights on grabbing territory from German Prussia.

NOVEMBER, 1938
AMERICA TURNS AGAINST FDR / DEMOCRATS LOSE 80 SEATS IN MID-TERM CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS

Anger over the failed court-packing scheme coupled with the failure of the New Deal to end the Depression contributes to the Democrats losing 80 Congressional seats in the 1938 mid-term election. FDR is not only losing America, but even many in his Party are turning against his policies; most notably the former New York Governor, Al Smith. Apart from the dictatorial aspects of FDR's regime, the Keynesian economic tax-spend-borrow schemes themselves aren't working.

The Republicans gain 80 House seats, 8 Senate seats, and 11 Governorships. Though it remains one of the worse Congressional election routs in U.S. history, the 1938 anti-FDR , anti-New Deal bloodbath is seldom, if ever, mentioned by Rooseveltian court-historians and the media.

No longer "untouchable", FDR's failed schemes had become the butt of many jokes and creative cartoons.



NOVEMBER 9, 1938
KRISTALLNACHT / JEWISH KILLER MURDERS GERMAN DIPLOMAT / ANTI-JEWISH RIOTS ERUPT

Ernst vom Rath is a 29 year old German diplomat stationed in Paris. In a repeat of how Swiss Jew David Frankfurter had asked to speak to Swiss NSDAP head Wilhelm Gustloff before killing him in 1936, a Polish Jew named Hershel Grynspan arrives at the German embassy, asking to speak to a member of the diplomatic staff. When vom Rath comes to greet the visitor, Grynspan draws his pistol and murders him in cold blood.

By now, the Germans have had enough of the Jewish inspired boycotts, slanders, warmongering, and murders aimed at them. News of the murder triggers rioting, arson, and vandalism directed at Jewish shops and businesses. It is an angry Hitler who orders the violence to cease immediately and it stops after the first night.

The night of violence, referred to by Jews as "Kristallnacht*" (Night of the Broken Glass)*, is hyped by the western media. Kristallnacht is still whined about to this day. But the repeated agitation boycotts, and murders which provoked German resentment are never mentioned.

A senseless murder; young Ernst (left) and his killer Hershel Grynspan

1939
H.G. WELLS PUBLISHES 'THE NEW WORLD ORDER'

British writer H.G. Wells is best known for classic works like 'The Invisible Man', 'Time Machine', and 'War of the Worlds.' In 1939, Wells, a member of the Globalist Fabian Society, releases a non-fiction book, The New World Order; which compliments his earlier work on the same subject, 'The Open Conspiracy'. Unlike most Globalists, Wells speaks openly about his utopian dream. Some excerpts:

> "This new and complete Revolution we contemplate can be defined in a very few words. It is outright world-socialism; scientifically planned and directed."...
>
> Countless people will hate the new world order and will die protesting against it. When we attempt to evaluate its promise, we have to bear in mind the distress of a generation or so of malcontents. .....The term Internationalism has been popularized in recent years to cover an interlocking financial, political, and economic world force for the purpose of establishing a World Government." (26)

Fabian member Wells: "Countless people will die."

ALL OF 1939
HITLER ATTEMPTS TO PEACEFULLY RESOLVE DISPUTE OVER THE 'POLISH CORRIDOR'

The "free city" of Danzig is 95% German. Along with its surrounding German area of East Prussia, Danzig was isolated from the German mainland by the Versailles Treaty. Formerly German territory now belongs to Poland, cutting right through the Prussian/Pomeranian region of Germany. As had been the case with Germans stranded in Czechoslovakia, the Germans in Poland (those not brutally expelled in 1919) are a persecuted minority.

Throughout all of 1939, Hitler tries to solve the problem of the "Polish Corridor" peacefully. He proposes that the people living in Danzig and the "corridor" be permitted to vote in a referendum to decide their status. If the region returns to German sovereignty, Poland will be given a 1 mile wide path, running through Germany to the Baltic Sea so that it would not be landlocked.

The Polish military dictatorship of Edward Rydz-Smigly and friends is urged by Britain and, from behind the scenes and across the ocean, Roosevelt, to not make any deals with Germany. (27) When it becomes apparent to Hitler that Poland will not allow a referendum, he then proposes another solution – international control of the formerly German regions. This sensible offer is also ignored. The Globalists intend to use foolish Poland as the match which ignites World War II.

Map shows stolen German areas of W. Prussia, "free" Danzig, and E. Prussia isolated from the rest of Germany. Polish Marshal Rydz-Smigly wants Danzig and all of Prussia.

MAY, 1939
AS GERMANY TURNS TO THE VATICAN FOR PEACE, BRITAIN APPEALS TO STALIN FOR A WAR ALLIANCE

The warmongering faction of Great Britain continues to press for war with Germany. The war-hawks are openly threatening to dump Neville Chamberlain if he refuses to deliver. (28) Having failed to ignite the war in Czechoslovakia, the warmonger's "Plan B' is to draw Stalin into a war alliance with Britain and France; and to then use Poland to start a war with Germany. After Poland picks the fight, the western allies will attack Germany from the west as the Soviets advance from the east; an exact replay of how they imposed a two-front war on Germany 25 years ago.

Britain assures Stalin that in case of war, the USSR would not be expected to join until the British and French are in it first. But Stalin is hesitant to join the alliance at this time because he has plans of his own. Hitler is well aware of the plots being cooked up against Germany. While the British openly court Stalin, Germany reaches out to Pope Pius XII – quite a contrast! The Vatican offers to mediate an international conference between Germany, Poland and the western powers. Germany and Italy are all in, but Britain refuses the Vatican's offer. (29)

Excerpts from the May 11, 1939 issue of The New York Times:

British Assurance Given
By Robert P. Post

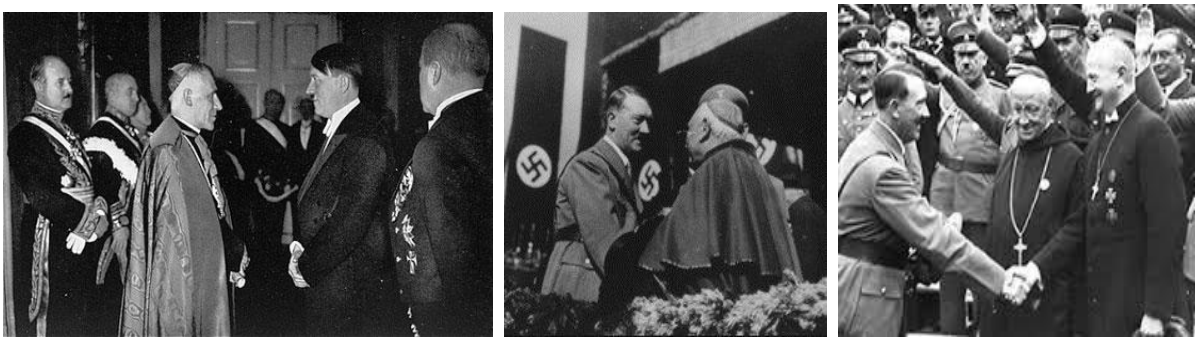
"The position as it stands now is ....that Russia has been assured that she is not being maneuvered into a position to fight alone and the British are awaiting her reply and any demands she may make to assure that her conditions will be fulfilled.

The note of cautious optimism continued here about the Russian negotiations, the belief being that the two countries are not so far apart as they first appeared to be. The British are now expected to make certain concessions to the Russian idea of an alliance.

The negotiations with Russia are having repercussions on the British reaction to the Pope's conference proposal. At the present stage the British are reluctant to take part in any such conference with Russia eliminated."

Demand for Soviet Pact Rises
By Sir Arthur Willert
Noted British Journalist

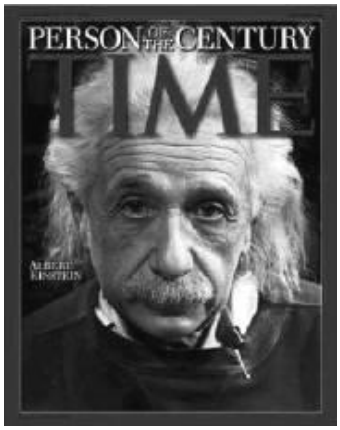
"LONDON, May 10. - The general British reaction on the feasibility of an international conference to smooth out the troubles of Europe is somewhat lukewarm. This applies to reports that the Vatican has put out feelers regarding the possibility of international action for the settlement of the German-Polish problems.



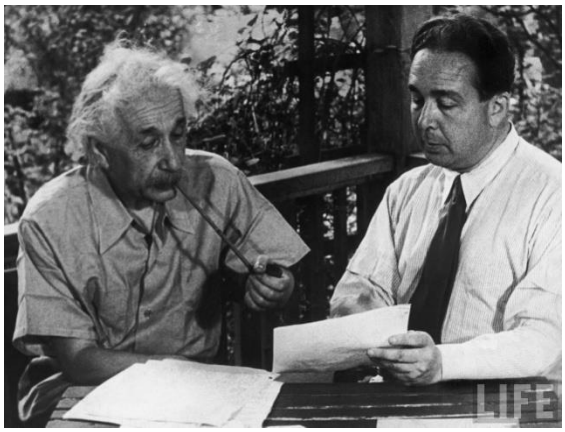
The predominant opinion here is that if a conference were held at this juncture, the Rome-Berlin Axis powers would try to vitiate it by the same intolerable pressure of fear and menace that Chancellor Adolf Hitler so successfully brought to bear on the Munich meeting.

... This view accounts for the constant sniping at Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, from his own supporters in Parliament, as well as from the Opposition parties, on the ground that he is not pushing ahead effectively with the Russian negotiations."

When Adolf Hitler turned to the Pope for peace; "John Bull" turned to Joe Stalin for war!



Contrary to historical distortion, ex-altar boy Hitler enjoyed excellent relations with the Catholic Church, an institution which he viewed as vital to public virtue and world stability.



AUGUST, 1939
JEWISH MAD SCIENTIST ALBERT EINSTEIN ASKS FDR TO BUILD ATOMIC BOMBS

Jewish scientist Albert Einstein had left Germany shortly after Hitler came to power. Though dismissed by scientific great Nikola Tesla as a "long haired crank" (in private letters), Einstein had achieved world fame in the press for his "Theory of Relativity", which some researchers now claim was plagiarized from the work of an Italian physicist. (30) Einstein is an outspoken advocate of world government and is linked to numerous Communist front groups in Germany.

While Europe is still at peace, Einstein (at the urging of lesser known Jewish scientists) writes a letter to FDR in which he describes the power of a potential atomic bomb. He falsely insinuates that Germany is already working on such a weapon, and urges FDR to fund research into building atomic bombs. Though not stated so directly in the letter, it is clear that Mr. Einstein hopes to one day murder millions of Germans with this devilish weapon. The 'Manhattan Project' will eventually grow out of this effort.

Albert Einstein
Old Grove Rd.
Nassau Point
Peconic, Long Island

August 2nd, 1939

F.D. Roosevelt,
President of the United States,
White House
Washington, D.C.

Sir:

Some recent work by E.Fermi and L. Szilard, which has been communicated to me in manuscript, leads me to expect that the element uranium may be turned into a new and important source of energy in the immediate future. Certain aspects of the situation which has arisen seem to call for watchfulness and, if necessary, quick action on the part of the Administration. I believe therefore that it is my duty to bring to your attention the following facts and recommendations:

In the course of the last four months it has been made probable - through the work of Joliot in France as well as Fermi and Szilard in America - that it may become possible to set up a nuclear chain reaction in a large mass of uranium,by which vast amounts of power and large quantities of new radium-like elements would be generated. Now it appears almost certain that this could be achieved in the immediate future.

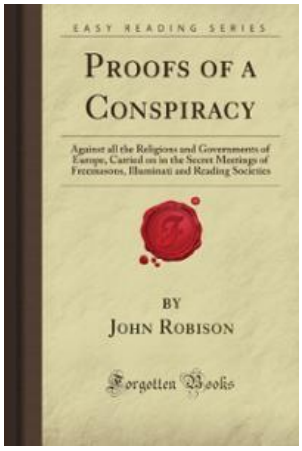
This new phenomenon would also lead to the construction of bombs, and it is conceivable - though much less certain - that extremely powerful bombs of a new type may thus be constructed. A single bomb of this type, carried by boat and exploded in a port, might very well destroy the whole port together with some of the surrounding territory. However, such bombs might very well prove to be too heavy for transportation by air.

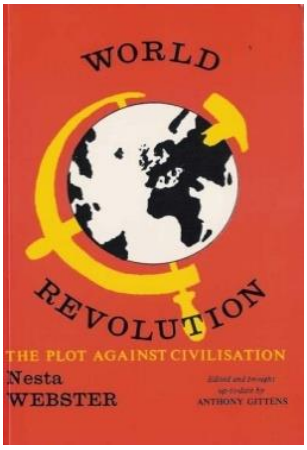
a6401

Time's "Person of the Century" & Leo Szilard issued a libelous letter to FDR. The genocidal physicist will later write, in 1942:

"Due to their wretched traditions the Germans are such a badly messed-up people *that it will be very difficult to remedy the situation by sensible, not to speak of humane, means. I keep hoping that at the end of the war, w*ith God's benevolent help*;* they will largely kill each other off*."* (31)

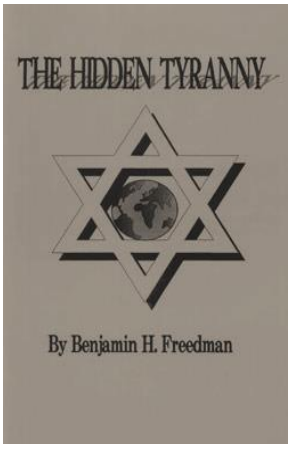
End of Volume 1





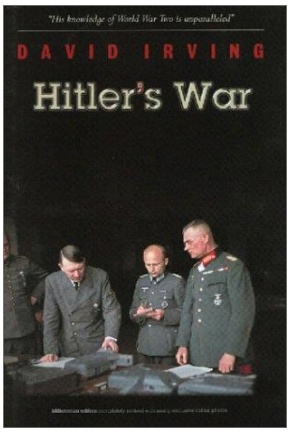
Be sure to bookmark and follow King's popular website: TomatoBubble.com

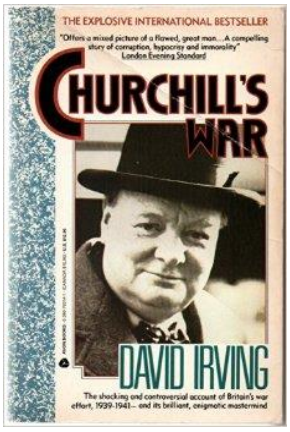
The Mind-Altering Internet Classics of Alternative History, Economics, Philosophy and Current Events

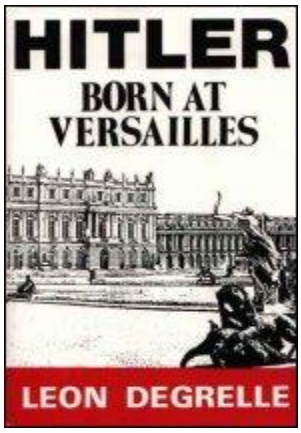


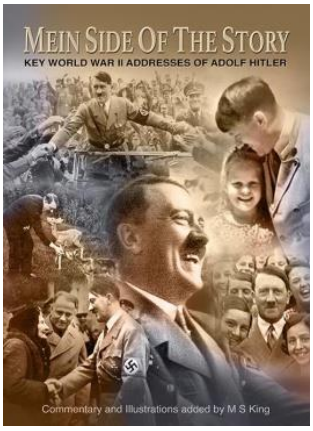
BIBLIOGRAPHY

(For Both Volumes)

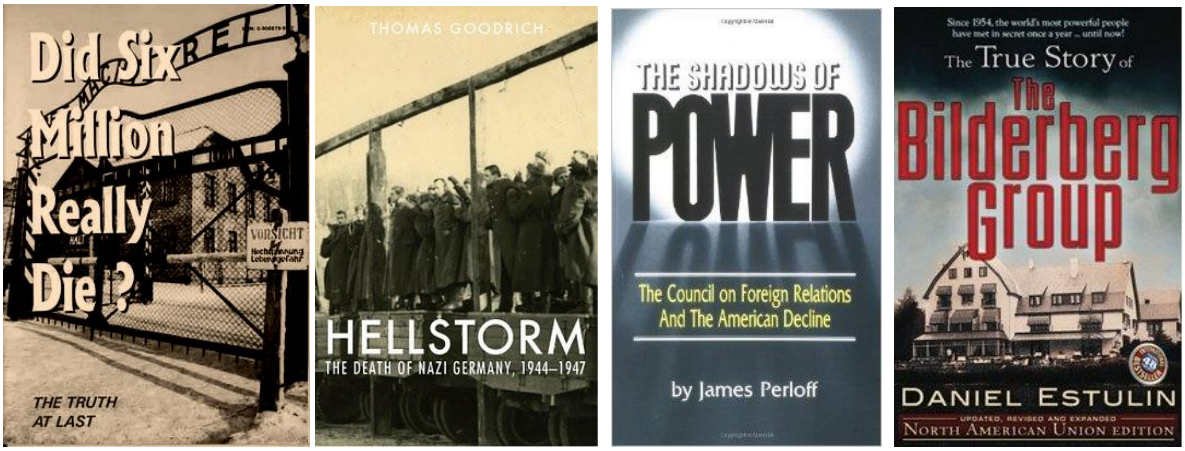


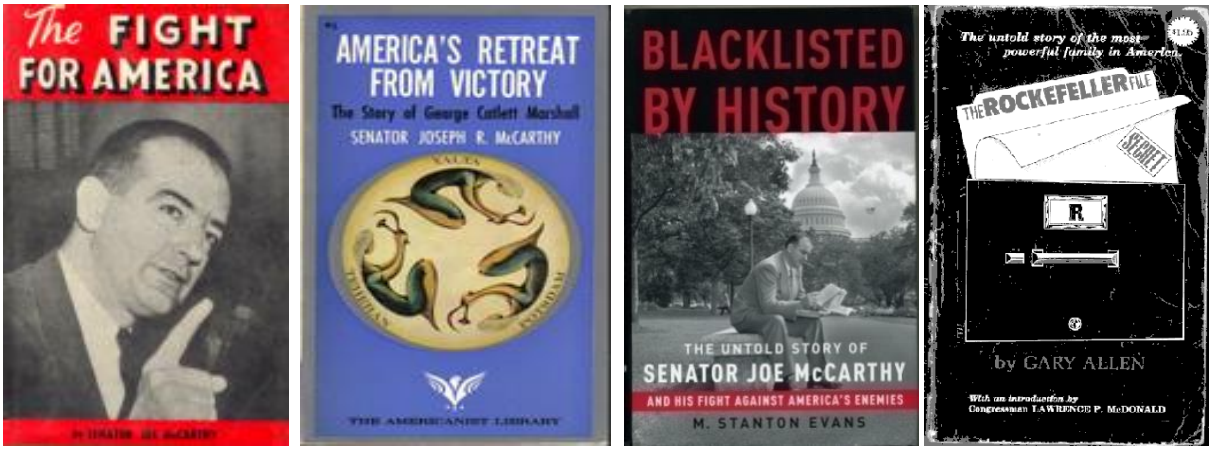


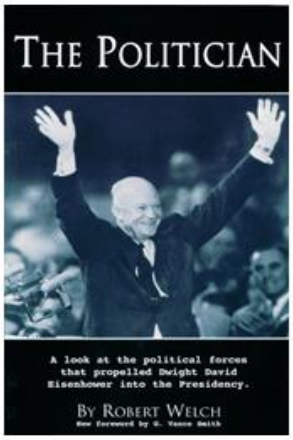




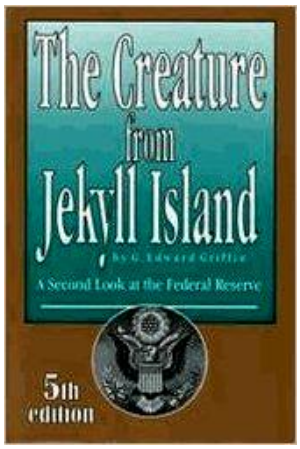
Proofs of a Conspiracy, by John Robison / World Revolution, by Nesta Webster / Secret Societies & Subversive Movements, by Nesta Webster / The Hidden Tyranny, by Benjamin Freedman

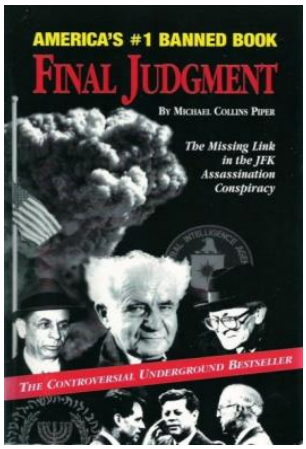




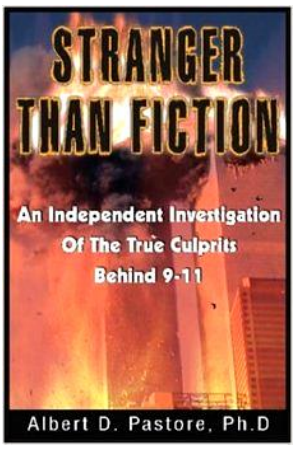


Hitler's War, by David Irving / Churchill's War by David Irving / Hitler: Born at Versailles Leon DeGrelle / Mein Side of the Story, by M S King & Hitler

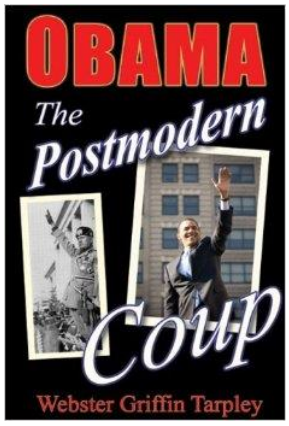


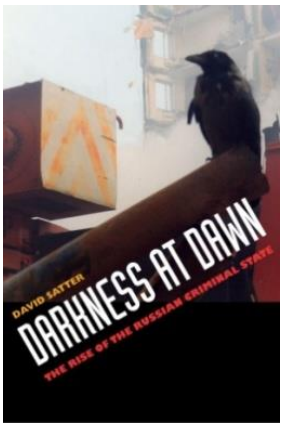


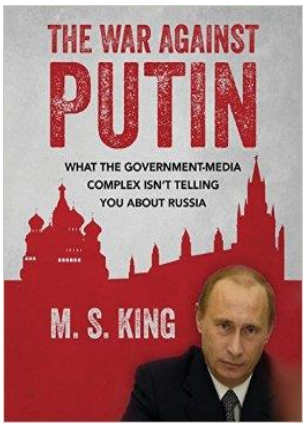
Did Six Million Really Die?, by Richard Harwood / Hellstorm: The Death of Nazi Germany / The Shadows of Power, by James Perloff / The True Story of the Bilderberg Group, by Daniel Estulin



The Fight for America, by Joseph McCarthy / America's Retreat from Victory, by Joseph McCarthy / Blacklisted by History, by M Stanton Evans / The Rockefeller File, by Gary Allen







The Politician, by Robert Welch / The Creature from Jekyll Island, by G Edward Griffin / Final Judgment, by Michael Collins Piper / Stranger than Fiction, by Albert D. Pastore

9/11 Synthetic Terror, by Webster Griffin Tarpley / Obama: The Postmodern Coup, by Webster Griffin Tarpley / Darkness at Dawn, by David Satter / The War Against Putin, by M S King /

FOOTNOTES

The innovative use of Internet Search terms in lieu of the traditional format for footnotes allows the researcher to instantaneously link to numerous sources instead of just one. The reader is encouraged to explore the footnote searches in depth. Not only will one find that the research, events and quotes presented in this book are accurate, but the searches will also open up new avenues of exploration.

1763 - 1820

1- Internet Search Term: rothschild richest family world history

2- Internet Search Term: fortune magazine Rothschild a founding father international finance

3- Internet Search Term: sons of liberty boston massacre

4- Internet Search Term: declaration of independence

5- Internet Search Term: haym salomon

6- Internet Search Term: haym salomon wanted nothing for himself but something for his people

7- Internet Search Term: alexander hamilton jewish school

8- Internet Search Term: jefferson banking establishments are more dangerous armies

9- Internet Search Term: john adams impatient artful indefatigable and unprincipled intriguer

10- Internet Search Term: washington farewell address

11- Internet Search Term: Robison proofs conspiracy an association has been formed

12- Internet Search Term: abbe barruel

13- Internet Search Term: washington not my intention to doubt that doctrines of the illuminati

14- Internet Search Term: napoleon deist

15- Internet Search Term: napoleon when a government is dependent upon bankers for money

16- Internet Search Term: boisrong-tonnere we should have the skin of a white man

17- Internet Search Term: massacre haiti 1804

18- Internet Search Term: napoleon battle austerlitz is the finest of all I have fought

19- Internet Search Term: berel wein napoleon's outward tolerance and fairness toward jews

20- Internet Search Term: napoleon necessary to reduce destroy, the tendency of jewish people

21- Internet Search Term: i have undertaken to reform the jews

22- Internet Search Term: spencer perceval the evangelical prime minister page 177

23- Internet Search Term: http://www.jewishhistory.org/the-1850s/

24- Internet Search Term: naploleon most terrible of all my battles

25- Internet Search Term: napoleon grand armee typhus russia

26- Internet Search Term: napoleon here i am kill your emperor if you wish

1821 - 1880

1- Internet Search Term: citation needed – andrew jackson you are a den of vipers and theives

2- Internet Search Term: andrew jackson national debt is a national blessing, but rather a curse

3- Internet Search Term: richard lawrence money will be more plenty

4- Internet Search Term: andrew jackson I killed the bank

5- Internet Search Term: sidonia "there is no friendship between the Court of St. Petersburg

6- Internet Search Term: sidonia great intellectual movement in Europe Jews participate

7- Internet Search Term: sidonia the mixed persecuting race disappears

8- Internet Search Term: sidonia so you see my dear coningsby

9- Internet Search Term: queen victoria assassination attempts

10- Internet Search Term: rothschild crimean war

11- Internet Search Term: marx darwin’s work suits my purpose

12- Internet Search Term: engels darwin, by the way, whom i'm just reading now

13- Internet Search Term: marx book contains the basis on natural history for our view

14- Internet Search Term: marx darwin’s work is most important and suits my purpose

15- Internet Search Term: marx i am amused at darwin into whom ilooked again

16- Internet Search Term: marx in his splendid work darwin did not realize

17- Internet Search Term: we spoke of nothing else for months but darwin

18- Internet Search Term: lincoln provoked fort sumter

19- Internet Search Term: lewis reed radical republicans and allies American Jacobins

20- Internet Search Term: august belmont rothschilds

21- Internet Search Term: erlanger loan confederacy

22- Internet Search Term: new york times a rothschild on the rebel loan

23- Internet Search Term: robert e lee both sides forget that we are all Americans

24- Internet Search Term: davis's pet jew judah benjamin

25- Internet Search Term: judah benjamin brilliance recognized salomon rothschild

26- Internet Search Term: eli evans judah benjamin achieved greater political power any jew

27- Internet Search Term: curran judah philip benjamin must be bracketed with disraeli

28- Internet Search Term: stonewall jackson threatens to resign judah benjamin

29- Internet Search Term: davis's pet jew judah benjamin

30- Internet Search Term: solomon rothschild judah benjamin greatest mind in north America

31- Internet Search Term: casualties battle gettysburg

32- Internet Search Term: copperheads civil war british

33- Internet Search Term: belmont's confederate bonds chicago tribune

34- Internet Search Term: judah benjamin burns papers confederate secret service

35- Internet Search Term: sultana sinking 1865

36- Internet Search Term: robert louden coal torpedo

37- Internet Search Term: william davis pragmatic Secretary State never had intention returning

38- Internet Search Term: judah benjamin escape to the farthest place from the united states

39- Internet Search Term: end of an era john wise judah benjamin last year's nest

40- Internet Search Term: bismarck jews citizenship

41- Internet Search Term: cyprus disraeli congress berlin

42- Internet Search Term: congress of berlin disraeli austria hungary

43- Internet Search Term: disraeli destroy three emperors league / disraeli hatred of Russia

44- Internet Search Term: to clear central asia of muscovites

1881 - 1910

1- Internet Search Term: james garfield *w*hoever controls the volume of money

2- Internet Search Term: emma lazarus give me your tired

3- Internet Search Term: panic 1893 j p morgan agent of rothschild

4- Internet Search Term: hasia diner notes some populists believed that Jews made up a class

5- Internet Search Term: franco russian alliance tolstoy people sudden love

6- Internet Search Term: tolstoy franco russian alliance cannot now present itself

7- Internet Search Term: marie carnot order of st andrew

8- Internet Search Term: it is arguable that spanish-american war perhaps most pointless war

9- Internet Search Term: roosevelt i would regard war with spain from two viewpoints

10- Internet Search Term: bismarck so long as you have this present officer corps

11- Internet Search Term: bismarck damned foolish thing in the balkans

12- Internet Search Term: mckinley pope spanish american war

13- Internet Search Term: buffalo soldiers spanish smerican war

14- Internet Search Term: teddy roosevelt only way to get them to do it was to lead them myself

15- Internet Search Term: teddy *r*oosevelt's request for medal of honor was denied by the army
16- Internet Search Term: teddy roosevelt i *a*m entitled to the medal of honor and I want it

17- Internet Search Term: teddy speak softly big stick

18- Internet Search Term: oppenheimer and rothschild

19- Internet Search Term: phillipine american war casualties

20- Internet Search Term: teddy Roosevelt panama revolution colombia

21- Internet Search Term: von longerke jews furnished the brains

22- Internet Search Term: freud smoked cigars

23- Internet Search Term: robert owen the panic was brought about by a deliberate conspiracy

24- Internet Search Term: schiff 1907 unless we have central bank with control credit resources

25- Internet Search Term: mark twain quotes about teddy roosevelt

26- Internet Search Term: ibid

27- Internet Search Term: ibid

28- Internet Search Term: ibid

29- Internet Search Term: teddy roosevelt safari

30- Internet Search Term: ibid

31- Internet Search Term: mark twain he is hunting wild animals heroically in africa

32- Internet Search Term: commodus was also known for fighting exotic animals

33- Internet Search Term: baruch wilson in tow leading him like poodle

34- Internet Search Term: james warburg united world federalists

35- Internet Search Term: naacp jewish founders

36- Internet Search Term: lloyd george nathan rothschild most powerful man in Britain

37- Internet Search Term: the melting pot teddy roosevelt that's a great play mr Zangwill

38- Internet Search Term: benjamin freedman 1974 speech jacob schiff came back to new York

39- Internet Search Term: teddy roosevelt riding bull moose photo fake

40- Internet Search Term: secret meeting at jekyll island vanderlip quote furtive conspirator

1911 – 1920

1- Internet Search Term: taft progressives pull down temple of freedom
2- Internet Search Term: the speech that saved teddy roosevelt's life assassination attempt 1912
3- Internet Search Term: ibid
4- Internet Search Term: ibid
5- Internet Search Term: ibid

6- Internet Search Term: john schrank letter people of united states in a dream
7- Internet Search Term: lindbergh the aldrich plan is the wall street plan
8- Internet Search Term: adl charter the immediate object of the league
9- Internet Search Term: lindbergh worst legislative crime of the ages
10- Internet Search Term: lindbergh financial system been turned over to federal reserve board

11- Internet Search Term: ynet obama mulls naming jewish economist secretary of treasury

12- Internet Search Term: franz ferdinand don't die darling live for our children

13- Internet Search Term: willy nicki telegrams

14- Internet Search Term: ibid

15- Internet Search Term: manifesto of the 93

16- Internet Search Term: edward mandell house flame of indignation lusitania

17- Internet Search Term: secrets of Lusitania arms find challenges allied claims

18- Internet Search Term: lusitania german embassy publishes warnings in newspapers

19- Internet Search Term: winston churchill juno Lusitania

20- Internet Search Term: benjamin freedman speaks balfour declaration

21- Internet Search Term: Trotsky financed by Schiff wall street

22- Internet Search Term: bernays intelligent manipulation habits and opinions

23- Internet Search Term: balfour declaration

24- Internet Search Term: schiff distribution of propaganda among Russians prisoners-of-war

25- Internet Search Term: david r francis bolshevik leaders here are returned exiles
26- Internet Search Term: wilson speech analyzing german peace utterances

27- Internet Search Term: german factory strikes 1918

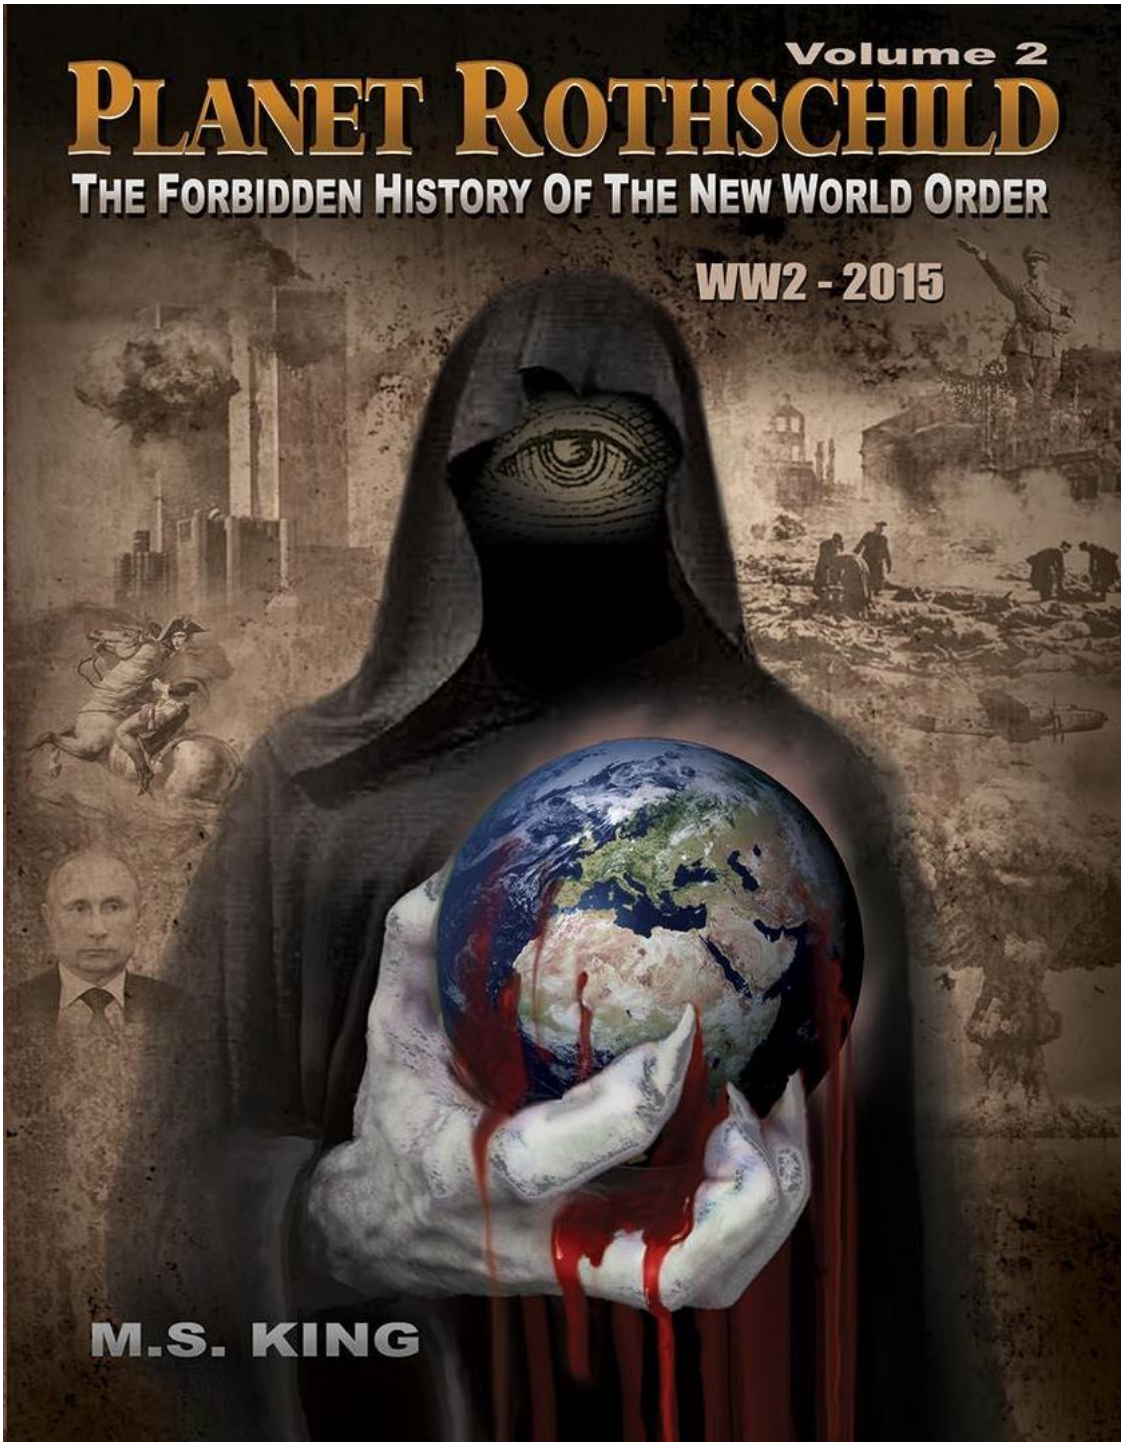
28- Internet Search Term: - jewish legion world war 1
29- Internet Search Term: balfour british drop yiddish leaflets germany

30- Internet Search Term: comintern overthrow of the international bourgeoisie

31- Internet Search Term: red terror atrocities

32- Internet Search Term: treaty of versailles provisions

33- Internet Search Term: german hunger blockade after world war 1
34- Internet Search Term: palmer raids
35- Internet Search Term: churchill zionism vs bolshevism



1921 - 1930

1- Internet Search Term: harding inaugural address seek no part directing destinies of old World
2- Internet Search Term: mussolini fraud comedy blackmail
3- Internet Search Term: harding no autopsy
4- Internet Search Term: wiemar jew confetti
5- Internet Search Term: solzhenitsyn bolshevism committed greatest human slaughter
6- Internet Search Term: lloyd george imperiousness of absolute monarchs
7- Internet Search Term: sarnoff communications psychological warfare
8- Internet Search Term: william paley psychological warfare
9- Internet Search Term: stalin one death tragedy million statistic
10- Internet Search Term: greenspan fed caused great depression
11- Internet Search Term: degrelle enigma hitler

1931 - 1939

1- Internet Search Term: bruno hauptmann I am absolutely innocent
2- Internet Search Term: louis mcfadden fed was deceitfully disloyally foisted upon country
3- Internet Search Term: judea declares war on germany
4- Internet Search Term: hitler lies slander hair raising perversity
5- Internet Search Term: executive order 6102 bans gold fdr
6- Internet Search Term: eugene meyer fires quaker editor
7- Internet Search Term: potocki propaganda here entirely in Jewish hands
8- Internet Search Term: jacob maged tailor arrested new jersey
9- Internet Search Term: huey long what's morgan and baruch and rockefeller
10- Internet Search Term: fdr andrew mellon irs
11- Internet Search Term: david burnham records show that Franklin Delano Roosevelt may 12- Internet Search Term: churchill strand magazine truth about hitler 1935
13- Internet Search Term: ibid
14- Internet Search Term: hitler tackled unemployment revived germany economy
15- Internet Search Term: lloyd george i talked to hitler
16- Internet Search Term: new york times americans appeal for jewish refuge
17- Internet Search Term: jesse owens hitler waved at me
18- Internet Search Term: jesse owens hitler didn’t snub me
19- Internet Search Term: hitler edward abdication was a severe loss for us
20- Internet Search Term: anti comintern pact
21- Internet Search Term: rape nanking fake photos
22- Internet Search Term: 99% support anschluss
23- Internet Search Term: beaverbrook 20,000 german jews in england
24- Internet Search Term: beaverbrook i am shaken jews drive us into war
25- Internet Search Term: 1938 polish ultimatum to lithuania
26- Internet Search Term: hg wells countless people hate new world order
27- Internet Search Term: roosevelt's campaign to incite war in Europe polish documents
28- Internet Search Term: new york times may 11 1939 arthur willet demand for soviet pact rises

29- Internet Search Term: ibid
30- Internet Search Term: einstein plagiarist italian de pretto 31- Internet Search Term: einstein at the end of the war they will largely kill each other off

Volume 2
PLANET ROTHSCHILD
THE FORBIDDEN HISTORY OF THE NEW WORLD ORDER
WW2 - 2015
M.S. KING

© 2015 M S KING

"History is indeed little more than the register of the crimes, follies and misfortunes of mankind."

Edward Gibbon, English historian (1737-1794)

From: "The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire"

About the Author

M. S. King is a private investigative journalist and researcher based in the New York City area. A 1987 graduate of Rutgers University, King's subsequent 30 year career in Marketing & Advertising has equipped him with a unique perspective when it comes to understanding how "public opinion" is indeed scientifically manufactured.

Madison Ave marketing acumen combines with 'City Boy' instincts to make M.S. King one of the most tenacious detectors of "things that don't add up" in the world today. Says King of his admitted quirks, irreverent disdain for "conventional wisdom", and uncanny ability to ferret out and weave together important data points that others miss: "Had Sherlock Holmes been an actual historical personage, I would have been his reincarnation."

King is also the author of The War Against Putin: What the Government-Media Complex Isn't Telling You About Russia. King's other interests include: the animal kingdom, philosophy, chess, cooking, literature and history (with emphasis on events of the late 19th through the 20th centuries).

FOREWORD – PLANET ROTHSCHILD

By Jeff Rense

For over the past 30 years, I've worked in many key positions in broadcast journalism, as a TV news reporter, news director, anchorman, and, for the past 20 years, the producer and host of my own talk radio program. It has been quite a journey and all during that times I really never stop wanting to know the realities of news stories, large and small. Who?, What?, Where?, How?, When?... and, most importantly, Why? When applying those timeless questions towards the crucial subject of History, I have seldom been satisfied with the 'official explanations' for my inquiries and questions. The 'truth' is just not 'out there' nor is it accessible. There is too much sleight-of-hand and structural criminality.

That's one reason I am so gratified that one of the most remarkable, insightful, truthful historians of today, M S King, has tackled the murky, imponderable subject of revisionist history, (realistic history that is) with his stunning epic, "Planet Rothschild". Though I am generally cautious in bestowing blessings upon the work of others, 'NWO Forbidden History' caught my attention for a number of reasons. Through his writings submitted to Rense.com, and also from his 'tour d' force' guest appearance on my show, King's mastery of the subject, formidable writing talent, and unique ability to break down the complex into simple bites - were already known to me. I was pleased when I learned of his project to reformat his Internet Classic into a hard copy version.

As my regular listeners and readers are by now well aware, the world situation becomes gloomier by the day. It is only through a clear understanding of the past, that we can truly understand the present, and the dark future that is being planned for us. By distilling conspiratorial history into easy-to-understand, illustrated mini essays, "Planet Rothschild" serves as the perfect reference guide to help you navigate through the sea of lies which have been fed to us since childhood, and continue to be fed to us each day. "Planet Rothschild" makes an utterly unique and important contribution to the fields of economics and history - a contribution which we can all appreciate, and all understand.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

PLANET ROTHSCHILD: The Forbidden History of the New World Order (1763-2015)

VOLUME 2 of 2 / (WORLD WAR II - 2015)

INTRODUCTION	P. 7
WORLD WAR II (Part 1)	P. 9
WORLD WAR II (Part 2)	P. 65
1945 - 1960	P. 117
1961 - 1980	P. 169
1981 - 2000	P. 213
2001 - 2015	P. 245
CONCLUSION / THE FUTURE	P. 301
BIBLIOGRAPHY	P. 305
FOOTNOTES	P. 309

INTRODUCTION

From the days of the American Revolution, to the Jacobin French Revolution, to the coalition wars against Napoleon Bonaparte, to Andrew Jackson's war on the Central Bankers, to Karl Marx's war on sanity, to the American Civil War, to the Reds' shocking wave of 19th century assassinations, to the conspiratorial founding of the U.S. Federal Reserve, to the horrific First World War to enslave Germany, to the Rothschild-Communist subversion of Russia's Czar, to the horrible World War against Hitler and Japan, to the Cold War, to the JFK assassination, to the "women's movement" to the Global Warming Hoax, to the "fall of communism", to the 9/11 attacks & the "War On Terror", and finally, to the looming confrontation with Russia and China - the common thread of the New World Order crime gang links all of these events together.

At the heart of this self-perpetuating network sits the legendary House of Rothschild – the true owners of 'Planet Rothschild'. Through an alliance with other billionaire families, universities, corporations, think tanks and media moguls worldwide; the cabal has, for 250 years, manipulated world events and political players like so many pawns on a global chessboard.

If it's true that "all the world is a stage", then the House of Rothschild and its international partners are the writers, directors and producers of the exciting play called, 'History". The politicians are the actors and the TV talking heads are the narrators. The audience is humanity itself – most of which, unfortunately, have no idea that a rigged show has been, and still is, playing out before their eyes. It is a global monster-scam of unimaginable dimensions in which humanity is the target.

Now, you can earn your 'Phd' in New World Order studies by reading this epic two-volume timeline thriller entitled PLANET ROTHSCHILD. It is a unique "blurb by blurb" chronological and photographical review that will enrich your depth of historical and economic knowledge like no other work of its kind. Travel through time in just under 600 easy-to-digest pages loaded with over 1200 images. This life-changing work is ideal as a permanent reference & study guide. You may not like what you find in its pages. Truth is not always easy to swallow. But you won't be able to refute any of it; and nor will you ever look at world events in the same light ever again.

WORLD WAR II
Part 1

AUGUST 23, 1939
THE MOLOTOV-RIBBENTROP PACT / GERMANY & RUSSIA AGREE TO A NON-AGGRESSION PACT

Like Bismarck before him, Hitler understands how the dangers of British & French intrigue can again entangle Germany into a dangerous two - front war. To alleviate the threat in the east, German Foreign Minister Ribbentrop and Russian Foreign Minister Molotov sign the Molotov-Ribbentrop Non-Aggression Pact.

Hitler understands what kind of monster Stalin is, but he hopes that if he can at least keep the peace with the USSR, the scheming warmongers of Britain and France can be prevented from drawing the USSR into a war against Germany.

Western Globalists are annoyed with Stalin over this pact with Germany. But Stalin has his own plans, and his own timetable. Rather than fight Germany now, he wants Germany and the Anglo-French Alliance to weaken each other first, in preparation for the day when his Red Army can take all of Europe.

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

The New York Times.

LATE CITY EDITION

GERMANY AND RUSSIA SIGN 10-YEAR NON-AGGRESSION PACT; BIND EACH OTHER NOT TO AID OPPONENTS IN WAR ACTS; HITLER REBUFFS LONDON; BRITAIN AND FRANCE MOBILIZE

U.S. AND ARGENTINA PLAN TRADE PACT, WELLES DISCLOSES

BRITAIN ACTS FAST

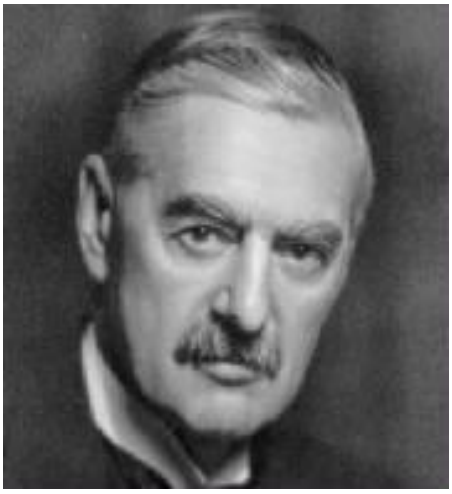
The Developments in Europe

QUICK ACTION SEEN

Text of the Berlin-Moscow Treaty

BARS HOSTILE UNION

Molotov - Ribbentrop– Stalin; the agreement to not fight upsets the Globalists, who mocked the deal in numerous cartoons.



Western cartoons mock the idea of a Hitler-Stalin pact

AUGUST 25, 1939
BRITAIN & POLAND AGREE TO A MILITARY ALLIANCE

The Polish-British Common Defense Pact contains promises of British military assistance in the event that Poland is attacked by another European country. This builds upon a previous agreement (March 1939) between the two countries, and also with France, by specifically committing to military action in the event of an attack.

With this agreement, Zionist-Globalist forces in the UK have trapped the reluctant Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, as well as France. All that is left to do now is for Polish-Jewish border thugs, under the protection of Marshal Edward Rydz-Smigly, to deliberately provoke Germany into action and get the war started. On the nights of August 25 to August 31 inclusive, there occur many violent attacks on German civilians as well as German officials and property.

Under heavy pressure, Chamberlain was manipulated into a UK-Poland Defense pact. The power to start World War II was thus placed in the hands of the mad Marshal, Rydz-Smigly

FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"Chamberlain (speaking off the record to Ambassador Kennedy while golfing) stated that the America and the world Jews had forced England into the war".
(1)

AUGUST 28, 1939
HITLER ISSUES AN OPEN PEACE LETTER TO THE PRESIDENT OF FRANCE

Now emboldened by Britain, France and, from 'behind the scenes', Roosevelt, Poland's relentless and murderous abuse of its captive German population reaches the breaking point. Hitler is prepared for war with Poland but is still attempting to preserve peace, especially with France and Britain. In an open letter to French President Daladier, Hitler makes yet another impassioned plea for peace.

Some pertinent excerpts:

"My dear Minister President:
I understand the misgiving to which you give expression. I, too, have never overlooked the grave responsibilities which are imposed upon those who are in charge of the fate of nations. As an old front line fighter, I, like you, know the horrors of war. Guided by this attitude and experience, I have tried to remove all matters that might cause conflict between our two peoples.

As you could judge for yourself during your last visit here, the German people, in the knowledge of its own behavior held and holds no ill feelings, much less hatred, for its one-time brave opponent. On the contrary, the pacification of our western frontier led to an increasing sympathy.

I am deeply convinced that if, especially, England at that time had, instead of starting a wild campaign against Germany in the press and instead of launching rumors of a German mobilization, somehow talked the Poles into being reasonable, Europe today and for twenty-five years could enjoy a condition of deepest peace.

As things were, Polish public opinion was excited by a lie about German aggression. The Polish government declined the proposals. Polish public opinion, convinced that England and France would now fight for Poland, began to make demands one might possibly stigmatize as laughable insanity were they not so tremendously dangerous. At that point an unbearable terror, a physical and economic persecution of the Germans although they numbered more than a million and a half began in the regions ceded by the Reich.

May I now take the liberty of putting a question to you, Herr Daladier: How would you act as a Frenchman if, through some unhappy issue of a brave struggle, one of your provinces severed by a corridor occupied by a foreign power? And if a big city - let us say Marseilles - were hindered from belonging to France and if Frenchmen living in this area were persecuted, beaten and maltreated, yes, murdered, in a bestial manner?

I see no way of persuading Poland, which feels herself as unassailable, now that she enjoys the protection of her guarantees, to accept a peaceful solution. If our two countries on that account should be destined to meet again on the field of battle, there would nevertheless be a difference in the motives. I, Herr Daladier, shall be leading my people in a fight to rectify a wrong, whereas the others would be fighting to preserve that wrong." (2)

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

The New York Times.

LATE CITY EDITION

VOL. LXXXVIII... No. 29,861. NEW YORK, MONDAY, AUGUST 28, 1939. PPP THREE CENTS

HITLER TELLS PARIS HE MUST GET DANZIG AND CORRIDOR; BERLIN THINKS DOOR IS LEFT OPEN TO PEACEFUL SOLUTION; BRITISH ANSWER TODAY TO INSIST ON RIGHTS OF POLAND

FAIR SETS RECORD AS PAID ADMISSIONS NET 306,680 IN DAY

Perfect Weather and Limited Bargain Rate Bring Out Biggest Crowd So Far

BEST WEEKS SEEN AHEAD

Throngs Exceed the Previous Mark for Paying Guests by More Than 40,000

The Developments in Europe

LONDON IS DECIDED

Cabinet Rules Out Any Retreat—It Sees Hope in Playing for Time

TRUCE SUGGESTION LIKELY

Note to Hitler Is Expected to Propose a Six-Month Period to Precede Negotiations

PARIS AWAITS BLOW

Declares Hitler Rejects a Humane Settlement of Dispute With Poles

DENIES MEDIATION PLAN

France Now Watches Action of Britain—Evacuation of Paris Held Urgent

Hitler Note and Paris Communique

REICH FLIERS' GARB COMMON IN DANZIG

POLES DIG TRENCHES AND WATCH SOCCER

FUEHRER INSISTENT

Tells Daladier in Letter Danzig and Corridor Must Return to Reich

POLISH STAND IS ASSAILED

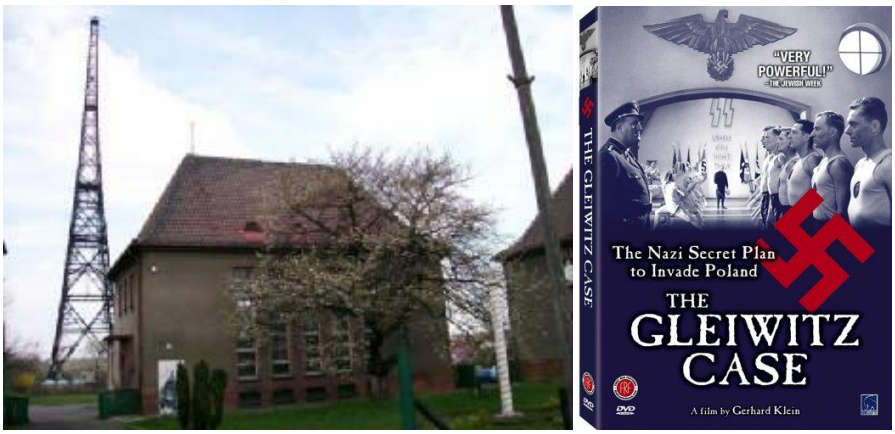
Hitler Pleads With France to Keep Out of East, Stressing Friendship for Nation

The headline of the New York Times confirmed that Hitler sought to avoid war with Britain & France. The front page carried the full text of the thoughtful and logical letter which Hitler wrote to French President Edouard Daladier (shown laughing with Hitler in 1938) - a letter which The Times cannot now deny.

FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"German men and women were hunted like wild beasts through the streets of Bromberg. When they were caught, they were mutilated and torn to pieces by the Polish mob. . . . Every day the butchery increased. . . . Thousands of Germans fled from their homes in Poland with nothing more than the clothes that they wore..

On the nights of August 25 to August 31 inclusive, there occurred, besides innumerable attacks on civilians of German blood, 44 perfectly authenticated acts of armed violence against German official persons and property." (3)



William Joyce, Irish defector to Germany

AUGUST 31, 1939
'THE GLEIWITZ' (& other) BORDER ATTACKS / JEWISH-POLISH GUERILLAS ATTACK GERMAN RADIO STATION

Overestimating their strength, underestimating German strength, and believing that France and the UK would now back him, Marshal Smigly allows Polish-Jewish partisan terrorists to cross the border and attack a German radio station in Germany. It is actually the latest in a string of deliberate border instigations against Germany.

The "Poles" then broadcast a message (in Polish) urging others to take up arms and start killing Germans. German police quickly arrive and retake the station, killing one of the Red terrorists. Jewish Red terrorists, their Polish government protectors, and their Globalist-Zionist masters have picked a fight with Germany!

Modern fake historians claim that the Gleiwitz incident was staged by Germans dressed as Polish terrorists. But as is the case with the Reichstag Fire conspiracy theory, they offer no evidence to support this oft-repeated lie, (beyond a forced "confession" obtained after the war) to support this theory – a theory that ignores the outrageous and repeated pattern of provocations directed at Hitler's Germany ever since 1933, the numerous border incidents, the murders of Germans and also Hitler's sincere attempts to negotiate a resolution to the Corridor and Danzig controversies.

The Gleiwitz radio station was attacked and calls to kill German residents of Poland were broadcast. Books and films claiming otherwise are false.

FORBIDDEN HISTORY - QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"I lived in Germany during the 1980's when many people who lived during the war were still alive. I sought out anyone who lived near Poland in 1939 and was lucky enough to meet several people. One was a customs official who said it was so bad on the border they were armed and also had grenades in their office ready for attacks. Another told me his farm animals were often stolen by Polish (Jewish?) terrorists. Another told of his niece being raped by a Pole (Jew?) who crossed the border. He told me in 1940 they caught the man and showed me a copy of the death order signed by Heydrich, in which he ordered the man be put to death.

This is just one of many stories told to me by German civilians who witnessed these border incursions just like had happened in 1919-1928. One thing many people fail to see is that Poland openly attacked Germany right after World War I, which led to many border battles. Once Germany started pressing Poland to work out a solution to the corridor, the attacks started again. And one thing that is clear to me is that Germany did not make up these attacks*."* (4)

- George H. Ohio, USA

Hitler has had about all he could take from Poland.

SEPT 1, 1939	GAME ON! GERMANY INVADES POLAND	As the German army advances eastward, the badly beaten Polish forces withdraw rapidly.
SEPT 3,1939	'BLOODY SUNDAY' BOLSHEVIKS MURDER 3000+ GERMAN CIVILIANS IN BROMBERG	Red Jewish terrorists rape, torture and massacre 3000+ German civilians in the town of Bromberg, Poland. The Massacre is known as "Bloody Sunday".
SEPT 3,1939	UK & FRANCE DECLARE WAR UPON GERMANY	The world press shrieks in horror over Germany's "aggression" as Britain & France declare war! The Bromberg butchery of innocent Germans is ignored.

The New York Times. EXTRA

GERMAN ARMY ATTACKS POLAND; CITIES BOMBED, PORT BLOCKADED;
DANZIG IS ACCEPTED INTO REICH

Germans troops arrive to the rescue as the western press portrays Germany as the aggressor.

2nd EXTRA

The San Diego Union

BRITAIN DECLARES WAR

France Ready; To Back Britain

NO GAME OF TAG AS LONDON PRACTICES FOR WAR

'State of War Exists,' Chamberlain Tells World

1- Britain & France declare war

2- Bromberg: Poles and Jews massacre Germans

FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"This (Declaration of War) is the fault of the anti-appeasers and the fucking Jews." (5)

British Duke Arthur Wellesley (5th Duke of Wellington) was the great grandson of the famous Duke of Wellington who defeated Napoleon.

SEPTEMBER 7-16, 1939
THE SAAR OFFENSIVE / FRANCE INVADES GERMANY

The Saar Offensive is a French ground invasion into Saarland, Germany. The large scale assault is to be carried out by 40 divisions and 40 tank battalions. According to the Franco-Polish military convention, the French Army was to gain control over the area between the French border and the Siegfried Line of German defense. Much to the dismay of the fools in Poland, the full 40-division all-out assault never materializes. The empty promises of empire were just an Allied trick just to get stupid Marshal Smigly to start the fight with Germany.

But a limited invasion and occupation of Germany's Saar region does indeed occur. On October 16 & 17, the German army, now reinforced with troops returning from the Polish campaign, conducts a counter-offensive which retakes the lost territory from the invading French. In liberating what the French had invaded, the Germans lose 196 soldiers, plus 114 missing and 356 wounded. Hitler continues to plea for peace.

So you see, dear reader, the Anglo-French Allies not only instigated the war, and not only were the first to declare war, they also drew first blood upon Germany.

1- Invading French soldier reads a poster in German village of Lauterbach; a French-occupied area of Germany.

1- NY TIMES: 'FRENCH INVADE REICH; BRITISH LAND IN FRANCE

2- HERALD AMERICAN: 'FRENCH CRACK SAAR LINE; NAZIS OFFER PARIS PEACE

SEPTEMBER 17, 1939
SOVIET UNION INVADES POLAND FROM THE EAST / ALLIES SAY NOTHING

With the Polish army being routed by the advancing Germans in the west, Stalin cleverly decides to break the Soviet-Polish Non Aggression Pact of 1932. Poland is stabbed in the back as Soviet forces pour in from the east. The advancing Reds carry out massacres, the most infamous being the Katyn Forest Massacre in which 10,000 Polish Army officers are shot in the head.

Other than the pre-Versailles German areas which Germany reclaims, the Soviets will eventually take all of Poland. In a shocking double-standard, the anti-German, FDR, France & the UK remain oddly silent about this brutal Soviet aggression.

Poland appeals to Britain and France for help, citing the Poland-British Defense Pact just signed a few weeks ago. The Polish ambassador in London contacts the British Foreign Office pointing out that clause 1(b) of the agreement, which concerned an "aggression by a European power" on Poland, should apply to the Soviet invasion. The UK Foreign Secretary responds with hostility, stating that it was Britain's decision whether to declare war on the Soviet Union.

The truth is, the Allies don't give a rat's ass about Poland. They only used its stupid ultra-nationalist leader (who by now has shamelessly abandoned his troops and fled to Romania), to instigate Hitler so they could have their war. The horror Poland suffers under Soviet occupation is now Poland's problem, not the Allies'.

Marshal Smigly's egomania doomed Poland. The Soviets massacred 10,000 Polish officers after the rat Smigly abandoned his armies.

SEPTEMBER 17, 1939
GERMANY DEFEATS POLAND / DANZIG AND ALL OF PRUSSIA REUNITED WITH THE REST OF GERMANY

Within a few weeks, the German-Polish War is already over. Hitler receives a hero's welcome upon his arrival in liberated Danzig. Hitler addresses the Danzig crowd*:*

"No power on earth would have borne this condition as long as Germany. I do not know what England would have said about a similar peace solution (Versailles) at its expense or how America or France would have accepted it.

I attempted to find a tolerable solution - even for this problem. I submitted this attempt to the Polish rulers in the form of verbal proposals. You know these proposals. They were more than moderate. I do not know what mental condition the Polish Government was in when it refused these proposals. …….As an answer, Poland gave the order for the first mobilization. Thereupon wild terror was initiated, and my request to the Polish Foreign Minister to visit me in Berlin once more to discuss these questions was refused. Instead of going to Berlin, he went to London." (6)

Hitler rightfully mocks Smigly as a coward:

"The Polish Marshal, who miserably deserted his armies, said that he would hack the German Army to pieces." (7)

Liberated Germans welcomed Hitler to Danzig.

OCTOBER, 1939 – MAY, 1940
HITLER PLEADS FOR PEACE WITH BRITAIN & FRANCE

The German-Polish War has ended quickly. The Allies never had any intention of helping Poland. The French actually invade Germany on September 7th, advancing 8 km before stopping. The quiet period between the end of the Polish war until May 1940, is dubbed by a U.S. Senator as "The Phony War."

During this time, Hitler pleads for the Allies to withdraw their war declarations. Towards France he declares: "I have always expressed to France my desire to bury forever our ancient enmity and bring together these two nations, both of which have such glorious pasts." (8)

To the British, Hitler says: "I have devoted no less effort to the achievement of Anglo-German friendship. At no time and in no place have I ever acted contrary to British interests….Why should this war in the West be fought?" (9)

Hitler's pleas for peace are ignored as the allies begin to mobilize more than 2,000,000 troops in Northern France. Plans are openly discussed to advance eastward upon Germany, via "neutral" Belgium and Holland, as well as establishing operations in "neutral" Norway and Denmark, with or without their consent.

During his speech of October 6, 1939, Hitler pleaded for peace. Meanwhile, the British government shamelessly frightened its own people with idiotic tales of imminent German gas attacks.

NOVEMBER, 1939
FDR REPEALS THE NEUTRALITY ACTS

The Neutrality Acts prohibited the United States from selling arms to warring nations. The purpose of these acts was to prevent the U.S. from again becoming involved in Europe's wars.

Throughout the 1930's, FDR and his Zionist advisor Bernard Baruch (who had also been an advisor to Woodrow Wilson), anticipating a new war against Germany, had unsuccessfully tried to amend the previous Neutrality Acts. Soon after Germany and Poland began fighting, FDR again urges Congress to repeal the Neutrality Acts.

In November of '39, a new Neutrality Act is passed. The sale of arms to the UK is now legal. The scheming FDR has taken a big step towards involving America in a war that his Zio-Globo handlers have long been agitating for.

With help from the Jewish Press and Jewish Hollywood newsreels, Jewish Money King Bernard Baruch and his puppet FDR undid the previous Neutrality Acts.

NOVEMBER, 1940
THE PATRIA DISASTER: ZIONISTS SINK A SHIP FULL OF FELLOW JEWS IN ORDER TO GAIN SYMPATHY

The Patria is carrying 1800 Jewish émigrés, originally from Europe, whom British authorities are deporting from Palestine to Mauritius (island off of southern African coast) because they lack entry permits. The ship soon explodes and sinks off the coast of Palestine, killing 267 people.

The Zionist "Haganah" terror-military group claims that the passengers blew up the ship as a suicide protest against British refusal to let them arrive in Palestine. The truth eventually comes out and it is revealed that Haganah planted the bomb which sank the ship in just 15 minutes. Hard core Zionists would rather see Jewish passengers die than be relocated to Mauritius. The propaganda value of a "mass suicide protest" would outweigh the value of even Jewish lives.

The "official story" today is that Haganah only wanted to cripple the ship, not sink it. Regardless of the intent, Haganah murdered its own people and lots of them too!

1- The sinking of Patria

2- Haganah units

3- Future Prime Minister of Israel David Ben Gurion – part of the Patria plot

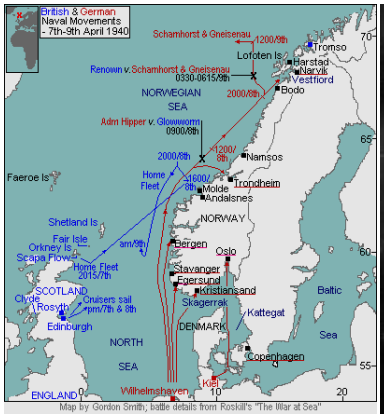
NOVEMBER 30, 1939
SOVIET UNION INVADES FINLAND

Just two months after swallowing Poland, Stalin launches an invasion of Finland. As he had with Poland, Stalin breaks another 1932 non-aggression pact he had agreed to; The Soviet-Finnish Non Aggression Pact of 1932.

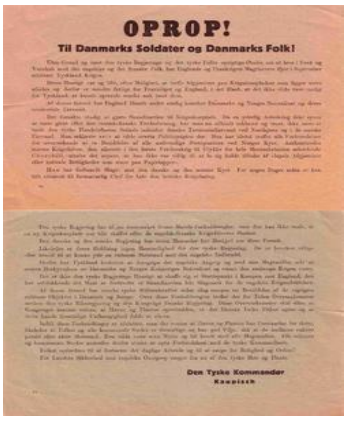
The invasion is massive, with 21 Soviet divisions consisting of 450,000 Red Army troops. Stalin expects to overwhelm Finland in a matter of weeks and install a government of Finnish Communists currently waiting in Moscow, but the brave and outnumbered Finns stage a heroic defense of their homeland. The "Winter War" is an embarrassment for Stalin. A treaty is signed the following March, but the Finns are forced to give up some territory.

Stalin has now broken two non-aggression treaties and annexed territory from both betrayed parties (Poland & Finland). The "International Community" verbally condemns the Soviet invasion and makes some symbolic economic gestures, but once again, there are no calls for boycotts, nor any declaration of war against the USSR as there was against Germany. Hitler is also forced to remain silent about Stalin's actions because he does not want a two-front war.

The brave Finns put up a fierce resistance against the Soviet aggressors.



APRIL 9, 1940
GERMANY IS FORCED INTO PRE-EMPTIVE, LIMITED OCCUPATIONS OF NORWAY & DENMARK



The Allied plan of attack is to disrupt Germany's iron ore imports from Sweden by illegally mining Norwegian waters, and then occupying the important Norwegian port of Narvik. Plans are also made for imposing a base of operations in Denmark, Germany's neutral neighbor to its north. (10)

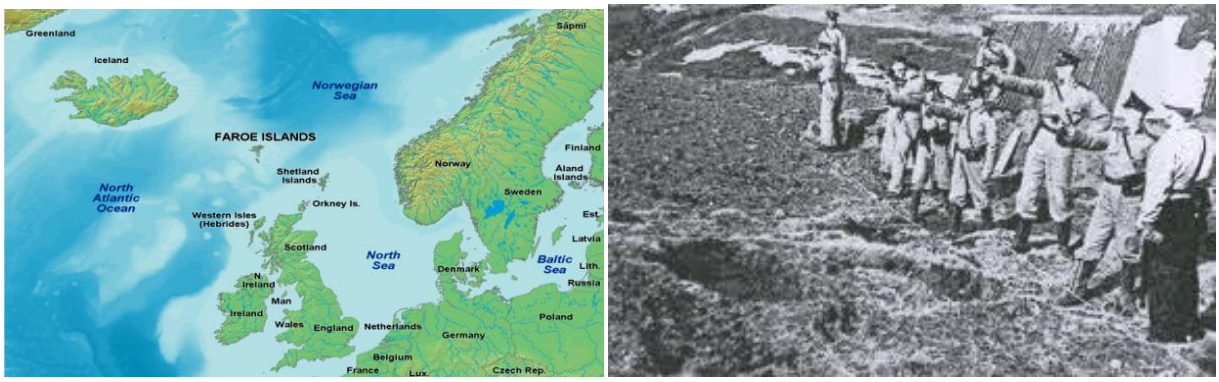
A Norwegian politician named Vidkun Quisling confirms the existence of these Allied plots (Operation Wilfred and Plan R 4). Sympathetic to Germany, and not wanting his country to become a battlefield, Quisling informs Hitler of the Anglo-French plot to wage war from the two Scandinavian countries.

Germany moves quickly to secure the Norwegian port of Narvik just before the British can place their mines, and also to occupy Denmark. German diplomats assure the leaders of both Scandinavian nations that Germany seeks neither conquest nor interference in internal affairs. (11) Life under limited German occupation goes on quietly for the Scandinavians during the war. Quisling's name is now a dictionary word in the English language, synonymous with "traitor" – a totally unfair characterization.

OPROP!
Til Danmarks Soldater og Danmarks Folk!

1- Hitler prevented the UK from using Norway & Denmark as bases of operation against German shipping.



2- Norway's Vidkun Quisling was a patriot - not a traitor.

3- The Germans dropped leaflets over Denmark which explained their actions, condemned British warmongering, and reassured the Danes that Germany would protect their country.

MAY 10, 1940
GREAT BRITAIN INVADES NEUTRAL ICELAND

The British invasion of tiny, neutral Iceland is code named "Operation Fork." It begins on May 10, 1940 (the same day that Churchill comes to power) with British troops disembarking in the Capital City of Reykjavik. The British quickly move inland, disabling communications networks and securing landing locations. The government of Iceland protests the violation of their neutrality, but to no avail.

This force is then subsequently augmented, to a final strength of 25,000. The recently thwarted British occupations of neutral Denmark and Norway, and the successful occupation of neutral Iceland, show that Rothschild Britain is the true aggressor of the coming war in Western Europe. Although FDR, up until December 1941, promises that America will remain non-belligerent, 30,000 US troops will relieve the British and occupy Iceland in spring of 1941. (12)

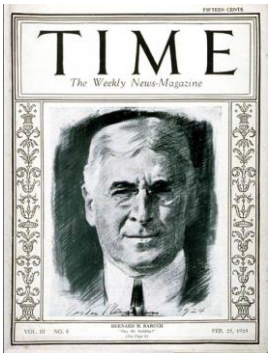
1- Bully Britain and the U.S. intend to use neutral Iceland (top left) as a base of naval operations in the North Atlantic.

2- Icelandic police officers training to stop the British invasion. They later decided not to resist the superior British force.

MAY 10, 1940
WINSTON CHURCHILL BECOMES UK's PRIME MINISTER

With the preparations for war in place, the reluctant warrior Neville Chamberlain is finally pushed aside as the lunatic, drunken, cigar chomping Winston Churchill takes his place. Churchill's record of treason already includes the World War I sinking of the Lusitania (when he was Lord of the Admiralty).

Churchill, and his wealthy London (and New York) Zionist backers, have been advocating for war with Germany for the past 6 years. His warmongering had made him an outcast in British politics. But now, with the Zionist press of Britain misrepresenting the facts surrounding the German-Polish War, Churchill is portrayed as some sort of wise prophet.



Hitler knows very well who Churchill is, and who he works for. He had even referred to Churchill in past speeches as part of Britain's "government of tomorrow". With Chamberlain gone and Churchill now in power, Hitler now knows for certain that "the Phony War" is about to become very real.

Churchill and his criminal crew of Kingsley Wood & Anthony Eden are now out in the open as UK's ruling war party. The relationship between Baruch & Churchill dates back to the 1930's. (Above photo on right taken in 1961)

FORBIDDEN HISTORY - QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"I emphasized that the defeat of Germany and Japan and their elimination from world trade would give Britain a tremendous opportunity to swell her foreign commerce in both volume and profit." - Bernard M. Baruch (13)

MAY 10, 1940
GERMANY LAUNCHES PRE-EMPTIVE INVASION OF 'LOW COUNTRIES'

Hitler's pleas for peace have been repeatedly ignored as 400,000 British and at least 2,000,000 French troops mass in northern France. The massive invasion of Germany's industrial Ruhr region is to come through the ostensibly "neutral"

League of Nations member states of Belgium and The Netherlands (Holland), whose governments are under intense Allied pressure to allow safe passage for the planned Allied attack on the bordering Ruhr region of Germany. (14)

Again, Hitler's hand is forced. On the same day that Churchill comes to power, and that the UK invades Iceland, as an act of national self-defense, Germany takes the fight to the Allies before they can bring it to German soil and reinstitute a 2nd Versailles Treaty. In a stunning advance westward, the German Blitzkrieg quickly overtakes the smaller nations (known as the Low Countries because of their geography) and pushes the Allied armies into a full retreat towards the beaches of northern France.

The Globo-Zionist press, as well as today's history books, portrays the Blitz as "the Nazi conquest of Holland, Belgium, and France." But the menacing presence of the massive Allied force on Germany's industrial frontier is conveniently ignored, as is the undeniable and extensive collaboration between the "neutral" Low Countries and the Allies.

After the invasion, the German government published 'Allied Intrigue in the Low Countries', which is a 50-page English language paper detailing the full extent of Belgian and Dutch cooperation with the Allies. The western press and modern court-historians have buried these allegations.

MAY 10, 1940
ALLIES BOMB GERMAN TOWN OF FRIEBURG / 20 CHILDREN KILLED IN A PLAYGROUND

The medieval and non-strategic German town of Freiburg is located just 20 miles from the French border. In the opening hours of the war in the west, new Prime Minister Churchill and his French allies waste no time in murdering civilians. About 60 bombs are dropped on or near Freiburg; killing 50 civilians including 20 children who were playing outside. This was the first bombing of civilians in World War II.

In order to whitewash this horrific deed from the pages of history; and to maintain the historical myth that it was Germany that initiated the bombings of civilians; court historians have long promoted the ridiculous lie that the Germans accidentally bombed their own town and then blamed the event on the Allies in order to cover up the mistake. Subsequent terror bombings of German civilians will dispel any doubt that Churchill was indeed capable of deliberately exterminating civilians.

The New York Times.

LATE CITY EDITION

GERMANS GAIN IN SAVAGE ATTACKS IN BELGIUM; REACH ROTTERDAM, CUTTING HOLLAND IN TWO; FRENCH MEET NAZIS IN CLASH OF 1500 TANKS

ROOSEVELT TO ASK INCREASE IN FUNDS FOR DEFENSE USES

The International Situation

NAZIS CLAIM LIEGE

But Berlin Admits Some Forts in Belgian Ring Still Hold Out

THREAT TO BRUSSELS

Thrust as in 1914 Held Likely to Force New Stand of Antwerp

PARIS IS CONFIDENT

Fighting Fierce on 200-Mile Front—Liege Held by Allies, It Is Said

NAZIS RUSH UP UNITS

Major Battle Still to Be Fought, but Intensity of Action Increases

NAZIS CROSS BRIDGE

Warships of Land Charge In Epic Battle Near Liege

1- The Allies terror-bombed scenic Freiburg

2- Memorial stone at the Hilda playground where 20 children were murdered

3- The New York Times falsely accuses Germany (!) of "savage attacks".

MAY, 1940
HITLER TRIES FOR PEACE THROUGH A SWEDISH CHANNEL

After having just defeated the French and British invaders, Hitler, via a Swedish third party, proposes generous peace terms to Britain. The Germans contact the British ambassador in Sweden, Victor Mallet, through Sweden´s Supreme Court Judge Ekeberg, who is known to Hitler´s legal advisor, Ludwig Weissauer. (15)

Hitler´s peace proposal demands nothing of Great Britain and implies that the states currently occupied by Germany would be de-occupied; as Germany´s occupation was only due to the present war situation. But Winston Churchill is not interested in peace. The offer goes nowhere.

German peace efforts via Sweden failed. Ambassador Victor Mallet (left) walking with Princess Elizabeth (now Queen Elizabeth) and Prince Phillip

MAY 25-28, 1940
"THE WAR CABINET CRISIS" / CHURCHILL AND LORD HALIFAX DIVIDED OVER ITALIAN PEACE MEDIATION

Giuseppe Bastianini, the Italian ambassador in London, requests a meeting with British Foreign Secretary Lord Halifax to discuss Italy's neutrality. Halifax meets Bastianini later that afternoon. The discussion soon moves to that of Italian mediation between the Allies and Germany.

Bastianini reveals that the goal of Italian leader Benito Mussolini (Hitler's close ally) is to negotiate a settlement "that would not merely be an armistice, but would protect European peace for the century." (16) Halifax responds very favorably to the idea and takes it to the British War Cabinet.

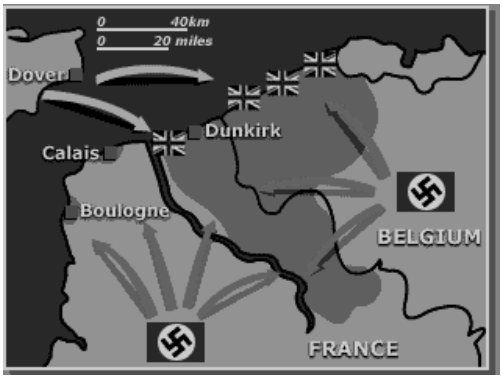
The following morning Halifax reports to the War Cabinet, summarizing his meeting with Bastianini and urging his colleagues to consider Italian mediation. Again, Churchill would have none of it!

For several days, Halifax continues to press for the Mussolini mediation. In an apparent attempt to placate Halifax, Churchill states that he doubts whether anything would come of an approach to Italy, but that the matter was one which the War Cabinet should consider. But Churchill is lying to Halifax. Never once did Churchill even consider Mussolini's offer to mediate peace between Britain and Germany. The matter eventually dies after Churchill outmaneuvers the peace-seeking Halifax. The conflict is known as 'The War Cabinet Crisis'.

1- Lord Halifax (walking with Churchill) tried to convince the War Cabinet to at least hear Mussolini's proposal.



2- Mussolini, shaking hands with UK Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain in 1938, had helped Britain and Germany to keep the peace of Europe at the Munich Conference of 1938.

3- Instead of accepting peace offers, Churchill's gang chose to frighten the British public with tales of imminent poison gas attacks from Hitler.

MAY 27 – JUNE 4, 1940
AS A SIGN OF FRIENDSHIP, HITLER ALLOWS THE ALLIED ARMIES TO ESCAPE AT DUNKIRK

After Germany's stunning advance, the Allies are trapped on the beaches of Dunkirk, France. The entire force can be easily captured, but Hitler issues a halt order. (17) As a show of good faith towards his western tormentors, Hitler believes that the British will be more likely to make peace if they can escape with their dignity intact.

A massive boat lift involving British fishermen ferries the troops across the English Channel back to England. The Globalist Press maliciously spins Hitler's gracious act as a "miraculous escape right under Hitler's nose." The cigar-chomping, Zionist-owned, alcoholic Winston Churchill vows to keep fighting as he frightens the British people with tales of imminent German invasion.

Allies trapped on the beach! Hitler could easily have taken the entire Allied force prisoner. His gracious act allows the soldiers to escape from Dunkirk.

FORBIDDEN HISTORY - QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"He (Hitler) then astonished us by speaking with admiration of the British Empire, of the necessity for its existence, and of the civilization that Britain had brought into the world. ....He compared the British Empire with the Catholic Church saying they were both essential elements of stability in the world. He said that all he wanted from Britain was that she should acknowledge Germany's position on the Continent. The return of Germany's colonies would be desirable but not essential, and he would even offer to support Britain with troops if she should be involved in difficulties anywhere." (18)

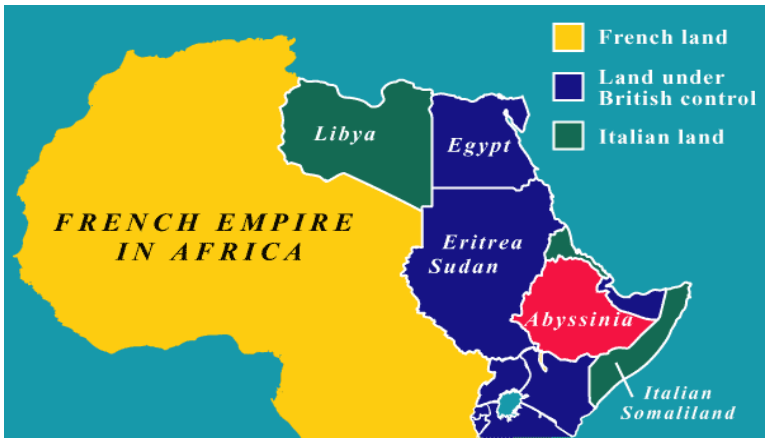
- German General von Blumentritt

JUNE, 1940
SOVIET UNION INVADES 4 COUNTRIES AT THE SAME TIME! / LATVIA, LITHUANIA, ESTONIA, & EASTERN ROMANIA

With the eyes of the world focused on events in Western Europe, Stalin continues to expand his Evil Empire. The Reds annex the tiny defenseless Baltic states of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia. Stalin also annexes parts of eastern Romania.

.

The Soviet Union has now invaded 6 countries in just 9 months! Yet, the western Globalists only remain obsessed with attacking Germany, whose leader, just like the Kaiser had two decades earlier, continues to plead for peace.



Stalin swallowed up the tiny Baltic states of Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia (and took a piece of Romania too!)

JUNE, 1940
AFTER GERMANY'S DEFEAT OF THE ALLIES, MUSSOLINI's ITALY JOINS THE WAR

Upon seeing Germany's stunning victory in 1940, Benito Mussolini, the opportunistic, ego-driven Leader of Italy, ends Italy's neutrality and allies himself with Germany. He declares war upon France (which was already beaten and occupied) and also upon the UK, (which is already being chased out of Europe at Dunkirk).

Unlike Hitler's defensive war, Mussolini dreams of conquest, hoping to restore a new Roman Empire in North Africa. But his reckless adventures will prove to be very costly to Hitler. In August of '40, Italy occupies British Somaliland in East Africa. In September, Italy invades Egypt, which has been occupied by the British since a 1936 Treaty to protect the Suez Canal.

In picking a fight with Britain, Mussolini bites off far more than the unimpressive Italian military can chew. The superior British land and naval forces dominate their Italian adversaries, giving Churchill a potential continental opening to invade a now non-neutral Italy from North Africa.

Colonial Italy clashed with colonial Britain over Africa. Though a solid anti-Communist, Mussolini's imperialist ego will cost Germany & Italy dearly.

JUNE 22, 1940
NEW GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE MAKES PEACE WITH HITLER

As the fleeing French government collapses, the Germans enter undefended Paris on June 14 ' 40. The new government is headed by the World War I hero Marshal Philippe Petain, who agrees to make peace with Germany.

Unlike the brutality of the Versailles Treaty, the terms of this Armistice are very light, requiring only that Germany continues to occupy northern France as a defensive measure against a British invasion of the continent. The new French government has its administrative offices in the southern city of Vichy. Other than the strategic occupation in the north, France remains a sovereign nation. Life in occupied France goes on quietly. German soldiers establish an excellent reputation for good behavior, and charm with the French ladies.

Meanwhile in the UK, Churchill and French General Charles De Gaulle fume over Marshal Petain's refusal to continue fighting. Hitler wants Petain to ally his country with Germany, but Mussolini's war declaration upon France leaves such a bad taste in the mouths of Frenchmen that they cannot possibly join a German-Italian alliance.

Hitler and Field Marshal Petain make peace. The armistice is signed in the same railway car in which Germany surrendered after World War I.

JUNE 24, 1940
WORLD JEWISH CONGRESS CLAIMS THAT 6 MILLION JEWS ARE DOOMED IF GERMANY WINS THE WAR

Sing it Four Tops! - "It's the same, old song, with a different …..

THE PALM BEACH POST

Tuesday Morning, June 25, 1940

DOOM OF EUROPEAN JEWS IS SEEN IF HITLER WINS

NEW YORK, June 24.—(AP)—Dr. Nahum Goldmann, administrative committee chairman of the World Jewish Congress, said today that if the Nazis should achieve final victory "6,000,000 Jews in Europe are doomed to destruction."

"Their only hope for future existence lies in the ability of Great Britain to resist the Nazi conquest," declared Dr. Goldmann, who arrived here Friday from Geneva.

He issued a statement calling upon United States Jewry to take leadership in mobilizing Jews in North and South America for an organized defense program.

"if the Nazis should achieve final victory 6,000,000 Jews in Europe are doomed to destruction."

Not a single Jew has even been interned and Hitler is still pleading for peace; yet the "Holocaust" and the "6 million" have already been established!

JULY, 1940
CHURCHILL LAUNCHES AERIAL BOMBARDMENT CAMPAIGN AGAINST GERMAN CIVILIANS

With British ground troops having been chased off of the European mainland, Churchill and his London/New York Banking Bosses can only continue the fight over air (and sea). The British Royal Air Force is ordered to bomb civilian areas. Churchill hopes to provoke a similar response from Hitler so that he and FDR can point to "German bombing of civilians."

In a July memo to the Minister of UK Air Craft production, Churchill writes:

"When I look around to see how we can win the war I see that there is only one sure path. We have no Continental army which can defeat the German military power.. ...there is one thing that will bring him (Hitler) down, and that is an absolutely devastating, exterminating attack by very heavy bombers from this country upon the Nazi homeland. We must be able to overwhelm them by this means, without which I do not see a way through." (19)

.

The notorious drunk will bomb German civilian areas seven times. But Hitler refuses to do the same. German bombers are under strict orders to limit their attacks to military/industrial targets only. Finally, in September; Hitler is forced to declare that any more British bombings of civilian areas will be met with a similar response. When the German Air Force drops its first bombs on British civilian areas, the world press declares "Germany Bombs Civilians."

As he had done with the orchestrated sinking of the Lusitania in 1915, Winston Churchill has again deliberately brought on the deaths of innocent men, women, and children in order to achieve political goals.

Germans were killed and left homeless by Churchill's heavy terror bombers.

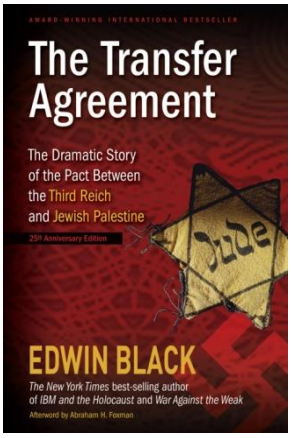
JULY 20, 1940
HITLER DROPS 'PEACE LEAFLETS' OVER LONDON!

With Germany in total control of the continent and the war situation, Hitler responds to Churchill's bombs by dropping mass quantities of leaflets over London. The 4-page broadsheet contains an English language summary of Hitler's recent speech before the Reichstag. The speech is entitled, "A Last Appeal to Reason", in which he closes with a final appeal for peace:

"In this hour I feel it to be my duty before my own conscience to appeal once more to reason and common sense in Great Britain as much as elsewhere. I consider myself in a position to make this appeal, since I am not the vanquished, begging favors, but the victor speaking in the name of reason. I can see no reason why this war must go on. I am grieved to think of the sacrifices it will claim.

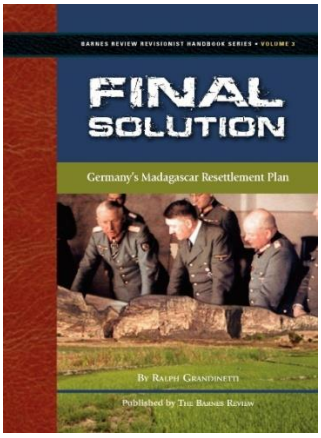
Possibly Mr. Churchill again will brush aside this statement of mine by saying that it is merely born of fear and of doubt in our final victory. In that case I shall have relieved my conscience in regard to the things to come." (20)

The British respond to Hitler's sincere plea with mockery, threats, and more bombs.



Ignorant British soldier laughs as he reads Hitler's air-dropped leaflet.

AUGUST, 1940
THE MADAGSCAR PLAN / HITLER PLANS TO ESTABLISH A JEWISH HOMELAND ON MADAGASCAR



For centuries, Europeans and Jews have had problems living together. Hitler was content to leave them alone and live as resident aliens of Germany. For those who wanted to live in Palestine, the 1933 'Transfer Agreement' between the German government and the Zionists facilitated that. From 1933-1940, about 40% of Germany's Jews immigrated to Palestine with all of their wealth intact. When World War II prevents further cooperation between the Germans and the Zionists, it becomes clear that a new "final solution" is needed.

The plan Hitler envisions is to create a homeland for the Jews on the beautiful island of Madagascar, off the coast of southern Africa, and resettle one million Jews per year under German protection and supervision. The idea of a Jewish homeland on Madagascar had actually been circulating throughout Europe since the 1880's.

The Madagascar Plan is scrapped when the British invade the island in 1942, taking control away from Vichy France after the Battle of Madagascar. A Jewish Madagascar would have been a win-win solution for Jews and Europeans and would have spared the poor Palestinians, and other Arab nations, all of the horrors they would endure after the illegitimate founding of Israel in 1948.

1- Jewish author Edwin Black's 'The Transfer Agreement" reveals the full extent of the cooperation between the Germans and Zionist émigrés.

2 & 3: Hitler's 'Final Solution" was to relocate the Jews to a homeland of their own, not kill them.

SEPTEMBER 16, 1940
FDR INSTITUTES FIRST EVER PEACETIME DRAFT IN AMERICA

While publicly insisting that American boys "will not be going to foreign wars", FDR continues to secretly prepare for entry into the Globalists' World War. FDR institutes a peacetime "Selective Service" Act which requires all males aged 26-35 to register for an upcoming draft "just in case". The actual draft begins in October 1940. The unlucky draftees are told that they will serve a 12 month term, based in either the Western Hemisphere, or a US territory.

By the summer of 1941, the deceitful FDR (who is planning to trick America into the war by way of a Japanese provocation) decrees that the terms be lengthened. Outraged draftees protest FDR's broken promise and threaten to desert when their 12 months are up. But most will obey the order and continue to serve past the promised October 1941 release date, and right up until the "surprise attack" upon Pearl Harbor in December of 1941. This is the first, and only, peacetime draft in U.S. history.

1- "What's the Joke?" - 1940 Postcard mocks FDR for laughing as he signs Draft Bill. The peacetime draft was very unpopular.

2- Evaders were arrested!

SEPTEMBER, 1940
'AXIS' NATIONS OF GERMANY, ITALY, & JAPAN SIGN 'TRI-PARTITE PACT / HOPE TO KEEP THE U.S. OUT OF THE WAR

Germany and Japan are suspicious of FDR's true intentions. To discourage American military involvement in either Germany's war with Britain, or Japan's unrelated war with China, the two nations and Italy sign the "Tripartite Pact".

Japan, Germany, and Italy agree to assist one another with all political, economic and military means if one of the contracting nations is attacked by a nation at present not involved in the European War or in the Japanese-Chinese conflict. The hope is that this pact will keep America out of the war. Ironically, the defense pact will end up actually facilitating FDR's scheme to draw America in.

The Axis nations had hoped to keep the U.S. out of the war.

1940
THE ROCKEFELLER BROTHERS TRUST FUND IS ESTABLISHED

By 1940, the Rockefeller Family of oil and banking fame has solidified its place among the Globalist dynasties. What the 5 Billionaire Rothschild Brothers of the 1800's were to the European branch of the New World Order, the 5 Billionaire Rockefeller Brothers of the 1900's will be to the American branch.

John D. Rockefeller Jr. establishes the Fund as a vehicle for his five spoiled sons to promote socialism and Globalism through "philanthropy". The Fund will one day also finance ugly "modern art", "feminism" and "environmentalism". The 5 Rockefeller Brothers are:

 Nelson Rockefeller: Governor of New York '59-'73, US Vice President '74-'77
 John D. Rockefeller III: Philanthropist. Donates land for the United Nations.
 Laurance: Venture capitalist. Radical "Environmentalist"  Winthrop: Philanthropist, Governor of Arkansas '67-'71
 David: Banker. Former CFR Director, Founder of the Tri-Lateral Commission

1- The Third Generation. The Rockefeller Brothers are America's version of the Rothschilds.

*2- Jacob Rothschild with David Rockefeller
From Vanity Fair Magazine / May 2012:
"In May 2012, two of the world's most storied financial families fused a historic business deal. Charlie Rose salutes their newfound partnership".

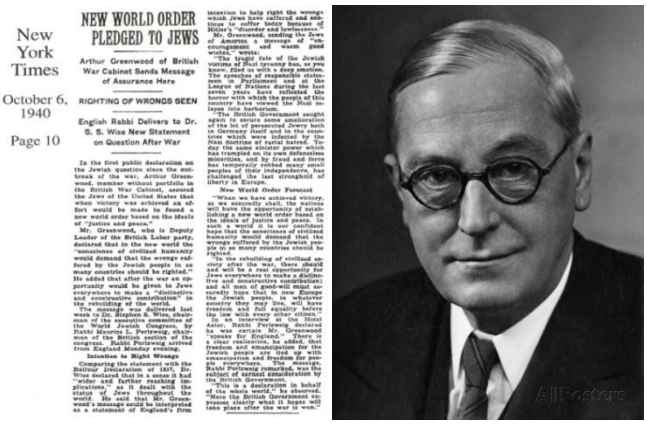
OCTOBER, 1940
ROMANIA ACCEPTS GERMAN PROTECTION OF ITS OIL FIELDS

The Soviets have already annexed parts of anti-Communist Romania. The Red Army now sits dangerously close to the Ploesti oil fields upon which Germany depends. Stalin is up to something in southeast Europe, and Hitler knows it. With the approval of Romania, German troops arrive to protect the oil fields from the Soviet threat.

1- Map above shows how vulnerable Germany is from the southeast (soft underbelly of Europe). The oil fields of Romania can be easily attacked from Greece, Yugoslavia, or the USSR. It is from this area of Europe that Churchill and Stalin will play their "chess games" against Germany.

2- Romanian leader Antonescu visits Hitler

OCTOBER, 1940
UK PROMISES 'NEW WORLD ORDER' TO JEWS AFTER WAR



Germany is in total control of the European war situation. As they had during their losing days of World War I, British politicians reach out to international Jewry for help. During World War I, Britain's 'Balfour Declaration' promised Palestine to the Jews in exchange for bringing about U.S. entry. Now, Lord Arthur Greenwood's Declaration' offers them a "New World Order". Greenwood makes an amazingly prophetic statement, 'When we have achieved victory, and we assuredly shall..."

But there is no chance of British victory unless the U.S. can be dragged into the conflict. Therefore, Greenwood must already suspect that the U.S. will enter the war (which it does 14 months later). The promise of a 'New World Order' is clearly intended to further encourage American Jewish support for entering the war.

Greenwood promises: "In the rebuilding of civilized society after the war, there should and will be a real opportunity for Jews everywhere to make a distinctive and constructive contribution." (21)

In other words, Lord Greenwood is saying: "Get America in and we'll give you a say in Europe's affairs after the war!" Greenwood's imperialist 'dance with the Devil' will prove fatal. After the war, Britain ends up broke and loses her Empire.

New York Times

October 6, 1940

Page 10

NEW WORLD ORDER PLEDGED TO JEWS

Arthur Greenwood of British War Cabinet Sends Message of Assurance Here

RIGHTING OF WRONGS SEEN

English Rabbi Delivers to Dr. S. S. Wise New Statement on Question After War

In the first public declaration on the Jewish question since the outbreak of the war, Arthur Greenwood, member without portfolio in the British War Cabinet, assured the Jews of the United States that when victory was achieved an effort would be made to found a new world order based on the ideals of "justice and peace."

Mr. Greenwood, who is Deputy Leader of the British Labor party, declared that in the new world the "consciousness of civilized humanity would demand that the wrongs suffered by the Jewish people in so many countries should be righted." He added that after the war an opportunity would be given to Jews everywhere to make a "distinctive and constructive contribution" in the rebuilding of civilized society.

The message was delivered last week to Dr. Stephen S. Wise, chairman of the executive committee of the World Jewish Congress, by Rabbi Perlzweig, political representative of the British section of the congress. Rabbi Perlzweig arrived from England Monday evening.

Intention to Right Wrongs

Comparing the statement with the Balfour Declaration of 1917, Dr. Wise declared that in a sense it had "wider and farther reaching importance" for the future of the status of Jews throughout the world. He said that Mr. Greenwood's message could be interpreted as a statement of England's firm intention to help right the wrongs which Jews have suffered and establish a new order in place of Hitler's "disorder and lawlessness."

Mr. Greenwood, sending the Jews of America a message of "encouragement and warm good wishes," wrote:

"The tragic fate of the Jewish victims of Nazi tyranny has, we know, filled us with a deep emotion. The speeches of responsible statesmen in Parliament and at the League of Nations during the last seven years, the universal feeling of horror with which the people of this country have viewed the Nazi relapse into barbarism.

"The British Government sought again and again to secure the relief of the lot of persecuted Jewry both in Germany itself and in the countries which were infected by the Nazi doctrine of racial hatred. Today the Nazi new order which has trampled on its own defenseless minorities, and by fraud and force has temporarily robbed many small peoples of their independents, has become the deadly stronghold of liberty in Europe.

New World Order Forecast

"When we have achieved victory, as we assuredly shall, the nations will have the opportunity of establishing a new world order based on the ideals of justice and peace. In such a new order the conscience of civilized humanity would demand that the wrongs suffered by the Jewish people in so many countries should be righted.

"In the rebuilding of civilized society after the war, there should and will be a real opportunity for Jews everywhere to make a distinctive and constructive contribution; and all men of good-will must assuredly hope that in new Europe the Jewish people, in whatever country they live, will enjoy full freedom and full equality before the law with every other citizen."

In an interview at the Hotel Astor, Rabbi Perlzweig declared that Mr. Greenwood "definitely speaks for England." There is no clear realization, he added, that freedom and emancipation for the Jewish people are tied up with the preservation of freedom for people everywhere. The message, Rabbi Perlzweig remarked, was the subject of serious consideration by the British Government.

"This is a declaration in behalf of the whole world," he observed. "Here the British Government expresses clearly what it hopes will take place after the war is won."

NY TIMES HEADLINE: OCTOBER 6, 1940 / 'NEW WORLD ORDER PLEDGED TO JEWS'

"....Arthur Greenwood member without portfolio in the British War Cabinet assured the Jews of the United States that when victory was achieved an effort would be made to found a New World Order" (22)

OCTOBER 28, 1940
ITALY INVADES GREECE

Italy had occupied tiny Albania in the spring of 1939. Mussolini now turns his ambitions towards Greece. Greece has good relations with Germany, but Mussolini wants to claim the Ionian Islands. Italy's invasion of Greece is completely unrelated to Germany's war and creates unexpected problems for Hitler.

The Greeks repel the invasion. The British then offer to send troops to assist Greece. Churchill now has an opening on the European mainland from which he can move north towards Germany and eastward towards Romania and the crucial oil fields which supply Germany.

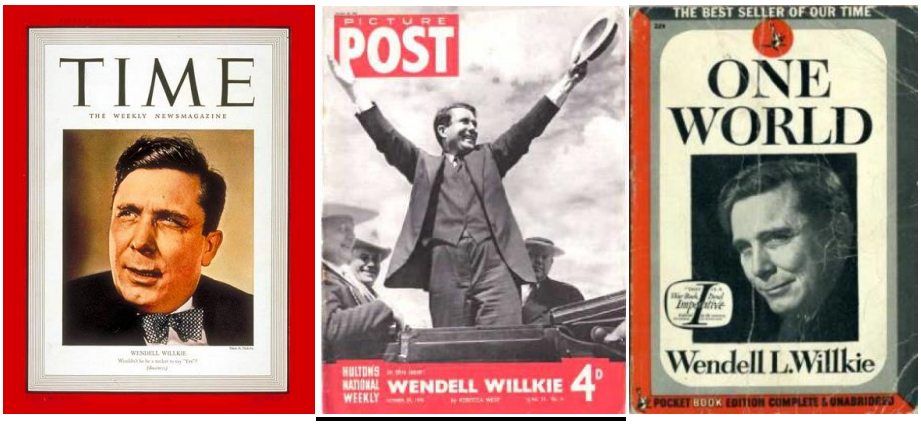
DAILY NEWS FINAL

ITALY, GREECE AT WAR

EXTRA

Italy's failed adventure in Greece gives Britain an opening in Europe.



NOVEMBER, 1940
AFTER LYING ABOUT HIS INTENTIONS, FDR WINS RE-ELECTION OVER GLOBALIST STRAW-MAN WENDELL WILKIE

Throughout the Election year of 1940, nationalist Republicans warn that FDR is plotting to bring the US into war. Because the public is strongly opposed to entry in another war, FDR reassures voters that the "isolationists" are misrepresenting his intentions. During the campaign, FDR gives his famous "Again and again" speech:

"I say to you mothers and fathers and I shall say it again and again and again. Your boys will not be sent into any foreign wars." (23)

The Globalist wing of the GOP (Republican Party) hijacks the nominating process and puts up an unknown patsy, an "ex-Democrat" named Wendell Willkie to run against FDR. Many Republicans are shocked when the GOP (supported by the media's hype of Willkie) anoints a New York lawyer who has never held any office.

Willkie runs a half-baked campaign and loses badly. FDR is elected to an unprecedented 3rd (and later a 4th) term. Afterwards, FDR gives Willkie a job as an Ambassador. In 1943, Willkie publishes a book entitled: One World.

'One-Worlder' Wendell Willkie: The media's artificially puffed-up "instant Republican" was recruited to "throw the match" to FDR.

NOVEMBER, 1940
THE VATICAN PRESENTS HITLER'S PEACE PROPOSALS TO BRITISH OFFICIALS

As far back May of 1939, as revealed by the front page of the New York Times, the Vatican had been trying to mediate between Britain and Germany. Hitler was ready and willing to talk peace at all times. It was the British who said "no".

The peace-seeking Vatican and peace-seeking Germany remained in contact as the war raged. The following excerpt from Martin Allen's 'Himmler's Secret War' describes a meeting held in Spain between the Papal Nuncio (Foreign secretary) and British officials Hoare and Hilgarth; and the latest peace offer from Hitler:

*"The nature of the concessions that the German Fuhrer was prepared to make in order to obtain peace with Britain must have astounded the men at the head of SO1. This was not even a deal worked out through a process of hard negotiation. It was Hitler's opening gambit....an offer so generous and pragmatic that it would be very tempting to anyone who genuinely wanted peace.
His (Hitler's) offer of such remarkable concessions was an extremely threatening development. Should the terms become public, it had the potential to render British resolve to stand firm against German aggression to a shuttering halt." (24)

Neither the Pope's prayers nor his emissaries could soften the black hearts of Churchill and his gang of warmongers.

FEBRUARY, 1941
GERMANS ARRIVE IN AFRICA TO BAIL OUT THE ITALIANS

The first units of the German 'AfrikaKorps' arrive to rescue the collapsing Italian war effort in February of 1941. General Erwin Rommel, known as the Desert Fox, commands the German force in North Africa. Rommel will eventually establish the upper hand in Africa, but this diversion of manpower and resources to Africa proves to be a costly hindrance for Germany.

The Desert Fox cleans up Mussolini's mess in North Africa.

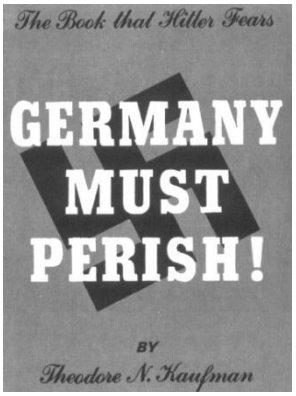
MARCH, 1941
THEODORE KAUFMAN PUBLISHES 'GERMANY MUST PERISH!' / CALLS FOR EXTINCTION OF GERMAN RACE!

‘’Germany Must Perish!’ is a 104 page booklet published by an American Zionist businessman named Theodore Kaufman. Kaufman calls for the complete extermination of the German people through forced sterilization and total dismemberment and reapportionment of German territory. The murderous hate-fest starts out in the very opening lines of Germany Must Perish as follows:

"This dynamic volume outlines a comprehensive plan for the extinction of the German nation and the total eradication from the earth, of all her people. Also contained herein is a map illustrating the possible territorial dissection of Germany and the apportionment of her lands."

"This time Germany has forced a TOTAL WAR upon the world. As a result, she must be prepared to pay a TOTAL PENALTY. And there is one, and only one, such Total Penalty: Germany must perish forever! In fact - not in fancy! [...]

The goal of world-domination must be removed from the reach of the German and the only way to accomplish that is to remove the German from the world. [...]



There remains then but one mode of ridding the world forever of Germanism - and that is to stem the source from which issue those war-lusted souls, by preventing the people of Germany from ever again reproducing their kind." (25)

Incredibly, at a time when America is supposedly "neutral", the hateful book is actually reviewed by The New York Times, Time Magazine and the Washington Post. Though not widely distributed in America, Germany Must Perish is read throughout Germany. Propaganda Minister Dr. Josef Goebbels states:

“Thanks to the Jew Kaufmann, we Germans know only too well what to expect in case of defeat."(26)

‘Germany Must Perish!’ will inspire the frightened German people to fight harder. Kaufman's work, along with the deadly Jewish Partisan guerilla warfare against German troops, will contribute to Hitler's decision to intern the Jews of occupied Europe into wartime work camps later in 1941.

Kaufman's evil work openly calls for the extinction of the German people and the absorbing of all German territory.

1941
FDR SIGNS 'LEND - LEASE' INTO LAW / UK TO BE SUPPLIED WITH U.S. MANUFACTURED ARMS

Britain is running short of arms and supplies as Germany continues to offer peace on terms favorable to Britain. Churchill will not listen to reason because, behind the scenes, FDR is reassuring him that the U.S. will support the UK at all costs. With his successful re-election campaign of 1940 out of the way, FDR now becomes even bolder in confronting the anti-war "isolationists".

The Lend-Lease program places the awesome industrial might of the US at the disposal of the UK, China, and later on, the USSR. America is to be "the Arsenal of Democracy" says FDR. Britain will eventually receive $31 Billion worth of war supplies (about $500 Billion at 2012 prices!)

Roosevelt Calls for Action to Aid Britain

£1,750,000,000 REQUEST SENT TO CONGRESS

Immediate Enactment Strongly Urged

President Roosevelt yesterday sent to Congress a request for a $7,000,000,000 (£1,750,000,000) appropriation to carry out the "fixed policy of this Government to make for the democracies every gun, 'plane, and munition of war that we possibly can."

"A NEW MAGNA CHARTA"

Premier's Praise for Lease-and-Lend Bill

"INSPIRING ACT OF FAITH"

The Lease-and-Lend Bill was described as "a new Magna Charta" and "a monument of generous and far-seeing statesmanship" by Mr Winston Churchill, when he expressed Britain's gratitude at the passing of the Bill in a statement in the House of Commons yesterday.

Mr Churchill said:—

"The Lease-and-Lend Bill, as the House is aware, became law yesterday, when it received immediately the signa-

FDR and cronies smile as they move America closer to war.

APRIL 6, 1941
GERMANY BLOCKS BRITISH & SOVIET SCHEMES IN SOUTHERN EUROPE BY INVADING GREECE & YUGOSLAVIA

Though unrelated to Germany's war, Mussolini's foolish adventure in Greece has already created a big problem for Hitler. As Italian forces meet stiff Greek resistance, Churchill uses the conflict as an opportunity to again establish armies on Europe's mainland, in Europe's "soft underbelly". British troops begin arriving in Greece to help the Greeks in their fight against the Italians. Hitler offers to mediate peace between Italy and Greece, but the Greeks (egged on by the British) won't come to the table as more British troops keep arriving.

In March, 1941, Yugoslavia joins Hitler's defensive Tripartite Pact. In response, British intelligence immediately triggers an orchestrated coup. (27) The new Yugoslavian regime is now a British puppet state, which immediately signs a "Treaty of Friendship" with the USSR. Stalin's Yugoslavian Communists take to the streets in support of the new government.

Again, Hitler's hand is forced. If he does not act now, the "soft underbelly" of Europe will be flooded with British troops destined for southern Germany, as well as the Romanian oil fields upon which Germany depends. On April 6, '41, the Germans invade both Greece and Yugoslavia. The still small numbers of British troops are forced to evacuate, spoiling Churchill's scheme to inflame southern Europe and invite the Soviets in to help. Naturally, the Globalist media simplistically portrays these events as: "Germans Invade Yugoslavia & Greece".

The New York Times.

GERMANS INVADE YUGOSLAVIA AND GREECE; HITLER ORDERS WAR, BLAMING THE BRITISH; MOSCOW SIGNS AMITY PACT WITH BELGRADE

1- British troops (Australian) based in Egypt embark for Greece in 1941.

2- Germany secures southeast Europe. But valuable time has been lost.

MAY 10, 1941
RUDOLF HESS PARACHUTES INTO SCOTLAND WITH YET ANOTHER OFFER OF PEACE!

Rudolf Hess is Germany's Number 2 in command and a close friend of Hitler. Recall that it was Hess who typed out the dictation for Hitler's Mein Kampf. In May of 1941, Hess (who is fluent in English) flies a solo mission over Scotland and parachutes in, carrying an offer of peace. He is hoping to link up with the Duke of Hamilton, who he had befriended at the 1936 Berlin Olympics, and convince his British acquaintance of Germany's sincere desire for peace. But he is arrested instead.

On Churchill's orders, Hess is held in solitary confinement for the duration of the war. After the war, Hess is "tried" at Nuremberg and then sentenced to life in East Berlin's Spandau prison. With the liberalization of the USSR in the 1980's, there is talk of finally releasing him. But he is said to have committed suicide in his cell in 1987. His family believes that the 93-year-old Hess was murdered so that the details of his peace mission would remain buried forever. (28)

Hess's peace mission to Britain ended with Churchill jailing him for life.

MAY - JULY, 1941
FDR ESCALATES HIS PROVOKATION OF GERMANY & JAPAN

Long before the German-Polish conflict, FDR had waged a silent war against Germany. With Germany now in control of the European situation, FDR is even more desperate to drag America into Britain's war. He relentlessly baits Hitler.
To that end, the U.S. impounds German ships, sinks German subs, freezes German, Italian, and Japanese financial assets, assists the British Navy in spotting and sinking The Bismarck (killing 2200 German sailors), and ships large amounts of arms to Britain. Hitler bears the humiliating provocations quietly; knowing that US entry into the war would be disastrous for Germany.

Realizing that Hitler will not take his bait, FDR further instigates the Japanese. Recall that the Axis Powers, (Germany, Japan, and Italy) are parties to a mutual defense pact (Tripartite Pact). An attack on one means war with all. FDR will turn the Tripartite Pact to his advantage.

Deadly "neutrality": A U.S. 'Catalina" surveillance plane enabled the British Navy to sink The Bismarck, killing 2200 German sailors. (29)

JUNE 22, 1941
'OPERATION BARBAROSSA' / HITLER THWARTS STALIN'S PLAN TO CONQUER ALL OF EUROPE

As Germany and Britain exhaust each other in the air, at sea, and now North Africa, Stalin quietly gathers his massive Red Army along Germany's eastern frontier, near the Romanian oil fields that supply Germany. Hitler knows that Stalin cannot be trusted. He recalls how Stalin broke a non-aggression pact and pounced on Poland while the Poles were pre-occupied with Germany. Another non-aggression pact was broken when Stalin attacked Finland. Soviet invasions of the Baltic States and eastern Romania, along with a recent Communist-backed coup in Yugoslavia all combine to offer still more proof that Stalin is up to something.

Now, with Germany and Britain distracted, Stalin threatens all of Europe. Hitler had hoped to remove the Soviet threat in April, but invasion plans were delayed by Mussolini's misadventures in Africa and Greece. When "Operation Barbarossa" is launched, the Red Army is caught flat-footed and bunched up in offensive positions. Millions of Soviet troops are taken prisoner, and the devastating loss of weaponry and equipment leaves the Red Army neutralized.

Up to 65% of all Soviet tanks, field guns, machine guns, and anti-tank guns are either destroyed or captured. The Germans rout the Reds all the way back to the gates of Moscow, liberating many cheering Ukrainian, Baltic, and even Russian people along the way. It is only the onset of the brutal Russian winter that forces the Germans to pause their stunning offensive. The 2 month delay due to Mussolini's folly in Greece may have saved Stalin's regime from a total collapse in 1941.

Liberated from the Stalin & Kaganovich death cult, happy Ukrainians cheer the invading German soldiers. When the German offensive almost reaches Moscow, Stalin is forced to flee eastward.

1 & 2- Soviet Intelligence Officer and historian Viktor Suvorov defected to Britain and published several books about Stalin's plan to attack Germany and Europe.

3- Hitler with his Generals; his quick thinking and bold action saved Germany and ALL of Europe from a Soviet conquest.

"Already in 1940 it became increasingly clear from month to month that the plans of the men in the Kremlin were aimed at the domination, and thus the destruction, of all of Europe. I have already told the nation of the build-up of Soviet military power in the East during a period when Germany had only a few divisions in the provinces bordering Soviet Russia. Only a blind person could fail to see that a military build-up of world-historical dimensions was being carried out. And this was not in order to protect something that was being threatened, but rather to attack that which seemed incapable of defense..... I may say this today: If the wave of more than 20,000 tanks, hundreds of divisions, tens of thousands of artillery pieces, along with more than 10,000 airplanes, had not been kept from being set into motion against the Reich, all of Europe would have been lost."

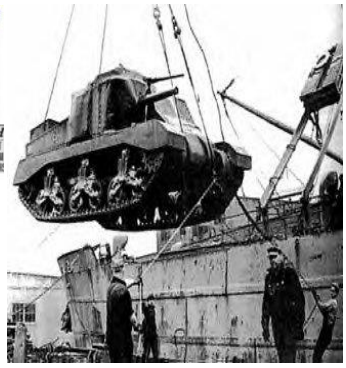
(30) - Adolf Hitler, 12-11-1941

JUNE, 1941
FDR RESCUES STALIN / EXTENDS MASSIVE MILITARY AID

With Stalin's Evil Empire facing extinction at the hands of German forces, FDR moves quickly to rescue the murderous regime. He unfreezes Soviet assets that had been frozen after Stalin's attack on Finland in 1939, enabling the Soviets to immediately purchase 59 Fighter aircraft. The "Arsenal of Democracy" is now, "The Arsenal of Communism."

By 1945, the staggering amount of Lend-Lease deliveries to Stalin include 11,000 aircraft, 4,000 bombers, 400,000 trucks, 12,000 tanks and combat vehicles, 32,000 motorcycles, 13,000 locomotives and railway cars, 8,000 anti-aircraft cannons, 135.000 submachine guns, 300,000 tons of explosives, 40,000 field radios, 400 radar systems, 400,000 metal cutting machine tools, several million tons of food, steel, other metals, oil and gasoline, chemicals etc. (31) Without this ENORMOUS INFUSION of American aid, the Germans would probably have finished off Stalin after the spring thaw of 1942.

The Milwaukee Sentinel - Aug 5, 1941



'Red Strength Ours,' U. S. Says, Pledging Russ All Out Help

Administration 'Never Was Neutral,' Says Gen. Wood

Pact Provides Priority to Moscow's Orders

WASHINGTON, Aug. 4—

EXCHANGE OF NOTES

1- The headline from 1941 says it all.

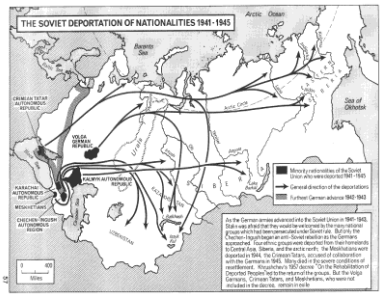
2- Contrary to the claims of Red propaganda, U.S. industry resupplied much of the depleted Red Army. 3- Alaskan monument shown above commemorates the massive aid which flowed from Alaska through Siberia.

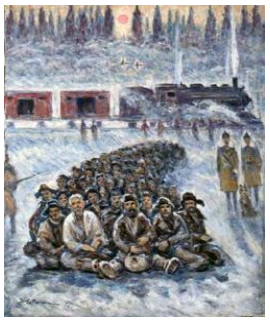
JUNE 29, 1941
STALIN ORDERS 'PARTISAN' GUERRILLA WAR UPON GERMAN ARMY / JEWISH PARTISANS ALSO FORM

Stalin calls upon Party, Soviet, & Trade Union organizations to form "partisan divisions and diversion groups to pursue and destroy the invaders in a merciless struggle". (32) In violation of commonly accepted rules of warfare, many Partisans neither wear uniforms, nor recognize international law. To grow the ranks of the Red Partisans, and prevent the Germans from winning over the civilian population, Soviet commandoes dress up in German uniforms and carry out "false-flag" atrocities against their own people, inciting hatred against the Germans.

Communist and Jewish Partisans, aided by the OSS (forerunner to CIA), also form in other nations, using the same false-flag tactics, and menacing the safety of German troops unable to tell enemy from civilian. Massive Jewish support for and participation in non- uniformed Partisan groups, including women & children, is the main reason for Hitler's decision to intern Europe's Jews in work camps as a wartime security precaution.

Jewish Partisan teams included women & children. Their sneak attacks killed many German soldiers.





These Finnish children were executed by Soviet Partisans

THE SAD FATE OF THE VOLGA GERMANS

The Volga Germans are ethnic Germans living along the River Volga in southeastern Russia. Recruited as immigrants to Russia in the 18th century, they had always been allowed to maintain their culture, language, and traditions

After the German invasion in 1941, the Soviets consider the Volga Germans as potential collaborators. On August 28, 1941, Stalin dissolves the Volga-German Republic and orders the immediate relocation of ethnic Germans. About 400,000 Volga Germans are stripped of their land and houses; and transported eastward to Soviet Central Asia, and Siberia. By 1942, nearly all the able-bodied German population will have been conscripted to the NKVD slave-labor columns. At least one-third will not survive the camps.

Their only "crime" was being of German ancestry. Volga Germans were forced from their homes and herded onto cattle cars bound for slave camps

THE GERMAN SOLDIER's 10 COMMANDMENTS

The German soldier is the best behaved and honorable soldier of Europe. Every soldier receives a copy of 'The German Soldier's 10 Commandments and is expected to follow them to the letter or face serious punishment.

1. While fighting for victory the German soldier will observe the rules of chivalrous warfare. Cruelties and senseless destruction are below his standard.
2. Combatants will be in uniform or will wear specially introduced and clearly distinguishable badges. Fighting in plain clothes or without such badges is prohibited.
3. No enemy who has surrendered will be killed, including partisans and spies. They will be duly punished by courts.
4. P.O.W. will not be ill-treated or insulted. While arms, maps, and records are to be taken away from them, their personal belongings will not be touched.
5. Dum-Dum bullets are prohibited; also no other bullets may be transformed into Dum-Dum.
6. Red Cross Institutions are sacrosanct. Injured enemies are to be treated in a humane way. Medical personnel and army chaplains may not be hindered in the execution of their medical or clerical activities.
7. The civilian population is sacrosanct. Neither looting nor wanton destruction is permitted to the soldier. Landmarks of historical value or buildings serving religious purposes, art, science, or charity are to be especially respected.
8. Neutral territory will never be entered nor passed over by planes, nor shot at; it will not be the object of warlike activities of any kind.

9. If a German soldier is made a prisoner of war he will tell his name and rank if asked for it. Under no circumstances will he reveal to which unit he belongs, nor will he give any information about German military, political, and economic conditions.
10. Offenses of duty will be punished. Enemy offenses against the principles under 1 to 8 are to be reported. Reprisals are only permissible on order of higher commands. (33)

The only exception to these rules of conduct was in dealing with the murderous Communist Partisans who refuse to recognize rules of warfare. For this reason, non-uniformed Partisan prisoners who refused to surrender were sometimes hanged or shot as war criminals, not as legitimate POW's.

1- American POWS's in German captivity returned safe and sound after the war 2- But merciless Communist Partisans often got what they deserved.

LIFE IN THE GERMAN INTERNMENT CAMPS

Contrary to the popular belief that life in the SS-run internment camps was a brutal existence of slave labor followed by extermination, the German went to great lengths to keep the Jewish inmates well-fed, well-housed and even entertained. Officials from the International Red Cross visited the camps regularly and right up until the end of the war. (34)

There were orchestras, soccer leagues and activities for children. There were weddings, Bar Mitzvahs, and even maternity wards for pregnant women. The Auschwitz camp even had a swimming pool and a general store!

It was only during the final year of the war that conditions began to deteriorate as typhus epidemics spread and supplies diminished. Because of the contagious nature of typhus, the corpses were cremated, not buried near groundwater. The destruction of so much of Germany's critical infrastructure contributed to the deaths. Nonetheless, as the camps were liberated, many healthy and seemingly well-fed 'Holocaust survivors", as well as some not so healthy, were seen and photographed.

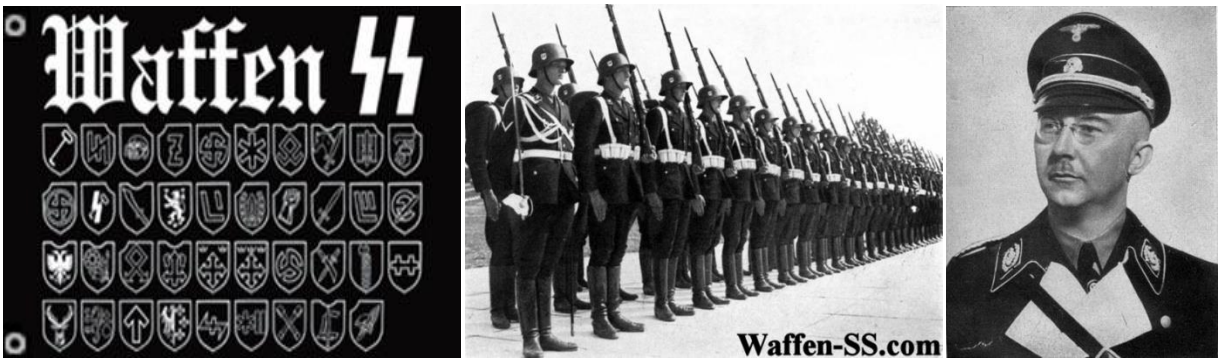
1- Healthy Jewish mothers with their new-born babies. This photo was taken shortly after the Americans liberated Dachau – "Factory of Horrors"

2- The Auschwitz swimming pool



Jewish Concert and lively Jewish Soccer games with scorecards

1941
THE WAFFEN SS: VOLUNTEERS FROM ACROSS EUROPE JOIN INTERNATIONAL FORCE UNDER GERMAN COMMAND

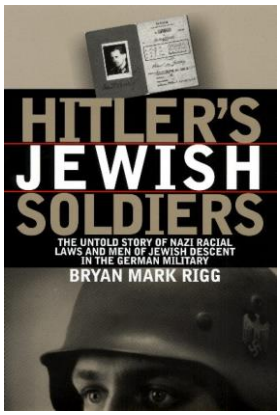
Brave men from every nation in Europe (and some from Asia) volunteer to fight the Soviets. They are welcomed into Germany's "Waffen SS" - an elite fighting force. The anti-Communist Waffen SS are motivated by a vision of a greater European family. For the European SS, the Europe of jealousies, border disputes, and economic rivalries is petty. They fight for 'Europa' itself.

The Waffen SS is a true international army of the European peoples. One million men fight in the SS, of which, 600,000 are non-German. Officers of the Waffen serve in the front lines alongside their men. By war's end, half of the SS commanders will have been killed in action. During and after the brutal winter of 41-42, it is the Waffen SS who will stand their ground and delay the massive Soviet counter offensive. By the end of the war, 40% of the Waffen SS will have been killed or gone missing. Were it not for the tenacity and sacrifice of the heroic Waffen volunteers, all of Europe would have been lost to the Soviet hordes. It is not surprising that to this day, the "SS" is still vilified in the Globalist press.



Waffen SS banner includes emblems from every nation of Europe. The force was headed by Heinrich Himmler (right).

HITLER'S JEWISH SOLDIERS AND HIS FAVORITE JEWISH DOCTOR

Hitler was not fanatically anti-Jewish as much as he was anti-Marxist, although there was large overlap between the two groups. As hard as it may be to believe, it is absolutely true that about 60,000 half-Jewish, and 90,000 quarter-Jewish soldiers fought for Hitler's Germany. (35) Among these were decorated soldiers, officers, and even Generals and Admirals.

As Fuehrer, Hitler personally intervened to assist Dr. Eduard Bloch, the noble Jewish doctor who had treated his cancer stricken mother. Hitler had never forgotten Dr. Bloch's kindness, and inquired about him when he returned to liberated Austria in 1938. On Hitler's orders, Bloch was given "special protection".

When interviewed by the OSS (CIA) towards the end of the war, Bloch spoke very well of the young Hitler that he had known. (36)

1- Author Mark Rigg gathered interviews of from "Hitler's Jewish Soldiers".

2- Right: Hitler never forgot Eduard Bloch, the Jewish physician who had treated his dying mother.

AUGUST, 1941
JAPAN APPEALS TO U.S. FOR PEACE TALKS TO END THE WAR WITH CHINA

...Y, AUGUST 29, 1941 THREE CENTS

U. S. Gets Jap Peace Bid; Tokio Asks for Parley To Ease Pacific Crisis

Envoy Brings Roosevelt Personal Note

By ROBERT G. NIXON
International News Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Aug. 28—The United States and Japan, in a decision regarded as of profound importance in the future of world events, both in Europe and Asia, today agreed to seek a basis for the settlement peacefully of the tense Far East crisis.

IS SHARP REVERSAL

The action represented a sharp reversal from the Japanese government's earlier stand, which culminated in a protest two days ago to Soviet Russia against the use of Vladivostok as a channel for American war supplies.

Moscow promptly rejected the protest, and Secretary of State Hull, after reports were received here that a similar protest was made to the United States, reiterated that this country's formula of the "freedom of the seas" applies to commerce in the Pacific just as much as it does to the Atlantic.

Diplomatic quarters interpreted the Japanese "peace move" as a clear indication that Japan is not willing to risk a war with the United States and Britain at FDR could easily have mediated an end to the war in Asia; but chose to continue arming the Chinese.

SEPTEMBER 11, 1941
CHARLES LINDBERGH JR. ACCUSES FDR AND JEWS OF PLOTTING TO DRAG THE U.S. INTO THE WAR

American patriots such as famed aviator Charles Lindbergh Jr. clearly see that FDR is plotting to involve America in the war. Lindbergh is a leading figure in the "America First" movement, or what Globalist propaganda cleverly refers to as "isolationism."

Lindbergh's speech in Iowa accurately describes what is happening behind the scenes. He warns:

"The leaders of the British and the Jewish races, for reasons which are as understandable from their viewpoint as they are inadvisable from ours, for reasons which are not American, wish to involve us in this war."* (37)

Joseph Kennedy, the US Ambassador to England and Patriarch of the Kennedy Family Dynasty, also expressed this opinion, though not publicly. (38)

1- Lindbergh's famous speech before the America First Committee blamed Jewish influence for FDR's drive to war.

2- Joseph Kennedy agreed with Lindbergh.

3- After his re-election of 1940, FDR didn't even try to hide his intentions, as the 1941 newspaper headline above confirms.

OCTOBER – NOVEMBER, 1941
FDR REPEATEDLY AND DELIBERATELY BAITS JAPAN

In the closing months of 1941, FDR's provocations of Japan escalate to the level of "acts of war". FDR imposes devastating oil and trade embargoes on Japan, denies her ships access to the neutral Panama Canal, and orders U.S. battleships to undertake "pop up" cruises through Japanese territorial waters.
Finally, on November 26th of '41, FDR sends an impossible ultimatum to Japan, implying a military threat, and demanding that Japan withdraw all of its troops from China and Indochina as a pre-condition for lifting the oil embargo.

The day before the hostile letter was sent, Secretary of War Henry Stimson recorded, in his personal diary, the topic of a meeting with FDR as follows:

"The question was how we should maneuver them (Japan) into the position of firing the first shot."* (39)

1- Years after his death, a review of Secretary of War Stimson's diary revealed FDR's intention to provoke Japan.

2- Japan's Ambassador to the U.S. was bullied and threatened by Secretary of State Cordell Hull

3- After December talks with Japanese diplomats broke down (as planned) The Honolulu Advertiser carried the banner: "Japanese May Strike Over Weekend".

WORLD WAR II
Part 2

DECEMBER 7, 1941
JAPAN TAKES FDR's BAIT / ATTACK ON PEARL HARBOR BRINGS THE U.S. INTO THE WAR

While issuing the final provocations of Japan, FDR and his Military Chairman, George Marshall, also set the actual bait for the Japanese fish to bite. The tasty bait that these two traitors are dangling is the heart of America's Pacific fleet, deliberately left vulnerable at the naval base of Pearl Harbor, in the U.S. territory of Hawaii.

By now, Japan knows that war with America is coming. The Japanese high command, in the hopes of gaining an early advantage, decides to strike as damaging a blow to the U.S. Navy as possible. Because the U.S. and Britain have each cracked Japan's naval communication codes, FDR and Churchill both have advance knowledge of the impending "surprise attack"; but no specific warning is sent to the Commanders at Pearl Harbor. (1)

The attack kills 2402 US sailors, and ignites press frenzy and a wave of patriotic fervor. The "isolationists" are silenced for good and the America First Committee disbands. FDR and the Jewish Mafia around him will finally have their 2nd world war.

The "Day of Infamy" was not a "surprise". FDR allowed 2,400 US sailors to die without warning.

1- The Great Deceiver plays innocent while addressing the nation.

2- "Remember Pearl Harbor" - Ignorant young men volunteer to die in the Globalists' war.

DECEMBER 8-11, 1941
WAR DECLARATIONS EXCHANGED

The day after Pearl Harbor, Congress declares war on Japan. Even the "isolationists" cannot resist the war fever caused by what FDR calls "an unprovoked attack".

Japan also issues a declaration. Germany and Italy then fulfill their Tripartite Treaty obligation to Japan, by announcing that a state of war now exists between the Axis nations and the U.S. (though they have neither the intention nor the means to actually cross the Atlantic and attack the U.S. mainland). Congress then follows with additional declarations upon Germany and Italy.

Again, from the diary of FDR's War (Defense) Secretary, Henry Stimson, we learn that Stimson's immediate and "dominant feeling" was not one of sorrow or outrage over the lost lives at Pearl Harbor, but rather of relief.

"When the news first came that Japan had attacked us, my first feeling was of relief that a crisis had come in a way which would unite all our people. This continued to be my dominant feeling in spite of the news of catastrophes which quickly developed." (2)

1- While wearing a black armband of "mourning" for the very men that he himself murdered, the wicked traitor FDR signs the Declaration of War.

2- Propaganda posters blanketed America

EXCERPTS OF EMPEROR HIROHITO'S WAR DECLARATION

"....We hereby declare war upon the United States of America and the British Empire.

To ensure the stability of East Asia, and to contribute to world peace, is the farsighted policy which was formulated by our great illustrious Imperial Grandsire and Great Imperial Sire ... To cultivate friendship among nations and to enjoy prosperity in common with all nations has always been the guiding principle of our Empire's foreign policy.

It has truly been unavoidable and far from our wishes that our Empire has been brought to cross swords with America and Britain. More than four years have passed since China, failing to comprehend the true intentions of our Empire, and recklessly courting trouble, disturbed the peace of East Asia and compelled our Empire to take up arms. Although there has been reestablished the National Government of China, with which Japan had effected neighborly intercourse and cooperation, the regime which has survived in Chungking, relying upon American and British protection, still continues its fratricidal opposition.

.

Eager for the realization of their ambition to dominate the Orient, both America and Britain, giving support to the Chungking regime, have aggravated the disturbances in East Asia. Moreover these two powers, inducing other countries to follow suit, increased military preparations on all sides of our Empire to challenge us. They have obstructed by every means our peaceful commerce and finally resorted to a direct severance of economic relations, menacing greatly the existence of our Empire.

Patiently have we waited and long have we endured, in the hope that our Government might retrieve the situation in peace. But our adversaries, showing not the least spirit of conciliation, have unduly delayed a settlement; and in the meantime they have intensified the economic and political pressure to compel our Empire to submission.

This trend of affairs would, if left unchecked, not only nullify our Empire's efforts of many years for the sake of the stabilization of East Asia, but also endanger the very existence of our nation. The situation being as it is, our Empire, for its existence and self-defense has no other recourse but to appeal to arms, and to crush all obstacles in its path. (3)

- December 8, 1941

Text of War Declaration by Hirohito

By The Associated Press.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 7—The following is the text of Emperor Hirohito's proclamation declaring war against the United States and Britain, as picked up and translated by the National Broadcasting Company's listening post here:

We, by grace of Heaven, Emperor of Japan and seated on the throne of a line unbroken for ages eternal, enjoin upon thee, our loyal and brave subjects. We hereby declare war upon the United States of America and the British Empire.

The men and officers of our army and navy shall do their utmost in prosecuting the war. Our public servants of various departments will perform faithfully and diligently their appointed duties. The entire nation with united will shall mobilize its total strength so that nothing will miscarry in the attainment of our royal aims.

To insure the solidity of these ages and to contribute to world peace is the far-sighted policy which was formulated by our great, illustrious imperial grandsire's and our great imperial sire's experience, and which we lay constantly to heart to cultivate friendship among nations and to enjoy prosperity in common with all nations.

It has been truly unavoidable and far from our wishes that our Empire has now been brought to crossed swords with America and Britain. More than four years have passed since China, failing to comprehend the true intentions of our empire, and recklessly causing trouble, disturbed the peace of East Asia and compelled our empire to take up arms.

Although there has been established the National Government of China, with which Japan has effected neighborly intercourse and cooperation, the regime that has survived at Chungking, relying upon American and British protection, continues its opposition.

Eager for the realization of their ambitions to dominate the Orient, both America and Britain, by supporting the Chungking regime, have aggravated disturbances in East Asia. Moreover, these two powers, inducing other countries to follow suit, increased military preparations on all sides of our Empire to challenge us. They have obstructed by every means our peaceful commerce and finally resorted to a direct severance of economic relations menacing gravely the existence of our Empire.

Patiently have we waited and long have we endured in the hope that our government might retrieve the situation in peace, but our adversaries, showing not the least spirit of conciliation, have unduly delayed a settlement and in the meantime they have intensified the economic and political pressure to compel our empire to submit.

This turn of affairs would, if left unchecked, not only nullify our empire's efforts to stabilize East Asia, but also endanger the very existence of our nation.

The situation being such as it is, our empire, for its existence and self-defense, has no other recourse but to appeal to arms and to crush every obstacle in its path.

We rely upon the loyalty and courage of our subjects in our confident expectation that the task bequeathed by our forefathers will be carried forward and that the sources of evil will be speedily eradicated and an enduring peace established in East Asia, preserving thereby the glory of our empire.

The New York Times

Published: December 8, 1941

Copyright © The New York Times

The text of Hirohito's war declaration appeared once in the inner pages of The New York Times before its allegations disappeared down the black memory hole of "official" history.

EXCERPTS FROM HITLER'S POST-PEARL HARBOR SPEECH

"Starting in November 1938, he (Roosevelt) began systematically and consciously to sabotage every possibility of a European peace policy. In public he hypocritically claimed to be interested in peace while at the same time he threatened every country that was ready to pursue a policy of peaceful understanding by blocking credits, economic reprisals, calling in loans, and so forth. In this regard, the reports of the Polish ambassadors in Washington, London, Paris and Brussels provide a shocking insight.

This man increased his campaign of incitement in January 1939. In a message to the U.S. Congress he threatened to take every measure short of war against the authoritarian countries."

I will overlook as meaningless the insulting attacks and rude statements by this so-called President against me personally. That he calls me a gangster is particularly meaningless, since this term did not originate in Europe, where such characters are uncommon, but in America. And aside from that, I simply cannot feel insulted by Mr. Roosevelt because I regard him, like his predecessor Woodrow Wilson, as mentally unsound.

We know that this man, with his Jewish supporters, has operated against Japan in the same way. I don't need to go into that here. The same methods were used in that case as well. This man first incites to war, and then he lies about its causes and makes baseless allegations. He repugnantly wraps himself in a cloak of Christian hypocrisy, while at the same time slowly but very steadily leading humanity into war. And finally, as an old Freemason, he calls upon God to witness that his actions are honorable. His shameless misrepresentations of truth and violations of law are unparalleled in history.

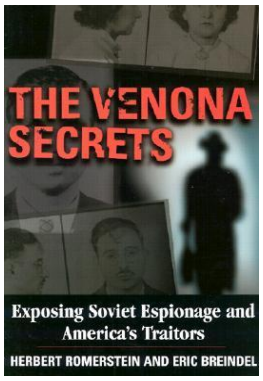
I am sure that all of you have regarded it as an act of deliverance that a country [Japan] has finally acted to protest against all this in the very way that this man had actually hoped for, and which should not surprise him now [the attack on Pearl Harbor]. After years of negotiating with this deceiver, the Japanese government finally had its fill of being treated in such a humiliating way. All of us, the German people and, I believe, all other decent people around the world as well, regard this with deep appreciation.

We know the power behind Roosevelt. It is the same eternal Jew that believes that his hour has come to impose the same fate on us that we have all seen and experienced with horror in Soviet Russia. We have gotten to know firsthand the Jewish paradise on earth. Millions of German soldiers have personally seen the land where this international Jewry has destroyed and annihilated people and property. Perhaps the President of the United States does not understand this. If so, that only speaks for his intellectual narrow-mindedness.

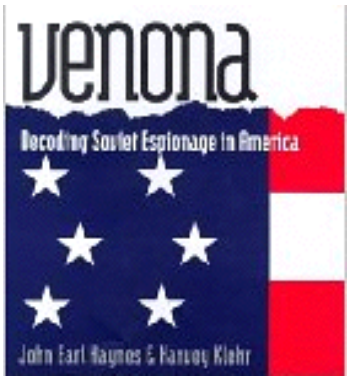
And we know that his entire effort is aimed at this goal: Even if we were not allied with Japan, we would still realize that the Jews and their Franklin Roosevelt intend to destroy one state after another. The German Reich of today has nothing in common with the Germany of the past. For our part, we will now do what this provocateur has been trying to achieve for years. And not just because we are allied with Japan, but rather because Germany and Italy with their present leaderships have the insight and strength to realize that in this historic period the existence or non-existence of nations is being determined, perhaps for all time. What this other world has in store for us is clear. They were able to bring the democratic Germany of the past to starvation, and they seek to destroy the National Socialist Germany of today.

When Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt declare that they want to one day build a new social order, that's about the same as a bald-headed barber recommending a tonic guaranteed to make hair grow*. Rather than incite war, these gentlemen, who live in the most socially backward countries, should have concerned themselves with their own unemployed people. They have enough misery and poverty in their own countries to keep themselves busy insuring a just distribution of food there. As far as the German nation is concerned, it doesn't need charity, either from Mr. Churchill or Mr. Roosevelt -- but it does demand its rights. And it will do what it must to insure its right to life, even if a thousand Churchills and Roosevelts conspire together to prevent it."* (4)

- December 11, 1941



DECEMBER, 1942 - 1945
SUPER SECRET MANHATTAN PROJECT INFESTED WITH COMMUNIST SPIES



The Manhattan Project is an effort, led by the U.S. with participation from Britain, which will result in the first atomic bomb. The project grew out of the Einstein-Szilard letter to FDR in 1939. The effort had started out on a small scale later that year, and by war's end will eventually employ 130,000 people at 30 locations. Three 'secret cities" will house 100,000 workers, all of them sworn to secrecy, and most of whom are ignorant of "the big picture".

From the start, there are concerns about the Project's security. Physicist Gregory Breit, an important researcher, quits in 1942 because of concerns over lax security procedures. The Jewish Communist Physicist J. Robert Oppenheimer takes over Breit's research, and is then appointed to head the secret weapons lab at Los Alamos, New Mexico. Under his leadership, Soviet spies and Communist sympathizers infest the Project (Enrico Fermi, Klaus Fuchs etc).

As Oppenheimer "looks the other way", Red spies pass America's secrets into Stalin's hands. (5) In 1954, Oppenheimer's security clearance will be revoked. But by that time, The Soviets have already stolen much of the "formula" for the A-bomb.

1- Robert Oppenheimer: Mad Man, Communist, Soviet Agent

2- Many years later, the declassified "Venona Intercepts" will confirm the full extent of the treason which took place at Los Alamos.

FEBRUARY, 1942
FDR ORDERS LOYAL AMERICANS OF JAPANESE DESCENT TO BE PLACED IN INTERNMENT CAMPS

FDR's Executive Order 9066 condemns 110,000 Americans of Japanese ancestry to serve the rest of the war years in prison camps. Of those interned, 62% are actual American citizens.

Shortly thereafter, Executive Order 9095 freezes their assets. German-American and Italian-American families are also interned in camps, though in lesser numbers.

Unlike Germany's wartime internment of Jews (who were generally hostile towards Germany), terrorist Partisans, thieving gypsies, and other assorted Reds; FDR's internments are of law abiding, peaceful, and patriotic citizens loyal to America. The internments are as unjustified as they are unnecessary.

1- Innocent AMERICANS rounded up and herded onto camp-bound trains.

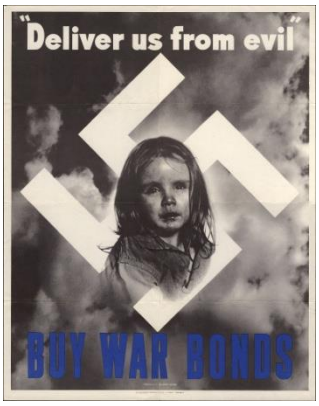
2- Innocent Japanese-American boys, trapped behind FDR's fences.

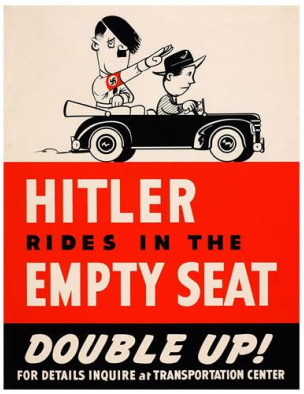
1942 - 1945
"ROSIE THE RIVETER" IS WORKED AND RATIONED LIKE A DOG TO SUPPORT THE WAR EFFORT

The commonly-held economic fallacies that war is good for the economy and that World War II pulled America out of the Great Depression are based on ignorance; nothing more. War is waste; plain and simple. The increased productivity (Gross Domestic Product) and decreased unemployment associated with a wartime slave economy benefit only the industry bosses who own the factories and the bankers financing the new spending. The goods that are churned out do not benefit the working public because they have to be shipped to the soldiers overseas; in many cases to be destroyed.

World War II was a time of great sacrifice for both the American men who were compelled to fight, bleed and die, as well as for "Rosie the Riveter" on the home front. As consumers, the women who were herded into buzzing factories faced shortages of everything from metals to quality food and clothes.

The U.S., British, and Soviet armies sucked up the manufactured "goods" while Americans struggled. Car bumpers were actually made of wood during these years! Propaganda posters everywhere told Americans it was their patriotic duty to work like animals and to go without. The suckers of "the greatest generation" believed it and never complained.

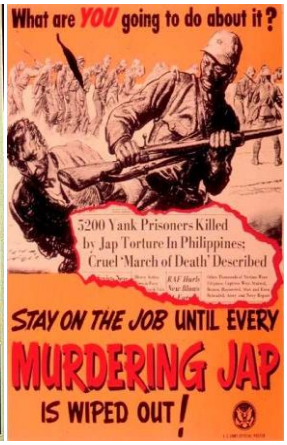


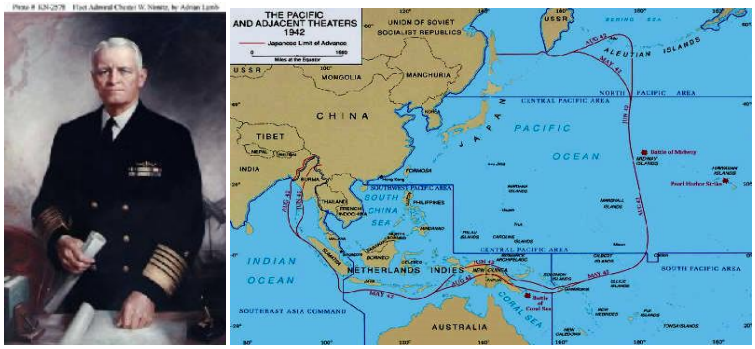


To support FDR's evil war that will kill her husband, "Rosie the Riveter" was worked like a factory animal and then told to "do with less".

1942 - 1945
AMERICA'S RIDICULOUS WAR PROPAGANDA

The hateful idiocy of American propaganda posters speaks for itself:





JUNE 4-7, 1942
U.S. VICTORIOUS OVER JAPAN IN THE 'BATTLE OF MIDWAY'

The Battle of Midway is the most important naval battle of the Pacific Ocean campaign. The U.S. Navy, under the command of Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, decisively defeats the Japanese, inflicting irreparable damage upon the Japanese fleet. After Midway, Japan's Pacific defense perimeter of islands steadily shrinks as Japan cannot replace its lost ships and aircraft as fast as the U.S. can.

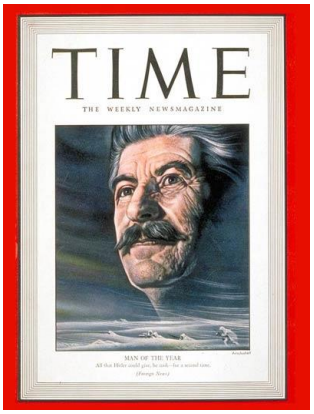
Though Midway marks a turning point, the U.S. will sustain much more casualties as the Japanese tenaciously defend their Pacific perimeter for many months to come.

Chester W. Nimitz / The region From Manchuria to Midway was Japan's defense perimeter

JULY, 1942 – FEBRUARY, 1943
THE BLOODY BATTLE OF STALINGRAD

The Battle of Stalingrad between the Germans and the Soviets was fought for control of the strategically vital Russian city that Stalin named after himself (today known as Volgograd). It will go down in history as the bloodiest battle ever, with combined deaths of nearly 2 million. Stalin's refusal to pull the Red Army out of the city leads to a long siege and great suffering for the hungry residents.

After the German offensive captures most of the city, the Lend Lease-equipped Red Army wears the Germans down with bloody house-to-house fighting. Brainwashed and inflamed by the NKVD's false atrocity propaganda, much of the city's civilian population fiercely resists the Germans as well. As intended, this "false flag" terror enflames the civilian population against the Germans. The losses suffered by the Germans will make victory in Russia impossible.



1- Brutal house-to-house fighting at Stalingrad took a heavy toll on the Germans.

2- Stalin's gang used phony photos to incite the Russian people against the Germans. Note how a hanging body was added to the original photo.

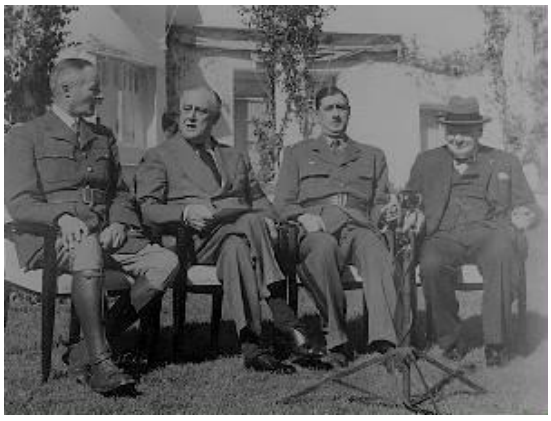
America's Globo-Zionist propaganda machine portrays Stalin (an enemy of America!) as a "Hero"!

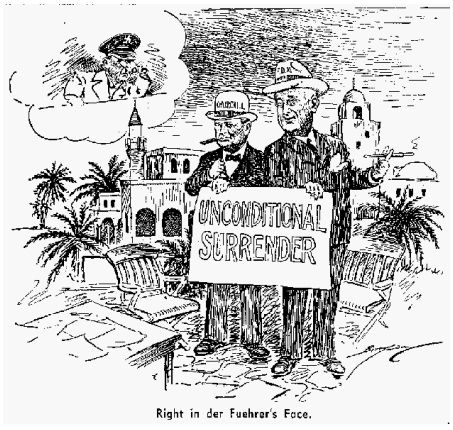
NOVEMBER, 1942
OPERATION TORCH / ALLIES BATTLE THE GERMANS IN NORTH AFRICA

A full year after U.S. entry into the war, the Germans are finally confronted during Operation Torch, the Allied invasion of French North Africa (Algeria, Tunisia, Morocco). It is facilitated by French Generals who switched loyalty from the nationalist Marshal Petain's Vichy France to the Globalist/Communist side of General Charles de Gaulle (self-exiled in England).

The politically appointed and grossly unqualified General Dwight D. Eisenhower ("Ike") is given command of the Allied force which sails from England. But it is the military genius of General George Patton that ultimately bails out the incompetent and envious Eisenhower. (6) Patton's Army successfully overcomes the German forces, led by General Erwin Rommel (The Desert Fox).

By May of 1943, the Germans will have evacuated Northern Africa as they prepare to defend the "soft underbelly of Europe" in southern Italy.





Patton vs Rommel / Allies land in North Africa / Italy now vulnerable to invasion.

JANUARY, 1943
CASABLANCA CONFERENCE / ALLIES: WAR WILL CONTINUE UNTIL UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER!

FDR, Churchill, and the exiled "'Free French" Generals Henri Giraud and Charles de Gaulle meet together at the Casablanca Conference (Morocco/North Africa). FDR announces a policy of "unconditional surrender" for Germany, Italy, and Japan. Churchill agrees to the policy.

Unconditional surrender means the Allies expect the Axis nations to not only stop fighting, but to also hand over complete political, educational, military and media control to the invading Allied armies. This brutal hard-line policy of complete subjugation inspires the Japanese and Germans to fight harder and longer.

Giraud, FDR, de Gaulle, and Churchill demand "Unconditional Surrender"

JANUARY – MAY, 1943
THE TIDE TURNS AGAINST GERMANY

The opening months of 1943 mark the turning point in the war. The combination of America's awesome naval, air, and land power, a 3-front war, Jewish and Red Partisan guerilla war, merciless air bombardment of German civilians, and a massive Red Army armed to the teeth by American manufacturing power, all combine to take a heavy toll on Germany.

General Friedrich Paulus requests that Hitler allow the 6th Army at Stalingrad to surrender. Hitler, knowing what the stakes were for Germany and Europe, and knowing that Stalin would kill any prisoners, orders Paulus to hold firm.

In February, the cowardly general finally surrenders his army to the tender mercy of the Stalin-Kaganovich death cult. About 35,000 of the men under Paulus's command had already been evacuated from the front. The remaining 91,000 are marched off to Soviet slave camps. Only 6,000 of them ever returned home.

Paulus eventually sells out to the Soviets altogether, joining the 'National Committee for Free Germany' and urging German troops to defy orders and surrender. After testifying at the post-war Nuremberg show-trials for the Soviets, he was released and spent the rest of his life as a mouthpiece for Communist East Germany.

In May, the campaign in North Africa ends as German troops evacuate. That same month, Admiral Donitz removes all German U-boats from the Atlantic after 41 subs are sunk in just 3 weeks! Germany is now limited to playing defense as the Allies slowly tighten the Globalist noose around Hitler's Reich.

Betrayed by their General, cold, tired and hungry Germans surrender at Stalingrad. Many will die on the death march to Siberian labor camps.

JULY, 1943
'OPERATION GOMORRAH' / THE FIREBOMBING OF HAMBURG BURNS OR SUFFOCATES 42,000 GERMAN CIVILIANS!

The Firebombing of Hamburg creates a tornado of fire so intense; it actually lifts people off of the streets and into the fire. Those who are not burned to death suffocate in shelters as the fire above sucks up all the oxygen.

Hundreds of US and UK aircraft feed the inferno with wave after wave of incendiary bombings. As a sick joke, the demonic planners of the genocide of Hamburg actually code named the arson attack "Operation Gomorrah", after the Hebrew Bible story of the cities which God destroyed by fire and brimstone.(Sodom & Gomorrah)

Operation Gomorrah deploys 3,000 aircraft and 9,000 tons of bombs. It kills 42,000 people, with an equal number injured. Indeed, more Germans died on that fateful night in Hamburg than the total number of British civilians killed during five years of war! One million traumatized German refugees flee the city in which 250,000 homes were destroyed.

The women, children, and elderly of Hamburg were suffocated or charbroiled alive by Churchill and Roosevelt.

1943
CHURCHILL'S BENGAL FAMINE KILLS 2,000,000 INDIANS

While famines were not uncommon in India, largely because of droughts or monsoons, the 1943 tragedy in Bengal has the unmistakable fingerprints of the mad dog Churchill on it. (7)

In the prior year, when Japan occupied Burma, an important rice exporter, the British bought up massive amounts of rice and hoarded it. Churchill then orders the diversion of food away from India and toward British troops around the world. Now a rare commodity, the price of rice shoots up four-fold. Wheat from Australia (which could have been delivered to starving Indians) is instead transported to British troops as well. Even worse, British colonial authorities (again under Churchill's leadership) actually turn down offers of food from the U.S.

Churchill hates Indians almost as much as he hates Germans; mainly because India wants its independence from Britain. Later, at a War Cabinet meeting, Churchill blames the Indians themselves for the famine, saying that they "breed like rabbits."

Churchill's Reign of Death spanned several continents.

SUMMER, 1943
ALLIES INVADE SICILY FROM NORTH AFRICA / ITALIAN GOVERNMENT COLLAPSES / 60,000 ITALIAN CIVILIANS KILLED

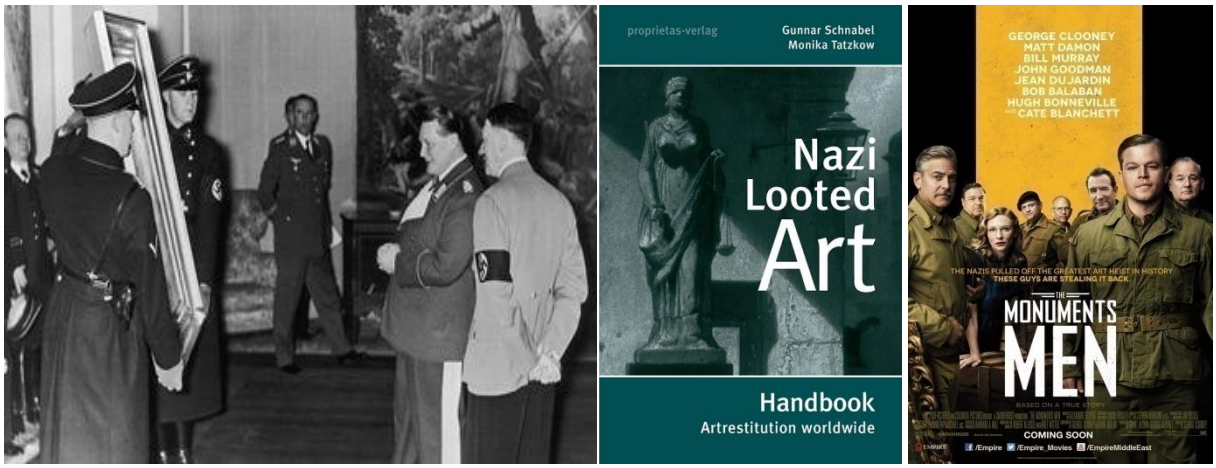
The Allied invasion of the southern Italian island of Sicily is another huge success for Generals Patton and Montgomery (UK). German and Italian resistance is overwhelmed. Within four weeks of the initial air and sea assault, Axis troops evacuate to the Italian mainland.

Italian Leader Benito Mussolini is removed from power by his own Grand Council. The new government arrests him, makes peace with the Allies, and switched sides. This leaves Germany with the sole task of halting Patton's push up the Italian peninsula. (In September, Mussolini is rescued by German commandos and reinstalled to rule over Northern Italy).

With Italy coming quickly under Allied control, Hitler worries that the Allies will now invade Yugoslavia and the Balkan nations, cut off Germany's oil supply, and march north upon Germany from the "soft underbelly of Europe". In August of 1943, the British Royal Air Force, departing from bases in southern Italy, begins heavy bombing of the Ploesti oil fields of German allied Romania. The German-occupied parts of Italy are also heavily bombed by the Allies, resulting in the deaths of 60,000 Italian civilians.

1- From North Africa to the "soft underbelly" of Sicily and southern Italy.

2- Bombed-out Italian refugees



1943-45
SPECIAL GERMAN UNITS PROTECT THE PRICELESS ARTWORKS OF EUROPE

Under Kaiser Wilhelm II during World War I, the highly cultured Germans had gone to great lengths to protect and preserve artworks located in combat zones. The German word to describe this principal of saving Europe's cultural and artistic treasures during wartime is "Kunstschutz" (art protection). (8)

A talented painter himself, Adolf Hitler has a great appreciation for art and culture. He sees Churchill and FDR as uncultured barbarians with merciless disregard for innocent life, architecture, and works of art. As the Germans had done during World War I, Hitler too orders the protection of artworks throughout the combat theatres of Europe. The task of protecting the art is handed over to Air Force Marshal Hermann Goering. As Allied terror bombing ravages Europe, thousands of paintings and sculptures from Italy, France, Belgium, Russia, Romania, and Poland are gathered and meticulously inventoried by the Germans.

After the war, the American Art Looting Investigation Unit (ALIU) of the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) issues 13 reports on the German "looting" of artworks. By the way, this is the same OSS (forerunner of the CIA) that also accused the Germans of using dead Jews to make "shrunken heads", "lamp shades" and "bars of soap" - allegations which are today universally acknowledged as false.

"Nazi looted art" is a war propaganda lie, as is the Hollywood film "Monuments Men" starring George Clooney and Matt Damon.

1943
GENERALS EISENHOWER & MARSHALL POSTPONE THE U.S. ADVANCE / WAR IS PROLONGED TO HELP STALIN

With "the soft underbelly of Europe" now vulnerable, Churchill and British General Montgomery argue for an immediate Allied advance upon Germany from the south of Europe. This was Hitler's greatest concern.

The oil fields of Romania fuel the German military. An Allied advance on the Balkans through Yugoslavia and Greece would be disastrous for Germany. From Italy and the Balkans, the Allies can then launch a final push upon Germany itself from the south and southeast.

Inexplicably, Allied Commander Dwight Eisenhower.('Ike') and Army Chief of Staff George Marshall (who had promoted Eisenhower over scores of senior officers) insist upon making preparations for an invasion of heavily fortified Northern France the following year.

This bizarre "blunder" prolongs the war, buys the Soviets much needed time to march westward, and eventually enables Stalin to steal Eastern Europe.

There is a reason for this geo-political "blunder". FDR and his Globalist gang envision a post-war world in which the Soviets and the United States join forces to lay the foundation for a 'New World Order' (World Government). However, after the war, Stalin will break with the Globalists and move towards a form of Nationalistic Communism instead; an extension of the ideological conflict that had bitterly divided Stalin and Trotsky during the 1920's. Stalin still supports world-wide Communist revolution, of course, but his vision of a New World Order is one in which Moscow calls the shots, not London or New York.

General Dwight D. Eisenhower (left) and Marshall at the Algiers Conference

1- The traitor Marshall (r) advanced the career of the traitor Eisenhower (l).

2- With most of Italy conquered, and the Soviets advancing from the east, why the plan to storm fortified beaches in France?

1943-1945
VLASOV'S ARMY: SOVIET POW'S VOLUNTEER TO FIGHT FOR GERMANY

Stalin's tyranny was hated by so many Russians that as many as 500,000 Russian POW's volunteered to fight for Germany! The anti-Communist soldiers of the Russian Liberation Army wore German uniforms with a Russian patch. They were led by General Andrey Vlasov, but under German high command.

The RLA fought valiantly, mainly in key rear guard support roles against Communist partisans. After the war, the RLA will attempt to surrender to the western allies. Not wanting to deny 'Uncle Joe' of his revenge, Eisenhower will turn down their offers and forcibly repatriate those who were already in U.S. custody.

Despite pleading with the Americans for political asylum, General Vlasov and his freedom fighters will then be handed over to the brutal Soviets. Vlasov and 11 of his senior officers are hanged in Moscow in August, 1946.

General Vlasov and his men were true Russian patriots; not "traitors".

MAY, 1944
4000 ITALIAN WOMEN ARE GANG RAPED BY FRENCH CONTROLLED NORTH AFRICANS AT MONTE CASSINO

In May '44, the Allies finally succeed in taking Monte Cassino.(in Central Italy) from German control, after bombing the town's 6th century abbey into ruins. The Allies have French-Moroccan troops fighting for them. The Moroccans are allowed to run wild; slitting the throats of prisoners, looting homes, and raping every Italian woman they can get their hands on. The Moroccans even rape local boys and a Catholic Priest!

Two Italian sisters, ages 16 and 18, are gang raped by more than 200 Moroccans. One dies from the abuse, and the other will spend the rest of her life in a mental hospital. An estimated 3000 women aged 11-86 are raped, some so violently that 100 of them die. About 800 village men who try to protect them are also killed. The Moroccans go unpunished by their "Free French" Commanders and will later rape and kill again when they occupy Germany.

Italian actress Sophia Loren starred in "Two Women", about a mother and daughter savagely raped by France's Moroccan conscripts.

JUNE 6, 1944
'D-DAY' - OVERLORD / ALLIED INVASION OF NORMANDY LAUNCHED ON 6-6-6 ESTABLISHES A FOOTHOLD IN EUROPE

At the 6th hour, of the 6th day, of the 6th month of 1944, Allied armies based in England launch 'D-Day' (Devil's Day?), and successfully cross the English Channel. The cost of Operation Overlord (the Devil?) is high as nearly 10,000 men are killed storming the fortified beaches of Normandy. But Overlord establishes an initial beachhead of 100,000 troops. From this base in northern France, the Allies will be reinforced for the push towards Germany.

At the same time, the Soviet Red Army, armed to the teeth with state-of-the-art American weaponry, advances upon Germany from the east. With Italy also under Allied occupation, Germany has three fronts to defend (West, South, and East) as its cities, railways, dams, factories and civilian population endure relentless bombardment and Partisan sabotage.

In order to give Stalin time to conquer Eastern Europe, Generals Eisenhower and Marshall repeatedly delay the advance of General Patton's unstoppable 3rd army, going so far as to cut off shipments of gasoline to Patton's army!

Patton (August, 1944): "At the present time our chief difficulty is not the Germans, but gasoline. If they would give me enough gas, I could go all the way to Berlin!" (9)

1- Instead of exploiting the "soft underbelly" of Italy, Allies storm fortified French beaches.

2- The dead at Normandy; what a tragic waste of life!

SUMMER, 1944
THE MURDEROUS 'LIBERATION' & RAPE OF FRANCE

Under what was intended to be only temporary, wartime German occupation (1940-1944), life in Northern France goes by peacefully for French civilians. The conduct of the German occupiers is impeccable. Many French women fall in love with German soldiers. But with the Normandy invasion (June 6, 1944), the peace and security of France is shattered into a million pieces. To support the cross-channel invasion, and to then push the Germans eastward, the Allies unleash a ferocious aerial bombardment campaign. Entire towns are mercilessly carpet bombed. Cultural icons and works of art are destroyed, 65,000 French civilians are killed, 150,000 are injured, and at least 500,000 left homeless. Even Paris is heavily bombed.

Incredibly, twice as many French civilians are bombed to death during only a few months, as the total amount of British civilians killed during the entire war! (10) Of course, these numbers pale in comparison to the 1,000,000 + German civilians who were killed by Allied bombings. The horror doesn't end with the bombardment either. The Allied occupation and subsequent economic collapse bring new nightmares for the women of France. Under Allied occupation, American troops rape 1000's of French women, and turn many 1000's more hungry women into sex-for-food prostitutes. To appease the French population, the U.S. Army will eventually hang 130 of its rapist soldiers, a majority of them Black. (11)

It will take years for these areas of France to recover from the tragedy. Such is the glorious "liberation" that Churchill, FDR, and the French traitor de Gaulle have imposed upon France.

1- The Allied 'liberators' left death, trauma and homelessness in their wake.

2 & 3- Heavy civilian deaths as the Allies bomb Paris factories – and then some!

JULY, 1944
RED ARMY ROLLS BACK INTO POLAND / GERMANS RETREAT

With their free arsenal supplemented by America's finest tanks, Tommy-Guns, planes, trucks, jeeps, and even food and blankets, the Red Army advances on Germany from the east. Stalin's plot to take all of Eastern Europe has been helped greatly by Ike's and Marshall's curious obsession with invading Europe from England, instead of simply advancing from Europe's "soft underbelly".

Stalin wants to crush Berlin. By July '44, the murdering and raping Reds have rolled into Poland, threatening Germany's eastern flank. Frightened German civilians begin fleeing westward by land and also via the Baltic Sea.

Armed with America's best weapons, the Red army rolls towards Germany.

JULY, 1944
BRETTON WOODS CONFERENCE ESTABLISHES THE WORLD BANK AND THE INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

The chaos and crisis of World War II gives the Globalists an opportunity to reshape the world's monetary system into a "global economy". At the Bretton Woods Conference in New Hampshire, 730 delegates from 44 nations set up new rules for commercial and financial relations. Representing the US is Harry Dexter White. White (originally Weiss) is the son of Jewish immigrants from the Russian Empire. Years after Bretton Woods, Dexter-White is revealed to be a Soviet spy. (12)

The top British delegate is the legendary Fabian Socialist (possible secret Communist) and homosexual pedophile (13), John Maynard Keynes. Keynes suggests the creation of a World Currency, to be issued by a Global Central Bank. But the world is not ready for such a radical step towards The New World Order. Instead of a global currency, each nation will link the value of its currency to the U.S. Dollar, which will serve as the international medium of exchange. Both the International Monetary Fund (IMF) and the World Bank, are conceived at Bretton Woods.

Soviet agent White (l) & Fabian Marxist pedophile Keynes crafted the world's debt-based monetary system and devised the World Bank and IMF schemes.

JULY 20, 1944
OPERATION VALKYRIE & THE ASSASSINATION ATTEMPT AGAINST HITLER

In addition to a few ambitious traitors, there are still some naïve fools among the German military establishment who believe that the western Allies can yet be reasoned with and peace obtained in the western front. Unbeknownst to them, Churchill and FDR have already pledged to Stalin that they will not seek a separate peace with Germany.

Partly out of a sincere though very misguided belief that Germany would be spared if Hitler was assassinated; and partly out of a desire to save their own skin; a gang of plotters, led by Colonel Claus von Stauffenberg, attempts to kill Adolf Hitler. The great General Erwin Rommel is believed to have given his blessing to the plot (though some have disputed this).

Carrying a bomb in his briefcase, Stauffenberg attends a conference with Hitler. He then positions the briefcase under the table near Hitler. After a few minutes, Stauffenberg receives a planned telephone call and leaves the room. When the bomb detonates, it demolishes the conference room, killing three officers and the stenographer. Hitler survives with a perforated eardrum.

The conspiracy is unraveled and the conspirators are soon executed by firing squad. General Rommel is granted the privilege of taking poison.

1- A soldier holds lucky Hitler's torn and singed trousers.

2- The bombed-out conference room 3- Colonel Stauffenberg

Hitler often preferred the company of his adoring rank and file soldiers to that of some of certain snobby Generals who later turned on the "corporal".

1944 - 1945
TYPHUS EPIDEMICS DEVASTATE THE GERMAN INTERNMENT CAMPS

Typhus is spread by head lice, and has historically been linked to wars and crowded conditions. Decomposing typhus corpses can also spread the disease into local groundwater. During and after the World War I, as many as 5 million Poles and Russians had died of the deadly disease. (14)

To stop the spread of typhus, the Germans shave the heads of the prisoners and delouse their clothing in "gas chambers". With the situation in Germany deteriorating fast, deadly typhus epidemics break out in Germany's internment camps, especially in Poland. The Allied bombardment of railroads and medicine factories contributes greatly to this medical crisis.

In spite of Germany's well-documented efforts to stop the typhus epidemic, (15) deaths in the concentration camps continue to mount throughout '44 & '45. After the war, Allied propaganda will falsely portray the typhus deaths as evidence of a deliberate extermination program aimed at the Jews.

1- American soldier "gasses" an unidentified woman in order to kill typhus-carrying lice.

2- Germans used Zyklon B to kill lice, not people.

3- British sign in Naples warns troops of typhus

AUGUST, 1944
THE VICHY GOVERNMENT OF FRANCE IS TOPPLED BY THE ALLIES / VENGEFUL GENERAL de GAULLE RETURNS AND MURDERS 40,000 OF HIS OWN PEOPLE

After the collapse of the Vichy French regime, General Charles de Gaulle returns from his English exile. The Globalist and Communist French then impose a new Reign of Terror. Cruel punishment is meted out against those labeled as "Nazi collaborators", whose only crime was in making peace with Germany, or to have fought against the Soviets on the eastern front as members of the German SS units.

The de Gaullist ‘liberals’ will murder as many as 40,000, and imprison 100,000 of their countrymen. French women who dated German soldiers during the occupation are humiliated by having their heads shaved bald or stripped naked.

Marshal Petain escapes to Germany. After the war, he will be sentenced to death for “treason”, but due to his age, 88, and hero status from WW I, de Gaulle has no choice but to reduce Petain's sentence to life in prison.

French women who had fallen in love with German soldiers were shaved bald and paraded by Red Frenchmen and other ‘patriotic” ignoramuses.

JANUARY 8, 1945
NEW YORK TIMES PUBLISHES A COMMUNIST’S CLAIM OF 6 MILLION JEWS DEAD

Sing it again Four Tops: “It’s the same, old song….

6,000,000 JEWS DEAD
New York Times (1857-Current file); Jan 8, 1945;
ProQuest Historical Newspapers The New York Times (1851 - 2006)
pg. 17

6,000,000 JEWS DEAD

Jacob Lestchinsky Estimates Reduction in Europe Since '39

The Jewish population in Europe has been reduced from 9,500,000 in 1939 to 3,500,000, it was estimated yesterday by Jacob Lestchinsky, exiled economist and newspaper man, in an address at the nineteenth annual conference of the Yiddish Scientific Institute. Mr. Lestchinsky, who is research secretary of the institute, spoke at the closing sessions of a three-day conference at the Hotel Park Central and attended by delegates from Jewish educational and cultural groups.

"Of the 6,000,000 European Jews who have died, 5,000,000 had lived in the countries under Hitler's occupation," he said.

Other speakers included Dr. Harry M. Orlinsky, Professor of Bible at the Jewish Institute of Religion; Prof. Abraham Heschel of Hebrew Union College, Cincinnati, and Joseph Opatoshu, vice president of the institute's executive board.

Reproduced with permission of the copyright owner. Further reproduc

We have firmly established that, on numerous occasions dating back to 1900, the propaganda claim of "6 million Jews" being in jeopardy of dying appeared in print. Towards the end of World War II, the first claim of 6 million Jews having actually died was published in January, 1945, based upon the claim of a Communist correspondent for the New York Jewish Daily Forward (an openly Marxist, Yiddish language publication).

As far back as 1933, Lestchinsky (above, right) had been accused by both Latvia and Germany of spreading false atrocity propaganda. (16) Germany had actually expelled him for telling atrocity lies.

With neither investigation nor confirmation, Lestchinsky's claim of 6 million dead Jews was immortalized with a headline in the Jewish owned New York Times. The most "prestigious" newspaper in the world thus gave a HUGE boost to a big lie.

Aside from Lestchinsky being a known Communist liar, there is another problem with the story. You see, none of the major concentration camps had even been liberated yet! Following are the 1945 liberation dates for some of the most well known "Nazi death camps":

Auschwitz (January 27), Buchenwald (April 4), Bergen Belsen (April 11), Dachau (April 29), Mauthausen (May 5)

All of these camps were regularly visited by the Red Cross, which estimated the final death toll at 270,000 (mainly from typhus). (17) Though the number was based on German records, the Red Cross at the time neither questioned the figure nor ever complained about German cooperation with regard to camp inspection.

So, where did Comrade Lestchinsky get this "6 million" from? As it turns out, the "6 million" number, which evidently has some symbolic significance, has been around for a long time.

The New York Times
Expect the World®

'Holocaust' & '6,000,000 Jews' stories in the Jew owned New York Times, all long before WW2 had finished

June 11th, 1900
RABBI WISE'S ADDRESS.

May 16th, 1903
MORE DETAILS OF THE KISHINEFF MASSACRE
In Some Places Jews Managed to Defend Themselves.

Sept 16th, 1903
THE MACEDONIAN MASSACRES.

Jan 29th, 1905
END OF ZIONISM. MAYBE.
Jewish Preacher's View of Uprising in Russia.

Mar 25th, 1906
Dr. Paul Nathan's View of Russian Massacre

Dec 2nd, 1914
APPEAL FOR AID FOR JEWS.
American Committee Tells of Suffering Due to the War.

Oct 18th, 1918
$1,000,000,000 FUND TO REBUILD JEWRY

Nov 12th, 1919
TELLS SAD PLIGHT OF JEWS.
"The excessive blows of contending armies have all but broken the back of European Jewry," he said, "and have reduced to tragically unbelievable misery, starvation and disease about [illegible] of half the Jewish population of the earth.
"The Jewish people throughout Eastern

Jul 20th, 1921
BEGS AMERICA SAVE 6,000,000 IN RUSSIA
Massacre Threatens All Jews as Soviet Power Wanes, Believers Reunion, Coming Here for Aid.

Mar 29th, 1933

June 1st, 1933
GERMAN POET IS SAFE.
Elsa Lasker-Schuler, Reported Missing, Is Located in Zurich.
Dr. Hargarten said he had received a letter from the poet at Zurich a few days ago, stating that she had "two years from the hitlerism" and was content but po-

Sept 8th, 1935
LONDON, Sept. 7. The preliminary session of the first world conference of the Federation of Polish Jews being attended by many delegates from eighteen countries representing 4,000,000 Jews was held in the East End of London tonight.

May 31st, 1936
AMERICANS APPEAL FOR JEWISH REFUGE
Pro-Palestine Federation Asks Britain to Take a Strong Course in Holy Land. leadership in the United States, favoring a larger Jewish immigration into Palestine, stressed the intolerable sufferings of the millions of Jews in "the European holocaust."

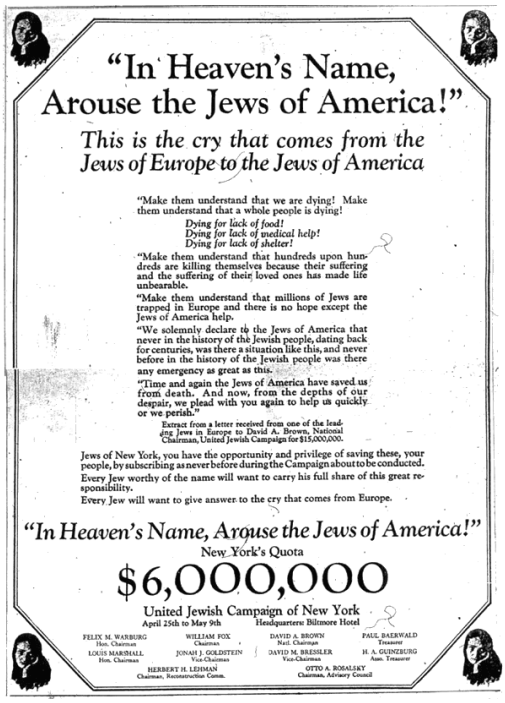
Feb 23rd, 1938
"Jewish Tragedy" Pictured
A depressing picture of 8,000,000 Jews in Central Europe deprived of protection or economic opportunities, slowly dying of starvation, all hope gone, was presented to the teachers by Jacob Tarshis, known to his radio audience as The Lamplighter. Mr. Tarshis represented the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee.
The "Jewish tragedy" started when Hitler came into power in 1933, Mr. Tarshis declared. Now



May 2nd, 1938
NATION IS WARNED OF ANTI-SEMITISM
Calls Upon Church to Meet Challenge of Prejudice Here With Aggressive Action
The rising tide of anti-Semitism in Europe today, which has deprived more than 6,000,000 Jews and sympathizers of a birthright, may soon

Jan 15th, 1939
Rabbi Silver wanted assistance to Jewish emigration safeguarded so that European governments would realize that "it is impossible to evacuate 6,000,000 Jews."
"The overwhelmingly large number of Jews in Eastern and Central Europe will have to remain exactly where they are and their problems must ultimately be solved, along with the entire minority problem of Europe," he said

Oct 2nd, 1941
YOM KIPPUR ENDS IN PLEA FOR PEACE
Bearing in mind, when the day of peace comes, the inferno through which the human race is now passing, the peace-makers may so order the pattern of the future as to avoid the likelihood of another holocaust."

Jan 8th, 1945
6,000,000 JEWS DEAD
Jacob Lestchinsky Estimates Reduction in Europe Since '39
The Jewish population in Europe has been reduced from 9,000,000 in 1939 to 3,000,000, it was estimated yesterday by Jacob Lestchinsky.
"Of the 6,000,000 European Jews who have died, 5,000,000 had lived in the countries under Hitler's occupation," he said.

Feb 17th, 1945
PARIS, Feb. 16—Dr. Joseph Schwartz, European director of the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, estimated today that 800,000 of Europe's 8,000,000 Jews had escaped destruction by emigration and that only 1,000,000 to 1,200,000 of Europe's 8,000,000 Jews were now left on the Continent.

"In Heaven's Name, Arouse the Jews of America!"

This is the cry that comes from the Jews of Europe to the Jews of America

"Make them understand that we are dying! Make them understand that a whole people is dying!
Dying for lack of food!
Dying for lack of medical help!
Dying for lack of shelter!

"Make them understand that hundreds upon hundreds are killing themselves because their suffering and the suffering of their loved ones has made life unbearable.

"Make them understand that millions of Jews are trapped in Europe and there is no hope except the Jews of America help.

"We solemnly declare to the Jews of America that never in the history of the Jewish people, dating back for centuries, was there a situation like this, and never before in the history of the Jewish people was there any emergency as great as this.

"Time and again the Jews of America have saved us from death. And now, from the depths of our despair, we plead with you again to help us quickly or we perish."

Extract from a letter received from one of the leading Jews in Europe to David A. Brown, National Chairman, United Jewish Campaign for $15,000,000.

Jews of New York, you have the opportunity and privilege of saving these, your people, by subscribing as never before during the Campaign about to be conducted.
Every Jew worthy of the name will want to carry his full share of this great responsibility.
Every Jew will want to give answer to the cry that comes from Europe.

"In Heaven's Name, Arouse the Jews of America!"

New York's Quota

$6,000,000

United Jewish Campaign of New York
April 25th to May 9th
Headquarters Biltmore Hotel

FELIX M. WARBURG, Hon. Chairman
WILLIAM FOX, Chairman
DAVID A. BROWN, Nat. Chairman
PAUL BAERWALD, Treasurer
LOUIS MARSHALL, Hon. Chairman
JONAH J. GOLDSTEIN, Vice-Chairman
DAVID M. BRESSLER, Vice-Chairman
H. A. GUINZBURG, Asst. Treasurer
HERBERT H. LEHMAN, Chairman, Reconstruction Comm.
OTTO A. ROSALSKY, Chairman, Advisory Council

1- The "6 Million Jews" mantra had appeared in print many times since 1900.

2- The United Jewish Campaign of New York set a fundraising goal of $6,000,000 to help the "dying" Jews of Europe…in 1926?

JANUARY 30, 1945
SOVIET SUB SINKS THE WILHELM GUSTLOFF / 10,000 GERMAN REFUGEES KILLED AT SEA!

As the raping and murdering Soviets push eastward, millions of terrified German refugees flee west by land and sea. The liner MV Wilhelm Gustloff is packed shoulder-to-shoulder with 10 -12,000 people - 10 times as many as the Titanic!

Soon after leaving port, the doomed ship is sighted by Soviet Submarine commander Alexander Marinesko. Having stalked his human prey for several hours, the Soviet killer then fires three torpedoes into the ship's port side. In the panic that follows, many passengers are trampled to death as they flee to the decks.

The Wilhelm Gustloff sinks in just 45 minutes. German ships arrive quickly and pluck about 1,000 survivors from the frigid Baltic Sea.

1 & 2- Artistic rendition of the sinking - 10,000 souls lost at sea!

3- In recognition of his "heroic" act of genocide, the Soviets built a memorial to Commander Marinesko.

FEBRUARY, 1945
THE YALTA CONFERENCE / FDR 'GIVES AWAY THE STORE' TO JOE STALIN

The most historic of the "Big Three" conferences is held in the Black Sea resort of Yalta (Russian Crimea). At the Yalta Conference, FDR & Churchill (especially FDR) make easy concessions to the mass-murdering Communist, "Uncle Joe". With Red spies Alger Hiss and Harry Hopkins influencing the dying Roosevelt (who dies in April), it is decided that after Germany's defeat:

- The Soviets will occupy Eastern Europe until free elections can be held.
- The Soviets will eventually join the war against Japan and be supplied with U.S. arms for the effort.
- After Japan is defeated, the Soviets will occupy northern Korea (without Korea's approval!), and Manchuria in China (without China's approval!)
- Millions of Russian POWs captured by the Germans, as well as Russian refugees fleeing Stalin, will be forcefully returned to Stalin.
- Germany will be split in half as will the Capital of Berlin. (18)

The Big Three of Yalta - The murderous psychopaths plot the reshaping of the post- war world. The biggest winner is Stalin.

FEBRUARY 13-15, 1945
THE 'ASH WEDNESDAY' HOLOCAUST OF DRESDEN
200,000 - 300,000 CIVILIANS KILLED!

By February of '45, the outcome of the war in Europe is already clear. Germany is finished and will formally surrender in 3 months. The murderous firebombing of the beautiful city of Dresden is therefore as cruel as it is unnecessary. In an apparent effort to mock Catholic Germans, the Zio-Globalists chose the day of "Ash Wednesday" to literally turn Dresden into ashes.

For two straight days, wave upon wave of Allied air sorties drop phosphorus and incendiary bombs upon a defenseless population. Thousands of fires merge into one huge firestorm, sucking oxygen to feed itself as countless numbers of German elderly, women, and children suffocate or burn alive.

The fire is so massive that pilots report that their cockpits are actually illuminated by the great flame. Because so many refugees fleeing eastward have swelled Dresden's population, it is difficult to say how many are killed by the Churchill/FDR "Holocaust". Credible estimates vary between 200 - 300,000 dead, and possibly as many 500,000! (19) Survivors are later strafed during the daytime with machine gun fire from low flying American & British fighter planes. (20)

Burnt out beyond description! The dead of Dresden were stacked in huge piles and cremated before mass disease could set in.

Before and after; they did not deserve this!

MARCH 10, 1945
FDR FIREBOMBS TOKYO / 100,000 CIVILIANS KILLED

Though it will later be overshadowed by the subsequent atomic bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the Firebombing of Tokyo is just as deadly in its initial death toll. The genocidal terror bombing involves the same type of incendiary explosives dropped on Dresden one month earlier, and yields similar horrific results.

The charred bodies of 100,000 dead civilians litter the streets and 250,000 buildings and homes are destroyed. Millions more are injured or left homeless.

Though later overshadowed by the atomic bombings of Japan, the Tokyo firebombing was just as deadly. The boys above are homeless orphans.

APRIL 12, 1945
FDR DIES OF A STROKE/ HARRY TRUMAN BECOMES PRESIDENT

The polio-stricken FDR will not live to see the end of the bloody war that he helped unleash upon the world. FDR intends to take a few weeks rest before his anticipated appearance at the founding conference of the United Nations in San Francisco.

On the afternoon of April 12, Roosevelt says out loud, "I have a terrific pain in the back of my head." He slumps forward in his chair, unconscious, and is carried into his bedroom. Like Wilson in 1919, FDR suffers a massive stroke and dies soon afterwards. FDR's lasting legacy for America is the class warfare induced welfare state and the brutal foreign warfare state; both of which are bankrupting the United States and killing innocents abroad.

Naturally, after his death The New York Times declares, "Men will thank God on their knees a hundred years from now that Franklin D. Roosevelt was in the White House". (21)

Vice President Harry Truman becomes President. He is a corrupt, dim-witted political hack and failed businessman. FDR's Jewish and Red inner circle will continue to run the show while the ill-tempered little man from Missouri delivers the speeches. Nothing will change.

The New York Times.

LATE CITY EDITION

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT IS DEAD; TRUMAN TO CONTINUE POLICIES; 9TH CROSSES ELBE, NEARS BERLIN

U. S. AND RED ARMIES DRIVE TO MEET

Americans Across the Elbe in Strength Race Toward Russians Who Have Opened Offensive From Oder

WEIMAR TAKEN, RUHR POCKET SLASHED

Third Army Reported 19 Miles From Czechoslovak Border—British Drive Deeper in the North, Seizing Celle—Canadians Freeing Holland

OUR OKINAWA GUNS DOWN 118 PLANES

Franklin Delano Roosevelt

1882-1945

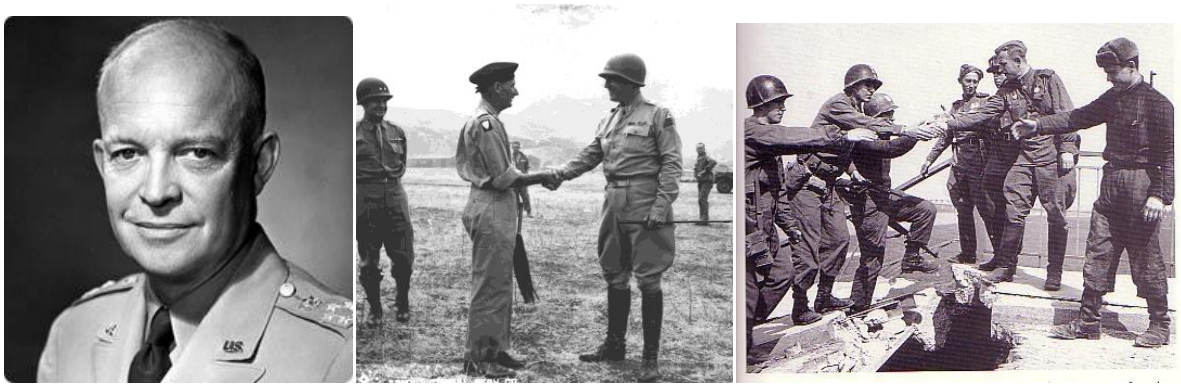
END COMES SUDDENLY AT WARM SPRINGS

Even His Family Unaware of Condition as Cerebral Stroke Brings Death to Nation's Leader at 63

ALL CABINET MEMBERS TO KEEP POSTS

Funeral to Be at White House Tomorrow, With Burial at Hyde Park Home—Impact of News Tremendous

TRUMAN IS SWORN IN THE WHITE HOUSE



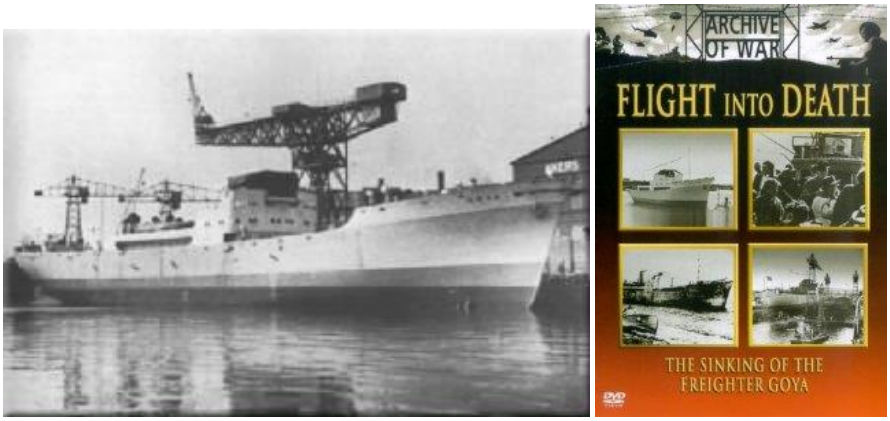
*The New York Times turns the lying swine into a god, as brainwashed Americans weep for the death of the deceitful monster who had betrayed them. Note the sub-headline: '9TH Crosses Elbe (River), Nears Berlin'

APRIL 15, 1945
EISENHOWER ORDERS PATTON'S ARMY TO HALT / BERLIN & EASTERN EUROPE RESERVED FOR STALIN!

British General Bernard Montgomery argues that there is now nothing to stop the Allies from sweeping into Berlin, thus taking the German Capital before the advancing Soviet army can get there. Eisenhower, however, has other ideas. As FDR's loyal lapdog had done time and time again, "Ike" would find a way to delay the Allied advance so as to buy time for Stalin to advance from the east.

On March 28, '45, Ike sends a message to Stalin, assuring him that the Allied advance will focus on western Germany. On April 15, Ike issues a halt order forbidding Allied commanders from crossing the Elbe River. (22) Generals Montgomery and Patton are very upset over the sudden order to halt the advance, thus condemning Berlin, and all of Eastern Europe, to Soviet barbarism.

1- Red-lover 'Ike' was Stalin's favorite General.



2- Montgomery & Patton can't understand why Berlin was given to Stalin.

3- American & Soviet troops shake hands over the ruined bridge across the Elbe River.

APRIL 16, 1945
SOVIET SUB SINKS THE GOYA / 7,000 MORE GERMAN REFUGEES KILLED AT SEA!

The Goya is a German transport ship carrying 7,000 wounded soldiers and terrified refugees westward. The Red Terror will follow these poor souls to sea. Soviet Captain Vladimir Konovalov spots the Goya and orders it to be blasted by torpedoes. The Goya sinks very quickly, plunging its passengers into the icy Baltic Sea. Less than 200 will survive. The final death toll is about the equivalent of 7 Titanics!

For this murderous war crime, Captain Konovalov is awarded the Soviet Union's highest military decoration, Hero of the Soviet Union.

Soviet subs turned the Baltic into a graveyard for 1000's of refugees.

APRIL 28, 1945
ITALIAN COMMUNIST PARTISANS KILL MUSSOLINI / HIS BODY IS PUBLICLY HUNG UPSIDE DOWN

With total defeat looming in Europe, Mussolini attempts to escape to neutral Switzerland. He is captured and summarily executed near Lake Como by Italian Partisans (Communists). Mussolini's body is then taken to Milan, where it is hung upside down for public viewing and also to provide confirmation of his death.

Mussolini's 1922 takeover of Italy (The March on Rome) saved Italy from Communism. There were many positive economic and social developments during his rule. But in the end, "il Duce" and his imperialistic ego put Italy and Germany in very difficult situations. His reckless adventures in Africa & Greece made Italy a huge burden for Germany to carry and defend. Moreover, French & Arab disdain for Mussolini's actions ruined Hitler's chances to bring France and the Arabs into an anti-British alliance.

Mussolini (2nd from left) and his mistress (3rd) are strung up in Milan. His ill-advised antics cost his friend Hitler dearly.

APRIL 30, 1945
HITLER ISSUES HIS FINAL TESTAMENT / COMMITS SUICIDE IN HIS BERLIN BUNKER

With the situation in Berlin hopeless, Hitler marries his longtime mistress, Eva Braun. The two then commit suicide; Eva by poison, Hitler by gunshot. Hitler's dog Blondie is also poisoned. The staff is under orders to burn the bodies and to escape Berlin before the Soviets can capture them.

One day before committing suicide, Hitler had dictated his final Political Testament, a suicide note, in essence, in which he denied any responsibility for starting the war. Some critical excerpts that you'll not find in your High School history book:

"More than thirty years have now passed since I in 1914 made my modest contribution as a volunteer in the First World War that was forced upon the Reich. In these three decades I have been actuated solely by love and loyalty to my people in all my thoughts, acts, and life. They gave me the strength to make the most difficult decisions which have ever confronted mortal man. I have spent my time, my working strength, and my health in these three decades.

"It is untrue that I or anyone else in Germany wanted war in 1939. It was wanted and provoked solely by international statesmen either of Jewish origin or working for Jewish interests.

I have made too many offers for the control and limitation of armaments, which posterity will not for all time be able to disregard for the responsibility for the outbreak of this war to be laid on me. Nor have I ever wished that after the appalling First World War a second against England, or even against America, should break out. Centuries will pass away, but out of the ruins of our towns and monuments the hatred of those whom we have to thank for all this will always grow anew: international Jewry and its henchmen.

Three days before the outbreak of the German-Polish war I again proposed to the British ambassador in Berlin a solution to the German-Polish problem—similar to that in the case of the Saar district, under international control

This offer also cannot be denied. It was only rejected because the leading circles in English politics wanted the war, partly on account of the business hoped for and partly under influence of propaganda organized by International Jewry.

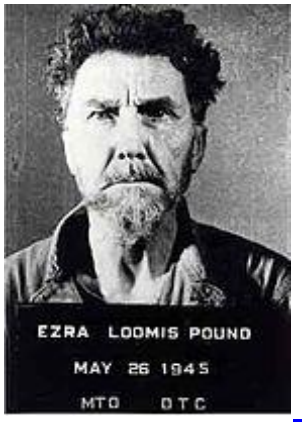
After six years of war, which in spite of all setbacks will go down one day in history as the most glorious and valiant demonstration of a nation's life purpose, I cannot forsake the city which is the capital of this Reich. As the forces are too small to make any further stand against the enemy attack at this place, and our resistance is gradually being weakened by men who are as deluded as they are lacking in initiative, I should like, by remaining in this town, to share my fate with those, the millions of others, who have also taken upon themselves to do so.

Moreover, I do not wish to fall into the hands of an enemy who requires a new spectacle organized by the Jews for the amusement if their hysterical masses. I have decided therefore to remain in Berlin and there of my own free will to choose death at the moment when I believe the position of the Fuehrer and Chancellor itself can no longer be held.

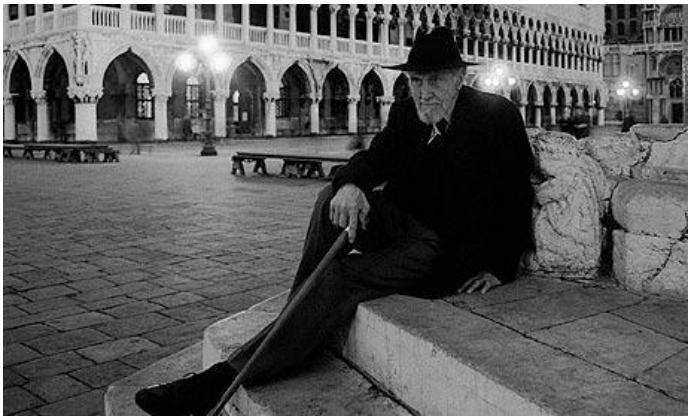
I die with a happy heart, aware of the immeasurable deeds and achievements of our soldiers at the front, our women at home, the achievements of our farmers and workers and the work, unique in history, of our youth who bear my name". (23)

Adolf & Eva loved each other, and died together. Hitler's young secretary, Traudl Junge, typed out the dictation for Hitler's Final Testament. Junge lived until 2002, describing Hitler as a loving father figure until the end.

Adolf and Eva



MAY 3, 1945
AMERICA'S PERSECUTION OF EZRA POUND



Just days after killing Mussolini, the American-controlled Partisans hunt down and capture the famous American poet, Ezra Pound, and hand him over to the OSS (CIA) for interrogation. Pound is an admirer of National Socialism, or "Fascism" as it is called in Italy. While living in Italy during the war, Pound had condemned the unjust war and the Jewish financiers behind it.

Addressing Britain, Pound declared:

"You let in the Jew and the Jew rotted your empire; and you yourselves out-jewed the Jew. . . . Corrupting the whole earth, you have lost yourselves to yourselves. You would do better to inoculate your children with typhus and syphilis than to let in the Sassoons, Rothschilds, and Warburgs." (24)

After his capture, he praises Adolf Hitler a "Saint". The great literary genius and gentle peace lover is then sentenced to an insane asylum for 12 years!

1- Condemned as a "traitor", Ezra Pound was once regarded as America's foremost literary genius.

2- Pound as a free man in Venice, Italy (1964)

MAY 8, 1945
V–E DAY / VICTORY IN EUROPE PROCLAIMED AS GERMANY SURRENDERS WITHOUT CONDITIONS

"All the News That's Fit to Print"

The New York Times.

LATE CITY EDITION

NEW YORK, TUESDAY, MAY 8, 1945

THREE CENTS

THE WAR IN EUROPE IS ENDED!
SURRENDER IS UNCONDITIONAL;
V-E WILL BE PROCLAIMED TODAY;
OUR TROOPS ON OKINAWA GAIN

ISLAND-WIDE DRIVE

Marines Reach Village a Mile From Naha and Army Lines Advance

7 MORE SHIPS SUNK

Search Planes Again Hit Japan's Life Line—Kyushu Bombed

The Pulitzer Awards For 1944 Announced

GERMANY SURRENDERS: NEW YORKERS MASSED UNDER SYMBOL OF LIBERTY

GERMANS CAPITULATE ON ALL FRONTS

American, Russian and French Generals Accept Surrender in Eisenhower Headquarters, a Reims School

REICH CHIEF OF STAFF ASKS FOR MERCY

Doenitz Orders All Military Forces of Germany To Drop Arms—Troops in Norway Give Up —Churchill and Truman on Radio Today

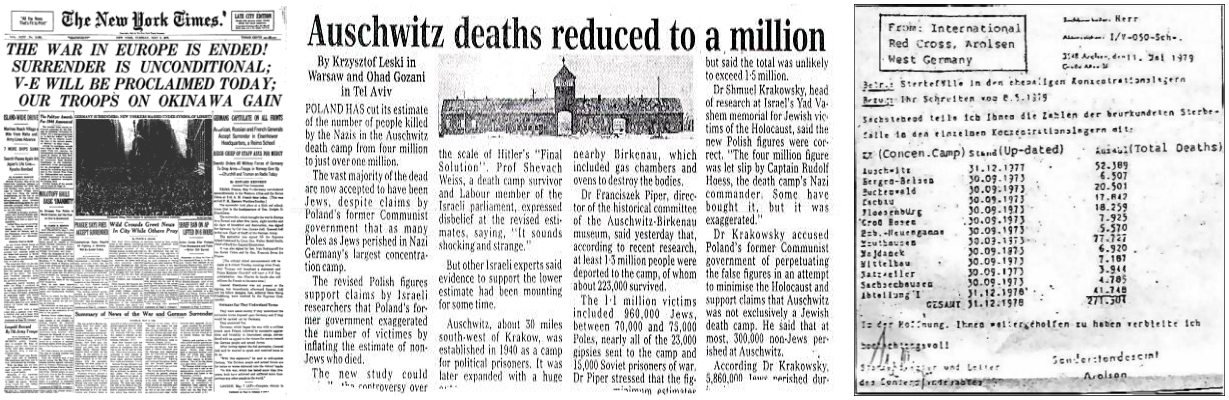
Upon hearing that Germany has surrendered , jubilant crowds throughout Britain and the U.S. celebrate Victory in Europe Day. Admiral Karl Donitz, named in Hitler's final testament as the new President of Germany, signs the surrender agreement. He soberly remarks, "With this signature, the German people and armed forces are for better or for worse, delivered into the victor's hands." (25)

But there is to be no mercy for the German people who had dared to defy the New World Order, and, for a while, had actually defeated the Globalists! Germany's real nightmares are about to unfold as a vengeful Globalist-Communist Alliance-of-Evil imposes a collective punishment upon Germany that will dwarf Versailles. Between 10 million and 15 million Germans died during, and after World War II.

1- The Red Army raises the Communist flag over bombed-out Berlin

2- New Yorkers celebrate V-E Day. If they only knew the truth!

3- A German boy weeps in front of the ruins of his former home.



MAY 8, 1945
HOURS AFTER GERMAN SURRENDERS, SOVIETS PUBLISH REPORT OF 'GAS CHAMBERS' USED TO KILL JEWS / NEW YORK TIMES CARRIES THE CLAIM

The May 8 Zionist-Globalist New York Times, carries a story on p. 12 of the VE-Day edition, an article by Zionist C.L. Sulzberger headlined: 'Oswiecim (Auschwitz) Killings Placed at 4 Million; Soviet Commission Reports'.

The story tells of mass killing and "gassings" at the Auschwitz prison camp in Poland. The timing of the report's release –just hours after Germany's surrender– makes it impossible for the falsely accused Germans to refute Stalin's claim. It is a little known fact of history that the Auschwitz "gas chamber" story originated with a Soviet report (authorized by the known liars and murderers Joe Stalin & Lazar Kaganovich) which is then spread by the "prestigious" NY Times.

In 1988, and again in 1991, forensic tests on the remnants of the Auschwitz "gas chamber" will come back negative for any traces of "gas" or "poison". (26) Noted American and European scholars who have since dared to explore the many inconsistencies and contradictions of "The Holocaust" story have been subjected to harassment, career destruction and (in Europe & Canada) imprisonment. The Holocaust is a story that the Globalists & Zionists will NEVER allow to be debated.

Adolf Hitler nearly smashed the New World Order. It is for this reason that he must forever be portrayed in the public mind as the most evil and wretched monster who ever lived.

THE WAR IN EUROPE IS ENDED!
SURRENDER IS UNCONDITIONAL;
V-E WILL BE PROCLAIMED TODAY;
OUR TROOPS ON OKINAWA GAIN

The New York Times.

Auschwitz deaths reduced to a million

By Krzysztof Leski in Warsaw and Ohad Gozani in Tel Aviv

POLAND HAS cut its estimate of the number of people killed by the Nazis in the Auschwitz death camp from four million to just over one million.

The vast majority of the dead are now accepted to have been Jews, despite claims by Poland's former Communist government that as many Poles as Jews perished in Nazi Germany's largest concentration camp.

The revised Polish figures support claims by Israeli researchers that Poland's former government exaggerated the number of victimes by inflating the estimate of non-Jews who died.

The new study could the scale of Hitler's "Final Solution". Prof Shevach Weiss, a death camp survivor and Labour member of the Israeli parliament, expressed disbelief at the revised estimates, saying, "It sounds shocking and strange."

But other Israeli experts said evidence to support the lower estimate had been mounting for some time.

Auschwitz, about 30 miles south-west of Krakow, was established in 1940 as a camp for political prisoners. It was later expanded with a huge nearby Birkenau, which included gas chambers and ovens to destroy the bodies.

Dr Franciszek Piper, director of the historical committee of the Auschwitz-Birkenau museum, said yesterday that, according to recent research, at least 1·5 million people were deported to the camp, of whom about 223,000 survived.

The 1·1 million victims included 960,000 Jews, between 70,000 and 75,000 Poles, nearly all of the 23,000 gipsies sent to the camp and 15,000 Soviet prisoners of war. Dr Piper stressed that the fig-but said the total was unlikely to exceed 1·5 million.

Dr Shmuel Krakowsky, head of research at Israel's Yad Vashem memorial for Jewish victims of the Holocaust, said the new Polish figures were correct. "The four million figure was let slip by Captain Rudolf Hoess, the death camp's Nazi commander. Some have bought it, but it was exaggerated."

Dr Krakowsky accused Poland's former Communist government of perpetuating the false figures in an attempt to minimise the Holocaust and support claims that Auschwitz was not exclusively a Jewish death camp. He said that at most, 300,000 non-Jews perished at Auschwitz.

According Dr Krakowsky, 5,860,000 Jews perished dur-

From: International Red Cross, Arolsen West Germany

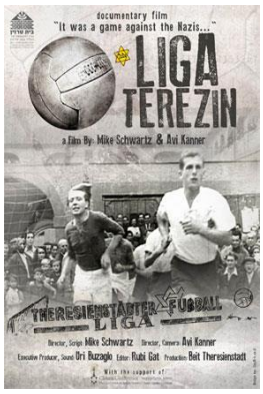
Betr.: Sterbefälle in den ehemaligen Konzentrationslagern

Bezug: Ihr Schreiben vom 8.5.1979

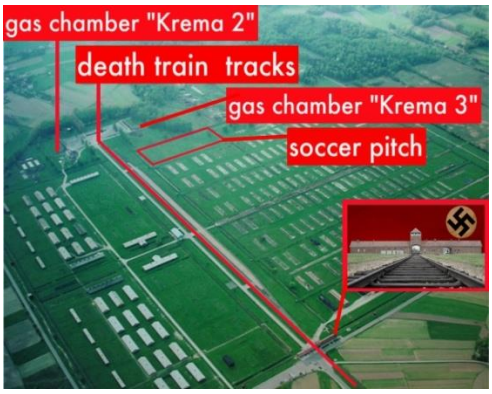
Nachstehend teile ich Ihnen die Zahlen der beurkundeten Sterbefälle in den einzelnen Konzentrationslagern mit:

(Concen.Camp)	Stand(Up-dated)	Anzahl(Total Deaths)
Auschwitz	31.12.1977	52.389
Bergen-Belsen	30.09.1973	6.507
Buchenwald	30.09.1973	20.501
Dachau	30.09.1973	17.842
Flossenbürg	30.09.1973	18.259
Groß Rosen	30.09.1973	7.925
Neb.-Neuengamme	30.09.1973	5.570
Natzweiler	30.09.1973	27.127
Majdanek	30.09.1973	6.920
Mittelbau	30.09.1973	7.187
Natzweiler	30.09.1973	3.944
Sachsenhausen	30.09.1973	4.785
Abteilung I	31.12.1978	41.748
GESAMT	31.12.1978	271.301

Sonderstandesamt
Arolsen



1- Page 12, May 8, '45 New York Times (above) carries SOVIET claim of "gas chambers" and FOUR million dead at Auschwitz.



2- Fifty years later, due to awareness created by honest researchers, the official Auschwitz death toll was reduced to ONE million (which is still a lie!)

3- A 1979 document, issued by the International Tracing Service which documents "Nazi Persecution", shows that the International Red Cross, which had access to the camps, believed the total dead from ALL the camps to be 271,000.

The original "gas chamber" lies in bombed out ruins. Forensic tests on the porous stones proved negative for any trace of chemicals. The museum piece "gas chamber" (right) is an admitted reconstruction shown to unquestioning suckers. It was built under Stalin's rule after the war.

1- Jewish soccer league documentary

2 & 3 - Auschwitz Soccer Field / Auschwitz inmate Yakov Tzur describes a 1944 soccer game at Auschwitz!

THE FATE OF HITLER'S INNER CIRCLE

Goebbels – Himmler – Hess – Hitler

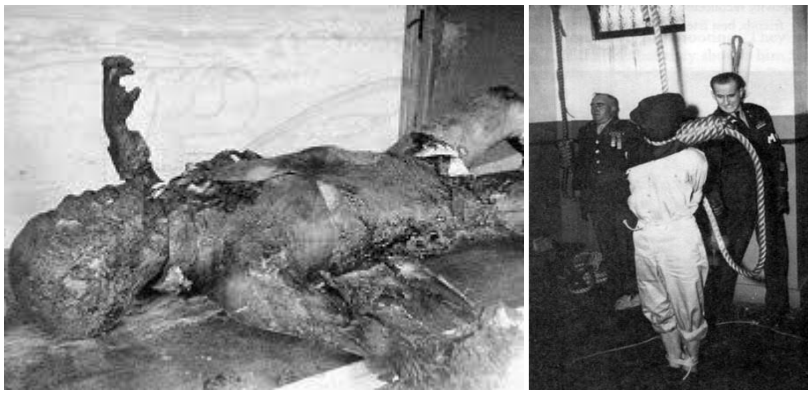
Ribbentrop & Goering

Bormann

Hermann Goering, Head of the Luftwaffe (German Air force):
Committed suicide in his cell (cyanide) just before the Allies could hang him (1946)

Josef Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda & Enlightenment:
Committed suicide by gunshot in Berlin; body later burned

Heinrich Himmler, Head of the Waffen SS:
Allegedly committed suicide by biting a hidden cyanide pill while in Allied captivity; but according to noted British historian David Irving, Himmler was actually beaten to death by British interrogators



Martin Bormann: Staff Chief
Believed to have been killed by Russian rocket fire while fleeing Berlin

Rudolf Hess: Deputy Fuhrer, flew peace mission to Scotland
Life in prison. Murdered by British agents in 1987 before release

Von Ribbentrop: Foreign Minister
Hanged at Nuremberg, 1946

Himmler – Goering – Hess

Goebbels – Ribbentrop

JUNE 26, 1945
THE FOUNDING CHARTER FOR THE UNITED NATIONS IS SIGNED IN SAN FRANCISCO

At the founding San Francisco Conference that established the United Nations, the U.S. official serving as Secretary General is the Communist agent Alger Hiss. Hiss will later be exposed as a Soviet spy in 1948. The U.N. replaces the League of Nations as the foundation of The New World Order. All 51 nations signing the original charter agree to be bound by its articles.

The all-out propaganda campaign surrounding the UN's establishment is pervasive and intense. It is argued that "isolationist" America's refusal to join the League of Nations after World War I was the tragic mistake that led to World War II. That mistake "must not be repeated".

Within 30 days, the US Senate will approve the UN Treaty by a vote of 89-2! Even the conservative legend, Senator Robert Taft (son of President William Howard Taft) votes in favor of U.S. entry. The embryonic World Government will be headquartered in New York, on 18 acres of prime real estate donated by the Rockefeller Family. Globalism has won World War II!

1- Communist-Soviet spy Alger Hiss shaking hands with Truman at UN's founding conference. Hiss was Chairman of the Conference.

2- John D Rockefeller Jr. purchased the New York land to set up the U. N. Building.

AUGUST 6 & 10, 1945
HORROR IN JAPAN! / ATOMIC BOMBS DROPPED ON HIROSHIMA & NAGASAKI

Like FDR before him, Harry Truman also has no regard for human life. By August '45, Japan is trying hard, via "neutral" Soviet channels, to negotiate surrender, just not unconditionally as Truman demands. Little do the Japanese know that the Soviets are already planning to join the war in East Asia! Atomic bombs are then dropped on the women, elderly, and children of Hiroshima *(Aug 6) and Nagasaki *(Aug 10).

Within the first few months of the bombings, the effects kill 100-150,000 people in Hiroshima and 60–80,000 in Nagasaki. Half of the deaths occur on the first day, mostly from burns. Many more die of cancer later on.

"All the News That's Fit to Print"

The New York Times.

LATE CITY EDITION

NEW YORK, TUESDAY, AUGUST 7, 1945

THREE CENTS

FIRST ATOMIC BOMB DROPPED ON JAPAN; MISSILE IS EQUAL TO 20,000 TONS OF TNT; TRUMAN WARNS FOE OF A 'RAIN OF RUIN'

HIRAM W. JOHNSON, REPUBLICAN DEAN IN THE SENATE, DIES

Jet Plane Explosion Kills Major Bong, Top U. S. Ace

Flier Who Downed 40 Japanese Craft, Sent Home to Be 'Safe,' Was Flying New 'Shooting Star' as a Test Pilot

KYUSHU CITY RAZED

Kenney's Planes Blast Tarumizu in Record Blow From Okinawa

ROCKET SITE IS SEEN

125 B-29's Hit Japan's Toyokawa Naval Arsenal in Demolition Strike

REPORT BY BRITAIN

'By God's Mercy' We Beat Nazis to Bomb, Churchill Says

ROOSEVELT AID CITED

Raiders Wrecked Normal Laboratory in Race for Key to Victory

Steel Tower 'Vaporized' In Trial of Mighty Bomb

Scientists Awe-Struck as Blinding Flash Lighted New Mexico Desert and Great Cloud Bore 40,000 Feet Into Sky

NEW AGE USHERED

Day of Atomic Energy Hailed by President, Revealing Weapon

HIROSHIMA IS TARGET

'Impenetrable' Cloud of Dust Hides City After Single Bomb Strikes

1- An unjust war ended with the unnecessary atomic bombings of Japanese civilians.

2- Bloody bastard Truman warns of a 'Rain of Ruin' if Japan does not surrender unconditionally.

More images of what is today known as "The Good War". Abandonment, homelessness, disfigurement! What was so 'good' about this?

AUGUST 9, 1945
SOVIET UNION DECLARES WAR UPON BEATEN JAPAN!

Just 3 days after the bombing of Hiroshima, and only hours before the 2nd bombing at Nagasaki, the man whom Truman and the U.S. press affectionately referred to as 'Uncle Joe" breaks the Soviet-Japanese Non Aggression Pact of 1941 and declares war upon an already beaten Japan. Thanks Joe; we couldn't have won it without you!

Stalin's entry into the Asian theater, agreed to at the Yalta Conference, will enable him to arm and materially assist Mao Tse Tung's Communist takeover of China in 1949. Soviet occupation of North Korea will also lead to the Korean divide which results in the North vs. South Korean War; and 50,000 more dead Americans.

"All the News That's Fit to Print"

The New York Times.

LATE CITY EDITION

SOVIET DECLARES WAR ON JAPAN; ATTACKS MANCHURIA, TOKYO SAYS; ATOM BOMB LOOSED ON NAGASAKI

TRUMAN TO REPORT TO PEOPLE TONIGHT ON BIG 3 AND WAR

Foreigners Asked To Stay at Home

2D BIG AERIAL BLOW

RED ARMY STRIKES

CIRCLE OF SPEARHEADS AROUND JAPAN IS COMPLETED

RUSSIA AIDS ALLIES

Japanese Port Is Target In Devastating New Midday Assault

Foe Reports First Blow by Soviet Forces on Asian Frontier

Joins Pacific Struggle After Spurning Foe's Mediation Plea

SEEKS EARLY PEACE

Molotoff Reveals Move Three Months After Victory in Europe

RESULT CALLED GOOD

KEY POINTS BOMBED

He Signs Peace Charter

And Thus Makes This Country the First to Complete All Ratification Requirements

For Asserts Hiroshima Toll Is 'Uncountable' —Assails 'Atrocity'

Action Believed Aimed to Free Vladivostok Area of Threat

TAMMANY OUSTS LAST OF REBELS

Stalin stabbed Japan in the back and brought Communist power to Asia.

AUGUST 15, 1945
V- J DAY/ JAPAN SURRENDERS

Facing what Truman calls "a Rain of Ruin", Japan, like Germany before her, has to make a choice between unrestrained civilian genocide at American and now Soviet hands, or unconditional surrender and occupation. Japan surrenders on August 15, '45. (Victory in Japan Day) It should be noted that General Macarthur felt that the atomic bombing was unnecessary, Macarthur later states, "My staff was unanimous in believing that Japan was on the point of collapse and surrender." (27)

For the Globalists, the atomic bombings will later serve a strategic purpose. The threat of "nuclear war" will, in the coming years, do much to frighten, and then consolidate, the nations of the world into political, economic, and military alliances. The Global fear of "the Bomb" will be very useful for The New World Order.

"All the News That's Fit to Print"

The New York Times.

LATE CITY EDITION

VOL. XCIV...No. 31,986. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1945. THREE CENTS

JAPAN SURRENDERS, END OF WAR! EMPEROR ACCEPTS ALLIED RULE; M'ARTHUR SUPREME COMMANDER; OUR MANPOWER CURBS VOIDED

HIRING MADE LOCAL Communities, Labor and Management Will Unite Efforts

5,000,000 AFFECTED

Draft Quotas Cut, Services to Drop 5,500,000 in 18 Months

Third Fleet Fells 5 Planes Since End

ALL CITY 'LETS GO'

Hundreds of Thousands Roar Joy After Victory Flash Is Received

TIMES SQ. IS JAMMED

Police Estimate Crowd in Area at 2,000,000—Din Overwhelming

PRESIDENT ANNOUNCING SURRENDER OF JAPAN

YIELDING UNQUALIFIED, TRUMAN SAYS

Japan Is Told to Order End of Hostilities, Notify Allied Supreme Commander and Send Emissaries to Him

MACARTHUR TO RECEIVE SURRENDER

Formal Proclamation of V-J Day Awaits Signing of Those Articles—Cease-Fire Order Given to the Allied Forces

More fools celebrating! The iconic V-J Day kiss in Times Square

AUGUST, 1945
'IKE' PARTIES IN MOSCOW WITH 'UNCLE JOE' WHILE MILLIONS ARE BEING RAPED AND MURDERED BY THE SOVIETS

"The striking aspect of the visit was the lavish reception the Russians gave the commander of a foreign nation's army*. Georgi Zhukov, General Eisenhower's Soviet counterpart in Berlin, met us at Tempelhof Airport for the flight to Moscow in Ike's C-54 four-engine aircraft. Zhukov, as the official host, was the soul of hospitality and congeniality. By this time the two commanders...had become friends, as close of friends as public life permits.*

In Moscow the party first attended a parade. Significantly, my father was invited to undergo a four-hour ordeal atop Vladimir Lenin's tomb with Zhukov and Stalin. He was, I later learned, the first foreigner ever accorded that honor. One evening, the entire party was entertained at dinner, with Stalin himself officiating." (28)

- John S. D. Eisenhower (son and aide of Ike)

1 & 2 - As German women are being raped on Stalin's orders, a smiling Eisenhower parties with 'Uncle Joe' - atop Lenin's tomb!

3- Stalin's favorite US General receives a medal and a warm smile from Red Army Chief Zhukov

FINAL DEATH COUNT OF WORLD WAR II AND AFTERMATH

TOTAL KILLED: 40,000,000 +

AMERICANS KILLED: 420,000 +

BRITISH KILLED: 400,000 +

GERMANS KILLED: 12 - 15,000,000 +

ITALIAN KILLED: 450,000 +

FRENCH KILLED: 500,000 +

JAPANESE KILLED: 3,000,000 +

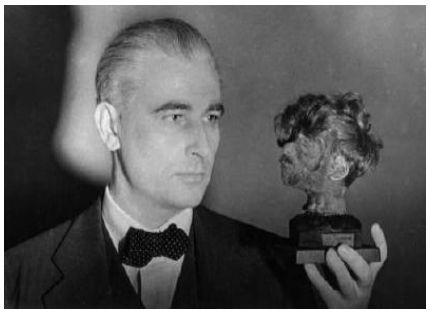
RUSSIANS KILLED: 5,000,000 + during war; 7,000,000 + disappeared or killed afterwards (The official Soviet figure of 20,000,000 total dead cannot be substantiated and does not differentiate between war dead and Stalin's victims)

U.S. POW's kidnapped by Stalin*:* *25,000 / 100's executed (29)

Liberated from German POW camps in the east, shipped to Siberian slave labor camps (Gulags), and then abandoned by US Government.*

1- The 'Fighting Sullivans" - 5 Brothers of Iowa - all dead for NOTHING when the USS Juneau was sunk in 1942. Survivors were eaten by sharks.

2 – As much as 20% of the German population was wiped out.



1945 - 1960

AUGUST, 1945
EISENHOWER AND HOLLYWOOD PRODUCERS ISSUE A FAKE HOLOCAUST ATROCITY FILM

American audiences are horrified by newsreel footage of the 'Nazi' concentration camps. One full-length film, authorized by General Eisenhower, shows the homicidal "gas chambers" of Dachau, shrunken heads of inmates, and lamp shades that were made from human flesh at the request of a camp commander's wife. German civilians were rounded up and forced to view these fake props. To add further credibility to such claims, the film includes images of the sworn affidavits of U.S. military officials.

As it turns out, and as even Jewish "scholars" of the "Holocaust" now openly admit, the shrunken heads were fakes, the lamp shades were made of goat leather, and there were never any homicidal "gassings" at the Dachau camp. (1) But by the time these were admitted as hoaxes (40 years later) the damage to the German reputation had already been done.

1 & 2- The cruel Eisenhower rounded up German villagers and forced them to "see what they had done".

3- The shrunken heads hoax was the creation of Albert G. Rosenberg, a Jewish officer serving in Eisenhower's Psychological Warfare Unit.

4- Ilse Koch was sentenced to life in prison, mainly for owning "human lamp shades" that were actually made of goat leather! She committed suicide in 1967, just before a scheduled visit from her son.

1945 – 1950
EUROPE BECOMES A 'SAVAGE CONTINENT'

World War II in Europe may have officially ended in 1945, but the period of anarchy and civil war that follows will last for 5 more years. Across Europe, landscapes are ravaged, entire cities ruined, and millions of people are homeless. Institutions such as the police, the media, transport, local and national government are either gone or badly weakened. Crime rates soar; economies collapse; and hungry women and girls turn to prostitution as the European population hovers on the brink of starvation.

Communists, liberals and Jews impose a cruel vengeance upon their helpless prey. German civilians and their anti-Communist allies everywhere are rounded up, raped, sodomized, drowned in cesspools, tortured, genitally mutilated, burned alive, and executed.

Internment camps are reopened and filled with anti-Communists and Germans. After being starved to death, photos of the prisoners are then passed off as victims of Hitler's "Holocaust". Massacres and civil wars follow in Greece, Yugoslavia, Poland, and parts of Italy and France. In the greatest acts of ethnic cleansing the world has ever seen, tens of millions are expelled from their ancestral homelands as Allied occupiers look the other way.

The 2012 book 'Savage Continent' describes the horror of the post-war months and years in gruesome detail.

1944 – 1946
RED ARMY RAPES 2 MILLION GERMAN WOMEN!

As the Red Army rolls into Germany, Stalin's Jewish chief propagandist, Ilya Ehrenberg, encourages the soldiers to rape and kill German women. Ehrenberg's leaflets declare:

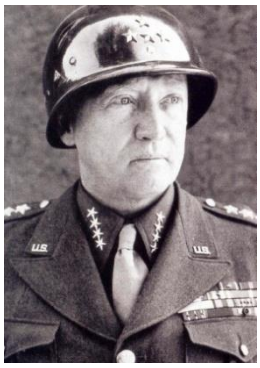
"Kill! Kill! In the German race there is evil; not one among the living, not one among the unborn is but evil! Follow the precepts of Stalin. Stamp out the fascist beast once and for all in its lair! Use force and break the racial pride of the German women. Take them as your lawful booty. Kill! As you storm onward, kill, you gallant soldiers of the Red Army." (2)

The orgy of violence and rape is one of the ghastliest episodes in human history. Two million German females ranging in age from 8-80 will be gang-raped, sodomized and beaten badly, often in view of their children or family members. (3) Some are penetrated with broken bottles and bayonets in wild orgies of drunken violence.

Even the terrified women who flee to churches and hospitals are hunted down and gang raped. Nuns, little girls, and elderly women are infected with venereal diseases. There are cases of breasts being cut off and victims set on fire after being raped. The most notable offenders are the mainly Jewish NKVD rear guard troops and the Mongoloid troops from the Asian Republics of the far eastern reaches of the USSR. Rather than submit to the horror, thousands of German women commit suicide.

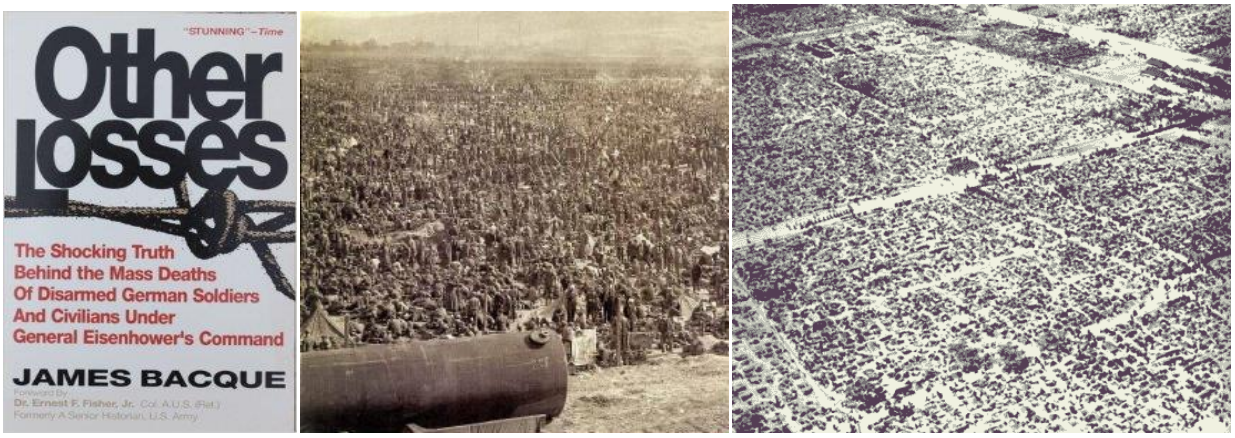
Eisenhower, Truman, and the Zionist Press are fully aware of the monstrous horror that the man they all refer to as 'Uncle Joe' is inflicting upon these poor women.

UNCLE JOE's HANDIWORK
Ignored by the sanctimonious hypocrites of 'the world community"



German women were snatched from the streets and gang raped.

Many of these once happy and secure girls chose suicide instead.



"Berlin gave me the blues. We have destroyed what could have been a good race, and we are about to replace them with Mongolian savages. It's said that for the first week after they took Berlin, all women who ran were shot and those who did not were raped. I could have taken it (instead of the Soviets) had I been allowed." (4)

- General George Patton

1945 – 46
'IKE' MURDERS 1.5 MILLION GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR!

More than one year after the German surrender, General Eisenhower still holds millions of German Prisoners-of-War. The men are inhumanely crowded into camps without latrines, exposed to the elements and underfed. Germans dig holes for shelter and even take to eating grass!

American guards who attempt to help the prisoners face disciplinary action. German civilians try to bring food and blankets to the men but are shot at by guards. Unlike Germany's wartime internment camps which were open to international inspection, Eisenhower issues an order stating that Red Cross officials are not to be given access to the camps. (5) As disease, exposure, and hunger take their toll, the German losses mount daily. By the end of their cruel incarceration, as many as 1.5 million German prisoners will have died a slow and torturous death. (6)

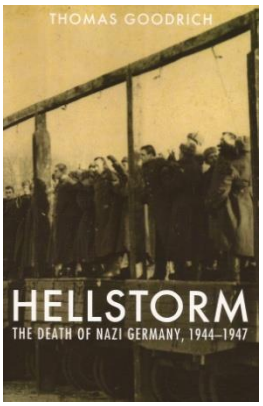
'Other Losses' by James Bacque is very well-researched and supported by shocking photos. Millions of exposed Germans were packed tightly in Ike's POST-WAR death camps. Disease, exposure and hunger killed them slowly.

1945 – 50
STALIN MURDERS AS MANY AS 1 MILLION GERMAN PRISONERS OF WAR!

Not to be outdone by Eisenhower, Stalin's mistreatment of German POW's (as well as his own) is heartbreaking. Germans were often summarily executed, paraded like animals and, up until the 1950's and perhaps beyond, worked to death in Siberia.

German POWS's were be taken to the Soviet Union and paraded through the streets. Afterwards they were marched eastward toward the infamous Gulag camps. Many died on the long march; many died in the slave camps; and a minority returned to Germany years later. Estimates of POW's killed or worked to death in captivity range from 400,000 to 1,000,000. (7)

1945 – 1949
10 MILLION GERMANS EXPELLED FROM HOMES / 2 MILLION DIE / MASSIVE BRAINWASH CAMPAIGN ENSUES



After the war, the area of Germany historically known as Prussia ceases to exist. It is mostly transferred to Soviet occupied Poland and to the Soviet Union itself. Seven million Germans are expelled from their homes and forced to migrate west. Still more German territory is given to Soviet occupied Czechoslovakia, with 3 million more Germans expelled.

The refugees are often attacked and raped by the Red Army as well as Jewish and Communist gangs. Two million will die during the forced migrations, and about 500,000 more are interned in Soviet labor camps. Displaced Jews are given preference in seizing and occupying the stolen homes of German refugees.

As part of a psychological re-programming effort known as "De-Nazification", the German people are deliberately subjected to hunger, mental trauma, and homelessness. Starving German women sell their bodies to American soldiers in exchange for a few cans of food.

To add final insult to injury, the old debt payments originating from the post World War I Treaty of Versailles will be reinstituted in 1948, and not paid off until 2010!

1- Ten million Germans were expelled from their homes. Many died on the long march westward. 'Hellstorm' by Thomas Goodrich tells the story of what was done to "Nazi" Germans from 1944-1947. Warning*: It is very hard to stomach!*

Expelled from Prussia (7 million) / Expelled from Sudetenland (3 million)

DECEMBER 21, 1945
ANTI-RED, ANTI-ZIONIST GENERAL GEORGE PATTON IS ASSASSINATED ('Auto Accident')

General Eisenhower needed General Patton in order to win the war. But the outspoken Patton often bucked Ike, complaining openly about his halt orders (which stopped Patton from liberating Eastern Europe before the Soviets could get there) and ignoring Ike's orders to continue holding German prisoners after the war.

Patton urges his superiors to allow his army to evict the weakened Soviets from Europe. In letters to his wife, he expresses his disgust over the cruel extermination of the German people, the Red Army rapes, and what he describes as Jewish Communist efforts to advance Soviet influence. (8) Patton's "insubordination" causes Ike to remove him from command. In one of those letters, Patton reveals that upon leaving the Army and resettling in America, he will openly fight against the treason.

He never gets the chance. Patton is hospitalized following a strange, low impact auto accident near Mannheim, Germany. The American icon dies in the hospital two weeks later, apparently the victim of an assassination order, issued by Ike or higher.

1 & 2 - Larger than Life" Patton received a hero's welcome in Los Angeles parade. His persona posed a threat to the NWO.

3- Death by fender-bender

1945-1947
'OPERATION KEELHAUL' / IKE DELIVERS 5 MILLION RUSSIAN POW's, SS MEN & REFUGEES INTO STALIN'S ARMS

Stalin brands Russian POW's captured by Germany, and Russian refugees who fled west with the retreating Germans, as traitors. At Yalta, FDR and Churchill had agreed that Russian "traitors" and SS men should be sent to Stalin in exchange for American & British POW's "liberated" by the Soviets. General Eisenhower eagerly carries out this atrocity; which was mockingly code named: "Operation Keelhaul" (after an old naval punishment that involved tying a rope around a sailor and then dragging him under the hull of a ship)!

Up to 3 million terrified Russian POWs are forced at gunpoint onto trains and trucks that bring them to their Soviet executioners. (9) Many commit suicide. U.S. troops, upon returning from the drop-off points, later report seeing rows of bodies already hanging from the trees.

In separate operations, anti-Communist refugee families, who actually followed their German protectors as they retreated from Russia, are also shipped back to "Uncle Joe", and subjected to special tortures, including rape of the women. As a final insult from our “ally”, Stalin holds on to 25,000 American POW’s and 30,000 British, sending them to his Siberian Gulags, and even summarily executing some. (10) Ike, Churchill, and Truman are aware of the missing POW’s but say nothing!

1- Red Army Chief Zhukov to Ike: "Good job Comrade”. For delivering the nations of Eastern Europe, and millions of terrified Russian refugees to their death, Ike earned a Soviet Medal.

2- ‘The Betrayal of the Cossacks’

Operation Keelhaul by Julius Epstein is one of the most heart-breaking accounts that you'll ever read. Terrified Russian POWs (declared to be traitors) and Waffen SS men from many countries were shipped to the USSR to be murdered. Many commit suicide, as had Stalin’s own POW son, Yakov, in 1943.

MARCH 5, 1946
CHURCHILL DECLARES THAT AN 'IRON CURTAIN' HAS FALLEN OVER EUROPE

By 1946, it is clear that Stalin has no intention of allowing the occupied nations of Eastern Europe to join the "European Family". Nor is he interested in annexing the USSR to a western-controlled New World Order. The Globalist love affair with the Soviet Union ends in disillusion. Thus was born "The Cold War".

The now ex-Prime Minister of Great Britain, Winston Churchill, who helped engineer this disaster, delivers his famous "Iron Curtain" speech in Fulton, Missouri:

"an iron curtain has descended across the Continent. Behind that line lie all the capitals of the ancient states of Central and Eastern Europe. Warsaw, Berlin, Prague, Vienna, Budapest, Belgrade, Bucharest and Sofia; all these famous cities and the populations around them lie in what I must call the Soviet sphere." (11)

Over the coming months and years, these nations, which had been given to Stalin at Yalta, will fall, one-by-one, to Soviet backed Communist Parties in each nation. The usual Red terror soon follows in each. General Patton had been right after all!

The drunken fool's "Iron Curtain" speech marks the start of the "Cold War" with the USSR and the division of eastern and western Europe.

OCTOBER, 1946
NUREMBERG MILITARY TRIBUNALS SENTENCE GERMAN LEADERS TO DEATH

During the 1943 Tehran Conference, Joe Stalin had proposed executing 50,000 German staff officers after the war. FDR joked that 49,000 would do! The murderous Allies were all in agreement that "trials" of Germany's top leaders would take place after the war.

When the show trials begin in 1945, an 8-panel tribunal (The Nuremberg Trials) is seated (2 judges each from the US, UK, USSR, & France). The primary American judge is Francis Biddle, of the Biddle Family that spawned the 19th century American Central Bank Chairman, Nicholas Biddle.

Honorable German leaders are condemned as "war criminals" by governments that carried out the Hamburg, Dresden and Tokyo fire-bombings, the sinkings of the Wilhelm Gustloff & the Goya, the forced return of Russian refugees & POWs, the starvation murders of 1.5 million German POWs, the murders at Katyn Forest, the mass raping of German women, and the dropping of atom bombs! Several hundred prominent American and European political figures, writers, artists and military men, including a young John F. Kennedy, condemn the trials. (12)

Of the accused, 11 will hang, and 7 (including the peacemaking parachutist Rudolf Hess) will receive long, or life prison terms. Herman Goering, Head of the Luftwaffe (German Air Force) cheats his executioners by taking poison in his jail cell. It is likely that a sympathetic American guard helped Goering by smuggling the poison into his cell.

But simple murder wasn't enough. The Allied executioners used a "short drop" instead of a neck-breaking "long drop". The victims thus died a longer death due to strangulation. Additionally, the trapdoor was too small, such that several of the men suffered bleeding head injuries when they hit the sides of the trapdoor while falling. (13) Adding final insult to injury, the bodies were cremated and scattered over a river, denying the families the right of burial.

1- Goering, Hess, and Ribbentrop: German political and military leaders were subjected to a ridiculous show trial.

2 & 3- Foreign Minister Ribbentrop is hanged

1946-1948
ZIONIST TERROR SPREADS IN PALESTINE AS THE NEW 'STATE OF ISRAEL' COMES INTO BEING

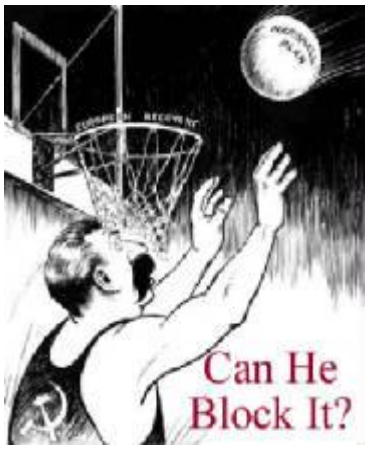
With Britain tired, weakened and in debt from the war, the opportunistic Zionists escalate their attacks against the British protectors of Palestine. It was the Brits who had stolen Palestine for the Zionists' sake after World War I, but now Britain is to be betrayed and chased out of Palestine. The deadly bombing of the King David Hotel (1946) in Jerusalem targets the offices of the British Military, killing 91 people.

In 1948, after the three Allied powers of the War have recognized the new State of Israel, the massacre at Deir Yassin targets innocent Palestinian villagers, scaring them to flee from their villages. The Irgun terror gang, headed by future Israeli Prime Minister & Nobel Peace Prize winner Menachem Begin, is responsible for both.

Due to sympathy gained from the fictitious "6 million" dead of World War II, Israel's brutal dispossession and displacement of the Palestinians is tolerated.

1- King David Bombing: Irgun terrorized the British protectors of Palestine as well as the local Arabs.

2- Massacre at Deir Yassin, carried out by Jewish partisans newly arrived from Europe.



JUNE, 1947
GLOBALIST 'MARSHALL PLAN' IS PROPOSED

The Marshall Plan is a massive US Foreign Aid scheme for post-war Western Europe. The Globalists use every propaganda trick in the book to cleverly sell the expensive scheme to the anti-Communist US Senate, and to a gullible American public.

The Marshall Scam is hard-sold as an "economic recovery program" needed to prevent nations from "falling to Communism". The scheme is named after, and announced by, recently named Secretary of State, General George Marshall - the "war hero."

The "poison pill" of the Marshall Scam is the sub-group that it creates in order to administer the aid package: The Organization for European Economic Co-operation.

The OEEC consists of 18 nations. It is the "embryo" of the coming European Common Market as well as today's socialist, single currency European Union.

1- The only way to sell the Globalist Marshall Scam was to use reverse psychology and present it as an "anti-Communist" plan that Stalin opposed.

2- Many years before the EU was finalized, Marshall Plan propaganda posters were already selling the idea of a United Europe. That's what World War II was really all about!

1945 - PRESENT
THE 70 YEAR OCCUPATION & BRAINWASHING OF GERMANY

From the days of the post war "de-Nazification" of Germany, throughout the 45 year Communist rule over East Germany, as well as the 70-year U.S. domination of a united Germany that continues to this day, perhaps the greatest crime of all is the psychological rape of three subsequent generations of Germans.

From an early age, German school children are taught to hate the great accomplishments of previous generations and wallow in self-loathing. Most pathetic, Germans today fervently believe all the lies told about "Nazi" Germany as they continue to hunt down and imprison "holocaust deniers" and innocent 90-year old SS men for "war crimes".

Those Germans who are not full of self-loathing are too afraid to speak up, lest the occupation governments of Germany or Austria throw them in jail. Many Germans today actually enjoy self-flagellation! It's like a woman who has been raped and battered to near death, blaming herself and apologetically groveling before the perpetrator.

PATHETIC! 1: German Chancellor Angela Merkel grovels before Israeli Minister Shimon Peres.

2: German National soccer team is forced to visit the Soviet-built fantasy land at Auschwitz and pay respects to victims of the fictitious "gas chambers". But they can't commemorate their own dead, mutilated, displaced, and raped of Germany!

. In the inscription of this emotionally powerful memorial to the 40,000 victims of the Hamburg firebombing, brainwashed Germans actually blame themselves! Inscription reads: "On the night of the 29th of July 1943, 370 persons perished in the air-raid shelter in a bombing raid. Remember these dead. Never again fascism*. Never again war".*

WHY HAVE COUNTRIES BANNED "HOLOCAUST DENIAL"?

Truth is its own defense. It does not require laws to protect it. Only lies do. The fact that so many countries now ban the practice of "Holocaust Denial", is alone evidence that something isn't right about the "official story".

LEARNED SCHOLARS NAMED AS THOUGHT CRIMINALS
1- Professor Robert Faurisson (France): Beaten by terrorists and arrested
2- Author David Irving (UK): Arrested in Austria
3-Author Ernst Zundel (Canada): Deported to Germany and arrested

Innocent SS men in their 90's are still being hunted, arrested and deported to Germany or Israel to face trial over imaginary crimes. Above: John Demjanjuk and Johann Breyer, both deported from America and died in captivity!

"After 1945 Hitler was accused of every cruelty, but it was not in his nature to be cruel. He loved children. It was an entirely natural thing for him to stop his car and share his food with young cyclists along the road. Once he gave his raincoat to a derelict plodding in the rain. At midnight he would interrupt his work and prepare the food for his dog Blondi.

He could not bear to eat meat, because it meant the death of a living creature. He refused to have so much as a rabbit or a trout sacrificed to provide his food. He would allow only eggs on his table, because egg-laying meant that the hen had been spared rather than killed." (14)

Waffen SS General Leon Degrelle (Belgium)

SEPTEMBER, 1947
THE C.I.A. IS FOUNDED TO SERVE GLOBALIST OBJECTIVES

The National Security Act of 1947 creates the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA). The CIA replaces the OSS spy agency formed during WWII. It will engage in covert activities at the request of the U.S. President. Among the CIA's agents are many fine patriots, but the CIA's Directors have always been Globalist front men.

CIA grows in power and eventually engages in assassinations, election rigging, planting disinformation through its many paid media contacts, overthrowing of disobedient foreign leaders by "spontaneous" peaceful revolutions or violent coups, and the staging of "false flag" terror events to frame enemies. The CIA often cooperates with the Britain's M16 and Israel's Mossad.

Upon Globalist orders, the super-secret CIA assassinates political leaders, stages 'false flag' terror attacks, manipulates the news and destabilizes foreign governments. CIA is also active on U.S. soil.

1947
THE ROCKEFELLERS BEGIN TO FUND 'MODERN ART' / CORRUPT TRUE ART WITH SENSELESS FILTH

Abby Aldrich Rockefeller (wife of John D. Jr. and daughter of Senator Aldrich) developed the idea of establishing a Museum of Modern Art in New York City. The museum opened to the public on November 7, 1929. From the very beginning, this cesspool of "modern art" is a Rockefeller directed organization.

Abby's son Nelson becomes the museum's President in 1939. In 1947, The Rockefeller Brothers Trust Fund begins pouring cash into the promotion of their House of Horrors. Upon becoming Governor of New York, Nelson's younger brother David takes over in 1958. David and Sharon Percy Rockefeller (wife of Senator Jay Rockefeller) sit on the Board today.

The Globalists and the Communists use "modern art" to corrupt the beautiful western culture that they seek to destroy. If "intellectuals" can be persuaded that junk is "art", they can then be persuaded of any other false realty presented to them. Not wanting to appear "un-intellectual", countless numbers of simple minded fools marvel at the junk on display in New York and other major cities.

The incomprehensible and ugly works of the Communist artist Pablo Picasso have been heavily promoted by Rockefeller and his New York Globalist ilk. The media-hyped Picasso was an admitted admirer of Joe Stalin, and a recipient of the Soviet "Peace Prize".

1- Communist junk artist Picasso admires a photo of Stalin.

2- Fools who marvel at the drippings of Jackson Pollack can be made to believe anything.

Left: Globalist "Art" Painting by Communist Pablo Picasso

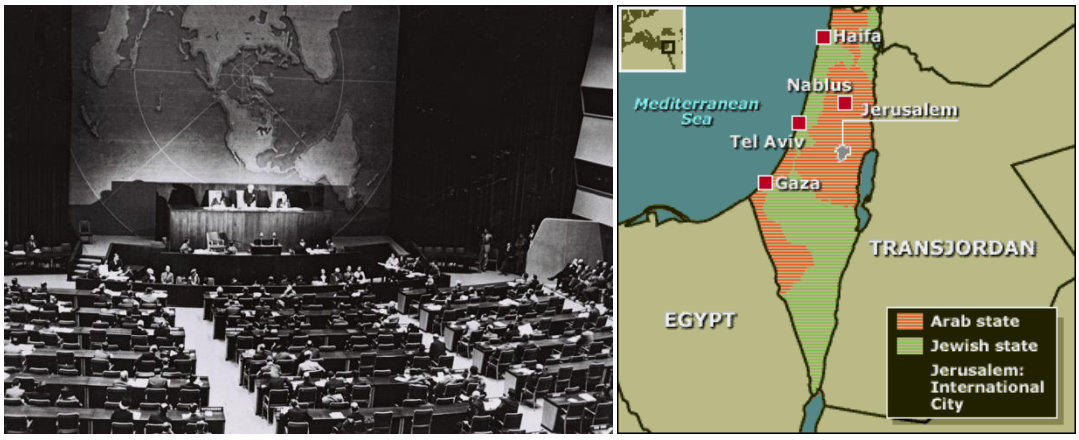
Right: Real Art
Painting by American Norman Rockwell

NOVEMBER, 1947
COMMUNIST 'HOLLYWOOD 10' CITED FOR CONTEMPT OF CONGRESS

The first Hollywood "blacklist" is instituted by the major studios the day after 10 Red writers & Directors are cited for Contempt of Congress for refusing to give testimony to the House Committee on Un-American Activities. They have since been portrayed as victims of "anti-Semitism" and "anti-Red hysteria". (9 of the 10 are Jewish)

In reality, these writers and directors are indeed Communist Party subversives, loyal to Stalin & Kaganovich, and willing to use their trade to plant Marxist propaganda in films and corrupt the common morality. Zionist/Marxist dominated Hollywood remains to this day a pornographic, sex-obsessed polluter of public decency and purveyor of anti-White, anti-Christian, and anti-Muslim, propaganda.



The dramatic Hollywood 10 Stalinists portrayed themselves as victims of "anti-Communist hysteria". Communist flash-mobs defended the Reds.

NOVEMBER, 1947
THE U.N. PARTITIONS PALESTINE INTO ARAB & JEWISH REGIONS

The British Mandate of 1922 ends as a UN resolution establishes the basis of the modern state of Israel. Without the consent of the native Arabs, the resolution recommends the termination of the British Mandate for Palestine and the Partition of Palestine into two states, one Jewish and one Arab, with the Jerusalem-Bethlehem area being under international protection, administered by the UN.

The resolution also contains plans for an economic union between the proposed states, and for the protection of religious and minority rights. Zionists have no more intention of respecting Arab rights than they did in 1922.

The Partition scheme robs the Palestinians of their homes.

1947 - 1952
ZIONISTS STAGE 'ANTI-SEMITIC TERROR' IN ORDER TO FRIGHTEN JEWS IN ARAB STATES INTO MOVING TO ISRAEL

"I write this book to tell the American people, and especially the American Jews, that Jews from Islamic lands did not emigrate willingly to Israel; that, to force them to leave, Jews killed Jews; and that, to buy time to confiscate ever more Arab lands, Jews on numerous occasions rejected genuine peace initiatives from their Arab neighbors.

I write about what the first prime minister of Israel called 'cruel Zionism.' I write about it because I was a part of it. "Alex de Tocqueville once observed that it was easier for the world to accept a simple lie than a complex truth. Certainly it has been easier for the world to accept the Zionist lie that Jews were evicted from Muslim lands because of anti-Semitism, and that Israelis, never the Arabs, were the pursuers of peace. The truth is far more discerning; bigger players in the world stage were pulling the strings.

*"These players, I believe, should be held accountable for their crimes, particularly when they willfully terrorized, dispossessed and killed innocent people on the altar of some ideological imperatives."We Jews did not leave our ancestral homes because of any natural enmity between Jews and Muslims.

"And finally, as a U.S. citizen....we Americans need to stop supporting racial discrimination in Israel and the cruel expropriation of lands in the West Bank, Gaza, South Lebanon and the Golan Heights." - Naeim Giladi (15)

Ben-Gurion's Scandals: Jewish author Naeim Giladi's expose of Israeli false-flag terror against fellow Jews is shocking.

APRIL, 1948
ISRAELI TERRORISTS MURDER 100 + DEFENSELESS ARAB CIVILIANS AT DEIR YASSIN

Jewish terrorists (Jewish Partisans from WW II) will carry out many mass murders in the months leading up to the formal establishment of Israel. The Deir Yassin Massacre is most notable for its brutality. Fighters from the Irgun and Stern Gang paramilitary groups attack Deir Yassin near Jerusalem, a village of roughly 600 people. More than 100 helpless victims, including women and children, are murdered. (16)

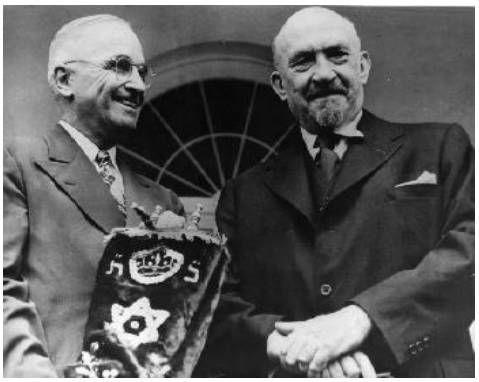
Some are shot; some have their throats slit open, while others die as hand grenades are thrown into their homes. Several villagers are taken prisoner and killed after being paraded through the streets of West Jerusalem.

The strategic aim of the massacres is to terrorize the Palestinians into fleeing from their villages, which the European Jews with adopted Hebrew names will then takeover.

Massacres such as Deir Yassin frightened the Palestinians into fleeing from their villages.



MAY, 1948
ISRAEL DECLARES NATIONHOOD / TRUMAN & SOVIET UNION GRANT IMMEDIATE RECOGNITION

Herzl's 1897 plot comes into full fruition when Israel is formally established. Harry Truman's quick recognition of Israel pleases his Zionist donors, whose influence will help him to narrowly win the upcoming November 1948 election. Ironically, a 2003 review of his diaries reveals Truman's dislike for the Jews who were often pressuring him. (17)

Just 3 days after Truman's recognition, Uncle Joe's USSR also recognizes "the State of Israel". Several Arab nations come to the defense of their Palestinian brothers. The Deir Yassin attack of the prior month, along with murderous attacks on Tiberias, Haifa, and Jaffa, put pressure on Arab governments to save Palestine. News of the killings arouses such public anger in the Arab world that the governments cannot ignore it.

The Arabs are unsuccessful in their brief war, and in future attempts to liberate Palestine. The Zionist military and its free arsenal of American weapons will soon make Israel the dominant power of the region.

Israel's ultimate goal is to expand from Egypt to Iraq, to include all of the territory between "the river of Egypt (Nile) and the River Euphrates (Iraq). This is what the two blue lines on Israel's flag represent!

1- Israel's 1st President, Chaim Weizman, awards Truman a Star of David.

2- The Election of 1948 was so close that newspapers had originally reported that John Dewy had defeated Truman. It was Jewish support and money that narrowly pulled him through in 1948.

JUNE, 1948
STALIN ATTEMPTS TO STARVE BERLIN / TRUMAN ORDERS 'BERLIN AIRLIFT'

Although the city of Berlin is located entirely within the eastern, Soviet half of post-war Germany, the city itself is divided into a Soviet zone, and a Western zone. The Four-Power Provisional Government governs Berlin. But by 1948, Stalin wants all of Berlin. Land access to Berlin is cut off by the Soviets. Berliners are stranded and face starvation unless the US and UK agree to get out.

Not wanting the Soviets to get too out-of-control, the Globalists take a stand against their Soviet partners. The U.S. &Britain fly food and other supplies into Berlin, landing on international airstrips. The Soviets blink, and do not stop the cargo planes. After 1 year of the "Berlin Airlift", Stalin calls off the hunger blockade. But Berlin will still remain a divided city until 1989.

Hungry Berliners cheer the same American Air Force that terror-bombed them just 3 years earlier. Note the 3-year old ruins in the background.

AUGUST, 1948
ALGER HISS EXPOSED AS SOVIET SPY

Whittaker Chambers, a former Communist Party member who became anti-Communist, denounces government official Alger Hiss as a Soviet spy before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Hiss had been a high level State Department official under FDR.

An ardent New Dealer, Hiss took part in the 1945 Yalta Conference where Eastern Europe was betrayed to Stalin. In '46, he is named President of the Marxist Carnegie Endowment for World Peace.

In 1950, a grand jury charges Hiss with perjury (the statute of limitations for espionage had run out). Truman and his advisors defend their boy Hiss and condemn the trial. FDR's widow, Red lesbian Eleanor Roosevelt, also defends the traitor Hiss. (18)

In spite of his important friends, Hiss's guilt is clear and he will serve 44 months in jail. The declassification of the VENONA intercepts in 1995 will confirm the high-level treason of Hiss (and many others!)

Hiss was sacrificed, but many other Communists remain undiscovered.

APRIL 4, 1949
NATO – A GLOBALIST MILITARY ALLIANCE IS FOUNDED

The military consolidation of the New World Order begins with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), a military alliance headquartered in Belgium. Members, led by the US, UK, & France, agree to mutual defense in response to an attack by the Soviets. An attack against one nation in Europe or North America is an attack against all.

NATO is an NWO consolidation trap and the Globalist-created "Soviet threat" is skillfully used to build this trap. Churchill's advisor and NATO Secretary General, Lord Ismay, states that NATO's goal is "to keep the Russians out, the Americans in, and the Germans down." (19)

After the planned takedown of Communism in the '90's, NATO expands into the former Soviet satellites of Eastern Europe. Post-Soviet Russia is not a member.

NATO is the NWO's war making organization.

MAY, 1949
ANTI-RED, ANTI-ZIONIST DEFENSE SECRETARY JAMES FORRESTAL IS 'SUICIDED'

Defense Secretary James Forrestal "falls" to his death from the 16th floor of Bethesda Naval Hospital. He was being treated for "depression". His body is found with a bathrobe cord tied tightly around his neck. Before an investigation is even launched, newspapers state that Forrestal committed suicide. During his hospitalization, access to him was very restricted.

The media vilified Forrestal for opposing the creation of Israel and Harry Truman's pro-Red foreign policy. His diaries are removed from his office. Forrestal was a wealthy man who intended to buy a newspaper and, like Patton, work to expose the treason that brought the US into World War II and the policies that helped the Soviets.

The hatred toward Forrestal continues to this day in Zionist and Red circles, which characterize the dedicated public servant as an "anti-Semite" and a 'kook".

Anti-Communist and Anti-Zionist Forrestal turned against the policies of his boss, Harry Truman. The NWO silenced him.

AUGUST, 1949
THE USSR SHOCKS THE WORLD BY DETONATING ITS 1st ATOMIC BOMB

The world is stunned when the Soviets explode their first Atomic Bomb. The physicists who directed the Soviet Project, benefited greatly from espionage efforts. Through sources in Robert Oppenheimer's Communist-infested Manhattan Project, most notably British-German Communist Klaus Fuchs and American Zionist Communist Theodore Hall, the USSR had obtained vital information on the Atomic bomb project.

Reports are shown to the head of the Soviet atomic project Igor Kurchatov and have a significant impact on his own team's research. In 1945 Soviet intelligence obtained rough "blueprints" of the first US atomic device. The Communists now have "the bomb", years before it was expected. It is no accident.

The New World Order uses the psychological threat of nuclear war to scare the "free world" into closer military, political, and economic integration.

THE DEMOCRAT AND LEADER
Weather
97TH YEAR—No. 298. DAVENPORT, IOWA, FRIDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 23, 1949. 36 PAGES PRICE 5 CENTS.

They SHOULD Be Shot-the DOGS!

RUSSIA HAS ATOMIC BOMB!

U. S. Learns of Recent Explosion, President Discloses

Pentagon Shows Excitement, But Officials Mum

Bargaining In Steel Resumed

Strike Clouds Over Industry Are Lightened.

Russ Possession of Bomb Peace Threat, Congressmen Believe

ALCOA Fights Bettendorf's Adoption Plan

Prepares for Every Legal Step Needed to Prevent Annexation.

U. S. Still Ahead of Russians

No Reason Seen To Believe War May Be Nearer.

JOHNSON QUESTIONED ON ATOM BLAST—

Details on Blast in USSR Not Revealed; Vishinsky Urges Pact

No Change Made in Disposition of American Forces, Johnson Declares; Political Repercussions Expected.

Thinking that they could work with him to build an integrated 'New World Order', the Globalists turned a blind eye to Stalin getting an atomic bomb.

OCTOBER, 1949
BETRAYED BY GEORGE MARSHALL, NATIONALISTS LOSE CHINA TO THE REDS

Due to the inexplicable 1945 Yalta gifting of Manchuria, (and its captured Japanese weapons), to Stalin, the Chinese Nationalists can no longer keep down Mao Tse Tung's Soviet-armed rebel Reds.

As Special Envoy to China, Secretary of State, Marshall had delivered the final blow to free China by slapping an arms embargo on Chiang Kai-Shek. Also critical to the loss of China is the manipulation of US public opinion by the NY Times and Washington Post, which portray Chiang as "corrupt" and "fascist" while Mao is glorified as "an agrarian reformer."

Mao declares The People's Republic of China. Chiang and two million outgunned nationalists escape to the island of Formosa (Taiwan). They set up a free and prosperous state; while George Marshall's buddy Mao turns Red China into a mass murderous tyranny that will soon attack and kill American troops in Korea.

1- Betrayed by Marshall, Chiang flees China and founds the free and prosperous nation of Taiwan.

2- Marshall breaks bread with Mao

FEBRUARY, 1950
SENATOR JOSEPH McCARTHY LAUNCHES HIS FIGHT AGAINST COMMUNISM SUBVERSION

The rise of Senator Joseph McCarthy to national prominence begins with a speech in which he held up a list of Communists working in the State Department.

In just the past few years, Eastern Europe has fallen to the Reds, Mao has captured China, the Soviets have exploded an A-bomb, and spies such as Alger Hiss have been exposed. Americans are justifiably worried. The heroic Senator will declare on the Senate floor*:*

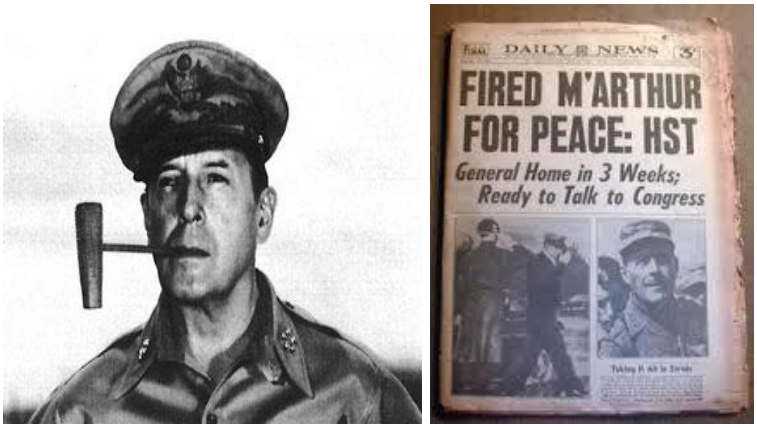
"How can we account for our present situation unless we believe that men high in this Government are concerting to deliver us to disaster? This must be the product of a great conspiracy, a conspiracy on a scale so immense as to dwarf any previous such venture in the history of man - A conspiracy of infamy so black that, when it is finally exposed, its principals shall be forever deserving of the maledictions of all honest men." (20)

McCarthy's explosive and provable accusations made headlines!

JUNE, 1950
KOREAN WAR BEGINS AS THE COMMUNIST NORTH ATTACKS THE U.S. BACKED FREE SOUTH

Five years after the U.S. had gifted North Korea to the Soviets at Yalta; the Communist North invades South Korea in June of 1950. After just three months, the great World War II General and patriot, Douglass MacArthur, stages brilliant offensives and captures the North's capital of Pyonyang.

With minimal American casualties, it appears that the war is over and has been won very quickly. That is until President Truman and the Globalists around him begin to interfere.



Communist North Korea could easily have been toppled by MacArthur.

APRIL, 1951
TRUMAN FIRES GENERAL MACARTHUR / MANY AMERICANS ARE OUTRAGED!

Upon his firing of the heroic General MacArthur for "insubordination" Truman immediately became the most unpopular president in U.S. history. The Globalists claim that it was MacArthur's aggressive actions which brought China into the Korean War. But in reality, it is Truman's treasonous restraining of both MacArthur & Chiang that green-lights Red China. Mao enters the war against the mighty US because he knows that the game is being rigged by the Red agents around Truman.

MacArthur returns to the US to a hero's welcome. With the patriotic and brilliant strategist removed from the field of battle, Communists at home and abroad rejoice. The war ends in stalemate in 1953 (as it was meant to). American dead number about 50,000.

It is now obvious to many Americans that something is very wrong with US foreign policy, something far worse than just "incompetence".

The firing of General Macarthur made Harry Truman very unpopular.

JUNE, 1951
IN HISTORIC SENATE SPEECH, McCARTHY OPENLY ACCUSES GEORGE MARSHALL OF TREASON

The Globalist media is outraged when Senator McCarthy dares to denounce one of their manufactured heroes as a traitor. During a long speech on the Senate floor, McCarthy (an ex-judge) masterfully exposes George Marshall's pattern of "mistakes" surrounding the Pearl Harbor "surprise", the mismanagement of World War II, the loss of Eastern Europe to Stalin, and the loss of China to Mao's Reds.

McCarthy also hints (subtly) that Eisenhower was in league with Marshall. He mocks Marshall's media created hero status:

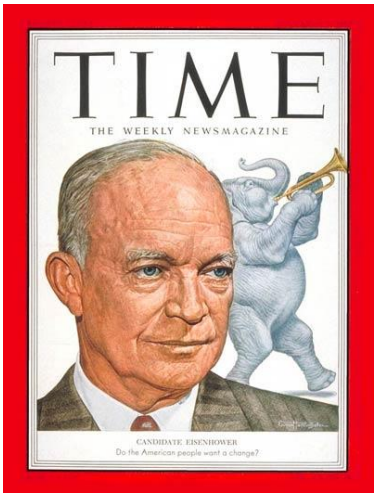
"Marshall, who, by the alchemy of propaganda, became the "greatest living American" and the recently proclaimed "master of global strategy." (21)

McCarthy's lengthy speech will later be published under the title: America's Retreat from Victory; The Story of George Catlett Marshall.

The fearless McCarthy was not at all intimidated by George Marshall's hyped-up status as a "war hero".

ELECTION YEAR, 1952
FORCES BEHIND EISENHOWER CHEAT SENATOR TAFT OUT OF THE REPUBLICAN NOMINATION FOR PRESIDENT

With the country dismayed at the socialist domestic policy and disastrous foreign policy of the Democrats, 1952 is certain to be a big Republican Election year. Democrats are so weak, that the much maligned Harry Truman will not even seek re-election.



The leading candidate for the Republicans is Senator Robert Taft (R-OH). Like his father William H. Taft, the younger Taft is a conservative patriot. And, also like his dad in 1912, he too will be cheated out of an election. At the Republican nominating convention of 1952, the Globalist Wing of the Party uses dirty tricks and smears to derail Taft in favor of the World War II mass murderer and friend of Stalin, Dwight Eisenhower.

Ike, the "war hero", only recently became a “Republican”. He goes on to defeat Adlai Stevenson in the General Election. The Republicans, like the Democrats, are now fully in the grip of the Globalists.

During his presidency, Eisenhower, rumored to be of Swedish-Jewish lineage, (22) will be inducted as an honorary member into Tau Epsilon Phi (TEP), a Jewish fraternity; (23) and also help to set up the first Rockefeller-Rothschild Bilderberg meeting in The Netherlands. (24)

As they did to his father in 1912, the Globalists trotted out a phony 'war hero' to derail Taft’s candidacy. “Ike” was then hyped-up for President.

MARCH, 1953
STALIN IS DEAD / APPARENTLY POISONED BY FEARFUL SUBORDINATES

Stalin's paranoia often led him to "purge" any subordinates who grew too powerful in their own right. This mania ended up being a self-fulfilling prophecy. Fearing for their own lives, the mad dog Secret Police Chief Laventry Beria and others likely poisoned the murderous old bastard.

In 2003, a joint group of Russian and American historians announced their view that Stalin ingested warfarin, (25) a powerful rat poison that inhibits coagulation of the blood, predisposing the victim to stroke (cerebral hemorrhage).

Nikita Khrushchev - a murderous assistant to Lazar Kaganovich during his Ukrainian genocide - will become the new Soviet Premier by year's end. Khrushchev will later condemn Stalin for his brutality towards his fellow Communists.

(THE Morning KANSAS CITY STAR)
The Kansas City Times.
DICTATOR JOSEPH STALIN DIES
Stroke Suffered Last Sunday Is Fatal to the Prime Minister of Soviet Russia—Announcement From the Kremlin Is Delayed Six Hours After His Death.
HEART FALTERS AT END
NO WORD ON NEW LEADERSHIP
A LOFTY TRIBUTE CUE TO RED FEAR VEIL ON FUTURE
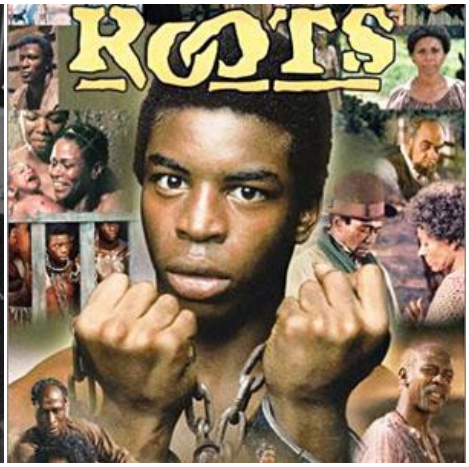
BREAKS JOB LOCK

Stalin in his coffin. His subordinates breathed a sigh of relief while Globalists see an opportunity to bring the Soviet Union back into "the world community".



1953
GLOBO-ZIONIST LEONARD GOLDENSON ESTABLISHES ABC TELEVISION

The American Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) was originally formed in 1943. By 1951, ABC owns and operates numerous TV stations, but is on the brink of bankruptcy. Zionist Globalist Leonard Goldenson steps in with a 25 million dollar cash infusion and becomes Chairman of the new company. The modern ABC dates its origin to this 1953 transaction. Goldenson will oversee all areas of media operations from 1953-1986.

Today, ABC is owned by the Walt Disney Conglomerate (which was taken from the Disney family by corporate takeover). Zionist-Globalist Michael Eisner was Disney's CEO from 1984-2005. Eisner is later succeeded by the current CEO, the Zio-Globalist Robert Iger.

ABC joins CBS, NBC, Reuters, The NY Times, and The Washington Post as media giants under Zionist ownership.

Zionist media mogul Goldenson founded and dominated the ABC Network. ABC. Programs such as the 1970's mini-series 'Roots' incite Blacks and inflict guilt amongst weak-minded Whites.

JUNE, 1953
COMMUNIST ROSENBERGS FRY IN THE ELECTRIC CHAIR

Jewish Communists Julius & Ethel Rosenberg are executed for passing A-bomb secrets to the Soviets. Ethel's brother, David Greenglass, had given the secrets to the Rosenbergs while working on the Manhattan Project. Marxists denounce the execution of the Jewish Rosenbergs as an "anti-Semitic witch hunt" - ignoring the fact that the sentence was imposed by a Jewish judge, Irving Kaufman, who tells the Rosenbergs they are responsible for the Korean War:

"I consider your crime worse than murder. Your conduct in putting into the hands of the Russians the A-Bomb, years before our best scientists predicted Russia would perfect the bomb, has already caused, in my opinion, the Communist aggression in Korea… with the resultant casualties exceeding 50,000… Indeed, by your betrayal you undoubtedly have altered the course of history to the disadvantage of our country." (26)

Though the "small fry" Rosenbergs are sacrificed; the "big fish" Globalist traitors go untouched.

EXTRA

RACE RESULTS Los Angeles Times PICTORIAL

ROSENBERGS DIE

Pair Executed for Atom Spying

Supreme Court and Eisenhower Reject Couple's Last Pleas

WEST BERLIN'S RED OFFICES WRECKED

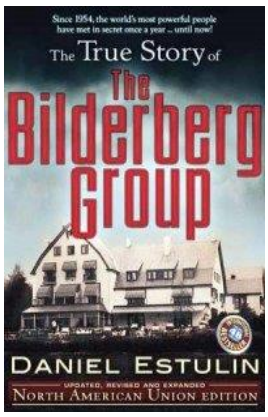
20 Injured as Fireworks Blast Levels Factory

TRUCE DELEGATES FACE CRUCIAL TALK

Clouds Clamp Cool Damper as Summer Nears

The Rosenbergs had to be sacrificed. The higher level Globalists went untouched.

MAY, 1954
SECRETIVE BILDERBERG GROUP HOLDS 1st ANNUAL MEETING



The Bilderberg Group is an annual, unofficial, invitation-only conference of about 150 Globalists from America and Europe. All of the existing guests at the exclusive resorts are required to leave before the 'Bilderbergers' arrive in town.

The Bildebergers are all people of great influence in the fields of politics, banking, intelligence, business, military and media. The secret conferences are held in a different location every year. No press releases are issued.

The Group takes its name from the Bilderberg Hotel in Holland, where the first meeting was held. Members of the Rothschild and Rockefeller families have attended every year since its inception.

The Group has a history of inviting little known politicians, and then catapulting them to fame and office within a short time. For example, Bill Clinton attended a 1991 Bilderberg meeting in Germany while he was a barely known Governor of Arkansas. The following year, he was media-hyped into the White House.

David Rockefeller with his personal bodyguard.

1- Globalist puppet Eisenhower, shown above with Nelson Rockefeller, used his Presidential power to make the very first Bilderberg Conference happen.

2- The Bilderberg Group by Daniel Estulin

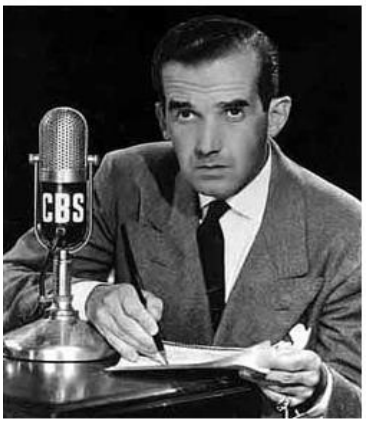
3- Flash-Forward (2005): David Rockefeller with bodyguard at Bilderberg meeting

JULY, 1954
'THE LAVON AFFAIR' /ISRAELIS BOMB AMERICAN PROPERTY IN EGYPT / ARABS FALSELY ACCUSED!

In July of 1954, a series of bombings against US & UK property in Egypt is blamed on a shadowy group called "The Muslim Brotherhood." When the Egyptians find the culprits, it is revealed that they are actually Jewish agents working for Israel.

Israel is then forced to admit to what it claims was "a rogue operation." Defense Minister Pinchas Lavon is designated as the fall guy who takes the blame for this covert operation; code-named "Operation Susannah".

The "Lavon Affair" ultimately creates such a controversy that it brings down the Israeli government and forces new elections. This long since forgotten scandal marks the first known Israeli "false flag" operation aimed at the United States for the purpose of framing Arabs.



Pinhas Lavon took the fall as Jewish agents in Egypt were hanged. In recent years; aging members of the Lavon Conspiracy were honored by the Israeli government.

DECEMBER, 1954
GLOBALIST MEDIA SMEAR CAMPAIGN LEADS TO THE SENATE CENSURE OF JOE McCARTHY

McCarthy's high profile hearings have attracted a huge national following. His supporters include the Kennedy Family. Such popularity poses a threat to the Communists and to their Globalist enablers. When McCarthy begins inching "up the ladder" towards the bigger players; the media big guns are brought out to stop him.

In March of 1954, CBS legend Edward R. Murrow, a personal friend of CBS CEO Bill Paley, dedicates an entire show to attacking McCarthy. The following week, Murrow runs yet another hit piece. The accumulation of TV and newspaper venom aimed at McCarthy takes a toll on his image. Colleagues begin to ignore him as President Eisenhower plots against him.

In December of 1954, the Senate censures McCarthy. This marks the end of his crusade against the Globalist / Communist axis. Following his censure, Eisenhower happily quips, in private, *"McCarthyism is now McCarthy-was-ism."(27)

1- Acting under Bill Paley's orders, the disgusting Murrow dumps his Marxist filth on Senator McCarthy.

2- Behind the scenes, Globalist Eisenhower conspired with Senator Prescott Bush (and others) to betray fellow Republican Joe McCarthy. Bush's son and grandson will later become U.S. Presidents

DECEMBER, 1954
THE 'REECE COMMITTEE' CONCLUDES THAT TAX EXEMPT FOUNDATIONS FINANCE GLOBALISM

The Reece Committee (formerly the Cox Committee) is chaired by Rep. Carroll B. Reece. It produces its final investigative findings regarding the influence of tax-exempt foundations, such as the Rockefeller Foundation, in the field of education. The report finds that "philanthropic" foundations are using their awesome grant giving power to influence college curriculums and finance leftist groups.

The goal is to alter public attitudes and belief systems by injecting Globalist propaganda into the educational system. The Globalist media, and John D Rockefeller III himself, attack the Committee,

"No shred of evidence is presented in the report to show that the Rockefeller Foundation or any of the organizations to which it has made grants has advocated world government.", (28) said Rockefeller.

1- Carroll Reece's Committee exposed the Rockefeller Brothers

2- John D Rockefeller III hands $8.5 million check to UN Chief Trygve Lie

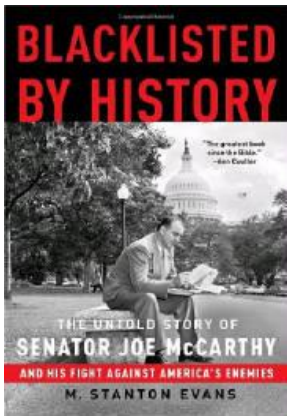
3- David Rockefeller with Eleanor Red Roosevelt and Trygve Lie

MARCH, 1957
THE 'TREATIES OF ROME' ESTABLISH THE 'EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET'

Belgium, Italy, France, West Germany, Luxembourg, and Holland sign the Treaties of Rome. The treaties are sold to the European people as agreements to promote "free trade" and cooperation in a "Common Market." Little did the people know that over the coming decades; these seemingly harmless treaties would, by design, grow into the powerful European Union which today dominates its captive member-nations today.

The Common Market is the first economic structure to be based on supra-nationalism - a major step towards Rothschild's New World Order. The Globalists skillfully utilize the Soviet threat, which they themselves created, (and will one day bring down) as a psychological means to frighten the people of the formerly nationalist Europe into close economic, political, and military consolidation.

1- The Globalists of Europe build the New World Order by using "trade agreements" as their cover.



2- Fifty years later, the EU celebrates the Anniversary of the Rome deal.

MAY 2, 1957
McCARTHY DIES OF SUDDEN ILLNESS AT 48 / APPARENTLY POISONED AT BETHESDA NAVAL HOSPITAL

After his 1954 censure, McCarthy's influence has faded. But the feisty young Senator remains outspoken, and continues to rail against Communism and its high level protectors. He had once described these dark forces as, "a conspiracy so immense". This Conspiracy had killed his investigations. Now, it is time to kill McCarthy himself!

McCarthy had become ill in late April of '57, and was taken to Bethesda Naval Hospital, just like his "suicided" mentor, James Forrestal, had been in 1949. He begins to recover, but strangely falls ill again on the Communist Holy Day of May 1. He dies at the young age of 48, on May 2, - the victim of an apparent poisoning. The official cause of McCarthy's death is listed as "inflammation of the liver".

The great Senator's name continues to be dragged through the mud to this day. The constant use of the term 'McCarthyism" serves as a constant reminder to U.S. politicians of the fate which awaits anyone who challenges the New World Order.

1- "Blacklisted by History" by M. Stanton Evans proves that the 1950's press lied about Joe McCarthy.

2- Fifty years later, Communists and degenerate liberals still trash McCarthy and will even urinate on his grave.

FORBIDDEN HISTORY: QUOTE TO REMEMBER

"The individual is handicapped by coming face-to-face with a conspiracy so monstrous he cannot believe it exists. The American mind simply has not come to a realization of the evil which has been introduced into our midst. It rejects even the assumption that human creatures could espouse a philosophy which must ultimately destroy all that is good and decent." (29)

- J Edgar Hoover, FBI Director 1924-1972

AUTUMN, 1958
EISENHOWER BETRAYS THE ANTI-COMMUNIST FREEDOM FIGHTERS OF HUNGARY

The Hungarian Revolution of 1956 is a revolt against the Communist regime of Hungary. Civilians and patriotic soldiers combine to defeat the Jewish dominated Secret Police and Soviet troops. Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev and his gang are stunned. The Soviets consider withdrawing all troops as the rebels wait anxiously for the "anti-Communist" West to send weapons. Instead, Ike pressures Spain and West Germany into canceling an arms shipment to the Hungarian rebels.

There is to be no weapons, nor even any symbolic words, recognizing the struggle for a free Hungary. All that President Eisenhower can muster is an empty: "Our hearts go out to the people of Hungary." (30)

Upon realizing that Stalin's favorite American General from World War II is green lighting a re-conquest of Hungary, just as he had during World War II, the Soviets re-occupy Hungary with massive force. The leaders of the Hungarian revolt are then executed.

Hungarian freedom-fighters decapitate a statue of Ike's 'Uncle Joe' and take a bloody revenge on their Communist masters.

1958-1961
MAO'S CHINA LAUNCHES 'THE GREAT LEAP FORWARD' / 50-60 MILLION PEOPLE DIE

China's "Great Leap Forward" is Mao's latest scheme to transform China into a modern Communist society. Private farming is banned, and those engaged in it are murdered. The plan fails, resulting in mass starvation. The death toll is between 50 and 60 million.

Historian Frank Dikötter asserts that "coercion, terror, and systematic violence were the very foundation of the Great Leap Forward" and that it "motivated one of the most deadly mass killings of human history."

Peasants are confined to starving villages as the Reds torture and kill those accused of not meeting their grain quota. In addition to the starvation victims, at least 5 million Chinese are beaten or tortured to death and 2-3 million more commit suicide. Mao's Red militias bury many people alive or club them to death.

The blood of 50+ million is on the hands of the '45 Yalta traitors FDR, Hiss & Hopkins, as well as Truman, Marshall, and all the others who engineered the post-war fall of China.

Just like Stalin's "5-year plans", Mao's schemes made big promises, but delivered only death! During "The Great Leap Forward", scores of millions are starved, beaten, or shot to death by Mao Tse Tung, the man that the traitors of the Yalta Conference, General George Marshall and the Globalist Media once idealized as "an agrarian reformer."

THE 'HAPPY DAYS OF THE 1950's

The 1950's are a happy time in America. The huge tax and spending cuts of the late 1940's have finally ended the long Depression, leading to economic growth for professionals as well as "blue collar" manufacturing workers.

It is the era of the American "Baby Boom" as war veterans marry and have children. Fathers go to work and earn enough money so that the mother can stay home and tend to children and home. Many move out of crowded cities into the suburbs. Almost every home now has a telephone, TV, washer, automobile etc. The "American Dream" is available to all who want it.

On the cultural front, "the 50's" still represent an era of decency and innocence. Movies, TV shows, and songs are, for the most part, clean and healthy entertainment. Churches are thriving, streets are safe, communities are tight, children are respectful, the divorce rate is very low, and homosexuality is largely unspoken of. Both White & Black families / communities are solid and thriving.

Modern "liberals" love to ridicule this simpler, happier time. But those who grew up in the '50's' and most of the 60's, know that it was a far happier and healthier time than the current era of economic and moral rot.

But beneath the surface of the happy 50's, the sex-obsessed Globo-Zionist moguls of Hollywood plot to unleash a destabilizing storm of moral and cultural filth which will forever weaken families, communities, and churches.

TV shows like "Leave It to Beaver", "Bonanza" and "Father Knows Best" reflected the goodness and loyalty of American family life.

DECEMBER, 1958
PATRIOTIC BUSINESSMAN ROBERT WELCH FOUNDS THE 'JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY'

Businessman Robert Welch forms the patriotic John Birch Society (named after an U.S. Army Captain murdered by Chinese Reds). Welch believes that Globalists ("Insiders") are using Communism, Central Banking, wars, moral corruption, and debt to bring about The New World Order. He warns:

"...both the U.S. and Soviet governments are controlled by the same conspiratorial cabal of internationalists, greedy bankers, and corrupt politicians. If left unexposed, the traitors inside the U.S. government would betray the country's sovereignty to the United Nations for a collectivist New World Order…." (31)

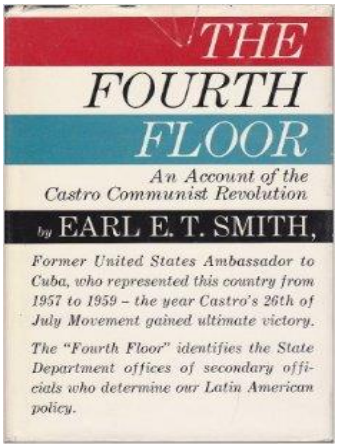
The JBS is organized into chapters all across America. Its enthusiastic members use books, pamphlets, and speaking tours to warn the public about the Globalists. JBS membership grows rapidly, attracting brutal media attacks from both the Communists and their Globalist enablers.

The Globalists were worried about Welch's plan to educate the public. The JBS had to be destroyed!

JANUARY, 1959
EISENHOWER'S PARTING GIFT TO WORLD COMMUNISM / CUBA GIVEN TO FIDEL CASTRO

The "blundering" Eisenhower did much to advance the Globalist/Communist Axis. His record includes: stopping Patton from liberating Eastern Europe ('45), forcing Russian POW's back to Stalin, murdering 1.7 million German POWs ('45/'46), betraying Joe McCarthy ('54), helping set up The Bilderberg Group ('54), and abandoning the anti-Communist rebels of Hungary ('56).

His final "blunder" is to allow Cuba's pro-American government of Fulgencio Batista to fall to the Marxist Fidel Castro. While the NY Times & Washington Post smear Batista and glorify Castro as another 'agrarian reformer'; Ike ignores repeated warnings from Ambassador Earl T Smith that Fidel Castro is a Soviet-backed Communist. Ike "looks the other way" as Castro's rebels make gains.



Just like Chiang in China ('49), Batista is betrayed when the U.S. refuses to ship armored cars purchased by Cuba. This emboldens Castro and demoralizes the Cubans. By abandoning Batista, Ike has handed Cuba to Castro.

In 1960, Ambassador Smith declares: "Without the U.S., Castro would not be in power today." (32)

In 1963, ex-President Eisenhower claims: "Only a genius and a prophet could have known that Fidel Castro was a Communist." (33)

1- Khrushchev & Castro hug. Yet another "reformer" turned out to be a Marxist

2- Ambasador Smith's book, 'The Fourth Floor', gives a firsthand account of how the Eisenhower State Department betrayed Cuba.

SEPTEMBER, 1959
EISENHOWER WELCOMES SOVIET MASS MURDERER KRUSHCHEV TO THE UNITED STATES

If the enslaved people of Eastern Europe, North Korea, China, or Cuba had any lingering delusion that the United States would stand up, at least symbolically, for the cause of freedom, those hopes were dashed forever when Eisenhower gave a warm White House welcome to Soviet tyrant Nikita Khrushchev.

As a Commissar, Khrushchev worked closely with the monsters Stalin & Kaganovich. Despite his criticism of Stalin (after Stalin had died), Khrushchev had murdered faithfully for Stalin while rising up through the Soviet ranks. More recently, Khrushchev was the Butcher of the 1956 Hungarian Revolution, and he still holds kidnapped American POWs from World War II in Siberian slave camps - a fact that the ex-general Eisenhower is fully aware of, yet will not discuss!

Years later, excerpts from Khrushchev's own memoirs again confirm the Soviet love of Eisenhower:

"Whenever I had dealings with Eisenhower in later years, I always remembered his actions during the war. I kept in mind Stalin's words about Eisenhower. Stalin invited Eisenhower to our Victory Parade and expressed his recognition by presenting him with our highest medal, the Order of Victory. This was the first time I met Eisenhower". (34)

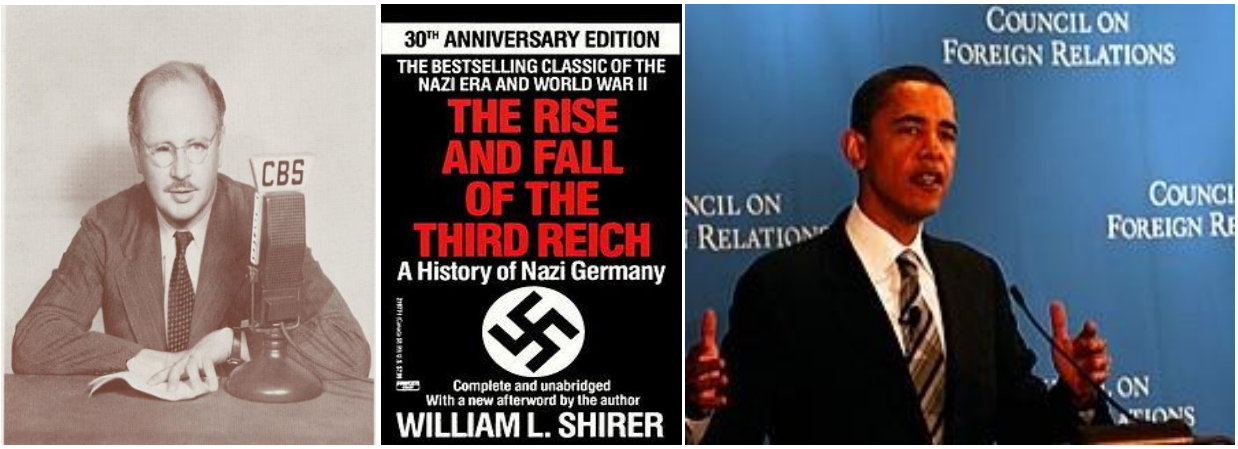
1- Zionist-Globalist Bernard Baruch (center) with his murderous sock puppets Churchill and Eisenhower.



2- The Khrushchevs and the Eisenhowers double-dated in DC.

1960
WINNER'S HISTORY!
THE 'RISE AND FALL OF THE THIRD REICH' IS PUBLISHED

After having received what he calls a "generous grant" from the New York-based Council on Foreign Relations (CFR), (35) American newspaper hack and former CBS mouthpiece William Shirer publishes his "definitive" and "comprehensive" history of World War II, The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich. In the book's opening acknowledgement, Shirer thanks "the Council" - whose Globalist members were the very ones that engineered the war in the first place!

Shirer's Rise and Fall is heavy on the empty verbiage and page-count (1,245!), but extremely light on essential facts. Weaving truths with half truths and outright lies, while sprinkling in a few seemingly objective, even pro-German nuggets of truth; Shirer skillfully paints a deceptive facade; one which any reader of Planet Rothschild or The Bad War should now be able to easily crack open.

The Jewish publishing giant Simon & Schuster publishes the book, and the Jewish press hypes it to the stars. Shirer becomes wealthy beyond his wildest dreams. His putrid package of propaganda remains, to this day, the "go to" book for those who think they know anything about World War II. What a joke!

Shirer's multi-million best-seller began with a "generous grant" from the CFR, a New York City "think tank" which still selects U.S. Presidents and is currently agitating for confrontation with Russia and China.

1961-1980

APRIL, 1961
'BAY OF PIGS' INVASION IS A DISASTER / PRESIDENT KENNEDY THEN FIRES THE CIA DIRECTOR

Just 3 months into the Presidency of John F Kennedy, the CIA launches the "Bay of Pigs" invasion, an unsuccessful action by a CIA-trained force of Cuban exiles to invade Cuba. It is an attempt by the Kennedy administration to overthrow the Communist government of Fidel Castro. The attempt is so badly botched that it seems deliberate. It ends up making Castro stronger and solidifies his revolution.

After the "failure", Communist leader Che Guevarra taunts JFK with a note: "Thanks. Before the invasion, the revolution was weak. Now it's stronger than ever." (1)

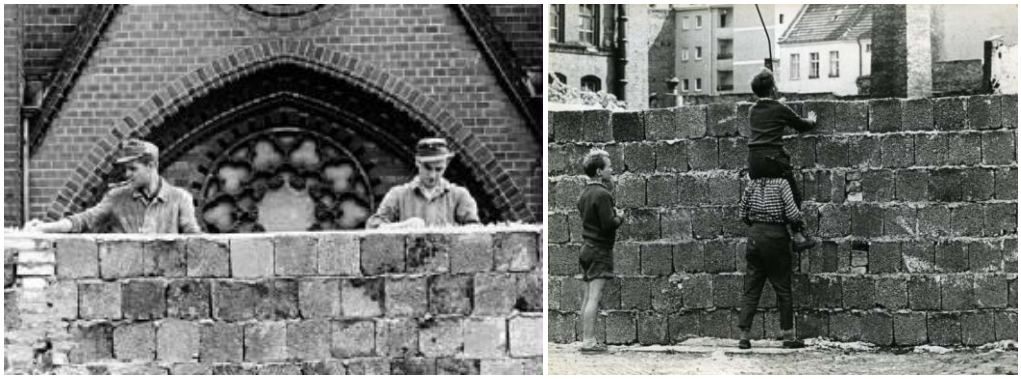
JFK is so angered over the fiasco that he threatens to "splinter the CIA in a thousand pieces and scatter it to the winds." (2)

Kennedy then fires the Eisenhower-appointee, CIA Director Allen Dulles (CFR). Dulles later serves on the Warren Commission, which will cover up the truth of JFK's assassination.

Captured on the beach! Were the anti-Communist Cubans set up to fail by CIA Chief Allen Dulles.



1961
SOVIETS CRACK DOWN ON BERLIN / THE BERLIN WALL IS ERECTED

Between 1949 and 1961, more than 2.6 million East Germans, (15% of the total population of East Germany!) had fled that Communist nation for the more prosperous and free West Germany. Their main route of escape is through the divided city of Berlin (East Berlin was in the Soviet Zone. West Berlin was free.)

The Soviet masters of East Germany finally respond to this embarrassing mass exodus by erecting the Berlin Wall. Guard towers and barbed wire are also placed along the hated wall.

Over the next 28 years, the Berlin Wall becomes a hated symbol of Communist oppression. Desperate East Berliners will continue attempting to escape. During this time, it is estimated that as many as 136 Germans will be shot dead while attempting to flee into West Berlin.

Escape = Death! A Communist Wall divides Berlin in half.

FEBRUARY 1962
WILLIAM F. BUCKLEY DENOUNCES THE JOHN BIRCH SOCIETY

By 1962, Robert Welch's John Birch Society has become a force that the Globalists and Communists can no longer ignore. An intense vilification campaign against the patriotic educational group had already succeeded in alienating much of the general public from the JBS. But the JBS remains popular among conservative patriots.

Enter, from stage right, William F Buckley – a CFR member and a pretentious snob who has been anointed by the media as a "conservative leader". Buckley is the publisher of National Review magazine. He publicly denounces JBS founder Robert Welch as being "far removed from common sense". (3)

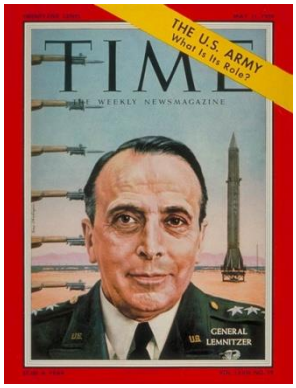
Coming from a respected "intellectual" known as "the patron saint of conservatism", this dirty attack deals a devastating blow to the JBS as the Marxists and their liberal dupes can now say: "Even Bill Buckley has denounced the Birchers."

For selling his soul to the Globalists, Buckley is later rewarded with his own TV show in 1966, PBS's Firing Line.

Ambitious Bill Buckley stabbed his friend Robert Welch in the back.



MARCH 1962
JFK REJECTS 'OPERATIONS NORTHWOODS' CONSPIRACY / REMOVES CHAIRMAN OF THE U.S. MILITARY

Operation Northwoods, is a "false-flag" proposal that originates from Zionist General LyMan Lemnitzer, who was a former member of Eisenhower's staff in WW II. Lemnitzer is Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The proposal calls for CIA operatives to commit terrorist acts in US cities to be blamed on Cuba, in order to create public support for a war. The proposals include the shooting of innocent Americans on the streets, hijackings and bombings, followed by the introduction of phony evidence to implicate Cuba. (4)

President Kennedy bluntly rejects the proposal and, as he did with CIA Director Dulles, replaces the insane General Lemnitzer from his position (JFK refused to reappoint Lemnitzer later that year). The shocking details of this false-flag plot were not declassified until 1997. The official document can be viewed online.

False Flag Horror: Lyman Lemnitzer wanted American planes to be shot down and American citizens killed in the streets.

OCTOBER 1962
U.S. AND THE SOVIETS COME CLOSE TO WAR DURING THE 'CUBAN MISSILE CRISIS'

After the failure of the Bay of Pigs invasion a year earlier, the Soviets, perceiving American weakness, position nuclear missiles in Cuba. When evidence of the missiles and military advisors based in Cuba is brought to JFK, a quarantine of the Island is ordered. The world is on edge for 13 days, wondering if the confrontation will lead to Soviet action in Europe and World War III.

JFK knows he must present a strong image, but he is also concerned about how the Soviets might react in Europe if the US invades Cuba. A deal is finally struck to diffuse the "Cuban Missile Crisis." Publicly, the Soviets will appear to back down by removing their missiles. But unknown to the world, the US also agrees to remove missiles from Turkey as part of this Cold War deal.

THE ARIZONA REPUBLIC

U.S. BLOCKADES CUBA, TELLS RUSS 'LAY OFF'

Will Sink Ships That Won't Halt

President's Cuba Stand Far-Reaching

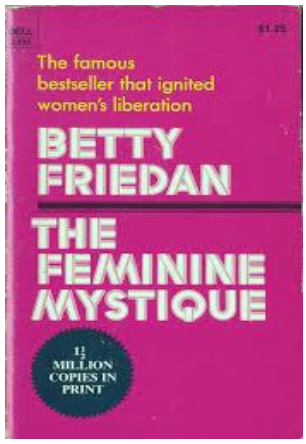
Southeast Gears To War Pace

President Acts

Island's A-Missile Build-Up Cited

Kennedy confronts Castro and his Soviet boss Khrushchev.

1963
JEWISH-MARXIST BETTY FRIEDAN SPARKS THE MODERN 'FEMINIST MOVEMENT'



A leading figure in the "Women's Movement" in the U.S. - Betty Friedan's media-hyped book, The Feminine Mystique sparks a wave of American feminism in the 1960's. As a young girl, Friedan was active in Marxist and Jewish circles. She once referred to herself as "a bad tempered bitch." (5) Friedan would go on to found the radical National Organization for Women. (NOW)

Friedan's movement is a Globalist destabilization campaign aimed at traditional family life. With her book being super-hyped by the media, millions of gullible women swallow Friedan's Marxist poison. Young moms who stay home to raise kids are now made to feel inferior and "oppressed". Mothers are encouraged to go out and work - and pay taxes. The "male chauvinist pig" becomes the hated target of the feminist rebellion.

"Feminism" drives a wedge between the sexes, that has since grown into a "war of the sexes", contributing greatly to today's 50% divorce rate, rampant promiscuity, single parent homes, and declining marriage rates.

Broken families and broken people are easier for the Globalists to control.

Marxist Feminist Betty Friedan ridiculed traditional housewives and kicked off the socially destructive war between the sexes.

MAY – JULY 1963
JFK PRESSURES 2 ISRAELI PRIME MINISTERS / ALSO TAKES ON MARXIST TRADE UNIONS, THE PENTAGON, THE CIA, AND THE FED

In spite of some liberal and internationalist leanings, JFK had a patriotic independent streak.

JFK is concerned that Israel is developing nuclear weapons. He fears that this could cause Arab nations in the region to follow suit. On May, 18, 1963, JFK sends a letter to Israeli Prime Minister David Ben Gurion, requesting that Israel open up its Dimona nuclear facility to inspection so as to confirm that it is only for peaceful energy development, and not bomb making. (6)

When Ben Gurion is succeeded by Levi Eshkol, the relentless JFK also sends a letter to him on July 5, again requesting inspection, even suggesting dates and hinting that future U.S. support for Israel could be jeopardized if his request was not met! (7) JFK is the only President to have ever confronted Israel so boldly.

JFK and his brother, Attorney General Robert, also take on the powerful AFL-CIO Trade Union boss Jimmy Hoffa.

And finally, JFK issues debt-free currency directly from the US Treasury (United States Notes) in 1963.

In just over 2 years in office, the charismatic young President has challenged the CIA, (Dulles) the Pentagon (Lemnitzer), two Israeli Prime Ministers (Ben Gurion & Eshkol), the AFL-CIO (Hoffa) and apparently, even The Federal Reserve. There is no doubt about it. Joe Kennedy's son has got a set of balls on him!

JFK fired and threatened some very powerful men. L-R: CIA Chief Dulles, Israeli Prime Minister Ben Gurion, AFL-CIO Boss Hoffa, and Chairman of Joint Chiefs of Staff Lemnitzer

NOVEMBER 22, 1963
JFK IS ASSASSINATED / MASSIVE COVER-UP FOLLOWS

President Kennedy is fatally shot while riding with his wife and the Governor of Texas in a motorcade through Dallas, TX. The media reports that Kennedy was shot from behind by a rifleman hiding in a warehouse. This contradicts witnesses who saw, and heard gunfire coming from in front of the motorcade. The "Zapruder Film" - released years later- clearly shows Kennedy being shot from the front, once in the chest and once again in the face. (8)

Although JFK was part of the Establishment, he was an anti-Communist with a patriotic independent streak. During his brief time in office, he had confronted many powerful people within the hierarchy of the Globalist-Zionist crime network.

JFK, riding with his wife and Texas Governor Connelly, is shot in the face.

NOVEMBER 24, 1963
THE ALLEGED ASSASSIN OF JFK CLAIMS INNOCENCE / HE TOO IS THEN ASSASSINATED!

The public is told that it was a “lone gunman” and "Communist" named Lee Harvey Oswald who fired the deadly shots from a warehouse located far behind from where JFK' was riding. Soon after his arrest on the night of November 22, Oswald encounters reporters in a hallway and declares his innocence, stating: "I'm just a patsy!" (9)

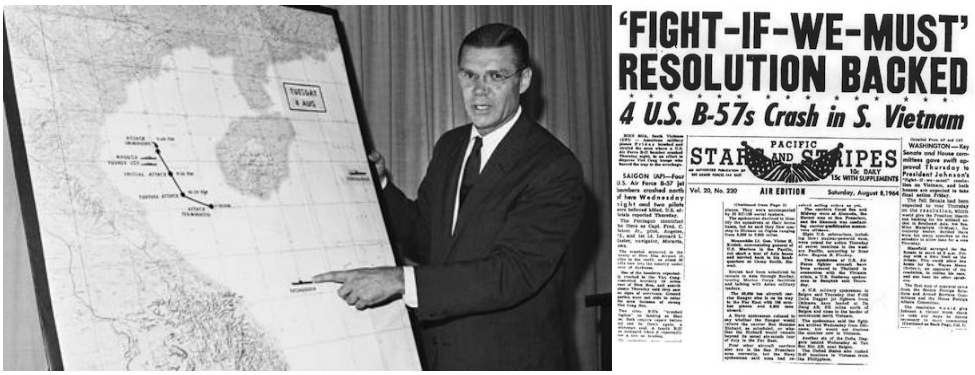
Two days later, Oswald is silenced when a Zionist mobster named Jack Ruby (Rubenstein) shoots Oswald as he is being transferred from Dallas Police Headquarters to County jail. Oswald’s claim of innocence, and his killing by Ruby, are captured in full view of TV cameras and are available at YouTube.com. To this day, it is not clear if Oswald was truly a Communist, or just a government infiltrator planted within the U.S. Communist Party.

"I'm just a patsy!"

Dead men tell no tales. The framed up "patsy" Oswald is taken out on live national TV.

AUGUST 4, 1964
THE TONKIN GULF HOAX TRIGGERS U.S. COMBAT INVOLVEMENT IN VIET-NAM

The Tonkin Gulf Incident is a fabricated event involving the U.S. and Red North Vietnam. The new President, Lyndon Baines Johnson (LBJ) claims that the North's torpedo boats fired upon U.S. ships. But he is lying. There was no attack!



In 2005, an NSA report was declassified, concluding that there may not even have been any Vietnamese Naval vessels present during the incident. The report states:

"It is not simply that there is a different story as to what happened; it is that no attack happened that night." (10)

Prior to LBJ, JFK had been recalling advisors from Vietnam. LBJ uses the Tonkin Gulf hoax to reverse JFK's policy and instigate the war that JFK did not want.

LBJ: one of the meanest, nastiest, and evil crooks in American history.

Defense Secretary McNamara lies his ass off about the fictitious attack which will drag America into the Gulf War.

NOVEMBER 1964
GLOBALIST MEDIA DESTROYS THE 1964 PRESIDENTIAL CAMPAIGN OF SENATOR BARRY GOLDWATER

After a nasty internal Republican contest with NY Governor Nelson Aldrich Rockefeller (CFR), Senator Barry Goldwater (R-AZ) wins the Republican nomination for President. Goldwater is a true constitutional conservative and an outspoken anti-Globalist.

A Goldwater Presidency would be a serious problem for the Globalists. The media smear machine goes to work to destroy Goldwater, skillfully taking his words out-of-context while portraying him as an "extremist". LBJ's campaign runs a TV ad showing a little girl picking daisies as an ominous voice counts down to an atomic bomb detonation. The Democrats charge that Goldwater is a "mad man" who will start a nuclear war with the USSR.

The irony of this false charge is that the ad was run at a time when LBJ was staging the Tonkin Gulf hoax, which really did lead the country into war! The intensity of the anti-Goldwater hype, coupled with the phony Tonkin incident of three months earlier, rallies the country behind LBJ, who defeats Goldwater in an historic landslide.

1- Senator Goldwater was an honest man. Nelson Rockefeller, LBJ, and the media ruined his chances.

2- The "Daisy Ad" was one of the meanest political attacks in history.

3- Ronald Reagan campaigns for Goldwater.

1965
LBJ's 'GREAT SOCIETY' DOOMS FUTURE GENERATIONS TO DEBT & TAX SLAVERY

LBJ and his Democrats launch a Marxist power grab that dwarfs FDR's New Deal. LBJ's "Great Society" (War on Poverty) will leave a legacy of reckless spending and borrowing that will burden the America's private economy for decades.

The Voting Rights Act gives illiterates the "right" to vote for their Democrat caretakers. The Immigration Act will flood America with third world immigrants likely to vote for socialist Democrats. Medicare & Medicaid trap the elderly and poor into dependency on the state for health care. The Food Stamp Program, Head Start, & Federal aid to schools are also introduced in the suicidal spending spree year of 1965.

LBJ's expensive, vote-buying welfare state destabilizes the traditional family by subsidizing unwed pregnancies and making welfare a way of life. As America approaches bankruptcy and collapse today, we have LBJ & FDR to thank for putting us on the socialist road to ruin.

1- Slime Magazine and the rest of the media cheered LBJ's ruinous welfare spending.

2: LBJ's welfare schemes led to an explosion of fatherless kids who are generationally dependent upon the government

3: With 90% of Americans being of European ancestry, the nation is deemed to be "too White". LBJ's signing of the Immigration Act is intended to eventually make European Whites a minority and then extinct altogether.

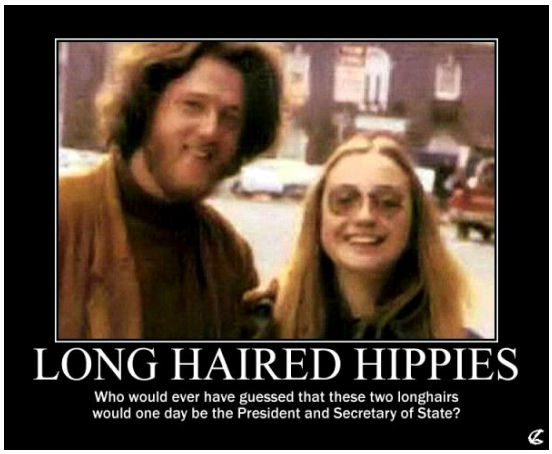
1965 - 1972
'PEACE MOVEMENT' IS USED TO RADICALIZE AMERICAN YOUTH AND DEMORALIZE THE WAR EFFORT

After deceiving the U.S. into escalating the Vietnam War, the Globalists now manage the war in such a way as to prevent any chance of victory. When the restrictive rules of military engagement are finally declassified in 1985, it is confirmed that the Vietnam War, like the Korean War before it, was not meant to be won. (11)

The Globalists use these wars against Communism as a means to weaken America and "contain communism" without ever defeating it. For these ends, U.S. Communists and their Soviet handlers form a "peace movement". Most peace activists are naive, but sincere people. But the leaders of the social unrest are Marxist radicals.

Some "peaceniks" aren't so peaceful, instigating riots on college campuses and clashes with police. Stoked by the Globalist media, the "peace movement" hinders the US war effort greatly, and radicalizes many bright young college students into America-hating socialist "hippies".

MANIPULATING THE YOUNG AND IDEALISTIC



Globalists always target young, idealistic students. (Young England, Young Turks, Young Bosnia, Young Italy etc.)

In 1966, TIME Magazine names "People Under 25" as its collective "Man of the Year." Many of this generation believe they are "changing the world" with their embrace of left-wing / "liberal" politics.

Little do these "anti-Establishment" kids know that they are actually moving in the precise direction that the Globalist Establishment wants them to! It's quite a trick. Globalists radicalize a generation, turn them against their parents, and then flatter them for "changing the world."

Young Americans move leftward!

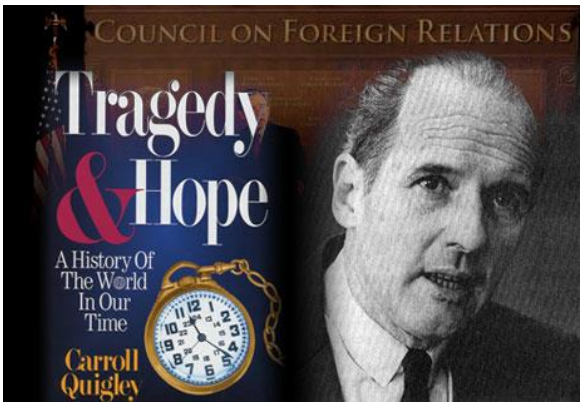
1 & 2- As planned, the "hippies "rebelled against The Establishment by turning to sex, drugs, and Marxism.

3- Future President Bill Clinton (1993-2000) and Hillary Clinton

1966
THE ACCIDENTAL INFORMANT / GLOBALIST PROFESSOR CARROLL QUIGLEY PUBLISHES 'TRAGEDY & HOPE'

Carroll Quigley is a Globalist Georgetown University historian, and mentor to a young Bill Clinton. (12) In his book, 'Tragedy & Hope', he unintentionally performs a great service for anti-NWO activists by revealing the secrets of "The Network."

Quigley writes:



"There does exist, and has existed for a generation, an international network operating, to some extent, in the way the Radical right believes the Communists act. In fact, this network has no aversion to cooperating with Communists, and frequently does." (13)

He adds: "I know of the operation of this network because I have studied it for twenty years and was permitted for two years, in the early 1960's, to examine its papers and secret records. I have no aversion to it or to most of its aims." (14)

And:

"The powers of financial capitalism had another far reaching aim, ...to create a world system of financial control in private hands able to dominate the political system of each country and the economy of the world." (15)

Quigley's observations are not new, but they are very significant because the claims are coming from someone who is actually a willing academic member of the New World Order crime gang. Quigley spends the rest of life claiming that he was quoted out of context.

1- "Tragedy & Hope" reveals the Globalist Master Plan.

2- Bill Clinton speaks of Carroll Quigley at 1992 Democratic Convention.

MAY, 1966
MAO'S 'CULTURAL REVOLUTION' KICKS OFF A NEW WAVE OF GENOCIDE IN CHINA

Having probably surpassed Stalin as the greatest mass murderer in modern history, Mao launches a new terror-torture campaign in 1966, "The Cultural Revolution".

Upset over the failure of his "Great Leap Forward," Mao blames the failure on his own people. Radicalized students are formed into "Red Guards" who are then loosed upon intellectuals, Buddhists, "counter- revolutionaries, internal political rivals, and other residual "capitalist" elements.

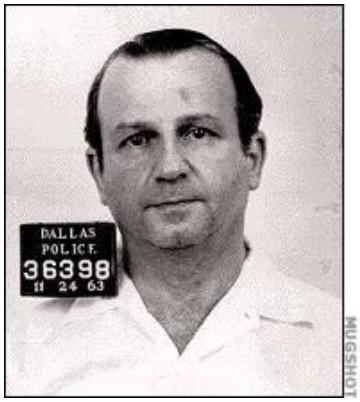
Red Guards drag teachers out of classrooms and publicly torture them to death. Countless Chinese are tortured and many commit suicide. Ancient buildings, artifacts, antiques, books, and paintings are destroyed by Red Guards as Mao consolidates power and elevates himself to god-like status. Only Mao's death in 1976 will finally end the insanity of his Revolution and eventually lead to the emergence of a pro-market and peaceful China.

Mao's brainwashed "Red Guards" publicly tortured "counter revolutionaries" in the streets.



JANUARY, 1967
THE MAN WHO KILLED JFK'S 'ASSASSIN' PREDICTS HIS OWN DEATH - DIES SUDDENLY IN PRISON

Jack Ruby (Rubenstein) completes his 3rd year in prison for killing Lee Harvey Oswald, the falsely accused killer of JFK. He had been sentenced to death but his sentence is overturned when he is granted an appeal. Ruby is now talking about a conspiracy and plans on giving new information at his upcoming trial, set for February 1967.

In December of 1966, he suddenly becomes ill, and dies a few weeks later in January of 1967, just one month before his new trial was set to begin.

Prior to his death, Ruby tells Dallas Deputy Sheriff Al Maddox that he was tricked into being injected for a cold, but he was actually injected with cancer cells. When Maddox asks him if he really believes that, Ruby answers: "I damn sure do!" (16)

Within a few weeks, cancer spreads to his lungs and brain. Ruby is dead, and silenced, at the age of 56.

THE DALLAS TIMES HERALD FINANCIAL Cancer Conquers
RUBY IS DEAD
Action Line
Oswald Slayer's Death Peaceful
Citizens Council Selects Bowles

Jack Ruby dead: The Jewish Mafia-connected night club owner and assassin of JFK's alleged assassin was assassinated in prison.

JUNE, 1967
ISRAEL STEALS ADDITIONAL PALESTINIAN TERRITORY / ARAB WORLD IS ENRAGED

The 1947 UN Partition of Palestine had delineated the boundaries between Jews and displaced Palestinians. But for the Zionists, the 1947 border was just a foot-in-the-door, just as the 1920 British Mandate had been. The ultimate plan for a Greater Israel requires much more territory than what was stolen in '47-48.

Using the excuse of the Six Day War, mighty Israel occupies more Palestinian territory in June, 1967 (Gaza & West Bank). The occupation of these territories continues to this day. It is this 1967 occupation, not the 1947 partition that is the main source of the current Palestinian grievance.

The horrific living conditions in occupied Palestine are kept hidden from the American people. Instead, the Zionist media creates the illusion that it is Israel who is the helpless victim!

Israel picks a fight and steals more territory. The Zionists actually want all of Palestine and parts of Syria and Lebanon too. Arab areas (green) shrink as the Jewish areas continue to grow.

JANUARY, 1967
ISRAEL DELIBERATELY MURDERS 37 U.S. SAILORS ABOARD THE U.S.S. LIBERTY

During the Six Day War between Israel and several Arab states, Israeli jets and torpedo boats deliberately attack the USS Liberty. The sustained daytime attack, taking place as the US flag flies visibly, kills 34 Americans, wounds 170, and badly damages the communications ship. The Israelis finally call off the attack when they realize that help may be on the way.

Israel claims the attack was a case of mistaken identity, but the American survivors clearly contradict that lie. Israel's intent is to sink the Liberty, machine-gun any survivors, blame Egypt, and thus draw the US into a war on its side. (17)

The Zionist Globalist US media buries the Liberty tragedy in its back pages. LBJ is silent, and the Zionist owned US Congress will not investigate.

1- DRAMATIZATION: Israeli fighter jets deliberately attacked the USS Liberty in broad daylight.

2- Not 1 American in 100 is aware of what happened that fateful day.

JANUARY, 1967
CBS ANCHOR WALTER CRONKITE BETRAYS AMERICA WITH FALSE REPORT ON 'TET OFFENSIVE'

North Vietnam launches multiple surprise attacks known as the Tet Offensive. The offensive is a disastrous failure for the Communists as their Red Viet Cong guerillas in the South are crushed. But the Globalist media portrays Tet as a setback for the U.S.!

CBS's Walter Cronkite (CFR) - touted by CBS as "The Most Trusted Man in America", delivers a treasonous blow to the US with a gloomy, though false, report:

"We have been disappointed by the optimism of American leaders to have faith any longer in the silver linings they find in the darkest clouds. To say that we are mired in a stalemate seems the only realistic conclusion. It seems increasingly clear to this reporter that the only rational way out will be to negotiate." (18)

Cronkite's deceitful betrayal of America's military turns public opinion, and eventually puts the U.S. on a losing course at a time when the Reds had just suffered a devastating setback!

Tet was actually a huge American VICTORY! (19) Cronkite's false report on Tet was a deliberate act of treason against America.

APRIL 4, 1968
MARXIST MARTIN LUTHER KING IS ASSASSINATED / DEADLY RIOTS ERUPT IN U.S. CITIES

During the 1960's, Marxists agitate relentlessly in the black community. The strategy is to use the legitimate grievances of blacks (who Marxists don't care about!) as an excuse to give more power to the Federal Government, and as a way to drive black voters into the Democrat Party.

Communists and Black Panthers instigate riots. This leads to government "solutions" such as expensive welfare programs, voting rights for illiterates, and greater Federal control over private industry.

The most notorious of the "non-violent" agitators is the prostitute-addict (20) and proven plagiarist (21), "Reverend" Martin Luther King. JFK had MLK (a Nobel Peace Prize winner) placed under an FBI wiretap due to MLK's numerous affiliations with known Communists (22). After the Globalists had finished using the Marxist MLK to achieve their domestic objectives, they decided to kill him and then capitalize upon his death even more.

King's mysterious assassination sets off anti-white riots in inner cities throughout America. The Divide & Conquer scheme to promote racial unrest always works to the advantage of the New World Order. King's FBI file was sealed in 1977 and will not be made public until 2027.

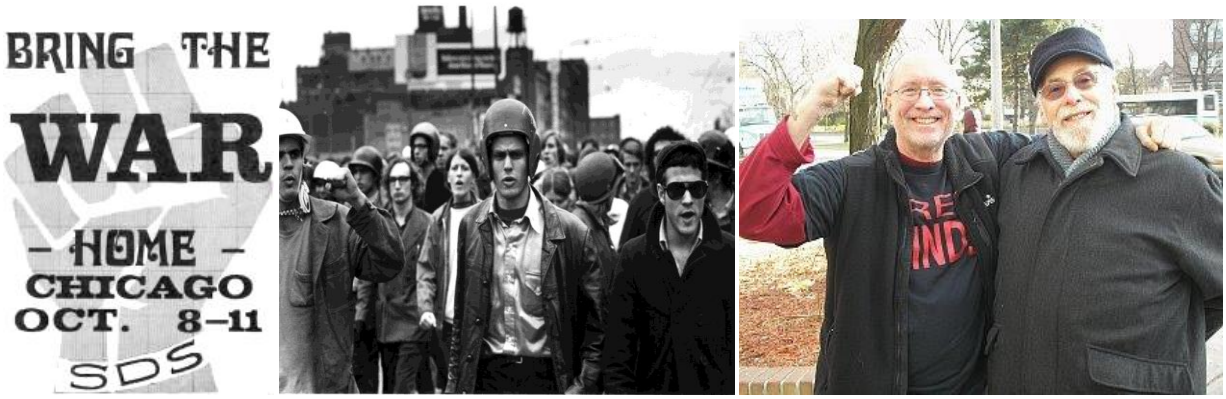
The Globalists used the Communist King and then disposed of him.

JUNE 5, 1968
ROBERT F KENNEDY'S PRESIDENTIAL BID IS ENDED BY ASSASSINATION

The assassination of Robert F. Kennedy occurs after he wins the California primary for the nomination for President. RFK will never be able to use the power of the Presidency to go after his brother's killers.

An anti-Zionist Palestinian immigrant, Sirhan Sirhan is named as the "lone gunman". Conveniently, this is very bad for Palestine's image, but it does generate sympathy for Israel.

In 2006, the BBC's Newsnight program presented research revealing that several CIA officers were present on the night of the assassination. Three men who appear in films and photos were positively identified by colleagues as former senior CIA officers. In 2007, analysis of an audio tape recording of the shooting indicates, that 13 shots were fired, even though Sirhan's gun held only 8 rounds.



RFK would have been President, but was killed just like his brother JFK. Who was the strange lady in the polka-dot dress that was with Sirhan Sirhan before she calmly walked away from the scene?

OCTOBER, 1969
COMMUNIST TERRORISTS STAGE 'DAYS OF RAGE' IN CHICAGO

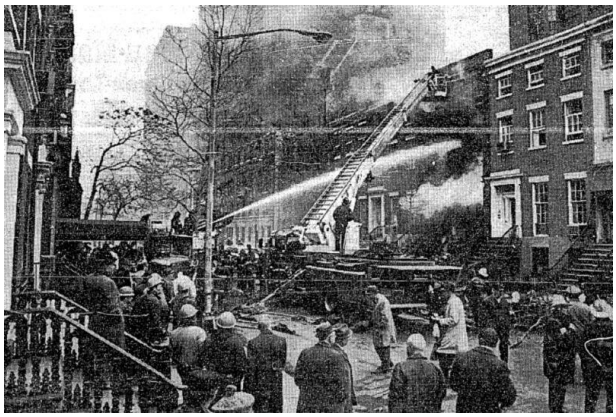
The "Days of Rage" are violent actions organized by the Communist terrorist "Weathermen" in 1969. On October 5th, a statue honoring the murdered policemen of the 1886 Haymarket Square Communist attack is dynamited. The blast breaks more than 100 windows.

Weatherman William Ayers had planned the bombing. On Oct 8, 800 Reds gather, hoping to incite blacks to join them in an uprising. Chicago has 2000 cops ready for battle. At 10:25 pm, Weatherman Jeff Jones gives the signal, and the violence begins. The Reds charge toward the affluent Gold Coast neighborhood, smashing windows as they go. They attack shops, homes and cars. They soon encounter barricades and police beat them back.

In 2009, Ayers & Jones will visit Obama's White House and secure cash grants for their educational schemes. (23)

1- Weathermen Communist terrorists wanted to instigate rioting in Chicago.

2- Bill Ayers and Jeff Jones maintain ties with their long term pet project – Barack Obama.



MARCH, 1970
HORRIFIC COMMUNIST TERROR ATTACK DOES NOT GO OFF AS PLANNED

Four dead Communist "Weathermen" lie in the rubble of a Manhattan basement. They had been building a bomb, which accidentally detonated prematurely. Dynamite pipe bombs, using nails as shrapnel, are later recovered in this bomb factory. Had the bomb not detonated prematurely, the planned attack on an officers' dance in Ft. Dix, NJ would have been the deadliest act of terror in US history at that time.

The group, led by Bill Ayers, was intending to murder scores of Army officers and their dates. After the blast, Ayers (whose girlfriend died in the blast) goes into hiding until 1980. Upon his surrender years later, powerful forces let him off the hook on "technicalities". Ayers and his lunatic Communist wife Bernadine Dohrn are now university professors! Ayers will later ghost write a book for an Illinois State Senator (and friend) Barack Obama. (24)

Most Americans remain blissfully unaware of the mass murder which Ayers attempted in 1970; and of his close relations with President Obama.

Bill Ayers - future friend and ghost-writer for Obama - became a fugitive after the failed mass murder attempt.

APRIL, 1970
CRONKITE HYPES PHONY 'EARTH DAY'

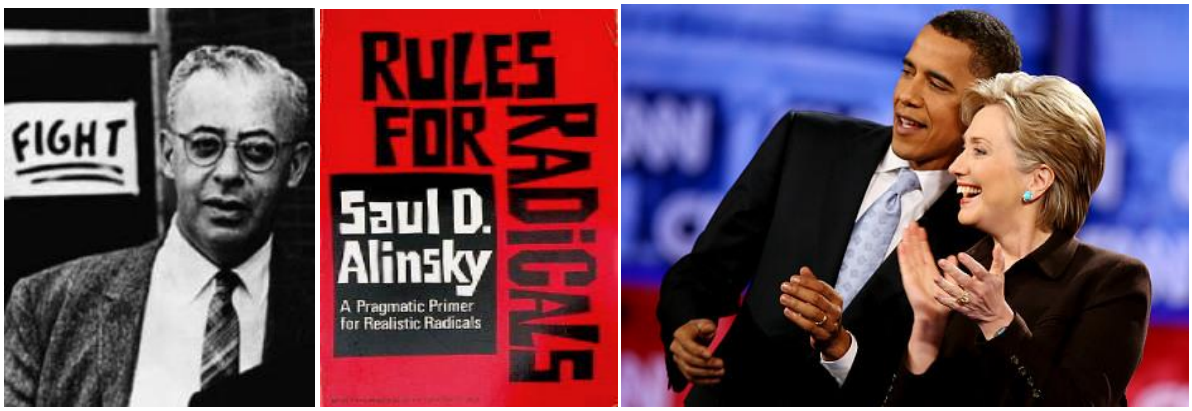
The first "Earth Day" marks an important turning point for modern "environmentalism". Up to 20 million gullible Americans participate as colleges organize protests against "the degradation of the Global environment".

Heavy media coverage of Earth Day includes a Prime-time CBS Special with the scary title: "Earth Day: A Question of Survival," with correspondents reporting from across the US. It is narrated by Walter Cronkite, who in later years openly admits his support for World Government. (25)

Environmentalism's true purpose is to use phony Global "crises" as pretexts to: Raise Global taxes, including "carbon taxes"/ Erode national sovereignty / Empower the UN /*Control private industry and individuals / *Promote "One World-ism" / Prevent energy independence / Artificially depress living standards / Prevent poor nations from developing, keep them dependent on the UN for aid.

In years to come, Globalists recruit greedy scientists to concoct false theories such as "Global Warming".

The proposed solutions to the non-existent problems always "coincidentally" coincide with the political objectives of The New World Order control freaks.



Cronkite does it again! The traitor of the Vietnam War heavily promoted the Globalist "Earth Day".

1971
MARXIST AGITATOR SAUL ALINSKY PUBLISHES 'RULES FOR RADICALS'

Saul Alinsky is an America-hating Chicago Marxist, born to Russian-Jewish immigrants who fled the anti-Semitic & anti-Marxist uprisings of Czarist Russia. Alinsky is the founder of an agitation tactic known as "community organizing." Alinksy believes that America is too strong to be taken down by violent revolution. Instead of non-effective violence, Alinsky advises young radicals to become active in their local communities and to infiltrate the political system. Community Organizers are highly skilled at political warfare, agitating in black neighborhoods, and organizing vote fraud efforts.

His 1971 classic, Rules for Radicals, is dedicated to Satan, (26) the first revolutionary as Alinsky calls him. RFR will be a bible of sorts for inner city agitators, vote fraud organizers, and liberal activists. It lays out clever strategies for infiltrating the system with the intent of subverting it from within.

Among Alinsky's known devotees are future First Lady and fellow Chicagoan Hillary Clinton, who wrote her college thesis on Alinksy's ideas (27). Another future student of Alinsky tactics is President Barack Obama, (28) who will actually work as a "community organizer" in Chicago in the 1990's.

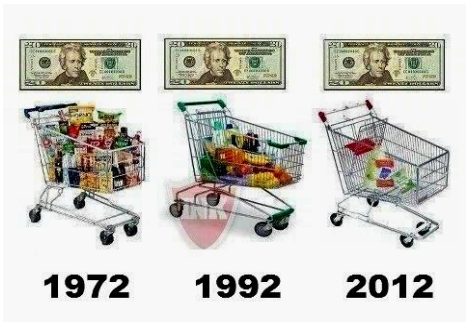
Alinksy taught the Marxist radicals of the 60's how to infiltrate America's institutions from within. Hillary and Obama have both studied his works.

DECEMBER, 1970
THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY IS ESTABLISHED

Media-driven environmental hysteria culminates with the establishment of a new government cabinet department. The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is charged with broad powers to "protect the environment".

As the year pass, unnecessary, excessive, and dictatorial environmental regulations will render many American businesses unable to compete with foreign counterparts. Along with heavy taxation and frivolous litigation, EPA regulations, often based upon "junk science", have either forced American business to close their operations, or forced them to relocate overseas.

Citing the hoax of "Global Warming", the EPA today is driving up electricity rates, eroding national sovereignty, and killing jobs by waging war on the coal industry.



Under pressure, the supposedly "conservative" Nixon greatly expanded the size and destructive power of the Federal government.

AUGUST, 1971
NIXON SEVERS ALL LINKS BETWEEN GOLD AND THE U.S. DOLLAR

President Richard Nixon (CFR) shocks economic conservatives when he takes the US completely off the Gold Standard. Prior to this move, the government/Fed complex could not borrow or create new currency "out of thin air" unless it had a certain portion of that amount of gold in storage at Fort Knox. With the Gold Standard now completely gone, the U.S. can spend recklessly, and then borrow unlimited counterfeit money from the Zionist owned Federal Reserve. This is the true cause of "inflation".

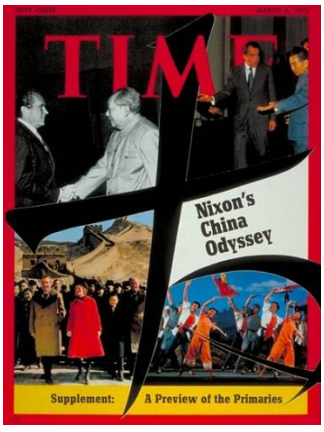
In the coming years, the value of the paper dollar plunges. When foreign trading partners such as Arab nations see that the dollar is now worth 35 cents, they triple the price of oil to compensate. When gas prices triple from .50 cents a gallon to $1.50, "the OPEC nations" are blamed for the inflationary recession.

After Nixon shocked conservatives by removing the partial gold backing of the dollar, it became easier for the government to run up huge deficits with the Fed's newly printed debt-money. This is what causes price inflation!

FEBRUARY, 1972
NIXON VISITS MAO IN CHINA / CALLS FOR A 'NEW WORLD ORDER'



Mao is not only one of the greatest mass killer in world history, but his gang had also murdered U.S. POWs during the Korean War. This means nothing to CFR Globalist and "anti-Communist" Richard Nixon. (A young Congressman Nixon helped expose Soviet spy Alger Hiss.)

Mao has served Globalist goals by consolidating Chiang Kai Shek's China under centralized state control. The oceans of blood he shed in doing so does not concern the Globalists. The time has come to "open up" China for a gradual future transition into The New World Order.

To that end, Nixon follows up on a secret trip that Secretary of State Henry Kissinger (CFR) had made to China the year before. In a speech before Mao, Nixon expresses his wish to "build a New World Order" (29) which intends to include (entrap) Mao's China. This visit marks the origins of China's economic rise and transition into the "world community."

Ironically, within 30 years, a post-Communist and more market-oriented China will begin to demonstrate independent nationalist tendencies - an intolerable offense to the Globalists.

With the blood of countless millions dripping from his fingers, Mao shakes hands with Nixon

MAY, 1972
ALABAMA GOVERNOR GEORGE WALLACE CHALLENGES EASTERN ESTABLISHMENT / THEN SHOT 5 TIMES

Governor George Wallace had run for the Democrat nomination for President in '64, and again as a 3rd Party candidate in 1968. He was an anti-Establishment populist, following in the tradition of Huey Long *(who was assassinated in 1935 just as he was about to challenge FDR from within his own Party).*Wallace is a nationalist who wants to either win the Viet Nam war quickly, or pull out totally. He is anti-Communist, opposed to foreign aid, and opposed to Globalism.

Echoing Huey Long, Wallace declares: "There's not a dime's worth of difference between Republicans and Democrats." (30)

In January of 1972, Wallace again declares himself a candidate for the Democrat nomination, entering the field against liberals George McGovern and Hubert Humphrey. In Florida's primary election, Wallace carries every single county! For the next four months, Wallace's campaign does extremely well. Then, while campaigning in Maryland on May 15th, he is shot 5 times by "lone nut gunman" Arthur Bremer. Governor Wallace is left paralyzed and his campaign effectively ends, even though he still wins two more state primaries.

Like RFK in 1968, Wallace was gunned down just before he could win the Democrat nomination.

JANUARY, 1973
HENRY KISSINGER BETRAYS SOUTH VIET- NAM TO COMMUNISM / ABANDONS U.S. POWs!

At the Paris Peace Accords of 1973, the US agrees to end the Viet-Nam war. The negotiators for the talks are Rockefeller agent Henry Kissinger (CFR) for the U.S. and Le Duc Tho for Communist North Vietnam. To the delight of the U.S. Media, Kissinger "gives away the store" to the North. Not only is the North assured that its troops may continue to occupy the South, but the post-war political arrangement is configured in such a way as to guarantee a Communist take-over of South Viet Nam after the war.

Eager to wrap up the war and win his Nobel Peace Prize, Zionist Kissinger knowingly abandons American Prisoners of War still being held by the Communists. Kissinger and Le Duc will receive Nobel Peace Prizes for engineering the Red takeover of South Viet Nam.

"Henry the K" and Communist Le Duc - Henry is all smiles as he betrays both the South and U.S. POWs.

JANUARY 22, 1973
'ROE vs. WADE' DECISION FORCES ALL 50 U.S. STATES TO PERMIT KILLING OF UNBORN BABIES

The Globalist/Communist complex has never had any regard for human life, whether born or unborn. Its latest pro-death / anti-morality success is the Roe vs Wade Supreme Court decision, which ignores states' rights, and makes legalized abortion the law of the land. Roe vs. Wade cheapens modern culture, ushering in an era (1973-Present) in which uninformed American women have abortions like candy (40 million and counting!)

Ironically, the plaintiff in the case, a Texas woman named Norma McCorvey (nicknamed Jane Roe) would in later years come to regret her decision to abort and becomes a fierce pro-life activist. (31)

Although the debate over abortion rages until the present day, the Globalist media NEVER shows the public any images of what an actual abortion really is. The feminists and the media promote the myth that an unborn child is just "a mass of cells".

Most pro-abortion people, upon first seeing actual images or video of what an abortion really is, soon begin to rethink their position on the matter.

That is why the graphic images of the abortion procedure are concealed from public view.

The Culture of Death! Globalist media will never show you what an aborted baby looks like.

JULY, 1973
DAVID ROCKEFELLER & ZBIGNIEW BREZEZSKI ESTABLISH THE GLOBALIST 'TRI-LATERAL COMMISSION'

The Trilateral Commission (TC) is set up to foster cooperation between the US, Europe, and Japan. CFR Chairman David Rockefeller had proposed its creation at the 1972 Bilderberg meeting. Columbia professor Zbigniew Brzezinski, organizes the TC, recruiting 300 elites from finance, business, politics, and media.

Senator Goldwater accuses the TC of being a plot:

"The Trilateral Commission represents a skillful, coordinated effort to seize control and consolidate the centers of power. What the Trilateralists intend is the creation of a worldwide economic power superior to the political governments of the nation-states involved. As managers of the system they will rule the future." (32)

Georgia Congressman and Birch Society leader Larry McDonald calls for an investigation.

GLOBO-DEVILS! Trilateral Commission founders: Z-big, Henry the K, & King David Rockefeller. The logo appears to be a form of 6-6-6.

SEPTEMBER, 1973
GENERAL AUGUSTO PINOCHET STAGES AN ANTI-MARXIST COUP IN CHILE

The Globo - Communist "left" is in an uproar over an anti-Marxist coup in Chile. General Augusto Pinochet has had enough of Marxist Salvador Allende's "democrat' socialist government.

Upon assuming power, Pinochet cracks down on the Marxist scum that devastated Chile's economy. He downsizes government, slashes taxes, and privatizes state industries. An economic boom follows.

Under pressure from "the world community", the beloved General steps down in 1990. As a result of his reforms, Chile is still the most prosperous economy in South America. The Globalists do not like to be embarrassed like this. While visiting Great Britain to have back surgery in 1998, the 85 year old Pinochet is arrested for "human rights violations" committed against Spanish Communists.

Ironically, Cuba's Communist boss, Fidel Castro, whose firing squads have executed thousands, and whose prisons are notorious for torture of political prisoners, is being honored in Spain at the very same time the warrant is issued for Pinochet.

Pinochet is eventually released, but will be hounded and harassed by Chile's "intellectuals" until his death in 2006.

1- General Pinochet saved Chile.

2- Allende with Castro

3- Euro-Globalists arrested Pinochet in 1998. He died in 2006.

1975
WITH TAIL BETWEEN LEGS, THE U.S. PULLS OUT OF VIETNAM / REDS THEN PROCEED TO MURDER MILLIONS!

The sudden departure of a humiliated USA left its destabilized South Vietnamese friends defenseless at the hands of the Communists of the North. Millions of terrified pro-Americans crowd into leaky boats in order to flee the Communists who, as they always do, began murdering, torturing, and arresting their enemies.

Suddenly destabilized, the neighboring nation of Cambodia also falls to Communism. There, the "Khmer Rouge" murders 2 million people (1/3 of the population!) The Globalist Henry Kissinger (CFR/TC) - and the Marxist-loving "peace activists" who had so hindered the US war effort - shed no tears.

America had been deceived & betrayed into an unnecessary war, and then deceived & betrayed into losing it.

As was the case in both World Wars and the Korean War, American boys and innocent civilians paid for the Globalist joke with their lives.

Driven in the sea by Kissinger's Communist friends, 200,000+ Vietnamese "boat people" died.

1973-1975
TWO RESIGNATIONS & TWO ASSASSINATION ATTEMPTS ALMOST MAKE NELSON ROCKEFELER PRESIDENT!

Ambitious Republican Governor Nelson Rockefeller (NY) dreams of being President. Conservatives like Barry Goldwater will never allow this Globalist to ever win the nomination. But after a series of bizarre events, eerily similar to the rapid rise of Teddy Roosevelt, 'Rocky' literally comes within inches of achieving his.dream.

Oct 10, 1973: Conservative Vice President Spiro Agnew is forced to resign over a media-hyped "tax evasion scandal".

Oct 12, 1973: Democrat Congressional leaders force President Nixon to select Gerald Ford (TC) as the VP.

Aug 9, 1974: President Nixon resigns over the media-hyped "Watergate Scandal" Vice President Ford becomes President.

Dec 19, 1974: With the blessing of the Democrat Congress, Ford selects Rockefeller as Vice President. Conservatives are upset.

1974-1975: Rockefeller& Kissinger cause internal factionalism within Ford administration.

Sept 5, 1975: Radical Lynette Fromme aims her pistol at President Ford's head, but is apprehended by a Secret Service agent before she can fire.

Sept 22, 1975: Radical Sarah Jane Moore fires her gun at Ford, missing his head by just 6 inches. She is tackled by a bystander just as she is about to fire a 2nd shot.

Ford runs for election in 1976, but drops Rockefeller from the ticket after Goldwater and Ronald Reagan threaten to withdraw support. Ford, who served on the Warren Commission which covered up JFK's murder, does not want to meet JFK's fate!

A string of very strange events and two deranged radicals almost made the unelectable Nelson Rockefeller President of the USA.

1971-1979
CBS'S HIGHLY RATED 'ALL IN THE FAMILY' BRAINWASHES AMERICA WITH MARXIST PROPAGANDA

In the days before Cable / Dish TV, there are only the 3 major networks (CBS, ABC, NBC) and a few local channels to choose from. The Zionist networks truly have a captive audience. From 1971-79, the most highly rated show (by far!) is the sitcom "All in the Family", produced by Zionist-Marxists Norman Lear and Bud Yorkin.

Set in the Queens, NY living room of the Bunker family, every episode contains political arguments between Archie (old, conservative Republican) and some younger liberal character (Michael, Gloria, Irene, Lionel, Maude)

Archie's arguments are always made in an angry, buffoonish tone and bigoted towards blacks, Hispanics, and Jews. But the liberals in the show are always portrayed as oh-so-intelligent and "tolerant". Week after week, the massive national audience can't help but laugh at stupid, angry Archie.

In the subconscious of the public mind, conservative ideals become associated with stupidity and hate, whereas liberal opinions are associated with education and tolerance. In the final year of AITF's decade long run, Archie "matures" into a more liberal minded, and likeable older man, taking in a Jewish business partner and even adopting a Jewish daughter.

The viewing audience of AITF (and other shows) cannot detect the psychological manipulation, but AITF's unflattering portrayal of Archie, along with his eventual redemption, will gradually turn millions of reactive viewers away from conservative thought, and towards a more Marxist view of the world.

Nasty "conservative" Archie is always yelling and saying stupid things. But his "liberal" son-in-law Michael knows better.

1976-1980
THE JIMMY CARTER DISASTER

Following Nixon's Water Gate Scandal, and Gerald Ford's controversial pardon of Nixon for his role in the cover-up, the 1976 Election is sure to be a big year for the Democrats. Out of nowhere, the unknown Governor of Georgia is media-hyped through the Democrat Primaries. What an amazing story! A humble ex "peanut farmer" upsets the Establishment! .....Not exactly.

As it turns out, Jimmy Carter is an original member of the Trilateral Commission. The sudden "buzz" behind the Carter candidacy is fake. The election of 1976 therefore pits Gerald Ford (TC) vs. Jimmy Carter (TC) - a win-win for The New World Order. After Carter's victory, Brzezinski is named as National Security Advisor. Over the next 4 years, "Zbig" and his phony "peanut farmer" puppet will:

- Betray the anti-Communist Nicaraguan government

Result: Anti-Communist Anastasio Somosa is forced out. Nicaragua goes Red.

- Betray the anti-Communist White Rhodesian government

Result: Anti-Communist Ian Smith is forced out. Rhodesia falls to Black racist Communist Robert Mugabe

- Betray the anti-Communist rebels in Angola

Result: Angola's Communist regime is strengthened and protected from the anti-Communist rebel forces of Jonas Savimbi. (UNITA)

Brzezinski was the main handler of Jimmy Carter

MARCH - MAY, 1978
ITALIAN PRIME MINISTER ALDO MORO IS KIDNAPPED AND MURDERED

Henry Kissinger is very angry with the Italian Prime Minister, Aldo Moro. On his own initiative and in defiance of Globalists, Moro is in the process of working out a deal with the Communists of Italy. Under the terms of "Il Compremesso Storico" (The Historic Compromise), Moro's Christian Democrats will form a coalition government which will include Communists. Undoubtedly this would lead to a more neutral foreign policy with regards to the Soviet Union.

It's not that Kissinger and his Globalist friends are "anti-Communist". What they are is anti-Russian. Whether it is a Czar like Nicholas; or a Communist General Secretary like Brezhnev; or a democratic free-marketeer like Putin; the goal is always the same - to subjugate the Eurasian land mass under Globalist control.

Any national leader who gets too close to Russia will therefore have to be punished in one way or another. Recall the fate of President Lincoln (killed), French President Carnot (killed), President Taft (booted out of office).

On March 16, 1978, a unit said to be of the militant Communist group known as the Red Brigades blocks the two-car convoy transporting Moro and kidnaps him, murdering his five bodyguards. Two months later, the Prime Minister is murdered. The resulting anti-Communist backlash scuttles "The Historic Compromise" and brings Italy back into the Globalist anti-Soviet Union sphere. The murder of Aldo Moro was very bad for the Communists, but good news for the Globalists – all of which points to the CIA taking out Moro and framing the pro-Soviet Communists of Italy for the deed.

Moro's widow will later recount her husband's meeting with Henry Kissinger and an unidentified American intelligence official. They warned Moro not to pursue the strategy of bringing the Communist Party into his cabinet, telling him "You must abandon your policy of bringing all the political forces in your country into direct collaboration...or you will pay dearly for it." Moro was so shaken by the comment that he became ill and threatened to quit politics. (33)

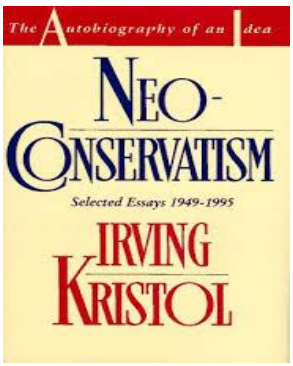
Kidnapped by CIA "Red Brigades" – held hostage for nearly two months – murdered in cold blood

OCTOBER, 1979
THE U.S. DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION IS BORN

President Jimmy Carter establishes the Department of Education. For 200 years, Americans were a well - educated people, without the help of a Federal bureaucracy. For what purpose does America suddenly need a new Cabinet Department? The answer reveals itself in the years to come, as the UN-connected U.S. Department of Education grows large and powerful, influencing school curriculums on every local level. As a result, American children today learn next to nothing about America's founding doctrines or its true history.

Instead of learning to think critically, young students are force-fed Globalist & socialist propaganda, fairy tales about Global Warming, hatred for American ideals, pornographic "sex education", and the joys of homosexuality. Dumbed-down kids grow into easily controllable "Global Citizens."

Globalist DOE deliberately dumbs-down American kids, turning them into non-thinking adults.



1979
THE RISE OF THE 'NEO-CONSERVATIVES' / ZIONIST 'EX-MARXISTS' HI-JACK TRUE CONSERVATISM

"Neo-Conservatism" originated in the early 1970's, and blossoms by 1979. The founders of Neo-Conservatism (neo-cons) are self-professed "ex-Marxists" who claim to realize their error and now wish to embrace American conservatism. The first major intellectual to 'come out' as a neo-con is Irving Kristol (CFR) - "The Godfather" of the neo-cons. Kristol explains his views in a 1979 article "Confessions of a Self-Confessed 'Neoconservative".

Gullible traditional conservatives welcome the media-hyped, neo-con infiltrators with open arms into their circles. It isn't long before these "ex-Marxist" Zionists hijack true conservatism. The neo-cons are Globalists that differ from other "liberal" Globalists in one key area. Whereas Bilderberger / TC Globalists have no special love or loyalty for Israel, the neo-con Globalists are hard core, Israel-First Zionists.

This internal, and often bitter, divide within the broader New World Order crime family is an extension of Churchill's "Zionism vs Bolshevism" thesis of which he wrote about 60 years earlier. Irving Kristol's son, William Kristol, will found the controversial Project for the New American Century which will call for a "New Pearl Harbor" in later years.

Irving Kristol was "The Godfather" of the Zionist "Neo-Cons"

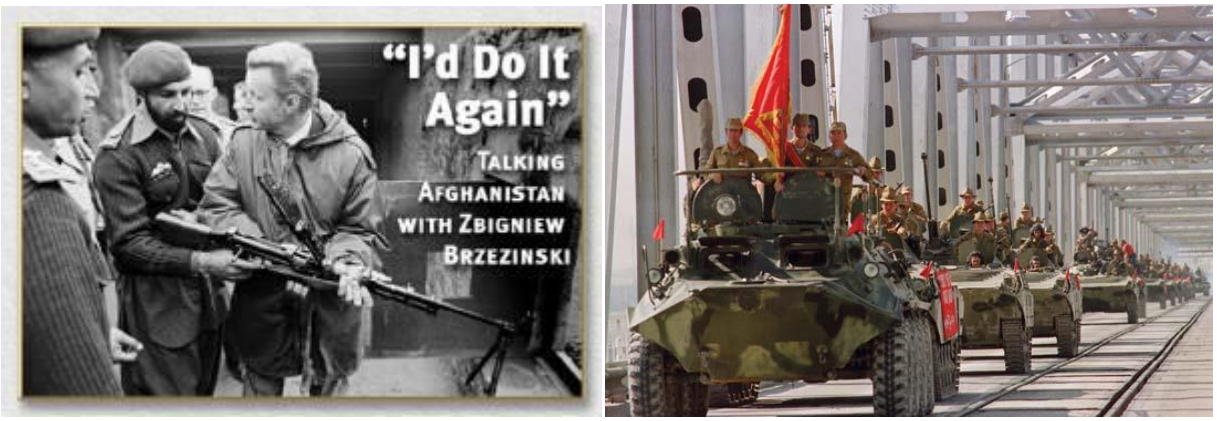
DECEMBER 1979
BRZEZINSKI DRAWS THE SOVIETS INTO HIS AFGHANISTAN TRAP

The Globalists have long aided the spread of Communism for their own purposes. Communism is a tool for overthrowing nationalistic and free market nations. But the long range plan is to one day merge the Communistic nations into a New World Order that is a mix of corporatism and communism.

The Soviets in Moscow have their own plans of world domination, or at least, world influence. But they are no match for the Globalists that created them. Zbigniew Brzezinski develops a plan to draw the USSR into a costly and destabilizing war in Afghanistan. In the same way that the Russo-Japanese War weakened Czarist Russia in 1905, Brzezinski's Afghan trap will weaken the Soviet state.

In an interview with a French magazine, Zbig comes clean about the Soviet-Afghan War:

Question: The former director of the CIA, Robert Gates, stated in his memoirs ["From the Shadows"], that American intelligence services began to aid the Mujahedeen in Afghanistan 6 months before the Soviet intervention. In this period you were the national security adviser to President Carter. You therefore played a role in this affair. Is that correct?"



Brzezinski: "Yes. According to the official version of history, CIA aid to the Mujahedeen began during 1980, that is to say, after the Soviet army invaded Afghanistan, 24 Dec 1979. But the reality, secretly guarded until now, is completely otherwise. Indeed, it was July 3, 1979 that President Carter signed the first directive for secret aid to the opponents of the pro-Soviet regime in Kabul. And that very day, I wrote a note to the president in which I explained to him that in my opinion this aid was going to induce a Soviet military intervention."

Question: "When the Soviets justified their intervention by asserting that they intended to fight against a secret involvement of the United States in Afghanistan, people didn't believe them. However, there was a basis of truth. You don't regret anything today?"

Brzezinski: "Regret what? That secret operation was an excellent idea. It had the effect of drawing the Russians into the Afghan trap and you want me to regret it? The day that the Soviets officially crossed the border, I wrote to President Carter. We now have the opportunity of giving to the USSR its Vietnam War. Indeed, for almost 10 years, Moscow had to carry on a war unsupportable by the government, a conflict that brought about the demoralization and finally the breakup of the Soviet empire." (34)

Zbig's Afghan trap is not about "anti-communism". It is sprung so that one group of criminals (Globalists) can gain advantage over another group of criminals (Soviets), and entrap them into the coming world government.

Brzezinski (above) and the CIA armed Afghan fighters against the Soviets.

NOVEMBER, 1980
CONSERVATIVES REJOICE AS RONALD REAGAN IS ELECTED PRESIDENT

Former California Governor Ronald Reagan defeats former CIA boss George HW Bush in a bitter Republican primary. Conservatives are hopeful that Reagan will unseat Jimmy Carter. Reagan was a Goldwater supporter and an anti-Red informant during his days as a Hollywood actor. During his campaign, he advocates taking a hard line against the Soviets, and preaches the virtues of limited government, a gold standard, less spending, and low taxes. He even pledges that the Trilateral Commission will not control his administration!

But political realities soon cause Reagan to be maneuvered into surrounding himself with TC/CFR manipulators, including his choice for Vice President - George HW Bush. With inflation, taxes, and unemployment all skyrocketing, the charismatic Reagan defeats Carter easily.

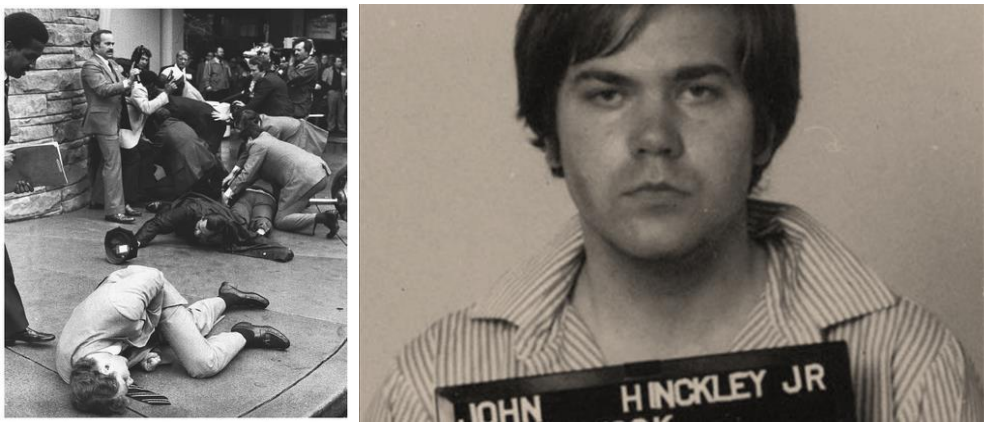
Reagan was a decent man who lost control of his Presidency to the Globalists and Zionists who had been placed all around him.

1981 - 2000



MARCH, 1981
RONALD REAGAN IS SHOT / GLOBALIST GEORGE HW BUSH NEARLY BECOMES PRESIDENT

Just 69 days into the Reagan presidency, John Hinckley fires his pistol at President Reagan. A policeman, a body guard, and Reagan's Treasury Secretary are badly injured. Reagan himself is hit by a ricocheting bullet that punctures his lung and comes within inches of killing him, and inches from making Globalist CIA man George HW Bush the new President.

John Hinckley's brother, Scott, is an oil executive. The Hinckley's, like the Bushes, made their money in oil. It was confirmed by the Associated Press that Scott Hinckley had been scheduled to dine at the home of Marvin Bush, one of George Bush's sons, the night after the event took place. (1)

The Hinckleys were also big contributors to the Bush campaign. Is there a connection between the CIA Bush Family and the psychotic John Hinckley's attempt to kill Reagan?

After the initial AP report, the connection was never pursued again. What did come out of the assassination attempt was a much more "moderate" Ronald Reagan. Reagan's Presidency, though a great improvement over Jimmy Carter's, will do nothing to reverse America's march towards Globalism and socialism.

Reagan's Treasury Secretary, a bodyguard, and a DC cop were also seriously wounded by John Hinckley.

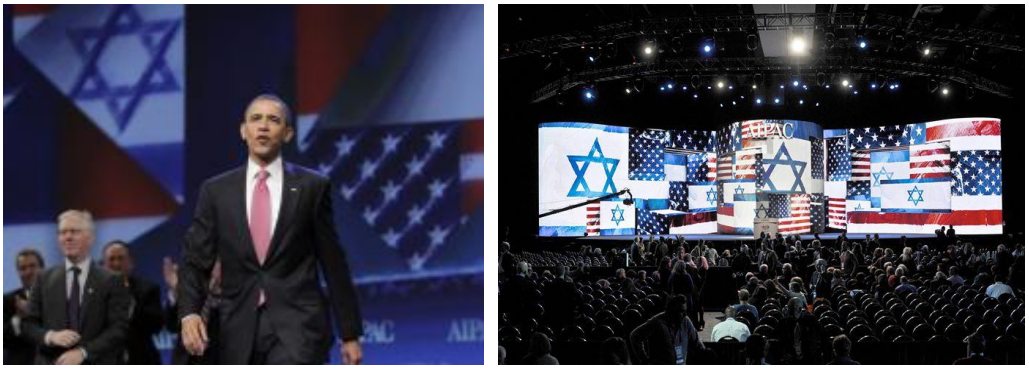
SEPTEMBER, 1983
SOVIETS SHOOT DOWN KAL FLIGHT 007 / U.S. CONGRESSMAN & BIRCH SOCIETY PRESIDENT KILLED

The world is horrified when the Soviets shoot down Korean Air 007, killing 269 people. Congressman Dr. Lawrence Patton McDonald (D-GA), cousin of General George Patton, is on board. Bright, handsome, articulate, McDonald's "star quality" has destined him for higher office. Of concern to the Globalists is the fact that he is also President of the John Birch Society. McDonald had once written:

"The goal of the Rockefellers is world government, combining capitalism and Communism under the same tent. Do I mean conspiracy? Yes I do. I am convinced of such a plot, international in scope, generations old in planning, and incredibly evil in intent." (2)

Also due to fly on KAL 007 were anti-Communist Senators Jesse Helms (R-NC) and Steve Symms (R-ID), who didn't fly due to delays. If not for the delays, a decapitation of Congress's three leading anti-Communists would have occurred. When addressing the nation after the tragedy, President Reagan does not mention McDonald's name, for fear it would spark "conspiracy theories."

One of those theories is that the U.S. shadow government baited and duped the Soviets into taking out the plane – thus embarrassing the Soviets and taking out McDonald at the same time.



The most dangerous enemy of the Globalists and Communists was eliminated.

1980 – PRESENT
AIPAC – THE ISRAEL LOBBY – BECOMES A MAJOR FORCE IN AMERICAN POLITICS

Though founded during the 1950's, it is not until the 1980's that The American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) becomes an unstoppable force to be reckoned with. In the present day, AIPAC is - without a doubt - the most feared pressure-group in America.

It's affluent, and very vocal, 100,000 members pump millions of dollars into both political parties. American politicians, who fail to follow AIPAC's policy line on Israel-Arab issues, will soon find themselves running against a well-funded, media-hyped challenger. AIPAC openly boasts about the politicians that have been unseated as a result of their activism.

At its swanky annual conventions, 75% of all US Congressmen and Senators have been known to attend! (3) Governors, sitting Presidents and Presidential contenders are usually in attendance as well. Journalist and 1992/96 Presidential candidate Patrick Buchanan said it best when he once wrote: "Congress is Israeli occupied territory." (4)

Fast Forward to 2011: President Obama pays his respects to Israel at the annual AIPAC convention.

1980-1988
THE IRAN-IRAQ WAR / GLOBALISTS USE IRAQ AND IRAN TO WEAKEN EACH OTHER

Iraq and Iran are both up and coming nations of the Middle East. The Globo-Zionist Axis of Evil seeks to destroy and enslave both nations into the Global system. To this end, the U.S. supports Saddam Hussein of Iraq in a long protracted war against Iran. Estimates of the final death toll vary extremely, but it is safe to say that 100's of 1000's –soldiers as well as civilians – are killed on both sides.

American support for Iraq during the war includes billion of dollars' worth of economic aid the sale of technology, weaponry, military intelligence, special operations training, and indirect involvement in warfare against Iran. This support is not a secret and is frequently discussed in open session of the Senate and House of Representatives.

Soon after the war, the dirty double-dealers of the Council on Foreign Relations will then turn on Saddam Hussein, whom they had used as a tool and will then discard like a used-up lemon.

1- Saddam Hussein donated large sums to various institutions in his campaign to curry favor with the U.S.. In 1980 the Mayor of Detroit, Coleman Young, made Saddam an honorary citizen.

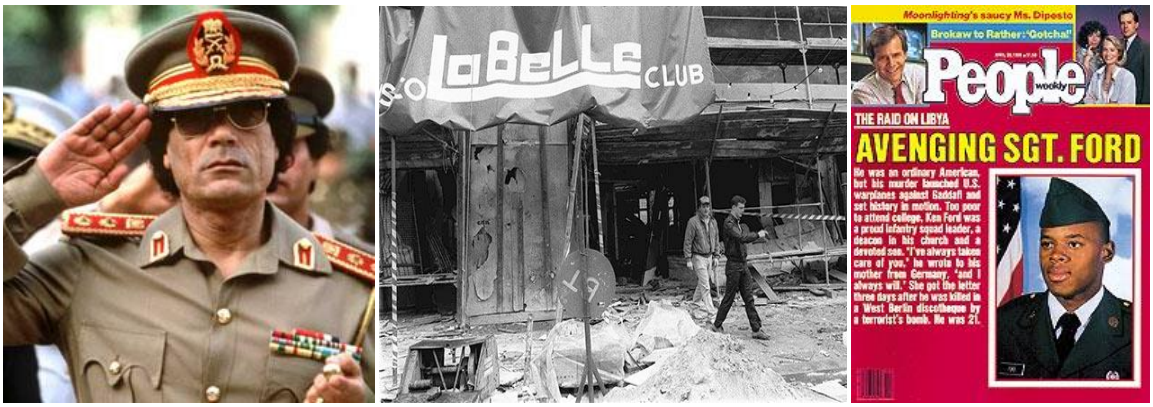
2- 1983: Saddam shakes hands with Special Envoy Donald Rumsfeld, who, years later, will be a key member of the George Bush Neo-Con gang that murders Saddam!

APRIL 17, 1984
LIBYA FALSELY ACCUSED OF KILLING BRITISH POLICE WOMAN

The international Zionist campaign to isolate Libya and its leader, Colonel Muammar Qaddafi, intensifies during an April 1984 anti-Libya demonstration in London. As a crowd forms outside the Libyan embassy, shots suddenly ring out towards the crowd.

Eleven people are wounded, and a 25 year old British police woman named Yvonne Fletcher is killed. Media images of her heartbreaking death are broadcast non-stop in the western press. Following the shooting, the embassy was surrounded by armed police for 11 days, in one of the longest police sieges in London's history. Despite no evidence of Libyan wrongdoing, the UK then ends diplomatic relations with Libya.

To this day, the case has never been solved. Who fired the shots? From where were the shots really fired? Who benefited from the senseless murder? Why would the Libyans kill a young woman and damage their image? The televised murder of Yvonne Fletcher damages Libya in particular and all Arabs/Muslims in general, while benefiting its Zionist enemies. There will be more anti-Libya intelligence operations to follow in the coming years.



Who did it? Qaddafi or the Israeli Mossad?

APRIL 5, 1986
LIBYA FALSELY ACCUSED OF BOMBING GERMAN DISCO / REAGAN BOMBS LIBYA / KILLS QADDAFI'S DAUGHTER

The 1986 Berlin Disco Bombing is a terrorist attack on the La Belle discotheque in West Berlin, a club commonly frequented by U.S. troops stationed in US occupied West Berlin. The blast kills 3 and injures 230 others. Libya is falsely blamed for the bombing after messages are conveniently intercepted from Libya to the Libyan embassy in East Germany, congratulating the terrorists on a job well done.

The messages are actually sent by Israel's Mossad -who have framed Libya for this latest "false flag" attack (Confirmed by Mossad defector Victor Ostrovsky). (5)

A gullible President Reagan swallows Israel's bait, and retaliates by ordering airstrikes against the Libyan capital of Tripoli and the city of Benghazi. At least 15 civilians are killed in the airstrikes, including Libyan leader Colonel Qaddafi's 1-year old daughter. More than 2,000 others are injured in the murderous bombing raid, engineered by Israel, and carried out by its American puppets and dupes.

Zionists used false flag attacks to target Libyan leader Muammar Qaddafi.

APRIL, 1986
REAGAN &GLOBALIST GORBACHEV END THE COLD WAR / 'GORBY' CALLS FOR 'NEW WORLD ORDER'

The new Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, and Ronald Reagan team up to end the Cold War. Gorbachev wants to also reform the failed Soviet system. Although the end of communism and Soviet tyranny are desirable, ‘Gorbachev’s liberalization programs of "Perestroika" and “Glasnost” have little to do with love of liberty or free-market economics.

Unlike previous Russian leaders who were Soviets First, Gorbachev is a Globalist. Soviet Communism has served its historical purpose. Now, instead of Moscow plotting to rule the world, ‘Gorby’ wants to deliver the USSR and eastern Europe to the London-New York masters of the New World Order. In a 1988 UN speech, Gorby speaks Globalist code:

“Global progress is possible only through a quest for universal consensus in the movement towards the New World Order." (6)

Gorbachev is mega-hyped by the media and wins the Nobel Peace Prize in 1990. The anti-Communist and aging Ronald Reagan appears ignorant of the bigger picture behind the "end of the Cold War". Old line Stalinist supremacists in Russia still haven't figured out who the real bosses of the Global Game really are. They oppose Gorby, but it is too late for them to prop up their rotten system. Gorby and his "reformers" take control of the soon-to-be broken up USSR.

The Reagan-Gorby talks were hyped by the Globalist media as the "Thawing of the Cold War"

1988
THE RUSH LIMBAUGH DECEPTION IS BORN / NEO-CON TALK RADIO HOST GOES NATIONWIDE

The Globalists are known for setting up "controlled opposition" to themselves. This allows anti-socialist, anti-Globalist, anti-Zionist resistance movements to be misdirected and watered down. False "conservative" leaders like William F. Buckley were skillfully used for this exact purpose.

The foremost 'disinfo' agent of the current day is neo-con radio talk show legend, Rush Limbaugh. Limbaugh's program does indeed expose the lies and the corruption of the Democrats in an enlightening and entertaining manner. But the "poison pill" solution that he feeds to his many millions of gullible listeners is to "vote Republican."

The false "left-right" illusion is what keeps the American public enslaved to a "two party system" in which both parties are New World Order controlled. Limbaugh has been a guest-of-honor in Israel, and has mercilessly ridiculed "conspiracy theorists" who "buy into" World Government conspiracy theories. As of 2014, Limbaugh is earning $50 million per year, and has spawned a gaggle of many other "Neo-Con" talk show con-men such as Glen Beck, Sean Hannity, Bill O'Reilly and others.

1- Limbaugh is a Republican operative who protects Israel and ridicules critics of The New World Order as "kooks".

2- In later years, frauds such as Sean Hannity and Glenn Beck will follow in his footsteps.

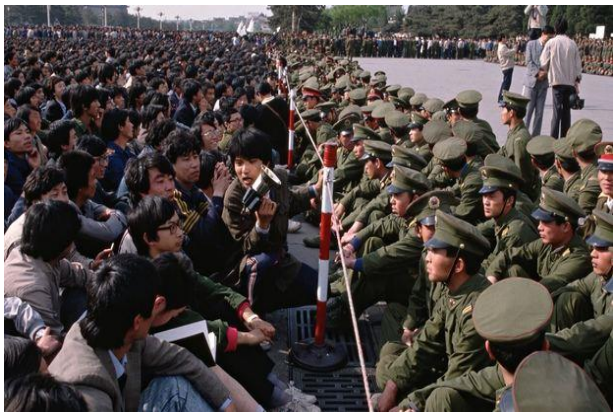
DECEMBER, 1988
PAN AM 103 BLOWS UP OVER SCOTLAND - LIBYA IS FALSELY ACCUSED

After departing from London's Heathrow Airport, New York bound Pan Am Flight 103 explodes over Lockerbie, Scotland, killing 259 passengers (178 Americans) and 11 unlucky Lockerbie residents on the ground.

Anonymous phone calls from "Muslims groups" claim credit for the terrorist bombing. Ultimately, blame will be assigned to a "Libyan terrorist" working for Muammar Qaddafi. Libya firmly denies responsibility for the attack which, as usual, greatly damages the image of Arabs while at the same time creating sympathy for America's "Israeli ally."

A Libyan named Abdelbaset al-Megrahi is tried and sentenced in Scotland. Relatives of some of the Scottish victims will later state that they believe that al-Megrahi was wrongly accused. (7) Al-Megrahi will finally be released in 2010 after independent researchers destroy the false case against him. He will receive a hero's welcome upon returning to Libya after having spent 20 years in prison. The true culprits of the Pan Am bombing get away with mass murder!

Israel framed an innocent Libyan national for the murder of American & British passengers.



JUNE, 1989
MASSACRE IN TIANANMEN SQUARE (China) / GLOBALIST ENGINEERED 'DEMOCRACY MOVEMENT' IS CRUSHED

As the Globalists continue to pull the rug out from under the very same Communists that they had created in Eastern Europe, a similar operation unfolds in China. Massive protests involving the usual suspects ("students") capture the world's sympathy. Many of these students had studied in the USA - where the CIA surely made good use of their discontent.

The students gather in Beijing's Tiananmen Square, brandishing paper sculptures of "the Goddess of Liberty"; and demanding "democracy". The "spontaneous" protests grow larger by the day as thousands of workers, with legitimate grievances; join the students in the protests.

Finally, the Chinese government reverts to its hard line ways. Foreign press is thrown out as the military cracks down on the crowd. Student leaders of the "democracy movement" are hunted down and arrested. Globalist George Soros's 'human rights' organization is forced to pack up and leave. (8) China will continue moving towards a more market-based economy, but it is not yet ripe for a Globalist 'Velvet' takeover by the Soros / Brzezinski / CIA gang.

1- The iconic "Tank Man" of Tiananmen Square stood down a column of Chinese tanks.

2- Once again, it was naïve college students who were incited by deep cover Globalist operatives.

NOVEMBER, 1989
THE BERLIN WALL IS TORN DOWN / GLOBALISTS MAKE BIG MOVES IN EASTERN EUROPE

Weakened by a disastrous war in Afghanistan (engineered by Brzezinski), the USSR can no longer hold the Communist world together. When Communism collapses in Eastern Europe, the common view is that it is due to its own inefficiencies. But the role of Globalist Billionaire George Soros and the CIA in the "Velvet Revolutions" is a critical factor. (9)

Since 1979, Soros had been financing "dissidents" like Solidarity (Poland), Charter 77 (Czechoslovakia) and Sakharov (USSR). His Open Society Institute pumps cash into opposition movements and media. Ostensibly aiming to promote "human rights", Soros and the CIA are actually weakening existing political structures in order to eventually consolidate the ex-Communist states into the New World Order.

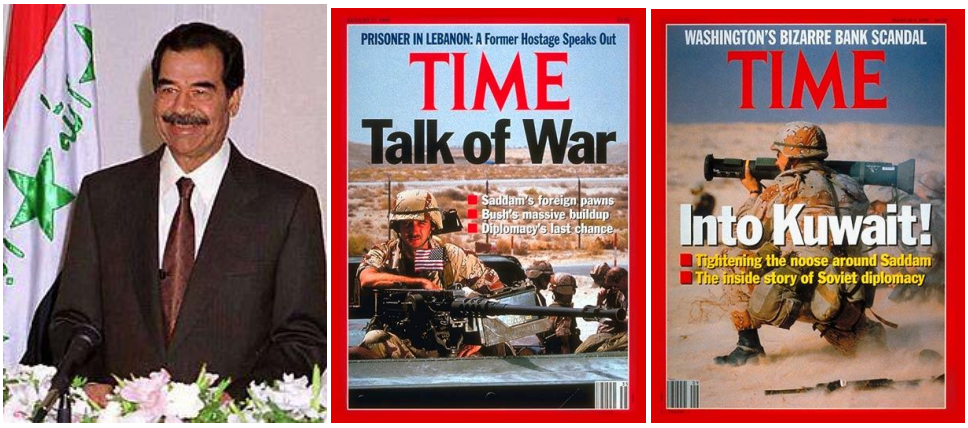
Over the past century, the Communist menace had accomplished the three major Globalist goals:

1. Subverting the pre-existing nationalist governments
2. Establishing centralized socialism within the targeted nations
3. Scaring the "free world" into socialist political blocs.

Now it is time to 'pull the plug' on the Communists and swallow them up into the New World Order.

1- The Berlin wall is taken down so new prison wall can be built around the ENTIRE globe!

2- Globalist agent Lech Walesa leads Poland's "Solidarity" uprising.



AUGUST, 1990
PRESIDENT GEORGE HW BUSH STARTS A WAR WITH IRAQ / OPENLY CALLS FOR A 'NEW WORLD ORDER'

Unlike Arab states Egypt, Jordan, and Saudi Arabia, the Globalists do not control Saddam's Hussein's oil rich Iraq. Like Libya's Qaddafi, Hussein is a nationalist, and also a defender of the oppressed Palestinians. This makes Iraq a target of both the Zionist and Bilderberger factions of the New World Order Crime Syndicate, who bait Hussein into invading Kuwait so as to have a pretext for war.

President George HW Bush (CFR/TC) raises eyebrows when he uses a certain phrase in citing his reasons for attacking Iraq. Bush declares:

"Out of these troubled times a New World Order can emerge under a United Nations that performs as envisioned by its founders." (10)

The Gulf War is brief and limited as US armed forces quickly expel Iraq from Kuwait. But the ensuing UN economic sanctions will lead to the slow death of as many as 1 million Iraqis over the next 10 years.

Saddam Hussein was tricked by the Globalists into invading Kuwait, and then blamed for a war he did not want.

JUNE, 1991
BORIS YELTSIN ELECTED PRESIDENT OF THE NEW RUSSIAN FEDERATION / GLOBALISTS RAPE RUSSIA

Elected President in 1991, Boris Yeltsin is a totally inept and drunken autocrat. After dissolving the Soviet Union, he hands control of Russia over to internal criminal Zionist Oligarchs and external NWO Globalists.

The naïve (or treasonous?), Yeltsin turns to Harvard economists and Globalist institutions such as the IMF, World Bank, and US Treasury for help in transitioning Russia from communism to a market-based economy.

The recommended "shock therapy" causes an economic downturn as severe as that of the U.S. or Germany during the Great Depression. Zionist 'Russian' businessmen buy up entire State industries for pennies-in-the-dollar. This Globalist – Zionist rape of Russia is by design. The plan is to weaken post-communist Russia so much so that it can be swallowed up by the New World Order.

1- Good Old Boris was a lovable drunken fool that the Globalists & Zionist Oligarchs took advantage of.

2- Jewish-Russian Oligarchs and the New York partners raped Russia (left-to-right: Aleksandr Smolensky, Mikhail Khodorkovsky, Vladimir Gusinsky.

1992
ROTHSCHILD FAMILY BUILDS ISRAELI SUPREME COURT IN JERUSALEM / DESIGNERS USE ILLUMINATI SYMBOLISM

1- Israel's Supreme Court Building was built by the Rothschilds. Note the Illuminati Pyramid on roof (left side).

2- Painting at the entrance of the Supreme Court – members of the Rothschild family with Israeli leaders Peres and Rabin

1991-1992
PHONY 'WAR HEROES' IN THE U.S. SENATE BETRAY AMERICAN POW's ONCE AND FOR ALL

The Senate Committee on POW/MIA Affairs convenes in response to pressure from families of Vietnam War POWs. The families of the missing men (abandoned by Nixon & Kissinger) are hopeful that the hearings will lead to the return of their loved ones still being held in Vietnamese camps.

To add credibility to the hearings, two Senators who were Vietnam "war heroes" play prominent roles. John Kerry (D-MA/CFR) is a Purple Heart recipient who chairs the committee. John McCain (R-AZ/CFR) was a POW himself and a "victim of torture."

The "heroism" of these future Presidential nominees is mythical. Kerry's 'wounds' were not sustained in combat. A minor arm scratch was treated with a band-aid, and a buttocks bruise was self-inflicted. Kerry himself (an officer due to his Yale college degree) put in for his own Purple Hearts! (11)

As for McCain, his 'torture' tale is pure fiction. To the contrary, he was given preferred treatment by the Vietnamese in exchange for giving information to his captors. McCain's stunning collaboration earned him the nickname "the songbird." (12)

These two PHONIES stonewall the investigation and humiliate the POW families. At one point, the abusive and angry McCain makes one POW family member (a woman) cry! (13)Traitors Kerry & McCain have closed the lid on the POW-MIA betrayal - forever.

1- Shameless cowards Kerry& McCain built their careers by lying about their war experiences in Vietnam.

2- McCain throws a temper tantrum as he raises his voice and belittles POW family members.

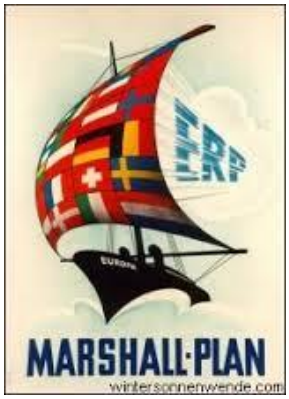
FEBRUARY, 1993
'FALSE FLAG' TERROR BOMBING AT THE WORLD TRADE CENTER

A massive truck bomb detonates beneath the North Tower of the World Trade Center in New York City. The device is intended to knock the North Tower into the South Tower, destroying both and killing thousands. The mighty tower withstands the basement blast, but 6 people die and hundreds are sickened from smoke inhalation.

The bombing occurs at a time when Zionists within the government are trying to maneuver President Bill Clinton into a land war with Iraq. A group of four Arab "patsies" are arrested and tried. At the trial, Emad Salem -an ex Egyptian Army Officer turned FBI informant- reveals that when he had infiltrated the plot and informed his FBI handlers, the FBI did nothing to stop it, and actually allowed the patsy bombers to be supplied with the explosives! (14)

To protect himself and to support his claim, Salem releases tape recordings of conversations in which he specifically warned the FBI about the pending bombing!

Dress rehearsal? The Towers withstood the massive blast, but will be targeted again in 2001.



NOVEMBER 1993
THE GLOBALIST 'EUROPEAN UNION' IS ESTABLISHED

The European Union (EU) is a political and economic union of the formerly sovereign nations of Europe. Trilateralists and Bilderbergers dominate the EU. The Globalist conquest of Europe originally took the form of a post-war "recovery program" (Marshall Plan). That soon gave way to seemingly harmless "free-trade" deals. Through patient gradualism, the EU now emerges as a regional New World Order, whose power will surpass that of its individual member nations.

By 2011, the EU will have 27 members (including former Communist states from Eastern Europe), a common currency (the Euro), a European Bank, and a socialist bureaucracy answerable to no one. To transform Europe into a "multi-cultural" society, EU officials will now flood the continent with North African and Middle

Asian immigrants. Never forget Disraeli quoting Sidonia: "the mixed persecuting race disappears". (15)

Based in Brussels but under the thumb of New York / DC, the Globalist EU is also a major player in promoting the Global Warming Hoax and the "carbon taxes" that will go along with it.

Step-by-step and by design! From the post-World War II Marshall Plan to the current socialist super state - Rothschild's dream advances forward.

DECEMBER, 1993
BILL CLINTON (with Republican help) SIGNS 'NAFTA' INTO LAW / LAYS FOUNDATION FOR NORTH AMERICAN UNION

One month after the EU is established, the Globalists make a similar move in North America, when newly elected President Bill Clinton (CFR,TC,B) signs NAFTA: The North American Free Trade Agreement into law.

After having attended the 1991 Bilderberg conference in Baden-Baden Germany, the unknown Arkansas Governor was suddenly catapulted into the Presidency in 1992 (taking office in 1993).

As President, Clinton's biggest contribution to Globalism will be to embroil the US into NAFTA, whose true purpose is to submerge the U.S. into a regional economic bloc with Canada and Mexico, in exactly the same way as European "free trade" deals led to the formation of the EU. Clinton's feminist wife, Hillary Rodham, had served as the Chairman of the Marxist Globalist New World Foundation during the 1980's. (16)

The long term plan is to expand membership southward into Central & Latin America.

With strong Republican support, Democrat Clinton signs Globalist inspired NAFTA into law.

MAY, 1994
COMMUNIST NELSON MANDELA INSTALLED IN SOUTH AFRICA

South Africa's system of political separation between its founding White Afrikaner population and the African blacks, (Apartheid) serves as a convenient pretext for the Globalists to subvert the anti-Communist, nationalist, and mineral rich nation. After years of isolation from the "international community", the jewel of the African continent caves in to relentless Globalist pressure over its "racism".

In its first mixed-race election, Communist and former terrorist Nelson Mandela is elected in a landslide by the majority Black population. Afrikaners are permanently dispossessed of the nation that their own forefathers built as socialism and cultural degeneracy is enshrined. Ironically, anti-Communist Blacks who oppose Mandela are often tortured and killed by Mandela's cult-like followers.

But the Globalists do not care at all about the black people of South Africa.

Thanks to its Marxist politics, the once prosperous nation is today marked by high unemployment, an AIDS epidemic, high crime, and vicious anti-white atrocities. For this, Mandela goes on to win a Nobel Peace Prize.

Left to right: Winnie Mandela, Nelson Mandela and Yossel Slovo at an ANC rally, 1990.

1- In the name of "anti-racism", South Africa was handed over to Marxist control.

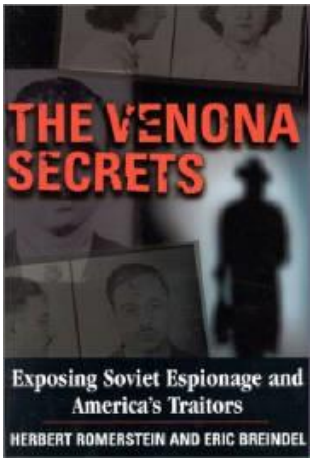
2- In South Africa today, 10% of the White population (400,000 Whites) lives in "squatter camps", completely dependent upon charity from Blacks who were given their jobs.

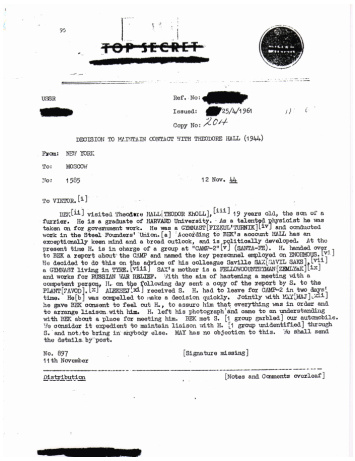
APRIL 19, 1995
'FALSE FLAG' BOMBING IN OKLAHOMA

Two years into the unpopular Clinton presidency, there is a national backlash against his radical socialist-Globalist policies. The 1994 Congressional elections deliver a massive defeat to Clinton's Democrat Party. Anti-Globalist patriot groups are growing rapidly.

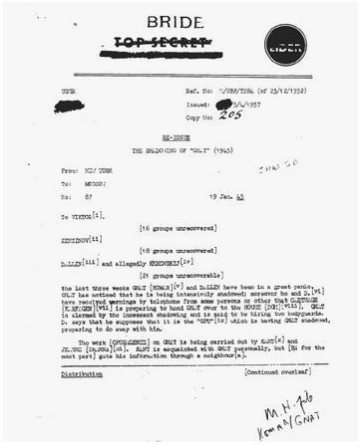
On April 19, 1995, the anti-Globalist patriot movement is dealt a devastating public relations setback when the bombing of the Alfred Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City kills 168 Americans. The terror attack was falsely linked to American patriots and anti-Clinton critics. A patsy named Tim McVeigh is accused of causing the partial building collapse with a "fertilizer truck bomb."
Clear evidence of pre-planted explosives in the building is covered up by the Media. (17)

After shedding crocodile tears for the cameras, Clinton's popularity ratings rebound as the "discredited" Patriot movement all but fizzles out.





Oklahoma was a false flag bombing designed to frame up American patriot groups. The shadowy Tim McVeigh was executed.



JULY, 1995
THE 'VENONA INTERCEPTS' FROM WORLD WAR II ARE MADE PUBLIC / JOE McCARTHY WAS RIGHT!

The VENONA Project was a secret collaboration of U.S. and British intelligence involving the decoding of messages sent by Soviet Intelligence, mostly during World War II. Although unknown to the public, and unknown even to Presidents FDR and Truman, this information concerned critical events concerning the early Cold War.

The intercepts, not made public until 1995, will not only confirm the treason of the Rosenbergs, Harry Dexter White, J. Robert Oppenheimer, and Alger Hiss, but also implicate high-ranking officials in the US Treasury, State Department, the OSS (CIA), The Manhattan Project, and the White House itself. Most of the messages were intercepted between 1942 and 1945. Sometime in 1945, a Communist U.S. army analyst named Bill Weisband neutralized the VENONA Project by revealing its existence to his Soviet handlers.

McCarthy was right, after all! "The Venona Secrets" by Romerstein and Breindel tells the real story – but doesn't go "up the ladder".

1996 - 2001
FOUR AIRLINERS FROM NY's JFK AIRPORT FALL OUT OF THE SKY OVER A FIVE YEAR PERIOD

Im[illegible] after just departing from the same airport (JFK/NY)

More than 11 million flights depart and/or land safely from the United States each year. Statistically, for even a single airplane to suddenly fall out of the sky is a very unusual event.

But from 1996-2001, four such cases occur, and in all 4 cases, the doomed airliners had just departed from the same airport in New York. The most ridiculous explanations imaginable are given for the four tragedies - each of which appears to be connected to the usual suspects.

1. JULY 17, 1996: TWA 800 / 230 KILLED

Official story: "spontaneous explosion caused by a mechanical failure"
Interesting Fact:100 eyewitnesses provide sworn statements stating that they saw a missile hit the plane. One week later, a bomb explodes at the Atlanta Summer Olympics. If not for the quick thinking of a security guard, as many as 100 people could have died. It appears that someone is trying to push a reluctant President Bill Clinton into another war with Iraq!

2. SEPTEMBER 2, 1998: SWISS AIR 111 / 229 KILLED

Official story: "The plane just caught fire and then the pilots lost control of it.
Interesting Fact: At this time, Switzerland was being squeezed very hard by Zionists over allegations of holding gold stolen from "Holocaust" victims.

3. OCTOBER 31, 1999: EGYPT AIR 990 / 217 KILLED

Official story: The co-pilot wanted to commit suicide and took the plane down with him Interesting Fact: 30 high ranking Egyptian military officers were on board the plane. Protestors in Egypt reject the "suicide" claim and accuse Israel of taking down Flight 990.

4. NOVEMBER 12, 2001: AMERICAN AIR 587 / 260 KILLED

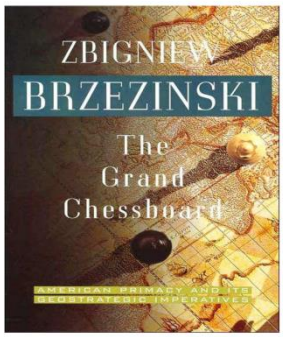
Official Story: Flight 587 was broken up by "wake air turbulence" created by another plane that had just departed!
Interesting Fact: Numerous witnesses saw the plane catch fire in midair before it crashed into a residential neighborhood. The crash occurs just 2 months after "9/11", clearly staged by the same 'perps'!

TWA–Swiss Air–Egypt Air –American Air: What's going on at JFK Airport?



1998
ZBIGNIEW BRZEZINSKI DROPS HINTS OF A COMING 'MASSIVE EXTERNAL THREAT' AND ANOTHER 'PEARL HARBOR'

For 40 years, Zbigniew Brzezinksi (CFR-TC-B) has served as geo-political strategist for David Rockefeller. His 1998 book, The Grand Chessboard, lays out a grand plan for the U.S. to control Central Asia, and set up bases ringing China and Russia. Realizing how difficult it is to get Americans to support foreign adventures, "Zbig" hints of a coming "massive external threat", and invokes the "shock effect" of Pearl Harbor. He writes:

"America may find it difficult to fashion consensus on foreign policy, except in the circumstance of a truly massive external threat." (18) And further adds:

"The attitude of the American public toward the projection of power has been ambivalent. The public supported America's engagement in World War II because of the shock effect of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor." (19)

Zbig's books are written for snobbish "intellectuals" and elite policymakers, not for the general public. What The Grand Chessboard does is "tip off" others in the inner circle that a false flag terror event will be used to kick off Eurasian military adventures in the coming years.

1- In his own words, Zbig speaks about "an external threat" along the lines of a "Pearl Harbor" mobilizing the U.S. into Central Asian militarism. That is exactly what we see happening today (2015)

2- 1998: Brezezinki celebrates 25th Anniversary of the Trilateral Commission with fellow Trilateralists such as former Fed Chairman Paul Volcker (tall one) and David Rockefeller (on right)

AUGUST, 1998
A NEW VILLAIN IS INTRODUCED! / U.S. EMBASSIES IN AFRICA ALLEGEDLY BOMBED BY 'OSAMA BIN LADEN'

Right on Brzezinski's cue!

The US embassies in Kenya & Tanzania are bombed simultaneously. Of the 223 killed, only 12 are Americans, and the rest are Africans. A new "villain" is introduced to the American people, and falsely blamed for the attacks. The public is told that a Saudi Arabian billionaire named Osama Bin Laden and his "Al Qaeda" terrorist network are responsible for the attacks.

In response, President Clinton orders missile strikes on Sudan and Osama's hideout in Afghanistan. The strike on Sudan destroys a vital pharmaceutical factory, causing hardship for the poor people of Sudan. The "truly massive external threat" that Zbigniew Brzezinski had recently foretold has been created.

Like a Hollywood film, the introduction of the Bin Laden "threat" sets up the perfect scapegoat for a much bigger terrorist attack to come "later on in the movie". This will eventually trigger the occupation of Central Asia and the increased military budget that the Globalists want so badly.

Right on cue! Brzezinski's Central Asian "bogeyman" is introduced to the American public.

NOVEMBER, 1998
MORE HIGH-RANKING GLOBO-ZIONISTS FORETELL OF A MAJOR "CATATROPHIC TERRORISM' EVENT

In the wake of the embassy bombings in Africa (falsely blamed on Osama Bin Laden) Globalist Ashton B. Carter (future Defense Secretary /2015), Zionist John Deutch (an ex-CIA Director), and Zionist Philip D. Zelikow (future Director of 9/11 Commission cover up) co-author an article in the Council on Foreign Relation's (CFR) 'Foreign Affairs' magazine. In it, they lay out what changes would need to be made within the U.S. government in the wake of "catastrophic terrorism," which is also the title of the article.

The "Catastrophic Terrorism" article begins with the strange subtitle 'Imagining the Transforming Event', and advocates a transformation of the U.S. government and the way Americans live."

Again, Pearl Harbor is invoked:

*"Like Pearl Harbor, this event would divide our past and future into a before and after."(20)

These Globalists and Zionists are up to something!

Carter, Zelikow, Deutch: More big names warning us about "Pearl Harbor"

JULY, 1999
JOHN F KENNEDY JR. IS KILLED IN A SUSPICIOUS PLANE CRASH

JFK Jr. is publisher of "George" magazine. Bright, young, and very handsome, it is speculated that the 38-year-old socialite may soon follow in the footsteps of his famous father and soon run for NY Senate. (21) If "John-John" runs for office, he will be unstoppable. The sinister forces who killed his father and his uncle must take out John-John before he can start his political career.

Any chance of JFK's son rising to high office ends when his private plane crashes; killing him, his wife, and sister-in-law. Suspiciously, the media is very quick to proclaim "pilot error", falsely claiming that JFK Jr. was an incompetent pilot and that visibility was poor. Both claims turn out to be false! (22)

Evidence of a conspiracy will surface later on. Oddly enough, all of the bodies are cremated. By now fully corrupted and intimidated the Kennedy clan, led by the drunken degenerate Senator Ted Kennedy, is forced to remain silent. Hillary Clinton will run for, and win, the Senate seat in New York.

The killers of Pappa JFK, Uncle RFK, patsy Oswald, and Oswald's killer Ruby had to get to JFK Jr. early on.

OCTOBER 19, 1999
WALTER CRONKITE & HILLARY CLINTON OPENLY REVEAL THEIR SUPPORT FOR WORLD GOVERNMENT

During his long career as CBS anchor, Walter Cronkite (CFR) was billed as "The Most Trusted Man in America." Recall that it was Cronkite who betrayed America's troops, with a false report about the Tet Offensive.

Cronkite's disloyalty to America is now confirmed when the World Federalist Association awards the "Global Governance Award" to the aging news legend. After being saluted via a video-feed by First Lady Hilary Clinton (CFR), Cronkite makes a stunning admission:

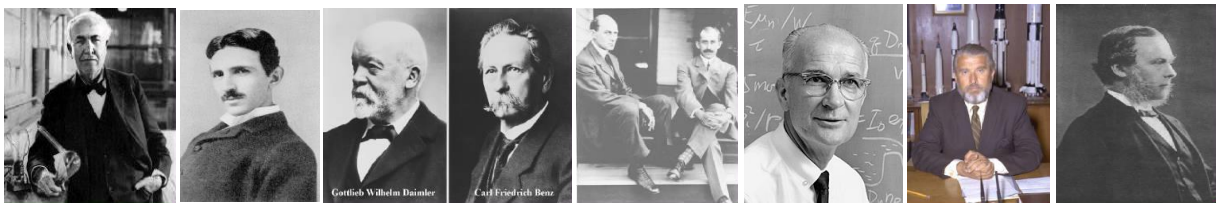
*"For many years, I did my best to report on the issues of the day in as objective a manner as possible. When I had my own strong opinions, as I often did, I tried not to communicate them to my audience. Now, however, my circumstances are different. I am in a position to speak my mind. And that is what I propose to do. ...we must strengthen the United Nations as a first step toward a world government." (23)

The media ignores Hilary Clinton's contribution to this subversive event, as well as Cronkite's admission.

World Federalist Association
Without Global Law, There can be no Global Justice!

The Most Trusted Man in America" turns out to have been a 'One World' agent all along!

DECEMBER, 1999
EINSTEIN NAMED TIME's 'PERSON OF THE CENTURY' / ZIONIST MEDIA IGNORES THE TRUE SCIENTIFIC GIANTS



When one thinks of "genius" the name of the overrated Marxist / Zionist / Plagiarist Albert Einstein automatically comes to mind. This is not by accident! Every half-educated school child in America knows to equate Einstein with genius. For this, Albert Einstein is named "Person of the Century" by TIME magazine.

The true geniuses of late 19th and 20th century science and invention are, for the most part, fading or forgotten.

FORGET EINSTEIN! / TRUE GIANTS OF SCIENCE

Einstein, the plagiarist of a still disputed theory, is not worthy to even carry the notebooks of these men who TRULY changed the world.

Thomas Edison (1847-1931) - Prolific American inventor, scientist, and businessman who developed many devices that greatly improved the quality of our lives. These include the phonograph (record player), motion picture camera, and the first practical light bulb. Edison was known as "The Wizard of Menlo Park" (now Edison, NJ) Remember Thomas Edison the next time to turn on a light, listen to a CD or watch a DVD, or watch a movie.

Nikola Tesla (1856-1943)- Serbian inventor, mechanical & electrical engineer. He was a major contributor to the birth of commercial electricity and is best known for his revolutionary developments in the field of electromagnetism. His work helped usher in the Second Industrial Revolution. Tesla, in private letters, dismissed Einstein as a "long-haired crank" and his space-warping Relativity Theory as the result of “unclear thinking”- further suggesting that its proponents were not sane. (24) Tesla died in debt - alone and forgotten in a New York hotel room.

Gottlieb Daimler (1834-1900) & Carl Benz(1844-1929) German engineers whose separate work led to the development of an internal combustion engine feasible for use in the first automobile. Henry Ford would later pioneer mass production of these "cars", making them much more affordable. Remember Daimler, Benz, and Ford the next time you drive your car.

Wright Brothers (Orville 1871-1948, Wilbur 1867-1912) American inventors and builders of the world's first successful airplane. the Wright brothers were the first to invent aircraft controls that made fixed-wing powered flight possible. Remember these two men the next time you fly on a plane!

Willis Carrier (1876-1950) - American engineer and inventor. It was Carrier who invented modern air conditioning. Remember this man on a hot summer day. It is because of him that you can escape the oppressive heat, in your car or at home.

William Shockley (1910-1989) - American physicist and inventor. Shockley co-invented the transistor. His work contributed greatly to the development and availability of modern computers and electronics. Shockley is referred to as "The Father of Silicon Valley." Remember him whenever you use a computer or play a video game.

Wernher von Braun (1912-1977) - German rocket scientist, aerospace engineer, and space architect. Von Braun was a decorated war hero during World War II. After the war, he came to the United States and worked for NASA. Von Braun became the preeminent rocket scientist of the 20th century.

Joseph Lister (1827-1912) - British surgeon who pioneered anti-septic surgery. (Listerine mouthwash is named after him.) Lister introduced carbolic acid to clean surgical instruments and wounds, making surgery safe for all of us. Lister's scientific advances against germs have saved countless lives.

SEPTEMBER, 2000
ZIONIST 'NEO-CONS' DROP HINT OF A COMING 'NEW PEARL HARBOR'

One year before the 9/11 attacks, Zionist Neo-Cons from PNAC (Project For the New American Century) issue a report entitled: Rebuilding America's Defenses. The ringleader of this cabal is William Kristol, (CFR) son of the Marxist founder of Neo-conservatism, Irving Kristol.

PNAC's report calls for America to dominate the Middle East and overthrow the government of Iraq. To win public approval for such a scheme, the reports foretells of the necessity of tragic event thusly:

"…the process of transformation is likely to be a long one, absent some catastrophic and catalyzing event –like a NEW PEARL HARBOR." (25)

Donald Rumsfeld, Dick Cheney, Robert Kagan, and Paul Wolfowitz are also PNAC members. Each will assume high office when George W Bush, becomes president in 2001.

Like their Bilderberger rival Brzezinski, Neo-Con big shots Bill Kristol and Robert Kagan also bring up "Pearl Harbor". Kagan's wife, Victoria Nuland will later play a big role in engineering a confrontation between the U.S. and Russia (2014).

2001 – 2015

SUMMER 2001
HOLLYWOOD HYPES ITS SUMMER BLOCKBUSTER MOVIE FOR 2001 – PEARL HARBOR!

It has been 60 years since the Japanese "surprise attack" on Pearl Harbor deceived America into World War II. Suddenly, Hollywood decides to produce a multi-million dollar blockbuster about the event - "Pearl Harbor". The super-hyped film resurrects the idiotic myth of Pearl Harbor for a whole new generation of American suckers. Its release is timed for the Summer of 2001.

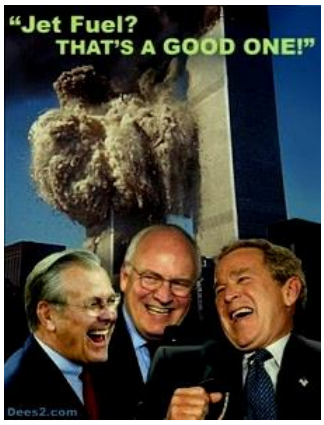
.

When we recall Zbig Brzezinksi's written mention of the "shock effect of Pearl Harbor"; and Ashton Carter's warning of a coming "Pearl Harbor"; and PNAC's written hint (desire) for "a new Pearl Harbor", the sudden release of the summer blockbuster, combined with a certain "surprise" event that is soon to follow, appears very, very convenient indeed. As demonstrated by the "Hollywood 10" case, Hollywood has long been an instrument of the New World Order. The creation, and the hyped-up 2001 Summer release, of "Pearl Harbor" is no accident.

Hollywood hype in Summer 2001 served to psychologically prepped America for "The New Pearl Harbor."

SEPTEMBER 11, 2001
('9-11') / MASSIVE FALSE FLAG ATTACKS KILL 3000 IN NY& DC / OSAMA BIN LADEN FALSELY ACCUSED

The "New Pearl Harbor" event foretold by Brzezinski, Carter, Zelikow, Kristol, Kagan and Hollywood occurs on the infamous date of 9/11/2001 ("9/11"). About 3000 people are killed in the "hijacker" attacks on the Twin Towers in New York, and The Pentagon in Washington.



Before the dust of the attacks has even settled, "9/11" is blamed on Osama Bin Laden and his "Al Qaeda" terrorist network. Common sense as well as forensic evidence will prove that pre-planted explosives demolished the Twin Towers, as well as the lesser-known "Building 7" - a 600 ft. tall skyscraper that was not even hit by a plane! (1)

As for the plane that allegedly struck the Pentagon, not one shred of debris from a commercial airliner can be found at the site! Independent researchers such as David Ray Griffin *(The New Pearl Harbor), and Dr. Albert D. Pastore (Stranger Than Fiction) establish beyond any doubt that the "official story" of 9/11 is a monstrous lie. It is clear that the collaborating factions behind the attacks are the Israelis, the Zionist "Neo-Cons," and the Bilderberg/TC Globalists. The attacks are used as justification for pre-planned invasions of Afghanistan & Iraq, as well as for destabilization plots aimed at other nations in the region.

9/11 marks the start of the New World Order's dual "end game" for global domination via the encirclement of Russia & China, and Israel's drive to dominate the Middle East.

According to Bush & friends, the instant pulverization and aerosol-ization of two massive towers was caused by jet fuel!

SEPTEMBER 11, 2001
FIVE ISRAELI MOSSAD AGENTS ARRESTED IN CONNECTION WITH 9/11 ATTACKS

On the day of the attacks, police in nearby New Jersey receive telephone calls complaining of suspicious looking "movers" seen celebrating and filming the destruction of the Twin Towers. The police issue a Be-On-The-Lookout alert for white vans. One van is stopped as it approaches the Lincoln Tunnel linking New Jersey to Manhattan, and another is stopped as it approaches the George Washington Bridge. Bomb-sniffing dogs detect the scent of explosives in the tunnel-bound van, and the bridge-bound van is packed with explosives. (2)

The following day it is revealed that the 5 suspects are Israelis. They are held for 40 days in a local prison and finally released in December after high level forces in the government overrule the local agents on the case. A Jewish magazine later confirms that the men were agents of Israeli's spy agency, the Mossad. It is a little known fact about 9/11 that the first, and only, arrests made that day were of Israelis, not Arabs. The details are summarized and sourced in the well-researched Internet essay, "The Dancing Israelis", which has circulated worldwide since 2003.

Stranger Than Fiction" By Dr. Albert D. Pastore documented how 5 Israeli agents were linked to 9/11, and later released due to Israeli pressure.

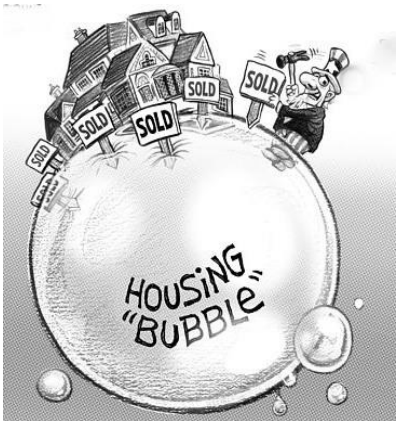
OCTOBER, 2001
THE U.S. AND BRITAIN INVADE AFGHANISTAN AS OSAMA CONTINUES TO CLAIM INNOCENCE

The Brzezinski-Bilderberg plan for Central Asia is set in motion with the invasion of Afghanistan. President Bush and the Establishment media tell the public that the invasion's purpose is to capture Osama Bin Laden – the falsely accused "mastermind" behind 9/11.

Bin Laden denies any involvement in the 9/11 attacks:

"I was not involved in the September 11 attacks nor did I have knowledge of the attacks. There exists a government within a government within the United States. That secret government must be asked who carried out the attacks. The American system is totally in the control of the Jews, whose priority is Israel, not the United States." (3)

Osama Bin Laden repeatedly proclaimed his innocence – but the war to set up a NATO base in Afghanistan was never about him, at all!



AUTUMN, 2001
FEDERAL RESERVE BEGINS INFLATING A MASSIVE HOUSING BUBBLE

Hyped by the Globalist Media as "The Maestro," Zionist Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan (CFR) ignites an artificial 6-year "boom" by pumping up the money supply with artificially low interest rates & easy lending standards. Home buyers with bad credit, unverified income, and little or no down payment, can now purchase homes.

An inflationary housing boom causes home values to skyrocket. The loans make money for the Wall Street firms that buy and resell the notes, until the inevitable correction of the artificial values comes. When the intro "teaser rates" expire, debtors will no longer be able to afford their monthly payments. By '08, a wave of foreclosures will cause home prices to crash, and bankers to lose money. Greenspan deliberately created the largest housing bubble in history. Home buyers will lose their down payments, but the NWO bankers will later have their "investments" bailed out by taxpayers.

1- Alan Greenspan, and his crooked Zionist partners Summers and Rubin, always portrayed by the media as "maestros" and "geniuses".

2- During the 2000's, Greenspan engineered a colossal housing bubble that would later pop. (2008)

2002 – 2005
FALSE FLAG TERROR BOMBINGS KEEP THE WORLD IN FEAR / NON EXISTENT 'AL QAEDA' BLAMED

OCTOBER 12, 2002: Three massive bomb blasts at a Bali resort overturn cars and kills 202 tourists, including 88 Australians. This brings Australian public opinion in line with the "Global War on Terror". As was the case with the 9/11 attacks, this case is instantly solved - by being blamed on "suicide bombers linked to Al Qaeda." A phony tape recording of the already dead Bin Laden (killed in December 2001) takes credit for the attack!

MARCH 11, 2004: Just days before an important election, the Madrid Train bombings kill 191 people. The attacks are immediately blamed on "local cells of Islamic extremists, inspired by the Internet and linked to "Al Qaeda."

JULY 7, 2005: The "7/7" attacks in London kill 56 people when three subways trains and one bus are simultaneously blown up. As was the case with 9/11, it is somehow immediately discovered that the four bombers were "suicide attackers" and, of course, "linked to Al Qaeda".

JULY 23, 2005: 88 people are killed at an Egyptian tourist resort. On some "website", a shady group calling itself the "Abdullah Azzam Brigades" quickly takes credit for the attack, while claiming "links to Al Qaeda".

London - Bali - Madrid – All were clearly false-flag frame up jobs carried out by Western / Israeli intelligence

NOVEMBER 2002
GEORGE BUSH ESTABLISHES THE DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

Again using the fictitious pretext of "protecting America from Al Qaeda" - George Bush and co-conspirators establish the Department of Homeland Security. The DHS is given massive power to spy upon and harass the American public. By 2015, DHS's annual budget will reach $40 Billion with 250,000 employees.

The DHS grants billions of dollars to local communities for the purpose of installing cameras to monitor the movements of the people. In 2010, one of the DHS sub-agencies, the TSA, creates a firestorm of controversy when it introduces naked scanner machines and full body pat downs at the nation's airports. The dangerous DHS and its TSA offshoot are now totally out of control.

New World Order imagery in the logo for the 'Information Awareness Office' of Homeland Security / Abuse at the airports

2000's
'BOMBER-OF-THE-MONTH' CHARADE KEEPS THE AMERICAN PUBLIC IN FEAR AND UNDER CONTROL

Throughout the 2000's, the gullible American public is fed a steady diet of fear-based propaganda. The false perception is created that there are "Al Qaeda" bombers everywhere, just waiting to blow us all up!

In addition to the actual "false flag" terror attacks, the Globalists create a number of "foiled" false flag attacks as well. It is a sort of "Bomber-of-the Month" club. The Hollywood plot lines for these patsy bombers are indeed comical. Like newly created villains in a Spider Man comic book, we have:

"The Shoe Bomber" (2001) - Richard Reid, a Muslim convert "linked to "Al Qaeda" who tries to light his "sneaker bomb" aboard an airplane bound for Miami. After this incident, Americans are forced to remove their shoes at the airport check-in.

"The Dirty Bomber"(2002) - Jose Padilla, a Muslim convert "linked to "Al Qaeda" who seeks to detonate a radioactive "dirty bomb."

"The Buffalo Six"(2002) - Six Yemeni-American friends, "linked to Al Qaeda" and arrested, on the basis of an anonymous letter, for plotting to detonate "dirty bombs".

"The Underwear Bomber" (2009) – Umar Farouk Abdulmuttalab, said to have explosives hidden in his underwear about an airliner bound for Detroit.

"The Times Square Bomber" (2010) - Faisal Shahzad, a Pakistani patsy "linked to "Al Qaeda" whose fireworks & propane bomb fizzles in a car trunk in New York.

"The Portland Bomber"(2010) - Mohamed Osman Mohamud, a 19 year old patsy used by the FBI to plant a fake bomb at a Christmas tree lighting ceremony.

In addition to the foiled bombers, there are also the "rumored bombers" who haven't struck yet, but may in the future..... such as "The Breast Implant Bomber"; and "The Toothpaste Bomber".

A steady diet of some of the goofiest fear propaganda imaginable keeps the American & European people under psychological control.

MARCH, 2003
U.S. INVADES IRAQ

The Zionist Neo-Con faction of the Establishment finally gets what it wanted out of the 9/11 hoax. After months of scaring the public with fabricated tales of Iraq's "Weapons of Mass Destruction," the U.S. and Britain kick off a new war against Iraq. The nationalist Saddam Hussein will soon be removed from power and executed. With this enemy of Israel eliminated, Israel intensifies its brutal oppression of the Palestinians.

More than 7000 US troops and contractors; and at least 500,000 innocent Iraqi civilians will eventually lose their lives during the war and the planned internal chaos that follows. (4) The war and the ongoing occupation will cost US taxpayers well over $1 Trillion dollars.

SHOCK AND AWE! Iraqi boy's parents were killed and his arms were blown off by American bombing.

NOVEMBER 2003
GLOBALISTS STAGE THE PHONY 'ROSE REVOLUTION' IN GEORGIA

The Republic of Georgia is a former Soviet state. Georgia's elected government has good relations with neighboring Russia, which is led by President Vladimir Putin. In the parliamentary election, Georgian President Edward Shevardnadze's political allies are successful.

Globalist "observers" from Europe then declare that the elections fell short of "international standards".

.

Huge protests "spontaneously" erupt in Georgia's major cities. The incredibly well organized protests are funded by Globalist George Soros and have all the indicators of CIA orchestration. Protestors are supplied with fresh roses, shipped in from outside. Jumbo TV screens, fireworks, and loud music make for a Hollywood style spectacle as the western media and politicians condemn Georgia's "vote fraud".

Finally, the government is forced to step down when Globalist puppet Mikhail Saakashvili and his mob crash the Parliament carrying roses. The pro-Russian government is overthrown by the Rose Revolution, and an NWO puppet state, led by the psychotic Saakashvili, is installed on Russia's southern border.

The "Rose Revolution" sets up a hostile Globalist base on Russia's border, and also close to Iran. George Bush later visited Georgia, where he was warmly greeted by the new Globalist puppet president.

NOVEMBER, 2004
THE CURIOUSLY RAPID RISE OF A WORTHLESS RADICAL NAMED BARACK OBAMA

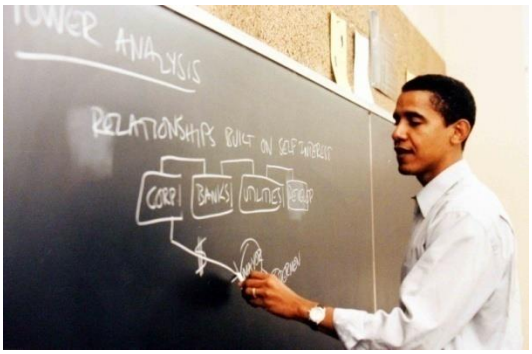
Born the bi-racial child of Marxists, Barack Obama was groomed for big things, possibly as far back as his High School days. A Communist, bi-sexual "mentor" named Frank Marshall Davis appears to have been young Barry's connection to the New World Order pipeline. As a "B" student in High School, a "C" student and admitted crack user at Occidental College, Obama's alleged acceptance to elite Columbia University, and then Harvard Law, defy explanation.

Obama's alleged Ivy League transcripts and bar exam results remain unavailable to this day. Coming from a broken & dysfunctional family of modest means, the question of who paid for these extremely expensive schools is also a mystery.

During the 1990's, instead of practicing law, Obama works as an Alinskyite "community organizer" in Chicago. He is then elected unopposed to the Illinois legislature in '96, after his better known opponent, Alice Palmer, is kicked off of the ballot for "petition irregularities."

Obama launches his election effort in the living room of his friend and ghost writer, William Ayers, head the cop-killing Communist Weathermen who terrorized Chicago in 1968. (5)

In 2004, the popular incumbent Republican US Senator, Peter Fitzgerald, inexplicably announces that he will not seek reelection. Fitzgerald's Democrat predecessor, Carol Mosely Braun, then also strangely passes up the chance to win her old seat back. The path is now oh-so-conveniently clear for this mysterious unknown.



In the Democrat primary, Obama defeats the much better known, and much better funded, Blair Hull after embarrassing details of Hull's former marriage surface.

In the General Election, Obama's Republican opponent, Jack Ryan, withdraws from the race, again after Zionist George Zell's Chicago Tribune persuades a Court to release Ryan's embarrassing divorce papers.

One by one, every big-name politician in Obama's path (Palmer, Fitzgerald, Mosely-Braun, Hull, Ryan) has been removed by an unseen force.

The Republicans recruit Alan Keyes as a late replacement. Keyes openly accuses Obama of being "a radical communist". But by now it is too late to derail Obama. Obama is elected to the U.S. Senate as the national media quickly begins hyping him up as "the potential first black President."

"Barry" smoked crack cocaine while in college. How did the C student get into an Ivy League school? Why won't he release his college transcripts? Who paid for these expensive schools? Why did Obama never practice law after graduating Harvard law School? Who got him a teaching job at Chicago?

NOVEMBER 2004 – JANUARY 2005
GLOBALISTS STAGE THE PHONY 'ORANGE REVOLUTION' IN THE UKRAINE

Exactly one year after Georgia's phony "Rose Revolution", George Soros and the NWO gang replay the same spectacle in Ukraine, another former Soviet Republic friendly to Vladimir Putin's Russia. When Globalist candidate Viktor Yushenko loses a close Presidential election to Viktor Yanukovych, "spontaneous protests" once again erupt.

Of course, the Soros / CIA protesters charge "voter fraud". The baseless accusation is repeated in the western press. Putin is even accused of poisoning Yushenko.
As was the case with Georgia, the world is treated to a Hollywood charade filled with music and orange banners. Under intense pressure from the outside, coupled with controlled pressure from within, a 2nd election is held in December of 2005. This time, the Globalist puppet wins.

The Orange Revolution results in another hostile puppet state being set up on Russia's border. In 2010, the Ukrainians will dump their Globalist President and re-establish friendly ties with their brother nation of Russia.

Another phony "color revolution" on Russia's border.

NOVEMBER, 2005
JEWISH NEW YORK TIMES COLUMNIST AND PBS COMMENTATOR SAYS JEWS HAVE TAKEN OVER AMERICA

The New York Times

David Brooks

"A woman came up to me after one of my book talks and said, 'You realize what you're talking about is the Jews taking over America.'

My eyes bugged out, but then I realized that she was Jewish and she knew I was, too, and between us we could acknowledge there's a lot of truth in that statement*. For* the Jews were the vanguard of a social movement that over the course of the 20th century transformed the American university system and the nature of the American elite." –November 6, 2005 / "The Chosen" (6)

2006
RUSSIAN PRESIDENT VLADIMIR PUTIN OPENLY CHALLENGES THE AUTHORITY OF THE NEW WORLD ORDER

Vladimir Putin had succeeded Boris Yeltsin in 2000 and regained control of Russia from the criminal "Oligarchs" who had raped the country's finances. Putin is a patriot who respects Russia's culture and heritage, including the Orthodox religion and the Romanov past. Putin will not tolerate the curious American obsession with placing missiles in Globalist puppet Poland.

Putin makes it clear that he will not be controlled by the New World Order (The "Uni-Polar World" as he calls it) In a 2006 speech Putin condemns Globalism:

"The Uni-Polar world refers to a world in which there is one master, one sovereign, one center of authority, one center of force, one center of decision-making. This is pernicious - At its basis there can be no moral foundations for modern civilization." (7)

The Globo-Zionist Media vilifies Putin. In 2008, Zbig Brzezinski, whom Putin has called out by name, will actually compare Putin to "Hitler".

Putin says "Nyet" to a New World Order as warmongering NATO expands right up to Russia's border!

2006
PUTIN ASSEMBLES 'BRIC' TRADING BLOC

The foreign ministers of what will later become known as the initial four BRIC states (Brazil, Russia, India, and China) meet in New York City in September 2006. This begins a series of high-level meetings among the developing giants. A full-scale diplomatic meeting would be held in Yekaterinburg, Russia, in May 2008. BRIC will emerge as an independent international organization that facilitates commercial, political and cultural cooperation between its members. In 2010, South Africa joined BRIC, making it BRICS.

The critical difference between the BRICS (and also the SCO – Shangai Cooperation Organization), versus Globalist bodies such as the EU and NAFTA, is that the SCO & BRICS clubs deal with each other as equals; with no centralized power source to absorb their individual sovereignty. BRICS & SCO are like a group of neighbors collaborating to hold a neighborhood yard sale, or block party; whereas the New World Order bodies on the other hand, are like an overbearing Condo Association.

Coneel Sebal, India's former Foreign Secretary, sums it up very succinctly:

"The West is scared of BRICS as it has no control over it." (8)

Putin himself explains:

"The ability to compromise is not a diplomatic politeness toward a partner but rather taking into account and respecting your partner's legitimate interests." (9)

Is it any wonder then why Brazil (as well as Argentina & Venezuela) abandoned US plans to establish the FTAA (Free Trade Area of the Americas); choosing to join Putin's club instead? Keep this in mind the next time "spontaneous" NGO-CIA protests erupt in Brazil (as happened did in 2013) or in Venezuela (as happened in 2014).

1: Putin forges close ties with China

2: Putin establishes the BRIC(S) trade powerhouse

3: Russia & China's Eurasian SCO is growing fast.

SEPTEMBER 11, 2006 PUTIN PRESENTS AMERICA WITH A MEMORIAL TO COMMEMORATE THE 5TH ANNIVERSARY OF 9-11 / MEDIA IS SILENT AS MEMORIAL IS DUMPED IN A BAD LOCATION

Five years have passed since the 9/11 attacks, and the U.S. government has yet to build a memorial to the victims that it actually killed. Now, Russian President Putin presents America with a sculpture to commemorate the fallen towers. The work of art is called "The Tear Drop Memorial". It consists of a 100 foot tall tower, with a huge open crack running down the center. Hanging from the crack is a massive "teardrop" designed to actually drip water. The base of the monument is surrounded by a marble wall with the names of all 3000 victims engraved in it. (10)

Refusing to place the monument in Manhattan or on the scenic Jersey City waterfront), authorities instead dump Putin's gift in a depressed and unseen spot in Bayonne, NJ. (around the corner from a junkyard!) The media gives the memorial, dedicated by Putin himself, a total silent treatment. The monument is barely known, even among local residents of Bayonne! One Bayonne Councilman is happy to host the monument, but he is baffled by Jersey City's rejection of it.

"This is a beautiful memorial. I don't know why they (Jersey City) didn't want it. We don't even have money to keep the teardrop operational, so, it stays dry." (11)

Jersey City is directly across the river from where the Twin Towers stood.

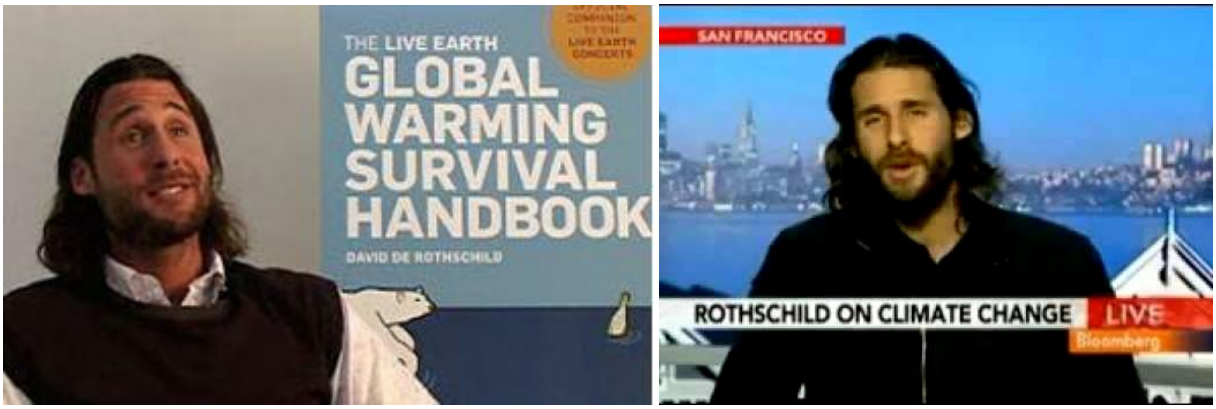
Putin made a beautiful gesture towards America. But the Globalists, in anticipation of the eventual conflict with the allied independent powers of Russia and China, need to portray Putin as evil. That is why the 9/11 memorial gift from Russia remains unknown to Americans.

Russia's 100 ft. tall 9/11 memorial was dumped in Bayonne, NJ and buried by the media.

2006
AL GORE'S MOVIE PROMOTES GLOBAL WARMING HOAX



Gore blows out hot air - not science.

"An Inconvenient Truth" is a 2006 propaganda film about former US Vice President Al Gore's campaign to educate citizens about "Global Warming". Due to intense media hype surrounding the film, it is a box office success that energizes the Environmentalist movement.

The Globalists know that their Global Warming fairy tale has been discredited by honest scientists, but they use the horrifying hoax as a tactic to impose taxes on carbon dioxide, depress living standards, and erode national sovereignty. Each year, Gore's unscientific Globalist garbage is shown to millions of impressionable young people.

Gore himself is a member of the CFR; and his daughter Karenna married into the Marxist-Zionist Schiff family. (12) Gore is making a multi-million dollar fortune by promoting the hoax, wins a Hollywood Oscar, wins a Pulitzer Prize for his book on the subject, and, of course, wins a Nobel Peace Prize.

In 2010, Gore is personally and publicly disgraced after allegations surface that Gore attempted to sexually assault a masseuse. (13) His wife of many years divorces the perverted propagandist soon afterwards.

The Rothschild clan has its hands behind EVERYTHING!
David deRothschild authored "The Global Warming Survival Handbook."

NOVEMBER, 2007
C.I.A. REVOLUTION IN RUSSIA FALLS FLAT ON ITS FACE / PUTIN CRUSHES GLOBO STOOGE GARRY KASPAROV

When the Globalists unleash a "Color Revolution" aimed at Russia, Vladimir Putin is ready for it. The man chosen by the Rothschild / Soros / Brzezinski / CIA destabilization gang is the legendary Chess Champion, Garry Kasparov (born Garry Weinstein) Kasparov and 3000 of his 'Other Russia' thugs stage an anti-Putin rally in St Petersburg. Police rough up the activists and detain nearly 200 of them, including Kasparov himself.

The arrogant Kasparov is now widely viewed as a traitor by most Russians. His popularity is so low, that he decides to abandon his run for President of Russia in 2008. Though Kasparov-Weinstein continues to take cheap shots at Putin while visiting Israel and the US, don't expect the influence of the popular Mr. Putin to decline anytime soon.

Kasparov works as a street agitator for the Rothshilds (Image #1 -Kasparov with Jacob Rothschild. His act consists of deliberately provoking his own brief arrest so that western media can portray Russia as a "dictatorship".

JULY 23, 2008
200,000 BRAINWASHED GERMANS CHEER CANDIDATE OBAMA AS HE CALLS FOR 'GLOBAL COOPERATION'

More than 60 years of post-war, Globalist inflicted self-hatred has damaged both the minds and spirits of the once proud German people. German guilt-tripping over "Nazism", and Globalist media hype combine to create the most ridiculous spectacle of "Obama-Mania" of 2008.

In Berlin, 200,000 German imbeciles give *candidat*e Barack Obama a delirious reception. The mass adulation that in years past was shown for Germany's anti-Globalist Adolf Hitler, is now bestowed upon an uneducated Marxist clown who has never held a real job, and hasn't even been elected yet! Obama shows his Globalist colors by declaring before the frenzied crowd:

"Tonight, I speak before you not as a candidate for President, but as a citizen — a proud citizen of the United States, and a fellow citizen of the world." (14)

He then pushes the Global Warming Hoax:

"This is the moment when we must come together to save the planet. Let us resolve that we will not leave our children a world where the oceans rise and famine spreads and terrible storms devastate our lands. ...This is the moment to give our children back their future. .... to stand as one." (15)

.

The Germans chant "Obama! Obama!" Obama's Globalist owners must surely be amused at the stupidity of the German people; whose recent ancestors they had so mercilessly butchered, tortured, slandered, and conquered. If Hitler had a grave, he would surely be spinning in it now!

The homosexual Marxist "community organizer" who never held a real job is worshipped by brainwashed Germans.

Indeed!

AUGUST 8, 2008
GLOBALIST PUPPET STATE OF GEORGIA ATTACKS RUSSIAN PROTECTORATE OF SOUTH OSSETIA!

Russian Prime Minister Vladimir Putin and US President George Bush are seated close to each other as they watch the Opening ceremonies of the 2008 Olympics in Beijing, China. When Putin is informed that NWO puppet Georgia has just invaded South Ossetia - a tiny independent state whose inhabitants are Russian citizens - he wags his finger at Bush and storms out of the stadium.

Russian leaders Putin and Medvedev order Russian troops to mobilize, but by the time they arrive to liberate Ossetia, 2,000 civilians have been murdered by the US/Israeli equipped Georgian army. The Russians quickly and impressively rout the Georgian invaders, chasing them back deep into Georgian territory.

In a manner similar to the lies surrounding the German-Polish conflict of 1939, the Globalist media then reports that Russia has "invaded" Georgia. Brzezinski claims that Putin is like "Hitler". No mention is made of the fact that it was Georgia (green-lighted by the US) that drew first blood against Russian civilians.

Georgia puppet state attacks Russia and gets smacked down hard

OCTOBER, 2008
REPUBLICANS AND DEMOCRATS UNITE TO BAILOUT THE BANKERS WITH TAXPAYER MONEY

The Wall Street banks and investment houses profited greatly from Greenspan's housing bubble. Now that the party is over, they demand $750 billion of losses to be covered by the US taxpayer.
While well-connected criminals such as Goldman Sachs agent and Treasury Secretary Hank Paulson twisted the arms of Congress, the Establishment Media terrorizes the American public with horror stories of what will happen if the bankers are not bailed out and new emergency powers are not given to the Federal Reserve.

The public never bought into the bailout, but that didn't stop the politicians from robbing them. After an initial failure in Congress, the bailout bill passed on a second try. It was the largest robbery in US history.

Billionaire Globalists George Soros and Warren Buffett benefitted from the "bailout" they demanded.

OCTOBER, 2008
ANTI-GLOBALIST AUSTRIAN POLITICIAN JORG HAIDER KILLED IN STRANGE CAR ACCIDENT

Jorg Haider, the long-time leader of the Austrian Freedom Party, had served as Governor of Carinthia and later Chairman of the Alliance for the Future of Austria. Haider had drawn the ire of Globalists and Jewish groups by praising the economic policies of Adolf Hitler and railing against "international bankers". Haider had also openly supported Muammar Qaddafi of Libya and Saddam Hussein of Iraq.

Haider is being closely watched by Israel's Mossad, Due to Haider's perceived contacts to "Holocaust deniers", the Israeli Foreign Ministry on September 29, 2008 declares that it is heavily concerned about the 2008 Austrian elections. A spokesman of the ministry states that Israeli officials:

"...are very worried about the rise to power of people who promote hatred, Holocaust denial, and befriend Neo-Nazis. We see it as a disturbing development and are following the matter very closely" (16)

Within two weeks of that statement, Haider dies of injuries from a car crash in the state of Carinthia. He had been on his way to celebrate his mother's 90th birthday

Haider meets Hussein – Haider meets Qaddafi – Haider meets Mossad

OCTOBER, 2008
THE OMINOUS PROPHECY OF WEBSTER GRIFFIN TARPLEY

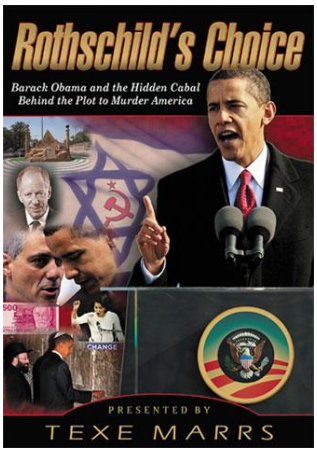
Astute observers of geo-politics are not so easily fooled by Obama-Mania. Author and historian Dr. Webster Griffin Tarpley quickly spots George Soros's 'Obama Deception' and tries to warn anyone who will listen. Before Obama is even elected, Tarpley states:

*"The project of the next administration, if it is Obama, is to smash both Russia and China. People in Europe had better wake up. That silly romantic illusion that they have about Obama is going to be suicidal…Obama's foreign policy is to have a global showdown with Russia and China." (17) (emphasis added)

Many would have laughed at such a prediction in 2008. They aren't laughing today!

Webster Tarpley stated with absolute certainty that the "peace" Candidate Obama, if elected, would maneuver the U.S. into war with Russia & China.

NOVEMBER 4, 2008
THE OBAMA DECEPTION IS PERPETRATED UPON AMERICA



Barack Obama - the previously unknown Chicago street agitator and vote fraud organizer- completes his rapid, media-fueled ascent to the Presidency. A Marxist activist with close ties to former Weather Underground terrorists William Ayers and Jeff Jones; Obama is the ultimate puppet of choice of Globalist Billionaire George Soros and the International Banking gang. The Jewish-Hungarian Soros (CFR - Board of Directors) and his paid mob of liberal activists pour millions of dollars and countless man-hours into getting Obama elected.

After defeating Hillary Clinton (CFR, TC) in the Democrat Primaries, and then a weak and disinterested Republican Senator John McCain (CFR), Obama moves quickly in his 'first 100 days', running up an astonishing budget deficit of $1.6 Trillion, passing another bailout for General Motors, advancing socialized health care, allowing Goldman Sachs to loot the Treasury, giving new powers to the Fed, and expanding America's military role in Asia.

Critics of Obama's reckless spending are denounced as "racists" by the Media, as very credible allegations of his homosexuality (18) and ineligibility due to foreign birth are ignored.(19)

Obama is an artificial creation of the most intense media hype campaign in history. By installing a black man as President, the Globalists can advance their agenda more radically than ever before. Fear of being called "racist", combined with media-inflicted "white guilt" shield the Marxist President from the condemnation he deserves.

1- Barack Obama is a wholly owned puppet of George Soros – who is himself connected to the Rothschild Octopus.

2- Rothschild's Choice – a video presentation by Texe Marrs – explains who the forces behind Obama really are.

3- The Obama Deception by Alex Jones – also well done

15 TIME Magazine covers in 2008 alone!

DECEMBER, 2008
OPERATION 'CAST LEAD' / ISRAEL KILLS 1400 DEFENSELESS PALESTINIAN CIVILIAN

Rockets of unknown origin are landing in uninhabited areas of Israel. The Israelis accuse Palestinian guerillas of firing the cheap and harmless rockets. Using the rockets as a pretext, Israel launches a 3 week terror bombing campaign against the Palestinian refugees trapped in the Gaza strip. The military operation is code named: 'Cast Lead'.

The bombing campaign is followed by a ground invasion. By the end of Cast Lead, 1400 Arabs lay dead, mostly women and children. Israeli casualties amount to only 11. In spite of clear evidence that Israel bombed densely populated neighborhoods with skin-melting white phosphorous bombs, the U.S. blindly declares its support for Israel's terror campaign.

Images of dead Palestinian children are blacked out by the Zionist media.

1- Israeli settlers taunt a Palestinian woman whose home has been taken.

2- "From Israel with Love." Israeli school children write messages on bombs destined for Palestinians.

2009
GEORGE SOROS CALLS UPON CHINA TO INTEGRATE INTO THE 'NEW WORLD ORDER'

Billionaire Global manipulator George Soros (CFR) calls for a New World Order and a managed decline of the US dollar. Soros is concerned that the new China is acting too much in her own national interests. In an interview with the Financial Times, he states:

"I think you need a New World Order, that China has to be part of the process of creating it and they have to buy in to it." (20)

The Globalist plan to encircle China and Russia is the true reason behind US military adventures in Asia, as well as CIA sponsored "color revolutions" throughout Europe, Asia, and North Africa. It remains to be seen if this dynamic and nationalist new China will go fully Globalist, or ally itself with Russia against the coming Globalist confrontation.

1- Soros demands that China participate The New World Order

2- Soros, David Rockefeller, Bill Gates Sr., and Red Billionaire Ted Turner enjoy a private party.

APRIL, 2010
POLISH POLITICAL & MILITARY LEADERS WIPED OUT IN PLANE CRASH

Though a member of the European Union; the Polish government has been strongly resisting European Union's policies on economics and "Global Warming". Moreover, it appears that Poland may be in the process of "mending fences" with Russia.

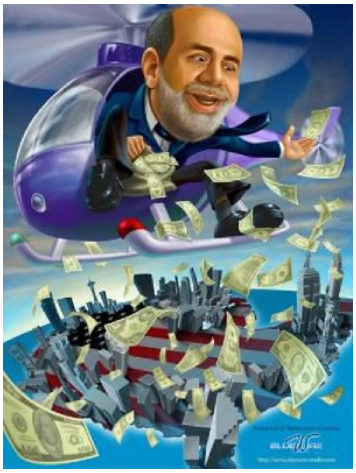
In 2010, Putin & Medvedev invite the most powerful people in Poland to attend a memorial service honoring Polish victims of Stalin's Katyn Forest massacre of 1940. These include Polish president Lech Kaczynski, the Chief of the Polish Military Staff and other senior Polish military officers, the president of the Central Bank of Poland, and dozens of other members of the Polish government and Parliament.

A low impact crash over Russian soil - near Katyn Forest - cloaked by some very unusual anomalies, decapitates the Polish government. This was a very strange incident, to say the least. The fact that Poland has since become much more anti-Russian and obedient to the EU adds further intrigue to this bizarre event.

Low impact landing - yet no survivors. Russian investigation, headed by Putin, blames Polish pilots. Perhaps Putin knows better?



2010
OBAMA AND THE FED FLOOD THE WORLD ECONOMY WITH PHONY PAPER MONEY / DOLLAR DECLINES IN VALUE

In a clear signal that the Zio-Globo International Bankers are committed to destroying America's currency, Fed Chairman Benjamin Shalom Bernanke (CFR) arranges the direct purchase of $600 Billion in US debt (bonds). The purchase is made with money that the privately owned Fed creates "out of thin air."

As expected, commodity prices for grains, meats, oil, and metals rise steadily from 2010 and beyond. As Americans are robbed by Bernanke's true inflation rate of 5% + per year, true unemployment hovers near 20%. But the Establishment media keeps reporting a false 9% unemployment rate, and a false 1% inflation rate!

America is in trouble, and many people are starting to realize it. But very few understand the true nature of the Fed's role American decline.

1- Bernanke's 'easy money' is like throwing newly printed paper money out of a helicopter.

2- Institutionalized Counterfeiting, loan sharking, market manipulation and insider trading – all concealed by the academic veneer of "monetary policy"

NOVEMBER 6 & 7, 2010
CENTRAL BANKERS CELEBRATE THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE SECRET MEETING AT JEKYLL ISLAND

In a stunning display of arrogance, the powers behind the Federal Reserve return to Jekyll Island to celebrate the 100 year anniversary of the infamous conspiratorial meeting that spawned the U.S. Federal Reserve.

In 1910, the bankers had to meet in secret, but today, they meet openly, and make no attempt to conceal the fact that the original Jekyll Island meeting was in fact a Rockefeller-Morgan-Warburg-Schiff-Rothschild conspiracy!

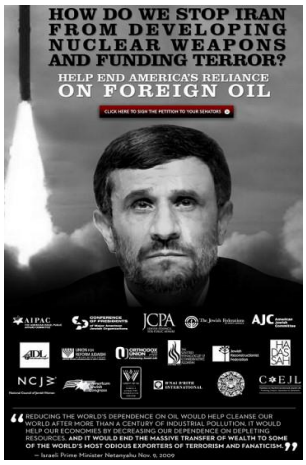
The title of the conference is "A Return to Jekyll Island: The Origins, History, and Future of the Federal Reserve", and is held on November 5th & 6th in the very same building where the original 1910 meeting occurred. Inflationary Zio-Globo bubble-makers Alan Greenspan (CFR) and Benjamin Bernanke (CFR) are both in attendance and participate as speakers.

Greenspan & Bernanke celebrate the 100 year old Zionist conspiracy to rob America by visiting the room where Paul Warburg, Nelson Aldrich and J.P. Morgan hatched their plot to control America's money supply.



2008 - 2011
NEW WORLD ORDER FACTIONS ARE DIVIDED AS TO HOW IRANIAN GOVERNMENT SHOULD BE OVERTHROWN

The peaceful government of Iran has been targeted for elimination by The New World Order. Between the pure Globalist George Soros-Bilderberger faction, and the radical Zionist faction of the New World Order, there is a deep divide over how to overthrow Iran.

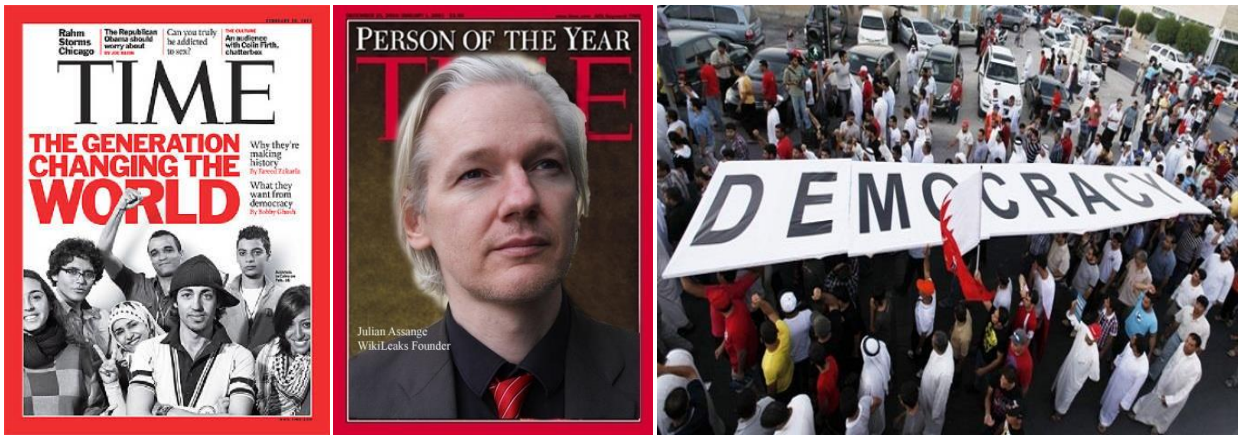
The Bilderberger Globalists believe that a military invasion of Iran is costly and risky. They prefer to internally subvert Iran with a CIA "Color Revolution". The Zionists on the other hand, have no patience for long term maneuvers. They want to invade Iran now!

The intra-network dispute is so lively that at one point, Globalist Zbigniew Brzezinski openly suggests that the U.S. shoot down Israeli airplanes if they attempt to bomb Iran! (21) The Zionists respond by using some of their controlled "conservative" talk radio mouthpieces to do "limited hangouts" of George Soros and even the Bilderberg conferences. The Bilderberger / Trilateralists strike back by exposing scandals related to FOX News chief and international media mogul, and arch neo-con Rupert Murdoch.

Obama is clearly in the Soros / Zbig Bilderberg camp, but he also knows that he must respect the Israeli / Neo-Con power base. Like two competing Mafia Families, the internal squabbles between the "left" Bilderbergs and the "right" Israel Firsters can get very ugly at times. But, at the end of the day, both lunatic factions of this New World Order crime gang work against the interests of the people; and will eventually come to an agreement over the Iran situation.

1- The 17 major Jewish groups ran a full page ad in the NY Times depicting Iran's president as a nuclear madman.

2- Globalist Brzezinski sees Israel's aggression as a nuisance that complicates efforts to confront Russia and finalize The New World Order.



SPRING, 2011
GLOBALISTS AND THEIR ARAB AGENTS UNLEASH 'THE ARAB SPRING'

Just like the "European Spring" revolutions of 1848, and the "Velvet Revolutions" of the late 1980's, and the "Color Revolutions" of the 2000's, the "Arab Spring" uprisings of 2011 are presented as "spontaneous" protests of "young people" demanding "democracy" and an end to "oppression".

The unrest begins after a CIA operation known as "WikiLeaks" conveniently "leaks" out information damaging to certain Arab states. CIA media in those states then spread the embarrassing stories which help to spark to demonstrations; thus providing protective cover for the agents leading the "people's" revolutions. The coming years of chaos, death and destruction are planned.

Starting in Tunisia, and then "spreading" to Egypt, Libya, Bahrain, and Syria, these CIA-engineered coups aim to install NWO puppet "democracies" all along the outskirts of the great Eurasian land mass. From Eastern Europe to North Africa to the Middle East to Iran to South Central Asia and South East Asia, Brzezinski's Globalist noose is being skillfully constructed around the defiant Chinese and Russia giants.

In an ironic twist, the ex-communist powers are now peaceful and moving towards a market-based economy, while the US & EU are becoming socialistic as they (along with Israel) terrorize the disobedient nations of the world.

TIME sells the idiotic myth that Arab college kids on the Internet started the 2011 revolutions. In realty, the Arab Spring was triggered by agent Julian Assange of WikiLeaks (22) - after having been carefully planned by the CIA.

MAY 1, 2011
MAY DAY HOAX! / OBAMA ANNOUNCES 'THE KILLING OF BIN LADEN'

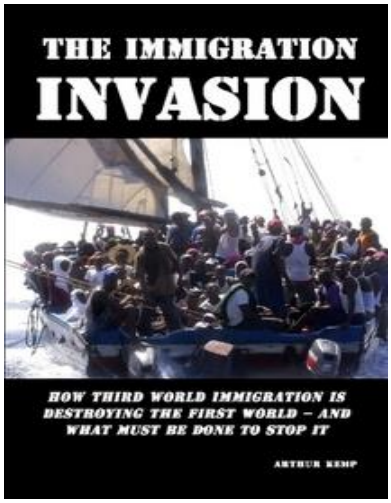
With his popularity falling, and with Pakistan (China's neighbor and longtime ally) in the Globalist cross-hairs, President Obama pulls off the hoax of "the killing of Osama Bin Laden". The deceitful Marxist President announces to a gullible nation that Osama Bin Laden has just been killed in a U.S. raid on his compound in Pakistan. The phantom terrorist (who is innocent of the 9/11 attacks and was actually killed in 2001) is said to have been shot dead, and then dumped in the ocean.

Obama claims that there are photos and videos of both the dead body and of the raid itself, but that the public may not view them for reasons of "national security." The despicable Obama goes so far as to attend a New York Memorial service with gullible family members of the 9-11 victims. Without a shred of evidence, no photos, no videos, and no body – the brain dead American public swallows this latest media hoax.

Obama's approval ratings improve, and Pakistan is now accused of having "hidden Bin Laden." China strongly condemns the violation of Pakistan's sovereignty, and issues a warning against future attacks on Pakistan.

1- The first Bin laden death photos were so obviously fake that the U.S. government even admitted so!

2- The Obama inner circle watches the "raid" on live feed. Why can't the public be shown what they are supposedly looking at?



2000 - PRESENT
IMMIGRATION INVASION CHANGES THE AMERICAN VOTING POPULATION INTO A MARXIST 'PROLETARIAT'

Whether Republican or Democrat, the Globalists REFUSE to address the invasion of America by illegal immigrants, coming mainly from Mexico. Whenever concerned citizens express their anger over the growing crime wave, and the associated high cost of social services such as food stamps, education, and hospital care, the media vilifies them as "racists" and "xenophobes".

By 2011, millions of Mexican "anchor babies" has already reached voting age as "Amnesty" programs threaten to turn millions more into instant Democrat voters.

Traditionally conservative states such as California and Nevada have already become Marxist leaning. Within 25 years, even liberty-loving Texas will have a majority "Hispanic" voting bloc that will have been skillfully radicalized by Globalist controlled Spanish TV into hating "gringos" and voting for leftist Democrats only.

The "third world" invasion of America and Europe is BY DESIGN. America is actually being VOTED into Communism!

"The mixed persecuting race disappears."

- Sidonia (Lionel Rothschild) – as written by Benjamin Disraeli

OCTOBER 2011
QADDAFI IS MURDERED BY NATO AND ITS HIRED GANG OF "ARAB SPRING REBELS"

Over the course of 35 years as the symbolic leader of the decentralized government of Libya, Muammar Qaddafi was a source of irritation for the Zionists and the Globalists of the New World Order crime gang. During the 1980's, the eccentric "Colonel Gaddafi" was framed by the Israelis for acts of terror that he had nothing to do with. In response to pressure from "neo-cons" inside of his administration, President Reagan ordered the bombing of Gaddafi's compound, killing his young daughter.

Libya is a debt-free country that issues currency from a National Bank, not a Rothschild Central Bank. Libya enjoys the highest standard of living in Africa. Qaddafi was seeking to take leadership of the emerging African Union and free it of Globalist-Zionist domination. In a 2009 speech before the UN, Gaddafi accused the Zionists of having murdered John F. Kennedy.

After months of merciless NATO bombing, Gaddafi's convoy is bombed by French jets. Gaddafi and his guards run for cover to a nearby drain. NATO/CIA paid mercenaries then capture and torture the popular leader, beating him and sodomizing him with a knife before finally shooting him in the head. The horrible images of Gaddafi's death are broadcast worldwide as President Obama boasts about killing the "brutal dictator". Though America is bankrupt, Obama pledges millions of dollars to establish a new puppet "democracy".

Due to the ensuing chaos, China is forced to evacuate all of its foreign-based workers from Libya.

Gaddafi was brutally tortured by NATO backed "rebels". Upon hearing of his murder, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton cackles on CBS News: "We came. We saw. He died." (23)

2012
ANTI-IRANIAN WAR PROPAGANDA CONTINUES

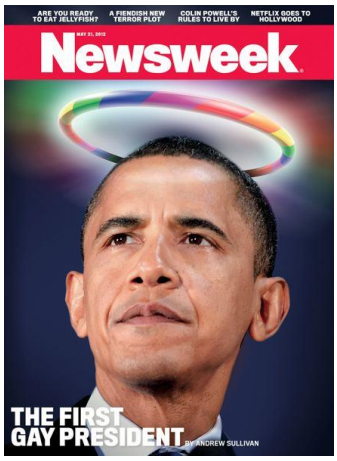
The beginning of 2012 sees an increase of war propaganda aimed at Iran. Iran's ally Syria is also being targeted. Russia and China back their Middle East allies.

In an effort to court the Jewish vote for his re-election campaign, President Obama imposes tough new economic sanctions on Iran. As they did during the 2002 run up to Iraq War, the NWO gang is falsely accusing Iran of building nuclear bombs.

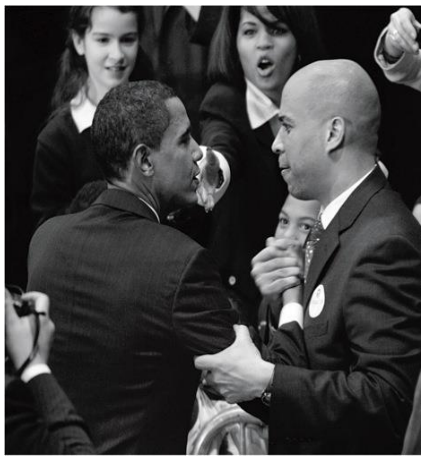
US ships in the Persian Gulf now face a serious threat of a "false flag" attack - staged by Israeli submarines and to be blamed on Iran. Undaunted by US/Israel threats and propaganda, Iran vows to massively retaliate if attacked, but insists that they will not attack first. It will take a US/Israeli first strike or "false flag" event to kick start World War III.

1- Fanatical American Jews demonstrate in favor of attacking peaceful Iran and its "Hitler" president.

2- Zionist casino mogul Sheldon Adelson is the largest single donor to the Republican Party – and he wants war!



2012
OBAMA DECLARES HIS SUPPORT FOR HOMOSEXUAL 'MARRIAGE'



A likely homosexual himself, Barack Obama stuns even his harshest critics by declaring his support for the legalization of "same sex marriage."

Obama's assault on tradition and faith is completely in line with the centuries-old drive by Marxists and Globalists to attack traditional family structure and to undermine the moral codes of civilized societies.

Jane Harmon and Barry Diller, the two Jewish homosexual owners of Newsweek Magazine, run a cover story dubbing Obama as "The First Gay President". Little do most people know that Newsweek's controversial cover was really a literal statement of Obama's homosexuality.

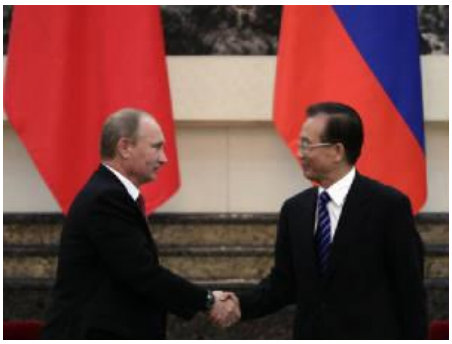
1 & 2: Obama the Marxist homosexual. A photo from the 1980's shows Barry on the couch holding hands (see intertwined fingers) with his Pakistani "friend".

3: Obama and reputed homosexual Senator Corey Booker (D-NJ) caught in an intense "look-of-love" moment.

JUNE, 2012
IN RESPONSE TO U.S. BULLYING, RUSSIA & CHINA INCREASE THEIR MILITARY CO-OPERATION



Not long after the US announces its intentions to increase its naval presence in the Pacific, Russia's new President (2nd time) Vladimir Putin counters by announcing an increase in military ties, and war game operations, with the Chinese navy. Putin states:

"Recently joint navy exercises were held in the Yellow Sea, and they were the first of such exercises. We have agreed with Chairman Hu that we will continue such cooperation." (24)

Putin then added:

"China is Russia's strategic partner. We enjoy mutually beneficial, mutually trusting, open cooperation in all fields." (25)

The rhetoric between the NWO Globalists and the Russia-China-Iran-Syria Axis continues to heat up, as the chess pieces for the Grand War are positioned.

No longer the communist tyrannies they once were; independent Russia and China unite against the Globalist NATO war machine.

JULY, 2012
HILLARY CLINTON THREATENS RUSSIA AND CHINA OVER THEIR SUPPORT OF SYRIA

The New World Order wants to conquer Syria but Russia, China and Iran are blocking the effort – going so far as to deploy naval assets to the region. Fronting for the Globalist-Zionist Axis, an angry Secretary of State and an admitted 'One Worlder' Hillary Clinton lets loose a threatening tirade against the Russia-China alliance:

"I do not believe that Russia and China are paying any price at all - nothing at all - for standing up on behalf of the [Syrian] Assad regime. The only way that will change is if every nation represented here directly and urgently makes it clear that Russia and China will pay a price." (26)

Saddam (Iraq), Dead / Qaddafi (Libya), Dead / Assad (Syria), still hanging on!

The aggressive provocation of Russia (via NWO puppets in Eastern Europe) and China (via NWO puppets in Vietnam, Japan, and Philippines) has escalated ever since.

Hillary's Globalists bosses will make good on her threats. As was the case with the plot to take down Hitler, Russia and China now have provocative NWO puppet neighbors provoking conflict on their doorsteps.

Bill and Hillary Clinton pose proudly with Sir Evelyn and Lady de Rothschild

DECEMBER, 2012
OBAMA USES A STAGED MASS SHOOTING OF 6 YEAR OLDS TO PUSH FOR 'GUN CONTROL'

Americans are horrified to learn of a mass shooting at the Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, CT. The media claims that 26 are dead, including 20 kindergartners. The 'lone gunman' – Adam Lanza, is said to have then committed suicide with his 'assault rifle.'

Alert Internet 'conspiracy theorists' soon expose the "Sandy Hook Massacre" as a staged, fictitious event that involved 'crisis actors' and total CIA orchestration.

(Google: Sandy Hook Hoax) To date, not a single photo the crime scene or of any covered bodies has ever been released.

Immediately, the just recently re-elected Obama, the media and Hollywood launch into a massive push to ban semi-automatic rifles. Though the gun control effort fails on a Federal level, the fictitious school shootings do lead to the passing of some drastic gun control laws in Connecticut, New York, Colorado, and California.

Just seconds before his fake crying for the camera, Sandy Hook 'parent' Robbie Parker was caught laughing. Obama's crying was also faked.

MARCH, 2013
PRESIDENT CHAVEZ OF VENEZUELA DIES OF CANCER / SUPPORTERS ACCUSE U.S. / ISRAEL OF ASSASSINATION

The outspoken Hugo Chavez is a socialist, but is also fiercely independent. Chavez wants no part of the New World Order. He also regards Israel as a terrorist nation. His close allies include Iran, Syria, Russia, and, prior to the murder of Qaddafi by U.S. backed 'rebels', Libya.

After claiming for years that Israel and the U.S. were plotting to assassinate him, (27) Chavez is stricken with a strange form of cancer. He fights the illness for about 1 year, before dying at the age of 58. Many of his supporters believe that Chavez was infected with cancer cells by sophisticated methods of a foreign intelligence service. The odd onset of his sickness, and the absolute hatred that the Globalists and Zionists had for Chavez, lend weight to this 'conspiracy theory'

1 - Chavez (right) honoring Qaddafi (also recently killed) with The Sword of Simon Bolivar.

2 – Chavez presented the same award to Russian President Putin

MARCH, 2013
GLOBALIST-MARXIST INSTALLED AS POPE

Catholics are surprised and confused when Pope Benedict XVI becomes the first Pope to "resign" in over 600 years. Even more shocking is the immediate hero's welcome afforded to his successor, Cardinal Jorge Bergoglio of Argentina, by the anti-Christian Globalist media who dubs, "The New World Pope". (28)

The puffed-up "rock star" takes the papal name of 'Francis' and wastes little time in showing off the same Marxist colors he had previously displayed as a practitioner of Latin American "liberation theology". The coming outrages will include: defense of homosexuals ("Who am I to judge"), downplaying of abortion, advocacy of open borders, anti-White condemnation of "racism", defense of Marxists, demagoguery against "income inequality", and, most disturbing of all, his open call for establishing a world political body to fight non-existent "Global Warming" – which he claims is a proven fact.

The sudden overthrow of Benedict and the installation of Frankie the Fake proves that the Globalists have agents of destruction working high up in the Catholic Church.

MAY, 2013
SEEKING TO KICK OFF A REGIONAL WAR, ISREAL DROPS MASSIVE BOMB ON SYRIA

With Obama dragging his feet in kicking off the Zionist's long awaited war in the Middle East, Israel attempts to force the matter by dropping a massive bomb just outside of Damascus, Syria. The unprovoked attack kills scores of Syrian soldiers. With its hands already full fighting a CIA backed internal civil war; Syria refuses to take Israel's bait.

Putin's Russia announces that it will not cancel deliveries of advanced Surface to Air missiles to Syria. An emboldened President Assad (Syria) then declares that a future Israeli attack will generate a deadly response on Israel itself!

The world is on edge, and it is only Putin (with his ally, China) that is preventing the Zionists & Globalists from starting a massive regional war, that could end up turning into World War III.

The bomb that Israel dropped on Syria was of unusual power and caused a bright 'mushroom cloud'. Could it have been a "nuke"?

FEBRUARY, 2014
GLOBALIST COUP IN UKRAINE

In November of 2013, Ukrainian President Vickor Yanukovich announces that Ukraine will no longer seek to integrate into to the EU. In an instant, "spontaneous" rent-a-mobs gather in Capital City Kiev's Main Square, known as the Maidan (pronounced May-Don). Out of nowhere come the professionally-made banners, massive EU flags, English-language placards, etc.

The CIA-NGO protesters demand that Yanukovich reverse his course and return Ukraine towards the path of EU membership. As these "revolutions" go, the mobs begin to stir more and more each passing day. Feeding the frenzy are Globalist politicians who arrive in Kiev to foment chaos. Foremost among the interlopers is Putin's hatful adversary, Senator John McCain, who takes to the outdoor microphone and fires up the roaring mob.

Also travelling to Ukraine is Victoria Nuland (Nudelman); assistant Secretary of State for European and Eurasian Affairs and wife of neo-con luminary Robert Kagan of the PNAC Group ("New Pearl Harbor").

1- As soon as Yanukovich said "no thanks" to the European Union, the NGO pro-EU flash mobs and their dupes "spontaneously gathered".

2: McCain arrived to stir up trouble.

3: PNAC's Nuland: "Terrorist want a cookie?"

Although the police do nothing but essentially stand in a line while being bludgeoned and burned by Molotov cocktails, the Western press and politicians began screaming about a "bloody crackdown". Yanukovich makes concession after concession to the phony revolutionaries and the "opposition political Parties"; including an agreement to invite them into his government and hold early elections. The whole time, riot police continue to treat the violent attackers (which include Israeli commandoes) with kid gloves.

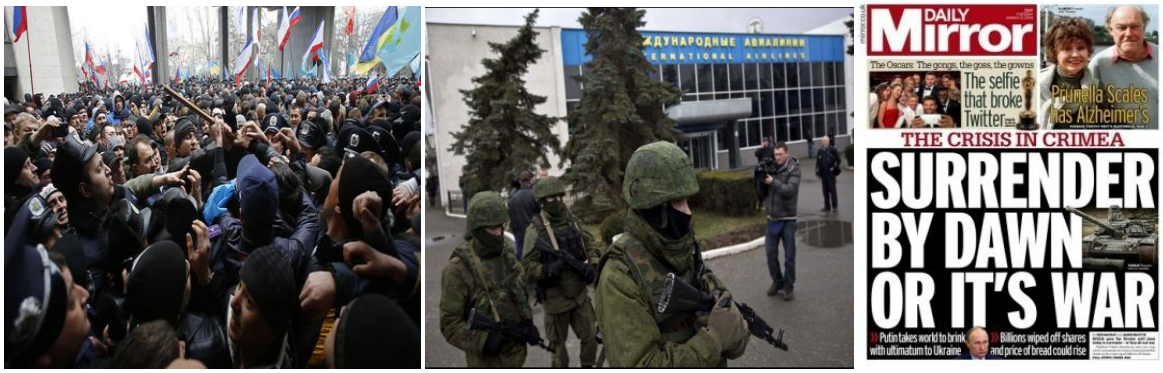
Finally, the Russia-friendly President flees Kiev with his life, as mobs trespass into his private home. A violent coup, orchestrated by the "democratic" West, has toppled a democratically-elected friend of Russia. The Russian majority of eastern Ukraine is incensed over the coup and many are rightfully frightened.

Nuland's hand-picked puppet, Arseniy "Yats" Yatsenyuk, is installed as Ukraine's new President. He immediately goes to Washington where US politicians of both Parties shower him with praise and promises of US taxpayer money!

1: Yanukovich escaped from the Kiev killers with his life.

2: McCain with "opposition Party" puppets.

3: Ms. Kagan-Nuland with her hand-picked puppet politicians, including interim President, Yatsenyuk (on right).



MARCH, 2014
CRIMEA VOLUNTARILY RETURNS TO RUSSIAN SOVEREIGNTY

No sooner had the ousted President Yanukovich arrived to safe haven in Moscow than another "spontaneous" protest erupts on the majority-Russian, Ukrainian Peninsula of Crimea – a region that had always been Russian and ended up as part of ex-Soviet Republic Ukraine only by a fluke of recent history. This phony flash mob consists of a group of ethnic Tatars, a Turkic minority of Russian-speaking Crimea. These NGO Tatars rally in favor of the new illegitimate gang installed in Kiev.

Russian Crimeans and NGO Tatars face off; exchanging chants and insults with each other. Before the situation can escalate, local Crimean Self Defense units deploy and established order. There will be no NGO drama in Crimea. It is then that the 'Mother of all Lies' races around the Globe at lightning speed. Newspapers and TV talking heads throughout the West explode with the greatest pre-packaged lie since the tale of Saddam Hussein's 'Weapons of Mass Destruction". In unison, the politicos and journalists of "The International Community" shriek in feigned horror, "Russia Invades Crimea!"

The “H-Word” is rolled out again, used most notably by Hillary Clinton. Declared the presumptive successor to Obama:

"Now if this sounds familiar, it's what Hitler did back in the '30s. All the Germans that were ... the ethnic Germans, the Germans by ancestry who were in places like Czechoslovakia and Romania and other places, Hitler kept saying they're not being treated right. I must go and protect my people…" (30)

1: NGO Tatar flash mob battles Russians in Crimea.
2: Crimean Self Defense Units restore order (no shots fired and no one killed)
3: Western Press falsely accuses Russia of “invading”.

*

The International media blitz was all pervasive. Meanwhile in Western Ukraine, out came the NGO rent-a-mobs and other assorted ‘pro-Western’ ignoramuses with their professionally made English-language banners and Putin-Hitler posters.

Now, given NATO’s aggressive antagonizing of Russia, the violent NGO-Mossad coup in Kiev, and the fact that Crimea has always been majority-Russian, no objective rational person would have blamed Putin for sending his troops into Crimea and securing the important warm water naval base at Sevastopol. But here’s the kicker – there has been no invasion, *at all!

You see, Crimea is a peninsula (almost an actual island) attached to Ukraine only by a very thin strip of land. Crimea's easternmost point is more than 3 miles across the water from Russia. Russia does not border Crimea! Unless Putin's troops walked across the water of the bridgeless Strait of Kerch, how could there have been an "invasion"?

What happened was that after the bloody coup in Kiev, and the NGO "soft-power" rent-a-mob demo in Crimea, Crimea's own version of US State "National Guard" units took to the streets to protect their own brothers and sisters. The NGO Tatars quickly dispersed and that was the end of it.

The happy people of Crimea soon voted to return to Mother Russia with a 97% majority. Even the majority of Tatars supported the referendum. (31)

The "annexation" is followed by more threats from the U.S. and the pygmies of Europe. But China, India, Argentina and Brazil calmly expressed an understanding of Russia's position.

1: Russian Crimeans celebrate their reunification.

2: The press calls it "aggression" and "annexation"

APRIL, 2014
WAR IN DONBASS / PRO RUSSIAN EAST UKRAINIANS BATTLE THE GLOBALIST PUPPETS OF KIEV

In the Donbass region of eastern Ukraine, the people of the Russian-speaking areas known as Donetsk and Louhansk had voted for the ousted President Yanukovich by a margin of 90%. Soon after the coup in Kiev, the gangsters in charge inform Russian Donbass that only Ukrainian (a dialect similar to Russian) will be recognized as an official language. Unwilling to endure such Globalist-inspired provocation, Donetsk and Louhansk declare their independence and have been fighting Kiev ever since.

As they had done with Saddam Hussein and Adolf Hitler in years past, The New World Order gang falsely blames Putin for the very "aggression" that it started. Under the ridiculous pretext of "protecting Europe" harsh economic sanctions are imposed upon Russia as NATO builds up its forces along the Russian borders.

1- Kiev's mad dog killer of eastern Ukrainians, Petro Poroshenko, addresses the U.S. Congress

2- Poroshenko meets with George Soros (right) to plot against Russia

JUNE, 2014
C.I.A. SCRIPT WRITERS CHANGE THE 'REBELS' OF SYRIA INTO AN 'ISLAMIC TERROR GROUP' KNOWN AS 'ISIS'

With the 'Arab Spring' effort to overthrow Syrian President Basher al Assad with mercenary rebels failing, the rebels are repackaged into a monstrous terror group known as 'ISIS'. A series of fake beheadings are staged in order to keep the world frightened. The emphasis shifts from fighting Syrian troops to massacring Syrian civilians instead.

The manufactured ISIS bogeyman provides the perfect pretest for the U.S. to remain militarily engaged in the region for as long as it takes to "defeat ISIS" (open ended). Strangely enough, ISIS shows no interest in attacking Israel; preferring instead to kill and rape only Christians, other Muslims, and an Aryan remnant known as 'Yazidis'.

The fake 'beheading' videos cut to black just as the throats of the strangely calm 'victims' are about to be cut by the really bad actors in black. The 'victims' don't even squirm! Intense media pressure builds for Obama to "do something" in order to "stop ISIS".

THE TIMES

How smart are you?

Foley video with Briton was staged, experts say

Cameron to threaten exit from Brussels

1- Moments before his 'beheading', James Foley cracks a smile.

2- In a TV interview immediately following the James Foley 'beheading', the 'bereaved sister' of the 'victim' can't stop smiling either!

3- The headline story about the Foley video being fake was quickly 'disappeared'.

All videos come from a purported media organization known as 'SITE' (Search for International Terrorist Entities) SITE was founded and run by Rita Katz, an Iraqi born Israeli operative and veteran of the IDF (Israeli Defense Force). How is she getting the exclusive for these videos?

2014
GLOBALIST SCAMS SUCH AS FAKED "EBOLA EPIDEMIC" AND "BOKU HARAM" DESTABLIZE WEST-CENTRAL AFRICA

Over in Africa, where China conducts an enormous amount of mutually beneficial business, a shadowy 'Islamic' terror group known as 'Boku Haram' pops up out-of- nowhere. The terrorists attack and kidnap Chinese workers while destabilizing the pro-China / pro-Russia government of Nigeria. After the Boku-bogeyman supposedly kidnaps 200 schoolgirls, McCain the Insane calls for a U.S. invasion to "Bring Back Our Girls" (CIA-Hollywood crap!)

Soon after the 'Boku Haram' card is played there comes a sudden and mysterious Ebola break-out. Is oil-rich Nigeria "unlucky", or are the Nigerians - like the Sudanese ("Save Darfur" scam starring Angelina Jolie and George Clooney) - being targeted for their close and growing business relations with China (and also Russia)?

Mutual respect and common benefit is the foundation of the strong China-Nigeria relationship.

Nigeria and China (Russia to a lesser extent) have become so close that the New York Times (barf) has expressed it's 'concern' Hillary Clinton has also 'warned' African nations about getting too close to China

2014 - 2015
C.I.A. PROXY WARS DESTABILIZE COUNTRIES AND TRIGGER MASSIVE REFUGEE IMMIGRATION TO EUROPE

As a direct result of destabilizing proxy wars initiated by deep cover front groups such as ISIS (Syria & Iraq), Boku Harem (Central Africa), Al Shaabab (Somalia) and others; refugees, organized by mainly Israeli human traffickers, are fleeing to chaotic Libya (also destroyed by the NWO), and boarding boats bound for Europe.

Spooked out of their native lands, free housing, money and health care awaits them in dying Europe. The New World Pope and the Globalist media are all in favor of the invasion that they themselves engineered. As birth rates of native Europeans continue to plummet below replacement levels, the forced Third World invasion of highly fertile immigrants is projected to cause the racial 'minoritization' of the European peoples in their own lands, within the next 30-50 years, possibly sooner if the situation accelerates.

Disraeli's Sidonia (Lionel de Rothschild - 1844):
"The mixed persecuting race disappears."

MAY, 2015
CHINA AND RUSSIA CONDUCT FIRST EVER NAVAL DRILLS IN THE MEDITERRANEAN SEA

By staging large joint naval drills in the Mediterranean; the sovereign powers of Russia and China make it clear that they will not submit to The New World Order. That same month, General Secretary Xi Jinping attends Moscow's 'Victory Day' celebration and looks on as Chinese military units actually march in Russia's parade. The message to the Globalists is loud and clear.

Putin and Jinping stand united

JUNE, 2015
GEORGE SOROS THREATENS WORLD WAR III / NATO vs RUSSIA & CHINA

Talk of World War III heats up as George Soros becomes the biggest public figure to actually use the terminology: "World War III". The high-ranking Rothschild agent states:

"If there is conflict between China and a military ally of the United States, like Japan, then it is not an exaggeration to say that we are on the threshold of a third world war. .....there is a real danger that China will align itself with Russia politically and militarily, and then the threat of third world war becomes real." (32)

The following month, Soros pens an underhanded threat, aimed at China, for The New York review. The piece is entitled: A Partnership with China to Avoid World War. The unspoken subtle message to China is essentially: "Dump Russia and make a deal with the U.S. – or else we and our Asian puppets (Japan, Vietnam, Philippines, Australia) will wage war upon you." (Author's comment, not Soros's)

Front-Man Soros speaks for his Rothschild bosses (Nat and Papa Jacob above) when he "warns" (threatens) that World War III is a real possibility.

JUNE, 2015
THE HOMOSEXUAL AND TRANSGENDER TRIUMPH OVER AMERICA

After years of conditioning, the Globalists have broken down the mental and moral resistance of the American and European public to such a point that a majority are now willing to "tolerate" female impersonation / bodily mutilation and "same sex marriage" as part of our society. The hyped up "transformation" of former Olympic champion Bruce Jenner into a "woman, and the lighting of The White House in rainbow colors marks the final surrender of normality to the organized forces working for The New World Order.

There are higher reasons behind this moral madness which people cannot understand.

JULY, 2015
THE OBAMA DEBT MONSTER

The U.S. National Debt as of July 1, 2015 stands at $18 Trillion Dollars and is growing at a rate of at least $1 Trillion dollars annually. Much of this un-payable debt (Total Money Supply is only $11 Trillion!) is floated by the printing of additional money by the Federal Reserve in the form of bond purchases. This printing of money 'out-of-thin-air' is debasing the value of existing currency and causing food prices to steadily rise.

How long before the entire system crashes? Somebody knows!

U.S. NATIONAL DEBT CLOCK

The Outstanding Public Debt as of July 1, 2015

$18,159,415,962,876.80

The estimated population of the United States is 320,883,131
so each citizen's share of this debt is $56,591.97

CONCLUSION / THE FUTURE
POSSIBLE SCENARIOS FOR THE COMING YEARS

Based upon our study of the past, and our assessment of the present, we can confidently forecast that some, or all, of the following events are coming in the near future (2015 – 2025). All we can do is prepare ourselves to cope -- financially, personally and emotionally.

- Hyperinflationary economic meltdown
- Rioting/violent unrest in the streets
- Massive False Flag attack(s) - nuclear?
- Martial Law declared
- War with Syria, Iran and/or Pakistan
- Confrontation/Limited War with China
- Confrontation/Limited War with Russia
- Starvation/ disease on a Global scale
- Mass panic among the world's people
- Israel kills off the last Palestinians

An emergency conference of world leaders and bankers convenes. Our "saviors" then propose a New World Order to solve the world's problems. The media hypes the idea of this "New World". A Global Currency is imposed on the nations. National borders disappear as "racist" Europe and America are flooded with third world immigration. The world is divided into sectors.

A new world Capitol City is established, perhaps in Jerusalem. Greater Israel grows into the geographical center of the world. Global Laws are enforced by a UN police force. "Counter-revolutionaries" who take up arms against the Globalists are arrested and sent to detention camps - or worse.

People are micro-chipped, monitored, controlled, and reeducated in the new Global System. Existing languages, cultures, religions, customs, and most of the White race will all melt away into a single One World System - a Global "Melting Pot".

The remaining "Blue-Blood" Whites, Orientals, and Jewish Global Elites will live like gods and marry among themselves. The mixed masses of the Globe will be fed, housed in small apartments, "taken care of", given "free" access to public transportation, and constantly entertained. But the "American Dream" of prosperity and upward mobility will be a thing of the past.

"Professor Frederick Lindemann, the Chief Advisor to Winston Churchill and the inspiration and architect of the air crucifixion of Germany was in a reflective mood after the war. Towards the end of his life the Lindemann made a remark on more than one occasion with such an air of seriousness that he seemed to regard it as his testament of wisdom, and I accordingly feel it incumbent upon me to record it here, although not in perfect sympathy with it.

'Do you know,' he asked, 'what the future historians will regard as the most important event of this age?'

'Well, what is it?'

'It will not be Hitler and the Second World War; it will not be the release of nuclear energy; it will not be the menace of Communism.'

These negatives seemed very comprehensive. He put on an expression of extreme severity and turned down the corners of his lips: 'It will be the abdication of the White man.' Then he nodded his head up and down several times to drive home his proposition."

 'Prof'.R.F Harrod, McMillan, 1959. Page 261/2. A biography of F.A Lindemann (Lord Cherwell), Chief Scientific Advisor to Winston Churchill.

As the collective memory of past days fades away, the docile mixed-race people of the One World may actually find happiness in their benevolent slavery. They will learn to love their elite masters for the peace and "security" they have been given.

This is the world to come. There appears to be no stopping it at this point. The people, by design, are too 'dumbed-down', too decadent, too depressed and too lazy to reclaim their liberty. Unless there is some miraculous reawakening of humanity at the 11th hour, the sheeple will have what they deserve. All we can do now is take care of ourselves, and our loved ones, and prepare to make it through the coming crisis. Welcome to:

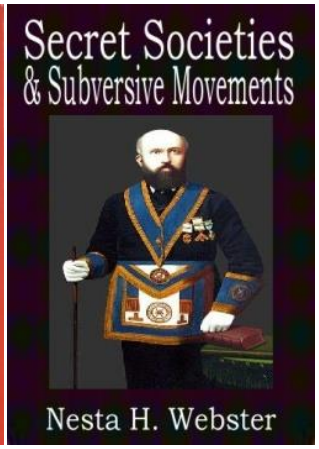
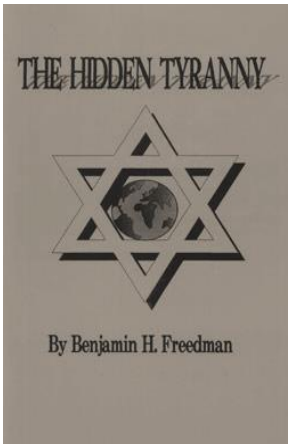
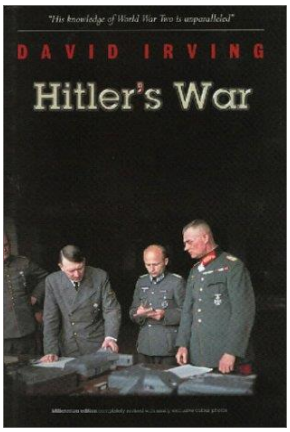
THE NEW WORLD ORDER

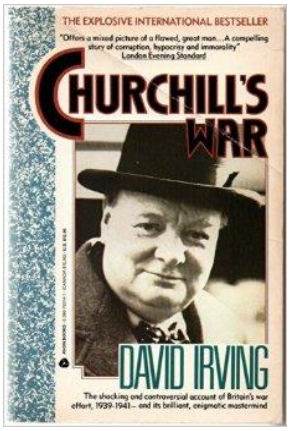


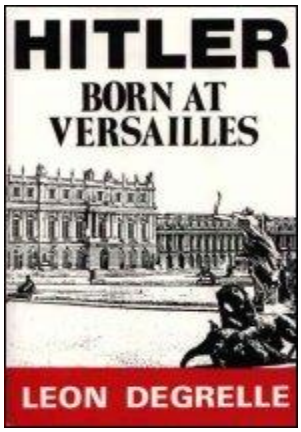


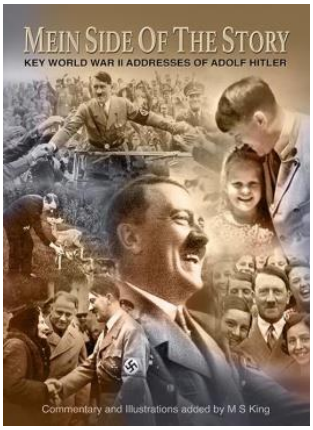
BIBLIOGRAPHY

(For Both Volumes)

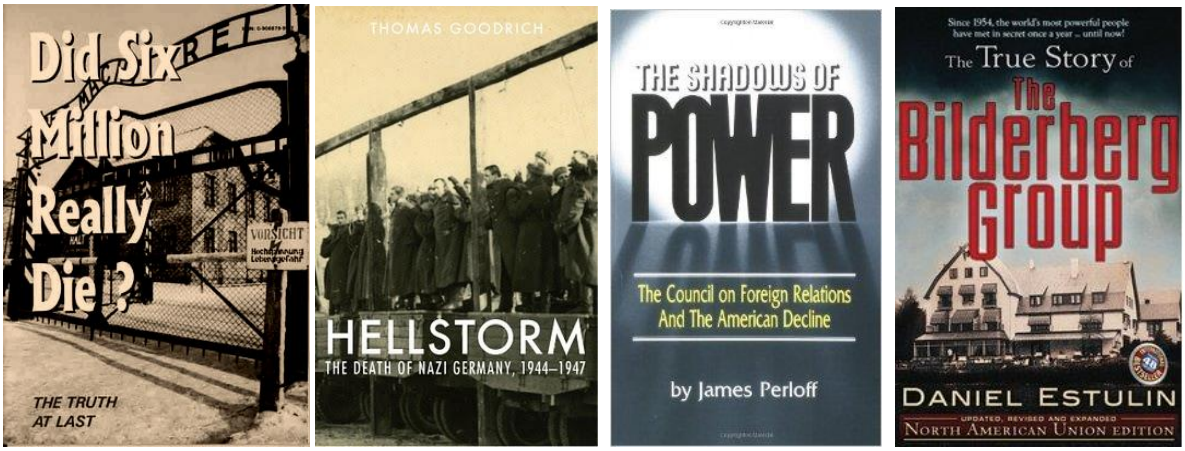


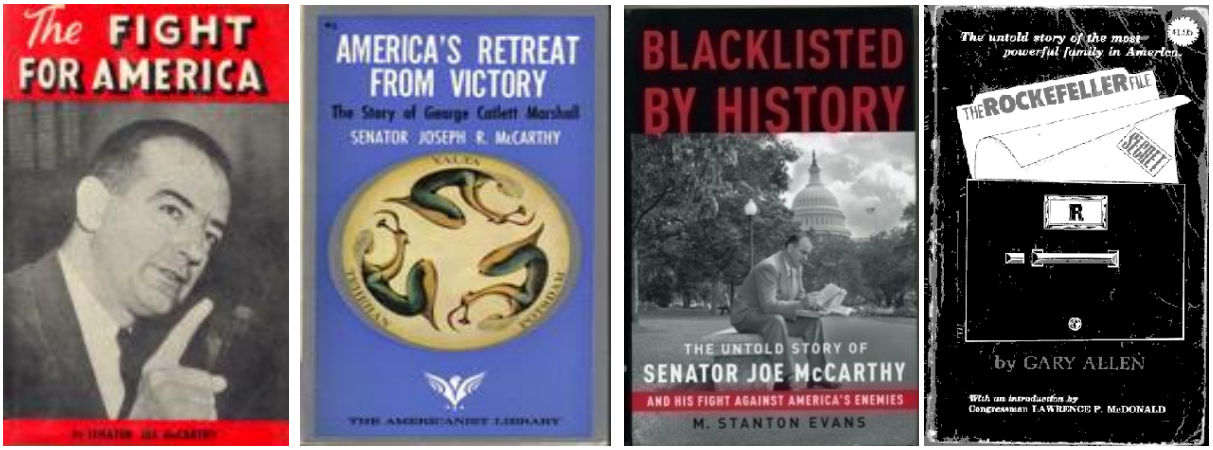


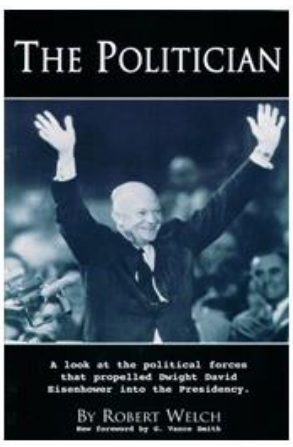




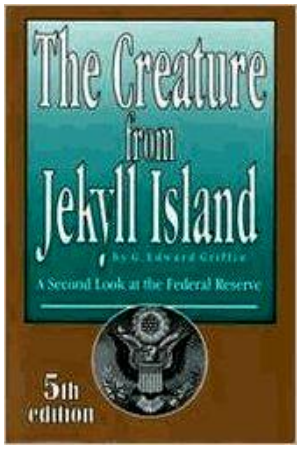
Proofs of a Conspiracy, by John Robison / World Revolution, by Nesta Webster / Secret Societies & Subversive Movements, by Nesta Webster / The Hidden Tyranny, by Benjamin Freedman

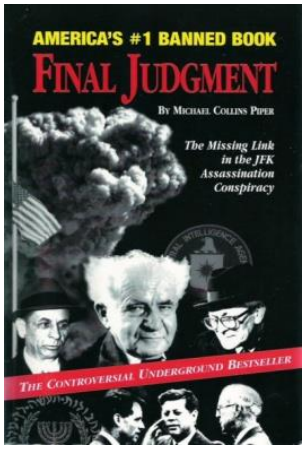




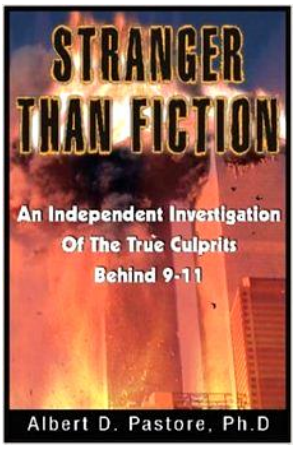


Hitler's War, by David Irving / Churchill's War by David Irving / Hitler: Born at Versailles Leon DeGrelle / Mein Side of the Story, by M S King & Hitler

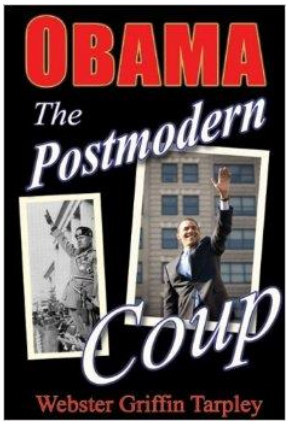


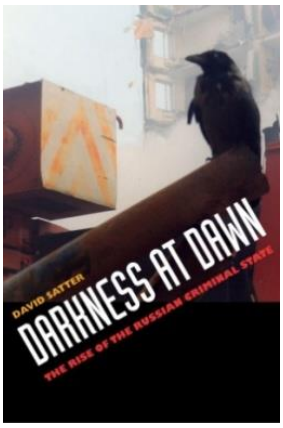


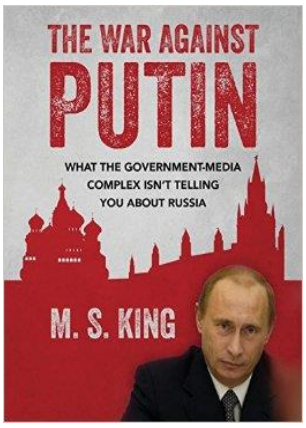
Did Six Million Really Die?, by Richard Harwood / Hellstorm: The Death of Nazi Germany / The Shadows of Power, by James Perloff / The True Story of the Bilderberg Group, by Daniel Estulin



The Fight for America, by Joseph McCarthy / America's Retreat from Victory, by Joseph McCarthy / Blacklisted by History, by M Stanton Evans / The Rockefeller File, by Gary Allen







The Politician, by Robert Welch / The Creature from Jekyll Island, by G Edward Griffin / Final Judgment, by Michael Collins Piper / Stranger than Fiction, by Albert D. Pastore

9/11 Synthetic Terror, by Webster Griffin Tarpley / Obama: The Postmodern Coup, by Webster Griffin Tarpley / Darkness at Dawn, by David Satter / The War Against Putin, by M S King /

FOOTNOTES

The innovative use of Internet Search terms in lieu of the traditional format for footnotes allows the researcher to instantaneously link to numerous sources instead of just one. The reader is encouraged to explore the footnote searches in depth. Not only will one find that the research, events and quotes presented in this book are accurate, but the searches will also open up new avenues of exploration.

WORLD WAR 2 (Part 1)

Internet Search Terms

1- forrestal diaries america world jews forced england
2- 1939 hitler note paris communiqué
3- german men and women were hunted like wild beasts
4- *As told to the author in private correspondence
5- wellington fault of anti-appeasers and the fucking Jews
6- hitler speech danzig 1939
7- ibid
8- hitler reichstag speech October 6, 1939
9- ibid
10- operation wilfred and plan R 4
11- oprop leaflets Denmark
12- operation fork Iceland invasion
13- baruch I emphasized the defeat of germany and japan
14- allied intrigue in low countries
15- ekeberg hitler sweden peace
16- halifax war cabinet crisis bastianini
17- hitler halt order Dunkirk
18- blumentritt he astonished us by speaking with admiration
19- churchill absolutely devastating exterminating attack
20- hitler leaflets last appeal to reason
21- greenwood new world order promised to jews
22- ibid
23- say again and again and again your boys will not be sent into any foreign wars
24- allen nature of the concessions that German Fuhrer was prepared to make 25- kaufmann germany must perish
26- Goebbels thanks to the jew Kaufmann
27- Yugoslavia coup 1941 british
28- rudolf hess murdered
29- catalina bismarck sinking
30- hitler plans of men in the Kremlin were aimed at the domination
31- lend lease to soviets
32- stalin orders partisan warfare

33- german soldiers 10 commandements
34- red cross Auschwitz
35- hitler jewish soldiers
36- dr. eduard bloch on hitler
37- Lindbergh iowa speech America first
38- joe kennedy anti Semitism
39- stimson into the position of firing the first shot

WORLD WAR 2 (Part 2)

Internet Search Terms

1- day of deceit robert stinnet / infamy john toland
2- relief that crisis had come stimson
3- text of war declaration by Hirohito
4- hitler December 11 1941 reichstag speech
5- venona intercepts oppenheimer
6- patton bailed out Eisenhower north Africa
7- churchill bengal famine
8- kunstschutz art protection world war 2
9- patton chief difficulty is not germans, but gasoline
10- french civilians killed by allies bonbs
11- rape during liberation of france
12- harry dexter white soviet communist spy
13- keynes homosexual pedofile
14- typhus world war 1
15- germans deloused inmates typhus
16- lestchinsky expelled latvia
17- red cross german camps estimated 270,000 dead
18- terms of yalta agreement
19- dresden firebombing david irving
20- ibid
21- men thank God on their knees a hundred years from now that Franklin Roosevelt
22- april 1945 eisenhower elbe halt order
23- hitler suicide final political testament
24- ezra pound you let in the jew rotted your empire
25- donitz With this signature, the German people
26- forensic tests at Auschwitz / leuchter report: critical edition / germar rudolf report
27- macarthur my staff was unanimous japan collapse surrender
28- john s d eisenhower lavish reception Russians gave commander of foreign army
29- soviet held us pows executed by stalin

1945 – 1960

1- no gassings at dachau / you tube realist report ‘I swear’
2- ehrenberg kill german race
3- world war 2 rape of german women
4- patton berlin gave me the blues
5- other losses Eisenhower death camps
6- ibid
7- german prisoners of war in soviet union
8- patton letter to wife
9- operation keelhaul
10- american pows in soviet union
11- churchill iron curtain speech
12- doentitz at Nuremberg a re-appraisal
13- nuremberg strangulation short drop
14- degrelle enigma of hitler
15- naeim giladi jews killed jews; and that, to buy time to confiscate
16- deir yassin massacre
17- harry truman anti-semitic remarks
18- eleanor roosevelt defends alger hiss
19- to keep the russians out, the americans in, and the germans down.
20- product of a great conspiracy on a scale so immense
21- marshall, who, by the alchemy of propaganda
22- horrible swedish jew eisenhower west point
23- eisenhower honorary member Tau Epsilon Phi (TEP) a Jewish fraternity
24- eisenhower bilderberg
25- stalin poison warfarin
26- irving kaufman I consider your crime worse than murder
27- eisenhower reacted mccarthyism is now mccarthy-was-ism
28- no shred of evidence is presented in the report rockefeller reece
29- hoover with a conspiracy so monstrous he cannot believe it exists
30- eisenhower our hearts go out to the people of hungary
31- robert welch both u.s.. and Soviet governments controlled by same conspiratorial cabal
32- earl t smith *w*ithout u.s. castro would not be in power today
33- only genius and a prophet could have known that castro was a communist 34- khrushchev I kept in mind stalin's words about Eisenhower
35- shirer generous grant from cfr council foreign relations rise and fall

1961 - 1980

1- guevarra before the invasion, the revolution was weak. now stronger than ever
2- jfk splinter the cia in a thousand pieces and scatter it to the winds
3- buckley welch john birch 1962 far removed from common sense
4- operation northwoods
5- friedan bad tempered bitch

6- jfk letters to Israel dimona inspection
7- ibid
8- you tube zapruder film
9- oswald you tube I'm just a patsy
10- tonkin gulf it is that no attack happened that night
11- vietnam rules of engagement declassified
12- bill clinton carroll Quigley
13- carroll quigley network has no aversion to cooperating with communists 14- carroll quigley i know of the operation of this network because

15- carroll Quigley a world system of financial control in private hands
16- jack ruby cancer cells injected I damn sure do
17- uss liberty sinking coverup conspiracy
18- cronkite tet we have been disappointed
19- tet offensive Cronkite lie
20- martin luther king sex fiend prostitutes
21- martin luther king plagiarism
22- martin luther king communist ties
23- national examiner bill ayers visit white house
24- bill ayers dreams from my father
25- cronkite world government
26- alinsky dedicate book to Lucifer
27- alinsky hillary clinton thesis
28- alinsky obama community organizer
29- nixon china build a new world order
30- George Wallace not a dime's worth of difference between them
31- norma mccorvey pro life
32- goldwater trilateralists intend creation of worldwide economic power 33- aldo moro widow comments meeting with Kissinger 34- brzezinski interview le nouvel observateur afghanistan soviet invasion

1981 - 2000

1- bushes and hinckleys
2- larry macdonald goal of the Rockefellers is world government capitalism communism tent
3- aipac convention us congressmen attend
4- pat buchanan congress is Israeli occupied territory
5- victor ostrovsky mossad berlin disco
6- gorbachev universal consensus in the movement towards the New World Order
7- lockerbie revisited / al-Megrahi innocent
8- george soros foundation forced to leave china after tiananmen square
9- soros velvet revolutions
10- george hw bush new world order quotes
11- kerry fake purple heart

12- mccain the songbird
13- mccain pow coverup family member cry
14- emad salem 1993 false flag
15- sidonia mixed persecuting race disappears
16- hillary clinton new world foundation
17- 1995 oklahoma bombing conspiracy false flag
18- brzezinksi truly massive external threat
19- brzezinksi shock effect of the Japanese attack on pearl harbor
20- ashton carter like pearl harbor, this event would divide our past and future
21- jfk jr hardcopy video clip about possible senate run / jfk jr mulled run senate in 2000
22- jfk jr what really happened
23- Cronkite toward a world government
24- tesla einstein long haired crank / one must be same to think clearly 25- pnac new pearl harbor

2001 - 2015

1- building 7 controlled demolition
2- the dancing Israelis
3- bin laden there exists a government within a government
4- death toll iraq war
5- obama and bill ayers
6- david brooks jews taking over America
7- putin uniploar world refers to a world
8- sebal west is scared of brics
9- putin the ability to compromise is not a courtesy
10- tear drop memorial bayonne
11- as told to the author during a 2010 visit to the memorial
12- karenna gore married Schiff
13- gore sexual assault masseuse
14- obama speech berlin 2008
15- ibid
16- haider very worried about the rise to power of people who promote hatred, Holocaust denial
17- tarpley obama's foreign policy is to have a global showdown with russia and china
18- obama homosexual gay
19- obama fake birth certificate
20- soros you need a new world order that china has to be part
21- brzezinski shoot down israel planes
22- assange wikileaks arab spring
23- hillary we came we saw he died
24- putin recent joint navy exercises yellow sea
25- china is russia strategic partner
26- Hillary Russia and china pay a price
27- chavez israel us trying to kill me

28- new world pope
29- pope calls for world political body
30- Hillary compares putin to hitler
31- crimea tatars support russia unification
32- george soros world war 3

*

*

*

Queen Elizabeth Fronts for Rothschilds ("Crown")

By Alcuin Bramerton

It is accurate to posit that Australia, New Zealand and Canada are not independent, sovereign countries. However, these nations are not owned and run by the UK; they are owned and run by the House of Windsor Crown Temple syndicate within the City of London Corporation. The head signatory of the Crown Temple syndicate is Elizabeth Windsor (Queen Elizabeth II of England). It should not be forgotten that the most powerful financial syndicate in the Western World is that of the European Rothschilds.

The Rothschilds, because of their power base inside the City of London Corporation, have a controlling membership of the London Crown Temple syndicate, and they also have executive control of the Vatican and the Mafia though the P2 Masonic Lodge in Italy. The financial affairs of the new UK coalition government in London are also Rothschild-controlled.

The line management here is understood to be Jacob Rothschild > Nathaniel Rothschild (N.M.Rothschild & Sons Limited, New Court, St Swithin's Lane, London EC4P 4DU) > Oliver Letwin > George Osborne (British Chancellor of the Exchequer).

Queen Elizabeth II fronts for the Rothschilds. She is the largest landowner on Earth. She is Head of State of the United Kingdom and of thirty one other states and territories, and is the legal owner of 6,600 million acres of land, one sixth of the Earth's land surface. A conservative estimate of the value of the Crown Temple syndicate's land holding, under the Queen's signature, is £17.6 trillion. The Queen's syndicate land holdings are based on the laws of the countries she owns and her land title is valid in each of those countries.

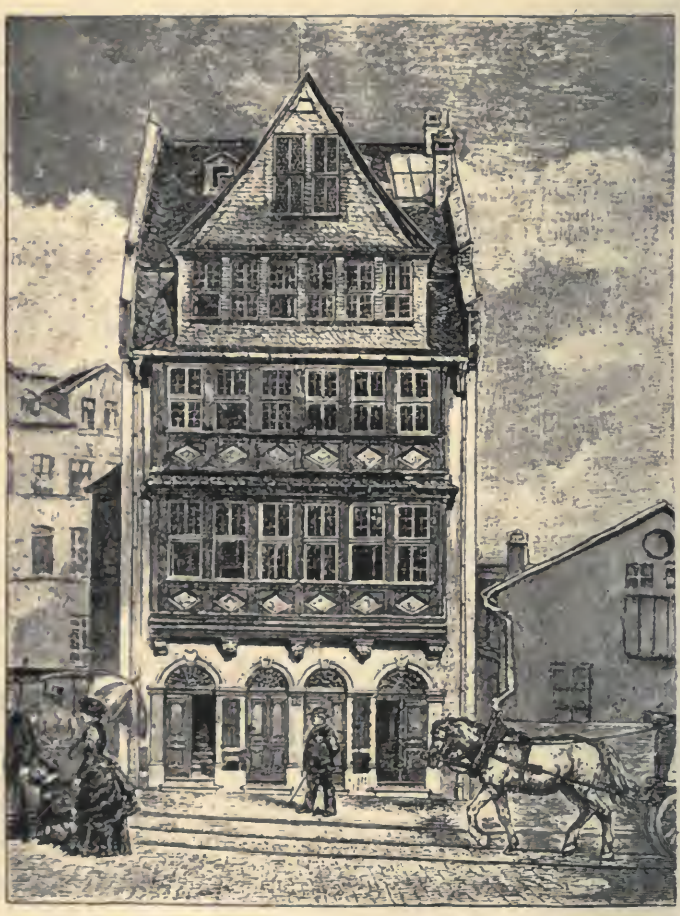
Her main holdings are Canada, the 2nd largest country on Earth, with 2,467 million acres, Australia, the 7th largest country on Earth with 1,900 million acres, Papua New Guinea with114 million acres, New Zealand with 66 million acres, and the UK with 60 million acres. Elizabeth Windsor and her covert syndicate in London are the world's largest landowners by a significant margin.

The next largest landowner is the Russian state, with an overall ownership of 4,219 million acres, and a direct ownership comparable with the Queen's land holding of 2,447 million acres. The 3rd largest landowner is the Chinese state, which claims all of Chinese land, about 2,365 million acres. The 4th largest landowner on Earth is often said to be the Federal Government of the United States, which owns about one third of the land area of the USA, 760 million acres. However, this Washington DC private corporation Federal Estate is actually owned and controlled by the London Crown Temple syndicate.

Indeed, at the present time, the London syndicate in partnership with an old family Chinese syndicate, hold, and have activated, a $47 trillion World Court Writ of Execution and Lien on the US Treasury and the US Federal Reserve Board. The five largest "personal" landowners on Earth, at present, are Queen Elizabeth II of England (6,600 million acres), King Abdullah of Saudi Arabia (553 million acres), King Bhumibol of Thailand (126 million acres), King Mohammed IV of Morocco (113 million acres) and Sultan Quaboos of Oman (76 million acres).

In reality, however, these named individuals are just the head signatories of old bloodline syndicates which act corporately through hidden family trusts. More historical and current background about Elizabeth Windsor (Queen Elizabeth II of England) is compiled here:

http://engforum.pravda.ru/showthread.php?t=265271



http://alcuinbramerton.blogspot.com/

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
3 1761 01670711 9

Mrs Ben Katz.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

http://www.archive.org/details/rothschildsfinan00reevuoft

THE OLD HOUSE IN FRANKFORT.

THE ROTHSCHILDS:

THE FINANCIAL RULERS OF NATIONS

BY

JOHN REEVES

CHICAGO:
A. C. McCLURG & CO.
1887

All Rights Reserved.

LIBRARY
SEP 13 1967
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

IC
1552
R2R3
c.1
v.22

PREFACE.

SHOULD the following pages prove fortunate enough to be favourably received by the public, they will owe it entirely to their subject-matter. To this, and not to vigour of language or lucidity of style, must be attributed whatever interest they may possess. The Author makes no pretensions to the character of a practised writer and feels that the subject is worthy of a more able and experienced hand; he therefore ventures to solicit the indulgence he so sorely needs for his literary shortcomings, of which no one can feel more conscious than himself. On the other hand, he boldly and frankly claims for his work the merit of perfect and impartial truthfulness; and, in the words of Montaigne, he conscientiously asserts, with perhaps justifiable pride: "C'est icy un livre de bonne foy, lecteur."

LIBRARY
SEP 13 1967
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

CONTENTS.

Chapter I.

Page 1. The value of a name—The phenomenal success of the Rothschilds and their poor beginnings—Their reputation for unstinted benevolence—Persecutions to which the Jews have been subjected—The hatred of them still rampant in some countries—The spirit of intolerance dying out in England—What the world owes the Jews—Universal pre-eminence accorded to the works of their great lawyers and prophets—Spinoza—Large number of Jews distinguished as musicians and composers, and likewise as dramatic and operatic artists—Eminence of the Jews as mathematicians and astronomers—The Jews in commerce and finance—The Jews as lawyers and as politicians—Charges brought against the Jews—Misleading impressions regarding them—Mayer Amschel Rothschild, "the honest Jew"—Unimpeachable lives and characters of the Rothschilds and other prominent Jewish families—The secret of Jewish success—Sir Thomas Gresham—Queen Elizabeth—Jewish pride of race.

Chapter II.

Page 21. Mayer Amschel Rothschild—The city of Frankfort—The Judengasse—Condition of the Jews in Frankfort

CHAPTER II.—continued.

during the early part of the Middle Ages—First massacre of the Jews in 1241—Galling restrictions imposed on them—The Judengasse burnt down in 1711; rebuilt and widened in 1717—The House of the Red Shield—Amschel Moses Bauer—Birth of Mayer Amschel Rothschild in 1743—He is at first intended for a rabbi—Abandons his theological studies and enters the service of a banking firm in Hanover—Returns to Frankfort, where he settles permanently—Marries Gudula Schnappe—Is known as "the honest Jew"—Is appointed Court Banker to the Landgrave of Hesse—The Landgrave's whole fortune entrusted to his keeping—Fanciful stories connected with this circumstance; the true account—Mayer Amschel Rothschild conveys specie to the Duke of Wellington in Spain—His death in 1812—Heine's reminiscence of Gudula Rothschild.

CHAPTER III.

PAGE 56. Respect entertained by the Jews for their parents—Mayer Amschel's five sons—The success achieved by the founder of the firm; to what greatly due—Archives of the Rothschild family a sealed book to the public at large—First period in the history of the firm—Mayer Amschel and the Danish Government—His philanthropy and benevolence—Second period in the history of the firm—Branch firms established—Nathan Mayer acknowledged as the business head of the family—The business in Government Funds—Stock Exchange speculations—Amount of the loans negotiated by the Rothschilds, between 1815 and 1830, for England, Russia, Austria, France, and Prussia—Principal loans issued by the Rothschilds—Honours and decorations showered on the latter—Third period in the history of the firm—A heavy blow dealt to the great banking-houses—

CHAPTER III.—continued.

New path struck out by the Rothschilds—Effect of political events on the fortunes of the Rothschilds—American War of Independence—The first French Revolution—Rise and fall of Napoleon—The French July Revolution—Immense landed estates possessed by the Rothschilds—Sugar manufactories—How the Rothschilds accumulated their wealth—The two causes specified by the Chevalier von Gentz—The "one power in Europe."

CHAPTER IV.

PAGE 103. Anselm Mayer von Rothschild—Historical sketch of Frankfort—Character of Anselm Mayer—Account of him by a friend—His humour and shrewdness—Neat compliment paid by him to Thorwaldsen—Anselm Mayer at Ems—His great charity—His love of art and flowers—Immense amount of business transacted by him—Loans undertaken by him—His supremacy on the Frankfort Exchange—His two nephews, Baron William and Baron Carl von Rothschild, succeed him in the management of the Frankfort firm.

CHAPTER V.

PAGE 133. The London firm established by Nathan Mayer Rothschild—Great Britain at the beginning of the present century—Its political condition—Power of the landed aristocracy—Mr. C. P. Villiers and the Corn Laws—Land held in England on conditions differing from those on which it is held abroad—Evils resulting from the National Debt—Devices employed by the earlier English sovereigns to raise money—Plans adopted for this purpose by Richard I., Henry III., Edward I., Edward III., Henry VII., Henry VIII., Charles I., Charles II., and James II. respectively—William III. and Louis XIV.—Principal objection to the financial innovation introduced by William III.—Various expedients adopted by him to obtain supplies—State of society and of finance at this period—Affairs under Queen Anne—Growing influence of wealth—Marlborough—Infamous tone of parliamentary morality—The great Hebrew capitalist and speculator, Medina—The Bank of England—Improvement of the national finances under William Pitt, in 1782—The suspension of cash payments—Disastrous consequences of it—What first impelled Nathan Mayer Rothschild to visit England—His great talent for speculation—He speedily becomes the leading man on the Stock Exchange—Maintains a staff of agents and couriers to insure early intelligence of important events—Organizes a pigeon-post—News of Napoleon's return from Elba—Nathan Mayer Rothschild sets out for Belgium, and is present at the Battle of Waterloo—Immediately after the action he hurries from the field, rides to Brussels, and thence proceeds to Ostend—His difficulty in procuring the means of crossing over to England—He reaches Dover—Without stopping to rest, he posts up to London—His appearance, seemingly broken in health and spirits, on the Stock Exchange next day, gives rise to the most gloomy apprehensions, which he might allay but does not—The Funds fall rapidly, but, when the truth is at last known, they go up again with a bound, and Nathan Mayer Rothschild pockets nearly a million sterling—He marries in 1806—He may be considered the first to introduce foreign loans into England—Principal loans issued by him—He purchases the Almaden quicksilver mines in Spain—The Bank of England no match for him in finesse—He is, however, sometimes outwitted—His adventure with the stockbroker Lucas—His meanness towards the persons in his employ—His tactics on the Stock Exchange—His two maxims—His disregard of the courtesies and amenities of civilized life—Description of him by an anonymous writer—Nathan Mayer and the German Prince—Life of anxiety—His two mysterious visitors and the ledger—Nathan Mayer and Spohr—Nathan Mayer's death at Frankfort—His funeral.

CHAPTER V.—continued.

CHAPTER V.—continued.

CHAPTER VI.

PAGE 204. Baron Lionel de Rothschild—Succeeds Nathan Mayer in the management of the London firm—His great financial talent; his prudence—His activity in connection with foreign loans—Awkward predicament—His political career—His deep interest in the welfare of his co-religionists—Efforts for the removal of Jewish disabilities—Sir David Salomons—Baron Lionel elected one of the members for the City of London—Lord John Russell's Bill—It is carried in the House of Commons but rejected by the Peers—Baron Lionel resigns his seat and is re-elected—Sir David Salomons returned as a member for Greenwich—Further progress and conclusion of the struggle—Baron Lionel a great sufferer from rheumatic gout—His irritable temper—His broad charity—His wife; her death—Marriage of his eldest daughter—Marriage of his youngest daughter; her death—His London mansion—His delight in pictures and flowers—His humour—His unexpected death—His two brothers—Character of Baron Mayer—Sir Lionel succeeded in the London firm by his three sons, Nathaniel, Leopold, and Alfred—Their respective characters and pursuits—Sir Nathaniel raised to the Peerage—Conduct of the firm towards Egypt—Scene in St Swithin's Lane—Probable future of the firm.

CHAPTER VII.

PAGE 252. Baron Carl von Rothschild—The Naples firm

CHAPTER VII.—continued.

—Change in the political circumstances of Italy—Social condition of that country—Finances of the Papal States—Indescribable peculation and fraud—French system of taxation introduced—Expenditure of the Duchy of Parma—Expenditure of the Grand Duchy of Tuscany and the Duchy of Lucca—Expenditure of Sardinia—Pecuniary difficulties of the kingdom of the Two Sicilies—A Bankers' Syndicate formed in Paris to oppose the Rothschilds—The result—Death of Baron Carl von Rothschild—He is succeeded by his son, Baron Adolf von Rothschild, who, however, soon retires from the management of the firm.

CHAPTER VIII.

PAGE 272. Baron Salomon von Rothschild—The Vienna firm—Part played by the Jews in Austria—Their pecuniary assistance eagerly sought—They are subjected to a poll-tax, compelled to wear a distinguishing badge, and obliged to dwell in a particular quarter of the city—Peculations of a certain Hirschel Mayer—Collision between the Jews and the Vienna students—The Jews expelled from the Judenstadt, but ere long permitted to return—The Court-Factor, Samuel Oppenheimer—His house pillaged and his life endangered—Joseph Michael Arnstein, the first Jewish Baron—Austrian Funds at one time an exceedingly favourite investment—Sway exercised by Salomon von Rothschild over the finances of the Austrian empire—Baron Salomon's special stockbroker—An unofficial Stock Exchange—The quicksilver mines at Idria and at Almaden—Baron Salomon elected an Honorary Freeman of Vienna—Baron Salomon and the cabman—Loans issued by the Vienna Firm—Ferdinand, Nathan, and Salomon Albert von Rothschild.

Chapter. IX.

Page 289. Temporary character of the French Government since the First Revolution—Baron James de Rothschild —His boldness and sagacity in establishing his firm in Paris —Financial condition of France at the period—The Russian campaign and Napoleon's retreat—The Restoration—Napoleon's return from Elba—French finances under Louis Philippe, under the Second Republic, and Second Empire—Enormous fortunes—Reason assigned for the stability enjoyed by the Paris firm—Baron James and the Polignac decrees—Ouvrard—The fall of M. Thiers brought about principally by the Rothschild firm—The Black Arts in the Middle Ages and Stock Exchange manœuvres at the present day—Lamentable want of principle on the part of speculators —Fabrication and circulation of false news—Prominent public men implicated in disreputable stock-jobbing transactions—Mr. Walsh, M.P.; Mr. Cochrane Johnstone, M.P.; Count de Guisne, French Ambassador at the Court of St. James's; the great Duke of Marlborough—Victory achieved by Baron James over the financial world in Paris—Corrupt state of French society during the reign of Louis Philippe—End of the Rothschild monopoly of French loans—Baron James the "Railway King" of France—Construction of the Northern Railway of France—Rivalry between Baron James and Emile Perreire—The Vienna Credit Bank founded by Baron James—Gigantic fraud perpetrated by Carpentier, Grellet, and others, on the Northern Railway of France—Mode of action adopted by them—Services rendered by Baron James to France recognized and rewarded—Slight put upon him by the Duchesse d'Angoulême—How he avenged it—His rough manners—His behaviour to Prince Paul of Würtemberg—Baron James and the Deputy—The Baron and Jadin the painter—The Baron and the three peaches—

Chapter IX.—continued.

The Baron and Horace Vernet—Baron James's great beneficence—His motives frequently misrepresented—Ungrateful return for his noble charity in 1847—Absurd calumnies circulated against him in connection therewith—His subscription for the wounded and unemployed workmen in 1848—His conduct towards Caussidière—His reported charity at others' expense—Heine's description of him—His death—Baron Alphonse de Rothschild—His remarkable business abilities—Payment of the French indemnities to Germany entrusted to him—His intense anxiety during the siege of Paris and the existence of the Commune.

Chapter X.

Page 360. Rothschildiana. Baron Anselm von Rothschild loses the ring given him by the Emperor of Austria—It is found by a poor girl—How Baron Anselm rewarded her—Anecdote narrated of him by Dr Busch—Eugène Delacroix and Baron James de Rothschild—The latter as an artist's model—A kind action—How requited by Baron James—Baron James and the porcelain service—His decrepit visitor rejuvenescent—The Baron mystified—An excellent comedian—Baron Alphonse and the barometer—A millionaire without a sou—A porter becomes his surety for ten francs—Attempts to ruin the Rothschilds—Mr James H—— and his speculations—Is ultimately ruined—Georges Sand and Baron Rothschild—Georges Sand's autograph—An American in England—He goes to see the mansion then being built by Baron Lionel de Rothschild in Piccadilly—His interview with an old gentleman—How the Rothschilds made two fortunes—His interview with a younger gentleman—Who the old gentleman was, and who was the younger gentleman.

THE ROTHSCHILDS.

THE HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD.

Chapter I.

ABOUT THE JEWS.

"WHAT'S in a name?" asks Shakespeare. The answer, when the name is such as Rothschild, is not difficult. There is a volume of meaning in its mere sound. It is a name which conjures up in the imagination visions of untold wealth and unrivalled power, which appear so startling and amazing as to be more appropriate to romance than real life. It has become a household word synonymous with unbounded riches, and is as familiar to the ears of the struggling artizan as to those of the banker or trader. No name has, indeed, been so prominently before the public during the last sixty years or more, as that of this great financial firm. Its origin was so shrouded in humble obscurity, and the rapidity with which it sprang forward to prosperity and fame was alike so extraordinary and so remarkable, that the public gaze has been kept by a species of fascination upon the movements of the well-known financiers. From one corner of the world to the other the success of the Rothschilds has been the subject of universal wonder and envy. When we recollect the poor beginnings of this eminent firm, and contrast them with the exalted position it now holds, there is good reason to be surprised. History does not record another instance of such unparalleled success, of such immense fortunes won in such a short time by sheer force of intellect rising superior to all adverse circumstances. The firm startled the world like the flash of a meteor, but the brilliance of its first successes was soon eclipsed by its subsequent achievements. The more one considers the marvellous manner in which it won its way to fame and fortune, and how it rose within the short space of ten or fifteen years from the filthy confines of the Judengasse to take its station at the foot of a royal throne, the more incredible the story seems. But facts are stubborn things. There is no denying the fact that at the beginning of this century the Rothschild family was unknown beyond the limits of Frankfort; neither can it be gainsaid that before Napoleon's downfall the firm had rendered immense service both to the Emperor and to the Allied Princes by its advice and its financial aid. Ere a quarter of a century had elapsed the firm which had commenced business in an unpretending shop in the Judengasse was courted and favoured by all the reigning families of Europe. From being dealers in old coins, the founder of the family and his sons rose by their skill and financial abilities to be the trusted and valued friends of the governments of every European nation. And well indeed might they be trusted, seeing that, in more than one instance, their aid was indispensable to ward off impending bankruptcy and disaster. Great, however, as is their fame as skilful financiers, the Rothschilds enjoy a reputation for liberal and unstinted benevolence which does them far greater honour.

The rise of the Rothschilds is the more remarkable seeing that they belong to an outcast and down-trodden race. No other race has experienced such persecution, nor passed through such trials as have the Jews. From time immemorial they have been loaded with scorn and contumely, they have been harassed and fettered by tyrannical laws and barbarous edicts, but they have always passed through their tribulations patiently and triumphantly. Their very name has been a term of reproach to them, and they have been the common butt for the sneers and ridicule of their Christian neighbours. It would be difficult to describe in a few words the intense hatred which the mere word: "Jew," roused in the breasts of Christians, but ample proofs of the bitter animosity between the believers in the old and the believers in the new dispensation are to be found in the writings of our poets and historians. "Thou dog of a Jew" was a term eloquent with savage hatred and unmeasured contempt. These feelings were formerly far more rampant than they are now, but even in these much vaunted days of liberalism and progress there is a very general inclination to cast the words of Shylock in the face of anyone who by his features or manners excites the slightest suspicion of a Jewish origin:

> "You call me misbeliever, cut-throat, dog,
> And spit upon my Jewish gaberdine."

That the long-standing hatred of the Christian for the Jews is not extinguished, has been proved only too clearly of recent years. In Russia, Turkey, Poland, Hungary, and elsewhere, the Jews are still, in the eyes of the populace, an accursed race, to be despoiled and persecuted without mercy. Those who cannot compete with them in industry, thrifty habits, or intelligence, show a painful and deplorable eagerness to lend themselves to a propaganda of extermination started often by scheming tricksters, with the result that many innocent lives are sacrificed to the fury and ignorant passions of brutal mobs. Especially is it to be regretted that such lawless proceedings receive a powerful support in some countries from Court chaplains and others, who profess—but whose professions are belied by their deeds—to act up to a creed in which "charity that thinketh no evil" holds a distinguished place. Nothing surely can be more detrimental to true religion than the sanction given by men of education and influence to the perpetration of such barbarities. These continual outbreaks are a forcible proof that even in these enlightened days the spirit of persecution is but poorly concealed, and that a spark may at any moment set it ablaze, when the law would be powerless to control or restrain the excited passions of the multitude.

In England the spirit of intolerance is, we are thankful to say, fast dying out. It is our just pride and boast that our island is the land of liberty, the refuge to which the persecuted of other lands flock. No doubt there still is among Englishmen a prejudice against the Jews, but bitterness in the feeling is now less marked than pity. We no longer regard the language or nationality of those who live in our midst; it is the mental qualities and abilities that awaken our regard and esteem. Here in England we welcome men of every nation, whether Jew or Gentile; here all can and do live in friendly rivalry without any animosity being excited. The thrifty and industrious habits of the Jews, combined with their great intelligence, have long been recognized and acknowledged here in England, and any attempt to start a crusade against those who trusting to our generosity and good nature have settled in our midst, would at once meet with general and well-merited disapproval. In no other country do the Jews enjoy such liberty and privileges as in England. Abroad they live apart, despised and shunned by their so-called Christian neighbours, and harassed in their business and private life by restrictions and edicts originating in the envy inspired by their success. Here they live peacefully and quietly, enjoying the same privileges and opportunities as the rest of the community; no hindrances bar their way to attaining the highest civil or military honours in the land; they are looked upon as a worthy and estimable part of the nation. But whilst on the one hand they are rapidly abandoning their peculiar habits, and are assimilating themselves to our own mode of living, they still fondly cling to their ancient religious ceremonials and doctrines, and assert their claim to a history that dates back to the genesis of our race and reproduces the symbolism of their desert wanderings. Their ceremonies and memories flourish under the protection which is accorded to them in the same measure as to all the other numerous sects and communities that exist in our great metropolis. No less honour or respect is accorded to the Jewish creed than to any other; they are all on an equal footing, and have to trust to their own efforts for support. While in religious matters we practically ignore the existence of the Jews, it cannot be denied that we, in common with all civilization, owe them a debt which we are very prone to forget, for it is certainly to them that we owe the very bases of our faith, and, were it not for the books of Moses, Christianity would lose one of its main supports, and much of its power.

From the Jews we have that short pithy code of morals embodied in the Ten Commandments, which are placed in the most prominent parts of our churches. The Jews have contributed to the ranks of poets, historians, philosophers, and musical composers a long succession of names that are the admiration of the whole world. In every department of science, art, or philosophy, we have representatives of the Jewish nation, who have by their labours and researches left an indelible impress upon the pages of history and helped to enlighten and ennoble the human race. It is from the Bible that many of our poets and writers have derived their greatest inspiration; the Bible is a storehouse full of the most noble, the grandest ideas, inspiring our writers to their greatest and most successful efforts. The Psalms of David, the Book of Job, and the teachings of Isaiah have never been surpassed, and still retain their sway over the hearts of millions. No higher homage to the intelligence and lofty genius of the Jewish writers could be paid than the universal pre-eminence accorded to the works of their great law-givers and prophets. The moral law of Moses is virtually unaltered; the principles are still as sound and true as when first propounded, and it is only in the details by which their execution is effected that any change has been made. In the more ordinary and prosaic spheres of thought the superior intelligence of the Jews has been equally conspicuous. The doctrines of Spinoza lie at the root of the whole of that metaphysical philosophy which has had an immense influence upon the opinions and modes of thought of the whole civilized world, for he may undoubtedly be regarded as the founder of modern Rationalism. In music and the acted-drama the children of Israel are far ahead of all their rivals. The number of Jews who have distinguished themselves in these two branches of art is surprisingly large, and includes such famous masters as Meyerbeer, Mendelssohn, Rubinstein, Ernst, Moscheles, Benedict, whilst on the stage are to be found such brilliant performers as Grisi, Rachel, and Sarah Bernhardt. It would be altogether superfluous to specify those Jews who have distinguished themselves in literature, science, or philosophy; their name is legion. One thing is certain and unquestionable: to the Jews we owe our knowledge of the sciences of mathematics and astronomy. During the Middle Ages, in spite of the risk they ran and the suspicion they were likely to incur of being astrologers and necromancers, they were the only students of mathematics and astronomy, the mysteries of which they patiently and unceasingly laboured to solve. In these two branches they have from the most ancient times been pre-eminent for their surpassing knowledge, as these two subjects have always had a great attraction for minds in which the powers and habits of calculation are innate and conspicuous. The earliest professors of mathematics in our universities were Jews, and in Germany, notwithstanding the ill-feeling that exists between the Christian and Jewish communities, the bulk of the mathematical professors belong to the Jewish faith. In commerce and finance the reputation of the Jews for success and ability is remarkable and world-wide, whilst in politics we have but to mention such distinguished names as Gambetta and others, to prove that in whatever path the Jews enter their talents and indefatigable energy will invariably enable them to place themselves in the foremost rank. If any further proofs of the great intellectual powers of the Jews are required they will be found in the leaders of the legal profession. Few will be prepared to question the learning and acumen of such eminent lawyers and advocates as Lord Herschell, Sir George Jessel, Mr Benjamin, and Mr Cohen. Among the well-known politicians with a promising career opening out before them we must not overlook such men as Mr Mocatta, Baron de Worms, and others.

Of the many charges brought against the Jews, rapacity was by far the most frequent. It was a charge that could be brought forward with very little support, any evidence in refutation of it being sure to find but scant credit in the minds of Christian judges imbued with the strong prejudice everywhere prevalent against the Jews. It was the universal belief that the Jew would always exact his pound of flesh from the poor victim in his clutches. No abatement or reduction was ever to be expected from the relentless, merciless Shylock. Doubtless there was some reason for these accusations, but it will be somewhat of a surprise to our readers to learn that it was to the possession of qualities considered unusual and unlooked-for in a Jew, honesty and integrity, that the founder of the Rothschild family owed his success. From our infancy we have been taught to regard Jews as above all things sordid, mean, and selfish, ever grasping and coveting the goods of others. No impression could be more misleading or mistaken. The wish was father to the thought, and ignorant and intolerant Christians seized upon usury as a weapon with which they could wreak their vengeance upon inoffensive Jews. Whether these charges of rapacity brought against the Jews were often unfounded, or whether the first Rothschild was a marvellous exception to the rest of his co-religionists, we will not argue; it is sufficient for us to know that Mayer Amschel Rothschild was well known in Frankfort for his justice and fairness, and that even his Christian neighbours agreed in calling him "the honest Jew." Why honesty should be so generally regarded as an exceptional trait in a Jew's character, we cannot say, but that such is the general opinion few will dare to deny. When we remember the frugal, abstemious habits of the Jews, and the careful economy by which they are distinguished, it should surely not appear surprising or incompatible if they were found to be not altogether wanting in honesty and love of fair dealing. The narrow prejudice that formerly existed against the Jews on the score of their grasping avarice is not so pronounced now, but still it cannot be said to have altogether ceased to exist. That public opinion should have become so much more lenient and favourable to the Jews is no doubt greatly owing to the respect and esteem that cannot be denied even by Christian rivals to the unimpeachable lives and characters of the Rothschilds, the Montefiores, and other prominent families. The history of such well-known firms has done much to remove the ill-feeling formerly so rife, and has gone far to prove that Jews when placed on an equal footing with their Christian fellow-citizens can and do trade with a fairness and justice not a whit inferior to those of their business rivals. But, while this prejudice is nearly extinct in England, it still burns with undiminished fury on the Continent. Even when its fury is apparently exhausted and smouldering away, Court chaplains and others, as already stated, abuse their position and fan its dying embers once more to a flame. There is no just cause for this violent outcry; it arises more from envy and jealousy than from any reasonable and well-founded grievance. In Germany of late years there has been a violent agitation or crusade against the Jews, in which all the charges formerly brought against them, such as that of sacrificing Christian children, have been revived, and have found belief among the ignorant classes. The only objection for which there is the least show of reason, is that the Jews everywhere supplant the Christians, and secure all the best and most lucrative appointments, whether in commerce or in the learned professions. But that the Jews do this is surely we think a great and convincing proof of their superior talents and abilities, for they would never receive such honour, in the face of the general ill-will, were it not for their surpassing and undeniable abilities. In making this the basis of an unwarrantable agitation to secure the expulsion of the Jews, the greatest want of reason and justice is displayed. The success of the agitation is rendered impossible by such conduct, which deprives the movement of the support of all thinking men, who cannot fail to see that jealousy and envy are the real causes which excite the animosity of their Christian neighbours in the nineteenth century. Their bitterest opponent never thinks of accusing the Jews of gaining their successes by foul or unfair means. The secret of their invariable success in life is that they not only have an innate and remarkable aptitude for business, but that they at the same time excel their Christian rivals in frugality and economy. The saying that "A penny saved is a penny gained" recommends itself strongly to their minds, and they fully appreciate the wisdom of Fielding's remark, that "Men do not become rich by what they get, but by what they keep." Now thrift is a quality which we have always heard described in terms of praise and approbation, so that to persecute the Jews simply because they are industrious and thrifty is certainly a novel, but hardly a commendable doctrine. Jealousy is however proverbially blind, and will seize on any pretext, however weak, as an excuse for its mad and unjustifiable proceedings. The Jews are thrifty, the Christians luxurious; consequently success must always rest more with the former than with the latter. The great cry now against the Jews is not so much that they are rapacious, as that they undersell or do business cheaper than others, and thus gradually get the bulk of whatever business there is into their hands.

But in these days of free trade, when competition is the soul of business, it would strike most persons on considering the matter that the greatest gainers must be the public at large. Christians are always at liberty to do business on the same terms as their Hebrew rivals, but they find themselves unable to maintain the struggle, for their luxurious habits are against them, and they see themselves practically handicapped out of the contest. The remedy however is in their own hands; let them adopt the thrifty, economical habits of their rivals, and they will soon cease to have any grievances on the score of underselling. Jews, we do not deny, like to make the best bargains they can, and are apt to be 'cute and sharp in their dealings, but in this they are by no means singular. Their Christian competitors, if we mistake not, are not so disinterested in their dealings as to be ready and willing to abandon a large profit for a smaller one. Sharp practices are common to both parties. The great Sir Thomas Gresham in many of his business transactions displayed great financial skill and a careful solicitude to secure an ample return for the accommodation he was pleased to place at the disposal of his clients. Had he been a Jew the large percentage of profits he made on many of his transactions would have called forth severe denunciation and many hard words. Our gracious lady, Queen Elizabeth, a perfect mistress of the art of diplomacy, but above all things a woman of the world, proved herself remarkably sharp in her money matters. She forced the loyal City companies to advance her large sums, and, finding she had more money than she required, very graciously returned the surplus,—but with the condition that she was to be paid interest on the amount so restored to its owners. Taken as a body, the Jews will be found as honest and open in their dealings as others, and in any case it is a matter of history that the Rothschild family is largely indebted for its present unexampled prosperity to the honesty of its founder. It cannot, however, be denied that his successors, in their anxiety to augment the fortune bequeathed them, did not hesitate to employ those expedients in common use on the Stock Exchange, which are not free from objection, but which they in common with other speculators were at perfect liberty to adopt. Playing their cards with greater skill than their opponents, the Rothschilds were invariably successful in their speculations, and it was only after their defeat that the losers began to doubt and question the morality of their rivals' manœuvres. Those who engage in such contests should count the risks beforehand, and should remember that the laugh is with him that wins.

We have now said enough to prove what great intellectual gifts the Jews as a race possess, and how well qualified they are to become successful in whatever walk of life they may enter. There is, however, one question which cannot fail to suggest itself:—How is it that with their acknowledged abilities, with their remarkable industry and thrift leading them to the acquisition of splendid fortunes and fame in their careers;—how is it that the Jews still remain an outcast and an alien race amongst the civilized nations of the earth? The answer is short and simple, being contained in the few words—pride of race. Amidst all the sufferings and trials through which they have passed, despite the universal contumely and disdain heaped upon them, careless of and undismayed by the jeers and derision hurled at them, the Jews have clung steadfastly to the belief and conviction that they are the chosen people, that in the distant future their promised supremacy will be achieved and recognized.

"A people still, whose common ties are gone,
Who, mix'd with every race, are lost in none;
A part there are, whom, doubtless, man might trust, Worthy as wealthy, pure, religious, just;
They who with patience, yet with rapture, look
On the strong promise of the Sacred Book."

This faith has made them hold themselves apart; they have neither adopted the religious teachings, yielded to the national spirit, nor mingled their lives with those among whom they live. They have no foothold in the countries in which they have settled, but are indeed strangers in the land. To be let alone and allowed to pursue the even tenour of their way is all they desire, but even this is a concession not readily granted them in many countries. Though for centuries they have had to endure the opprobrium and hatred of those in power, they have never tried to resent their wrongs, but have borne them with patient and silent resignation. An outcast race, they still maintain their proud reserve, and never solicit aid from any but co-religionists, which is certainly more than can be said of the Christian community whose benevolent institutions receive handsome and liberal support from Jewish philanthropists. The isolation in which they live not unnaturally gave rise to feelings of suspicion and distrust, which were intensified by the envy inspired by their enormous wealth and extraordinary success. The rough intellect that found itself unable to cope with the subtle Hebrew mind lent a ready belief to every wild rumour of sorcery and supernatural agency. The results have been seen in Poland, Hungary and elsewhere, where raids on Jewish households have been frequent, ending in many cases in cruelty, spoliation, and bloodshed. In England a better feeling prevails; the barriers that separate the Jews from their neighbours are rapidly falling away, and the Jews are steadily amalgamating with their fellow citizens, as is proved by the ever increasing number of mixed marriages that are made. Besides this there is a feeling among Jews that England is their home, that here their nature and qualities are best appreciated, as it was here that they received the full benefits of citizenship.

Chapter II.

MAYER AMSCHEL ROTHSCHILD.

THE FRANKFORT FIRM.

IT was in the Jewish quarter of Frankfort that the founder of the great financial firm first saw the light. Goethe, who also owned Frankfort as his birthplace, has left us a graphic description of the imperial city, which he states was composed of "town within town, fortress within fortress." Not the least interesting portion of his description is that of the Jewish quarter, enclosed within the ramparts, but yet shut off from the rest of the city by heavy gates and high walls. It was a quarter frequented by few Christians. The houses, huddled close together, were packed from floor to roof with human beings living in a state of squalor and dirt baffling description, while the air was polluted with smells so vile and strong as to drive back all but those whose olfactory nerves had become deadened by long residence or familiarity with the noisome atmosphere. Goethe narrates how he would sometimes peep through the heavy gates and steal a glance at the strange scenes passing in that narrow lane, and goes on to describe what a shudder the sight caused him when he remembered the tales then current of the horrible cruelty and treachery of the Jews. At that time there was a general belief that human sacrifices were offered in the synagogues. Charges were often laid against the Jews of having kidnapped Christian children, who were never seen alive again. Through the midst of this home of the world's outcasts ran the Judengasse, a narrow, dirty lane, lined with dilapidated houses, crowded with dusky, repulsive looking Jews, who would wrangle, argue, and bargain with each other in tones so harsh and discordant that a stranger might well hesitate to venture among them. When, at last, Goethe did pass through the gates, and came into contact with them, their servile cunning, obsequious entreaties, and the filthy state of their persons, combined with the pestilential smells everywhere prevalent, so filled him with disgust that he determined never to visit them again. Years later he was led to considerably modify his opinion regarding these descendants of Israel, and he frankly acknowledged that on closer intimacy he found among them many men of quick intelligence and honourable principles, ready at all times to give him a hearty welcome. "Everywhere I went I was well received, pleasantly entertained, and invited to come again." He witnessed many of their ceremonies, visited their schools, and confessed to having been very fond of walking with the dark-eyed, merry-tongued Jewesses to the Fischerfelder on Sundays.

A writer in a recent number of the "Journal des Débats," gave the following interesting particulars respecting the Judengasse and its inmates:—

"No trace," said he, "will shortly be left of the houses in which Börne, the German writer, and Mayer Amschel Rothschild, the founder of his family's fortunes, first saw the light. Since 1872, only a single row of houses has been left, as one side of the street has been pulled down after the fall of two houses, when thirty-one persons were buried in the ruins. Looking at the Judengasse in its present aspect one is struck by the narrowness of the houses. They have three storeys facing the street, and the whole of the façade is studded with small windows. The gables are pointed, and access is gained to the houses by three or four steps. The doors open into a dark passage, at the other end of which is a worm-eaten wooden staircase, the boards of which bend as one puts one's foot upon them. The rooms are small and low-pitched. They are inhabited by a few of the poorest and most squalid families, Jew and Christian alike. The room upon the ground floor is used as a shop by dealers in old clothes, shoemakers and tinkers. Several of the wealthiest merchants in Germany at the present time may regard these hovels as the home of their ancestors, who are now replaced by the poor wretches just mentioned. There is little that is picturesque about the Judengasse, and those who have had their curiosity whetted by the descriptions in 'Baedeker,' will see nothing comparable to what one comes across in Italian ghettos. More curious than the Judengasse is a tavern hard by, where the Jewish beggars meet at nightfall. This tavern, kept by a man named Lévy, consists of one long room, the walls of which are painted yellow. Little drink is consumed in this room, but the customers take their meals there and play cards. Round a circular table a cosmopolitan company, consisting of Jews from Poland, where the caftan and the long curls are still worn, as well as from Paris and Berlin, may be seen conversing in low tones, and, upon the evening when the writer paid a visit to the place in the company of a detective, several women were there knitting, one of them being one of the handsomest persons he had ever seen, with magnificent eyes, a white skin, and jet black hair encircled by a kerchief of red wool.

"But, though the Judengasse is not picturesque, its disappearance removes a most interesting historical monument. These decrepit houses revive recollections of another age. The land on which they are built, with the exception of the site owned by the Rothschilds, and on which their house stands, belongs to the town of Frankfort. The Jews confined within their ghetto were not the owners of the soil, being merely tenants at the good will of the Council of the Free City. The Judengasse does not indeed date from earlier than the middle of the fifteenth century, and the walls of the quarter were destroyed by Kleber's army in 1796. During the first part of the Middle Ages the condition of the Jews was comparatively easy. They were the serfs of the Imperial Chamber, and the Emperor, in return for a fixed tribute, accorded them his protection, and was all the more interested in guarding them from ill-usage as he was anxious to preserve for himself the privilege of taxing them. There is no precise evidence as to when the Israelites came to settle in Frankfort, their presence being officially referred to for the first time in 1240. The first massacre of the Jews took place in 1241, when 180 of them perished. A hundred years of comparative peace ensued, though their relations with the Christians gradually became more strained, their wealth and their mode of life and religion inflaming the superstition, the fanaticism, and the cupidity of the lower orders.

"The worst phase of persecution commenced in 1349, the year of the Black Plague. The country round Frankfort was scoured by bands of Flagellants, who went about declaring that the Jews ought to be put to death for having poisoned the wells. When the inhabitants seemed deaf to their appeals, the Flagellants set several houses on fire, and then spread through the streets exclaiming, 'The Jews are burning your houses!' The stratagem succeeded, and there was a general massacre. In the same year the Emperor, Charles IV., had mortgaged his Jews to the town of Frankfort for a sum of about £80,000. This sum was never repaid, and the Jews came under the immediate jurisdiction of the Council. This rendered their position much worse, for the Emperor had allowed them to manage affairs much in their own way, and to choose their own judges. They preserved, nevertheless, a certain degree of autonomy, and for some time the only thing which distinguished them from the ordinary citizen was that they had no political rights. Their existence was, however, precarious, and their fortunes often threatened. Thus in 1389 the Emperor Wenzel suppressed by one stroke of the pen the obligation to pay what was due to them, and now and again during a riot numbers of the account books in which they inscribed the sums owing to them were burnt. There was about this time a Jews' street at Frankfort, but it was not inhabited exclusively by Jews, for many of the best Christian families lived in it. Thus the Burgomaster resided there from 1364 to 1375. Still as their synagogue, their baths, and their assembly room for dancing were in this street, most of the Jews lived near it. But, as it was close to the cathedral, their enemies declared that their cries and blasphemies disturbed the Catholic worshippers. Public feeling became more and more hostile to them, and in 1425 they were prohibited, under a heavy penalty, from taking the name of burgher. The most cruel blow, however, was yet to come. Frederick III., in compliance with the prayer of the clergy, ordered the Jews to remove from the neighbourhood of the cathedral, and, though they offered to wall up the gate of the street leading to that edifice, their offer was refused. The Council selected a site outside the ancient walls of the town, and had houses built at the expense of the Jews. It is thus that the Council owns the ground on which the Judengasse stands. The gates of the ghetto, which were very strong and lined with iron, were kept closed every Sunday and saint's day, as also upon the days when the Emperor entered the city. The Jews were enjoined not to show themselves in public, nor to pass by any church. If business brought them to the Town Hall, they were not allowed to enter by the main door but by a small door from behind. The men were compelled to wear a yellow patch about the size of a crown piece upon their garments, and the women blue stripes to their veils. They were also enjoined to make room for other citizens on the pavement, and not to touch any of the articles in the market. They were not allowed to buy fish before a certain hour of the day, nor to hire Christians as servants. The Council consented to dispense with their wearing the distinguishing cap on payment of a fine of 250 florins, but they were compelled to have either a black or a grey hat. They were forbidden to lend money to minors or to women, to sell new clothes, or to lend upon clothes which were wet or stained with blood.

"These minute regulations, together with many more of a similar nature, were read out every year in the synagogue. The Jews, in short, must have paid very dearly for the privilege of living in Frankfort; the number of marriages between them was even limited, for there could be only a fixed number of houses, the different couples having to wait their turn. Strange Jews were not allowed in Frankfort, and yet that city must have offered them comparative security, for the Jewish community of Nuremberg sought refuge there in 1498. Protected by their walls, the Jews of Frankfort escaped pillage during the revolt of 1525, but the democratic revolution of 1614 drove them out of the city, and they did not return for two years. When order, however, was restored they came back, and, so as to make it quite clear that they were under the protection of the Empire, the Imperial coat of arms was displayed above the gate of their street. In 1711 the whole street was burnt down, but the Jews were so afraid of pillage that they would not open their doors, and many perished. The Judengasse was rebuilt in 1717 and made rather wider. While the work of reconstruction was progressing the Jews were allowed to lodge in the town, the poorest being accommodated in an empty hospital. There were two other fires in the Judengasse during the eighteenth century, and the shells from Kleber's guns in 1796 set fire to 150 houses. The wealthiest of the Israelites availed themselves of this opportunity to settle in the town, and they were not again molested. The gates were demolished in 1808, and many restrictions were removed. The Prince Primate granted the Jews, in 1811, equal civil and political rights with those enjoyed by the other inhabitants, but they lost these again in 1815, and did not recover them until 1853 and 1864. In 1811 there were 159 houses, inhabited by 2,214 persons, in the Judengasse, while at the present time the Jews number 14,000, or eleven per cent. of the whole population."

Here, then, in the Judengasse, in the house numbered 152, but better known as the House of the Red Shield (Rothschild)—afterwards adopted as a surname,—lived Amschel Moses Rothschild, earning a livelihood as a dealer in curiosities and old coins. In the course of his business he was in the habit of travelling about the country, hawking his wares and keeping his eyes open in search of curiosities, and an anecdote is related of him tending to show on what a thread the destiny of the family at one time hung. In reproducing this anecdote, we wish it to be understood that we do not attach any value to it ourselves, our object only being to make the narrative as complete as possible. Many of the stories related of the Rothschilds are pure myths, for lively imaginations have placed a halo of romance about their history, as about that of every other person of notoriety, so that implicit credit cannot always be attached to the anecdotes told of the different members of the firm. The story in question is to the effect that Rothschild was one day walking along a country road, when he was overtaken by a brother pedlar in more flourishing circumstances than he himself, seeing that he had an ass to carry his wares. In the course of conversation, Rothschild was invited to relieve himself of his load by placing it on the ass's back: an offer he was glad to accept. On coming to a narrow ravine where the bridge across was formed by a single plank, Rothschild prudently removed his sack from the ass's back to his own shoulders, remarking as he did so:—"Accidents sometimes happen at places like this, and, as this sack contains all my fortune, it is well to be on the safe side." His comrade laughed at his fears, but Rothschild's prudence was fully justified by events, for no sooner had the ass, followed by his master, reached the middle of the bridge than the plank gave way, and both were precipitated down the chasm. Thus by a miracle Rothschild saved both his life and his money.

We have already mentioned that the number of Jews allowed to marry was limited, but Rothschild having gained permission availed himself of his privilege and took unto himself a wife, who, in 1743, gave birth to a son whom they named Mayer Amschel. When the boy grew up and his parents had to decide as to his future in life, they resolved to have him educated with a view to his becoming a rabbi, or teacher in the synagogue. This resolution was not unnatural, seeing that several of the family had been or were then celebrated for their knowledge of the Talmud and the doctrines of the Jewish faith. Dr Lewysohn states that in the Jewish cemetery at Worms is buried Rabbi Menachem Mendel Rothschild, who had been the chief rabbi to the congregation there. Isaac Rothschild was warden of the Frankfort synagogue, Solomon Rothschild was chief rabbi of Würzburg and Friedburg, and Boaz Rothschild was the author of a Hebrew work published at Fürth in 1766. Mayer Amschel, in 1755, lost his parents and was sent by his relatives to Fürth to complete his studies. Theology was, however, not to his taste. He had been born and bred in the midst of a community whose whole thought centred upon getting and accumulating money. He had early learnt to see in wealth the only true standard by which one could judge his fellow, and he not unnaturally shared the ambition that fired his comrades to acquire riches and a consequent name among his co-religionists. His instinct for business was too powerful to resist. Even while at college he had become well-known as a collector and dealer in old coins on a small scale, and in this way had made the acquaintance of several numismatists in the neighbourhood.

MAIER AMSCHEL ROTHSCHILD.

This is surprising when we remember that he could not have been much more than twelve years old at the time, but with Jews the talent for business is innate, and their natural shrewdness and skill in making bargains more than compensate them for their youth and inexperience. Notwithstanding the limited resources at his disposal, Mayer Amschel seems to have pursued his youthful speculations with considerable energy and—profit.

At length, rightly judging that he was better fitted for commercial than theological pursuits, he abandoned his studies altogether and returned to the Judengasse, where his abilities and shrewdness soon became known among his co-religionists. His reputation reaching the ears of some of the large firms, several offers of employment were made him, and not being one of "those who are content to spend their lives trotting on a cabbage leaf," as the proverb says, when a wider field of enterprise was thrown open to him, he accepted the offer of a banking firm named Oppenheim in Hanover. In their service he remained several years, gaining and maintaining a high character for steadiness and reliability, while his energy and abilities were recognized by his gradual promotion to the responsible post of co-manager. Frugal and economical in his habits, he was able to save a considerable portion of his salary, until he thought he possessed sufficient capital to make a start on his own account. He therefore left Oppenheim's service and set up in business for himself, dealing in old coins, bullion, and anything by which he thought he could make a profit. For some time it was a hard, uphill fight, and more than once the budding firm was in danger of collapse, but the untiring energy and honesty of its founder, triumphing over all difficulties, placed it on a sound basis and secured its future safety. Some years later he determined to transfer his business to his birthplace, where he settled for good, as in 1770 he married Gudula Schnappe, and lived in his father's house in the Judengasse. His business was at the outset of a very mixed description, ranging from coins and curiosities, to bullion, bills of exchange, &c., but as his speculations, distinguished by cautious boldness, were almost invariably successful, he was soon in a position to abandon the business of a dealer in works of art for that of a banker and financier. One of his earliest investments was to purchase the freehold of the house in the Judengasse, which has given birth to one of the greatest financial houses in the world. In all his business transactions he displayed remarkable honesty and integrity; so widely did he become known as the "honest Jew" that his reputation spread through the surrounding provinces, and was largely the means of securing him fresh business. A man of his character has never lacked friends, and Mayer Amschel found many persons ready and anxious to recommend him and gain him new clients. Oppenheim, his old employer, was especially zealous in promoting the success of his former employé, and never allowed an opportunity to slip of saying a word in his favour.

During his apprenticeship at Oppenheim's Mayer Amschel had more than once come into contact with Lieutenant-General Baron von Estorff, an intimate friend of William IX., Landgrave of Hesse, and had won his good opinion and esteem. When years later Baron Estorff, who, from his own knowledge and Oppenheim's accounts, was able to form an estimate of Rothschild's worth, had an opportunity of advancing his fortunes, he did not hesitate to recommend him to the Landgrave as a person well qualified to act as his financial agent. Seeing that the Landgrave had a private fortune of thirty-six million thalers, it was indeed a most lucrative post to obtain. Rothschild received a summons to wait upon the Landgrave. When he was ushered into the room, he discovered his Highness deep in a game of chess with Baron Estorff, who seemed to be getting the best of the struggle. Not caring to disturb the Landgrave's calculations, which absorbed his attention so entirely that he had not noticed his visitor's entrance, Rothschild stood by, a silent spectator of the game. At last the Landgrave, in his perplexity and despair, threw himself back in his chair, and in so doing caught sight of the banker. He at once inquired of his visitor:—

"Do you know anything of chess?"

Rothschild's answer was to point to a particular piece, saying—

"Would your Highness move this piece to that square?"

The move he suggested was adopted, and at once put a different complexion on matters. So far from the game being lost to the Landgrave, it slowly turned in his favour, and was eventually won by him. He then conversed with Rothschild on the subject of the latter's visit. He was so highly impressed by his visitor's intelligence and address that he told Baron Estorff, after the banker's departure, that he had "certainly recommended him no fool." The result of the interview was that Mayer Amschel Rothschild was appointed Court-Banker to the Landgrave of Hesse.

In 1804, Rothschild contracted with the Danish government for the issue of a loan of four million thalers: a sign of his growing influence and prosperity. At that time all Europe was in arms against Napoleon, who defeated and overran kingdom after kingdom. In 1806, the Emperor sent a portion of his army to chastise Frankfort and Hesse-Cassel for the support they had given to the cause of the Allies. The truth was that the Landgrave, having a keen eye for business, had found he could largely augment his already handsome fortune by placing his troops at the disposal of the Prussian and English governments, receiving in return large subsidies. This conduct reached the ears of the "child of fortune," who determined to administer a severe punishment to the Landgrave, by plundering and sacking Hesse-Cassel. The approach of the French becoming known, the Landgrave concluded that under the circumstances discretion was the better part of valour. He therefore made hasty preparations for flight. But, although he would by flight secure the safety of his person, he could not render his money safe, for that he was forced to leave behind. Consisting as it did largely of specie, its mere bulk was a hindrance to its removal, and yet to leave it where it was would be but making a present of it to the French. In his dilemma he recollected Rothschild, and, thinking the banker might be able to take charge of his money, he had it packed and sent to Frankfort.

"Mayer," said the Landgrave, "I have already had some experience of your honesty and integrity, and have now to put it to further proof. I wish to deposit with you my whole fortune; to your care I leave it, to be returned to me in more peaceful and happier times."

"Such a signal mark of your confidence and esteem flatters and honours me, your Highness; but do you not forget that the French will be here in a few days?"

"Do you think so?"

"And that in their train there always follows a band of lawless ruffians, who will fall upon us and plunder us without mercy. It will be a time of unrestrained pillage, as your Highness must know full well."

"Ah, well, Mayer, I leave my fortune to your care, and you will act as you think best. I ask no receipt from you, knowing that in your hands the money will be safe, if you can but keep the French from handling it."

With these words the Landgrave left, paying no heed to Rothschild's protestations, on finding himself thus suddenly and unexpectedly saddled with the responsibility and anxiety attaching to the custody of so large a sum. Before the week passed all his prophecies were fulfilled. Frankfort was in the hands of the French, who gave themselves up to plunder and wanton destruction. Rothschild, being a man of well-known wealth, was one of the first visited, and had to endure calmly and unmoved the sight of his premises being sacked and stripped of everything of value. He had, however, good reason for his calmness. By thus quietly allowing the French to seize his own property, of no small value, he prevented a more thorough search of his premises being made, and so secured the safety of the Landgrave's money, which he had artfully concealed in wine casks in his cellars, or had buried in his garden.

This was the turning-point in Rothschild's career. It was the tide in his affairs, taken at the flood, and leading on to his future prosperity and fortune. Had the founder of the Rothschild family refused to undertake the trust confided to him, the course of European history might have been altered, and some of the most remarkable characters of the nineteenth century have remained unknown to fame. The trust was, however, faithfully kept, and Rothschild, after the French had once more left the city, started business afresh, and made such good use of the Landgrave's thalers that in a few years he was reputed to be richer than ever. He seems to have transmitted the whole of the money to his son Nathan, who was established in business in London. This son was already a well-known man in the English capital, where the astounding skill and boldness of his speculations had taken the City by surprise. He thus referred to the fortune left in his father's hands :

"The Prince of Hesse-Cassel gave my father his money; there was no time to lose, so he (my father) sent it me, and I put it to such good use that the Prince made me a present of all his wine and linen."

A period of respite followed, during which most of the German rulers gave in, either willingly or from necessity, their allegiance to Napoleon. Being raised by the Emperor to the dignity of Elector of Hesse-Cassell, William IX. was enabled to return from his exile. One of the first persons he visited was, not unnaturally, Rothschild. He was aware, from the papers and other sources, of the pillage of Frankfort, and knew that the house of the Jew-banker had not escaped a visit. It had been reported to him, with every show of truth, that Rothschild had been robbed of all he possessed, and was completely ruined. Not knowing anything of the stratagem by which his fortune had been saved, the Elector concluded that his thalers had gone to fill the pockets of the French soldiery; but he still resolved to visit his old agent, if merely to show that his regard and esteem for the latter had suffered no change.

"Good day, Mayer, good day," said he, extending his hand; "at last we have peace again, though rather dearly bought. You see before you a poor devil of a prince as badly off as Job was."

"You poor, my lord!"

"Yes, to be sure, since those cursed thieves have run off with my thalers as well as yours. If it is not inconvenient to you, I should be glad to get some small advance from you against the indemnity that is to be made me."

"But your Highness has no need to borrow. The money your Highness entrusted to my keeping is safe and untouched."

"Teufel!" cried the Prince; "why, did not the French plunder your premises?"

"Pardon me, and I will explain. The French stripped me of everything belonging to myself, but I was careful not to irritate them by any violent resistance, else they might have made a more careful search in my cellar, where your money was hidden."

"What! can it be—"

"Yes, my resignation was a ruse; they little dreamt how great a prize they missed."

"Is it possible!" exclaimed the Prince, almost dumb with surprise.

"For the last nine years, your Highness, I have taken the liberty of making use of your thalers to compensate myself for the loss of mine. All my speculations have been successful, and I can at this moment, without inconvenience, restore the whole sum to you, with interest at five per cent."

The Prince was deeply moved, and with difficulty could express his gratitude and his admiration of Rothschild's noble conduct.

"Friend Mayer," said he, "you are the most honest Jew I know; keep my money, and do what you think fit with it. I want no interest on it for the time it has been in your custody, and for the next twenty years I undertake to leave it with you, and to receive no interest on it above two per cent."

This is the account given by some writers who, dazzled by the immense riches and power of the Rothschilds, were unable to ascribe those riches and that power to ordinary business transactions, and so have gone out out of their way to invent a romance for which they have no better authority than their imaginations. This story is derived from the "Sprüchwörter der Deutschen," and to show how little dependence can be placed upon its truthfulness, we need only mention that it is related about a "Moses" Rothschild of Frankfort, of whom no one has ever heard, as there was no Rothschild of that name living. Further, the Landgrave fled from Cassel at the first approach of the French, and could not have gone to Frankfort, as that city was already in the possession of the enemy. Neither could the money have been buried in the garden, as no gardens existed in the Judengasse, and the Jews were forbidden by law from owning any freehold property in any other part of the city. The true unvarnished story seems to have been the following:—

Some writers maintain that Rothschild's connection with the Court of Hesse Cassel commenced during the lifetime of the Landgrave Frederick II., who died in 1785, leaving an immense fortune of fifty-six million thalers. This he had acquired by means of his poor subjects, whom, for handsome subsidies, he had placed at the disposal of the English Government. In 1775 he raised a levy of 12,800 Hessian troops, who were shipped off to quell the rising of the American colonists, and further detachments, amounting to about 4,000 more, were sent at intervals. For the services of these men he received from England twenty-two million thalers. On his death he was succeeded by his son, William IX., a warlike prince, who had seen some service under Frederick the Great. He followed his father's plan, and increased, by large subsidies from the English Government, the vast fortune left him.

In 1787 he was paid six hundred thousand thalers for the services of 12,000 men, and in 1794 he furnished the English with 4,000 more, who were employed in Spain against France. When the French invaded Germany the petty German princes were unable to offer any opposition to their advance; they all fled before the soldiers of the Republic. The Landgrave in the first place went to his brother in Schleswig, but afterwards, in 1808, proceeded to Prague, where he met with a somewhat unpleasant surprise in the shape of an Imperial decree which stated that "the House of Hesse Cassel has for some years past sold its subjects to the English crown, and by that means has amassed a large fortune. This detestable avarice has brought about its own punishment, as the house has ceased to reign." When the treaty of Tilsit was concluded Hesse Cassel was incorporated with the Kingdom of Westphalia.

Whether M. A. Rothschild was appointed Court Jew by Frederick II., as some assert, or first became connected with the Court owing to some dealings he had with William IX., an ardent lover of old and rare coins, and whether his honesty and integrity had won the Landgrave's favour, is shrouded in doubt. It is certain, however, that when William IX. became Landgrave M. A. Rothschild was the "Court Jew," and managed all the Landgrave's financial affairs. The bulk of the Landgrave's fortune, there is every reason to suppose, was invested in the English Funds, as being the only safe and reliable investment, and it was Rothschild's duty to collect the dividends as they became due by drawing upon the firm of Van Notten in London, in whose hands the stocks were deposited. The commission he charged for this business must of itself have amounted to a large sum. That the Landgrave was satisfied with the way in which Rothschild managed his affairs may be inferred from the fact that he gave Rothschild's third son, Nathan, when he established himself in London, full power to deal with his stocks as he deemed best, and transferred to him all the business which the Van Notten firm had formerly conducted. His confidence must have been great, as Nathan Rothschild was allowed perfect liberty of action, and could sell out and re-invest the stocks confided to him as he pleased. When William IX. fled from Cassel, his first great care was to provide for the safe custody of his money, and this we know M. A. Rothschild undertook to do. What was the exact sum entrusted to him on this occasion we cannot say with any certainty, though it is stated by some writers to have amounted to two million thalers. Now, instead of hiding or burying the money, as some have asserted, it would surely be more characteristic of such a shrewd man of business as Rothschild to have transmitted this sum to London to be disposed of as Nathan Rothschild thought fit. To conceal so large an amount from the French would be next to impossible, and, besides, it would have been madness for M. A. Rothschild to have kept the money himself, when its safety could have been secured by sending it to London; and that he did send it we have his son's word. The romantic version, therefore, seems to have very little truth in it, with the exception of the main point that the fortune of the Landgrave was the original cause of the subsequent success of the Rothschilds. The commission gained by the London and Frankfort houses every year for managing the Landgrave's affairs must have been considerable, and would of itself have formed a sufficiently strong base for the many successful speculations which the Rothschilds entered into in the money market. Under these circumstances, they may not have speculated for their own benefit with the Landgrave's money at all, and were therefore able to restore it to its owner whenever he thought fit to claim it back.

During the war in Spain the Duke of Wellington experienced great annoyance and embarrassment from the failure of the specie supplies, and the English Government were unable to assist him in his difficulty, as they could induce no bankers to assume the responsibility of conveying the money to Spain. At this juncture M. A. Rothschild stepped forward and offered to undertake the task for a pretty heavy commission. His offer was accepted, fortune smiled on his enterprise, and the money reached the Duke safely. This was a most profitable piece of business, as Rothschild is said to have cleared annually for eight years a sum of about £150,000. The success of this operation, and the punctuality which distinguished its execution, induced the Government to entrust the Rothschilds with the payment of the enormous subsidies to the various Continental princes, and this, again, still further increased the growing reputation and influence of the firm.

Thus it was that the Rothschilds made their first millions, and few can say they have gained their fortunes in an equally honourable and praiseworthy manner. When once the first million had been made, it was a comparatively easy task to add others. Water always flows to the sea, or, in other words, money makes money. But streams in their progress to the ocean become discoloured by the muddy waters of affluent streams, and so with the Rothschilds' millions. The first were gained by the fairest of means, but some of those that succeeded were undoubtedly won by recourse to those expedients and artifices, common on the Stock Exchange, which are open to serious moral objections.

Mayer Amschel Rothschild died on the 13th September, 1812, in his sixty-seventh year. Just before his decease he summoned his five sons to his bedside, and with his last breath, after giving them his blessing, enjoined them to remain faithful to the law of Moses, to remain united until the end, and to undertake nothing without having first consulted their mother. "Observe these three points and you will soon be rich among the richest, and the world will belong to you"—a prediction that has been fulfilled to the letter.

He left five sons, Anselm Mayer, Salomon, Nathan, James, and Carl, who soon after his death established a pentarchy, Anselm retaining command of the original house in Frankfort, whilst the others founded new branches in Vienna, London, Paris, and Naples respectively. By so doing they wonderfully increased the reputation and influence of the firm, and gradually gained that control over the different money markets which enabled them to augment their fortunes with such astounding certainty and rapidity.

Although Mayer Rothschild is known to history merely as an eminent financier, money-making did not monopolize his time or thoughts. With all his engagements, he still managed to find leisure and opportunities for administering relief from his well-lined purse to his suffering fellow-mortals, and many tales are told of his benevolence and charity. He would often stop a poor, starving creature in the street, to place a coin in his hand and hurry away to prevent his face being recognized. He moreover exerted his influence to obtain an extension of the civil and political rights of the Jews, and the abolition of the tyrannical restrictions from which they suffered.

His wife Gudula survived him many years, dying in 1849, at the ripe old age of ninety-six. Notwithstanding its dismal and filthy surroundings, the old house in the Judengasse was her home to the last. No entreaty or attempt at persuasion could induce her to abandon the house so intimately associated with the growth and success of the great firm, whose very name was derived from the sign by which the house had been distinguished from its neighbours. Superstitious scruples and a love of the old place combined to prevent her forsaking it. In her eyes it had some mysterious connection with the prosperity and greatness of the family. Here then she lived on, distinguished by the simplicity of her habits, until the thread of life was snapped and her remains were carried to the grave.

"The mother of the Rothschilds, the Hecuba of the European Crœsus family," wrote an eye-witness during her lifetime, "must be almost a centenarian, but so vigorous and active is she still, that she manages to visit the theatre nearly every night. There she sits in her box, with a fan in her hand to shield her eyes from the dazzle of the lights, with an old Jewish hood, adorned with flowers, upon her head, no hair visible, dressed in coloured silks, with the most costly lace about her neck and breast. Of her sons, Anselm is most like her. She lives in the Judengasse still, in the same house as when she, at that time the wife of a needy shopkeeper, brought her children into the world. This old musty house, in the dampest and most unhealthy street in the city, she has never been willing to abandon."

"Here I have seen," said she, "my sons grow rich and powerful, and, as I have not become conceited in my old age, I will leave them their good fortune, which would certainly forsake them, were I from pride to abandon my humble dwelling." Owing to the narrowness of the street, no vehicle could approach her house, and her son's carriage could come only as far as the entrance of the Gasse when she returned from the theatre, so that she was always carried home from the carriage.

Heine, in his work, "Ueber Börne," gives us a pleasant description of a walk he took through the Judengasse, together with an interesting reminiscence of the first Rothschild and his wife :—

" In this small house lives the worthy dame, the Letitzia, who has given birth to so many Napoleons of finance; the great parent of all loans, who in spite of the world-wide rule of her kingly sons, will never consent to leave her little, but fondly cherished palace in the Judengasse, and to-day, owing to the great festivities, her windows are adorned with white hangings. How pleasantly the lamps shine which she lit with her own hands on the 18th October of the Jews, which has been celebrated now for more than two thousand years in remembrance of the day when Judas Maccabæus, with his equally brave and heroic brothers, set his country free, as did Frederick William in our day. The tears spring to her eyes as the good old dame looks at the lamps, for they bring back to her the memory of Mayer Amschel, her dearly loved husband, and of her children—then young children —who would plant the lamps in the ground, and with childish glee jump over and round them. Old Rothschild, the founder of the reigning dynasty, was a noble soul, goodness and kindheartedness itself; a benevolent face with a pointed little beard; on his head a three-cornered hat, and his dress quiet and sober, if not poor. Thus would he go about in Frankfort, and frequently surrounded, as if holding a levée, by a crowd of poor people, to whom he would either give alms or address a kind word. If a row of beggars was met in the street, with cheerful and pleased countenances, one might be sure that Rothschild was in the habit of passing down that way."

Chapter III.

THE PROGRESS OF THE FIRM.

THE dying injunctions of Mayer Amschel to his five sons were faithfully observed with the filial obedience so characteristic of the Jews. The Jews, with all their faults—and Jews are no more faultless than the rest of mankind—still display many qualities which deserve our praise and admiration. The importance and value they have always attached to reverence and respect towards their elders, and especially towards their parents, are too well known to require demonstration, and certainly few nations excel them in this respect. No doubt the habits of the Jews encourage the development of such qualities as filial obedience and reverence of old age. With their proud reserve, which holds them aloof from their Christian neighbours, they are necessarily forced to foster the pleasures and comforts of their own domestic circles and to knit the family bonds more firmly together. In Jewish families the wish of the father has far more weight, and is far more highly respected than in Christian families. That the last wishes of Mayer Amschel should have been scrupulously fulfilled, need excite no surprise, for, even if filial obedience had not led his sons to live in unity together, their natural shrewdness would have at once pointed out to them the advantages which would follow from their combined action. But, be the motives what they may, it is a matter of history that the five sons, after their father's death, started business in five of the European capitals, each brother managing his own, but always acting on important occasions in concert with the others. The result of this union of aims and action was that they all rose simultaneously to fame and fortune, rising, too, with a rapidity which appears incredible. There is one drawback to this principle of combined action for their general benefit—the impossibility of writing a lucid and accurate description of the career of each of the brothers, owing to the impossibility of ascertaining what part each played in the many gigantic operations undertaken and carried out conjointly by all. The business of the Rothschilds since 1812 has been so immense, and the bonds linking the different members of the family together so interwoven, that to unravel them appears well-nigh hopeless. The best course for us to pursue under these circumstances is to give in the first place a clear and concise account of the family, and then to deal with the career of each individual member. By the adoption of this plan we hope to avoid confusing the reader by frequent reference to other portions of the narrative.

The success achieved by the founder of the firm was no doubt greatly due to the disturbed state of the financial and political world. Had he fallen on more peaceful times, it may well be questioned whether he would have met with the success he did. In more senses than one we may regard Mayer Amschel as a child of fortune equally with his illustrious contemporary Napoleon. The period from his starting in business to his death in 1812 was a period rife with wars and rumours of war—a period eminently favourable to such a shrewd and daring speculator as he was. It is in such disturbed times, when the prices fluctuate greatly, yielding to the influence of any and every rumour, that speculators reap their richest harvest. Peace, which means prosperity to the country at large, is their dread and abhorrence. Times could hardly have been more auspicious for Mayer Amschel. Trade was then almost annihilated on the Continent, and confidence and credit were at such a low ebb that Rothschild could obtain for his advances pretty well whatever interest he chose to demand. Favoured by fortune and circumstances, and aided as it was by the remarkable faculty he displayed of forecasting the future, his progress was rapid. We are forced to write in these general terms of the founder of the firm, as little but tradition remains to afford us information either as to his business or private life. To the public the archives of the family which could throw so much light upon the history of this century are a profound secret, a sealed book, kept hidden from profane eyes. What a mass of interesting information must the pages of those archives contain! and yet no stranger has been allowed to inspect and make known their contents. No encouragement is offered by the family to any who may desire to obtain information respecting the early history of the members of the firm; indeed, such inquiries, however laudable may be their object, are regarded as intrusive, if not impertinent, and an evasive answer is all that is usually received. The reticence of the family can be easily understood; but still it is to be regretted that some relaxation of this hard and fast rule cannot be made, seeing that the family, owing to the exalted position and relations it holds towards all the States of Europe, has long since ceased to retain its private character. The movements of the Rothschilds are carefully watched, and are as important to the public as those of any Minister. It is said that one enthusiastic inquirer was informed that "they much regretted that no information could be given him on the subject of the business of the founder of the firm, as no record of his loans and other financial operations had been kept, neither could they furnish a photograph, as he had never sat for his portrait; and, in conclusion, that it was impossible to name all the members of the family, as a full pedigree did not exist."

In the previous pages we have narrated how Mayer Amschel started in business as a dealer in coins and bullion, and how, as his reputation for honesty became known, he was able to extend his sphere of action by dealing in bills of exchange, merchandise, &c. We have described how he became known to and appreciated by the Landgrave of Hesse, through whose influence he gained a large number of wealthy and princely clients, and how his fame and credit were still further augmented in 1801 by his being appointed Court Jew in succession to Feidel David. In this way he laid the foundation of the substantial fortune he bequeathed his five sons. In 1804 Mayer Amschel found that he had prospered so well in his undertakings that he was in a position to lend his assistance to the Government of Denmark, whose finances were not then in a flourishing condition. This transaction was followed by several of a similar nature, Denmark being overtaken by a series of undeserved and unforeseen calamities which quite crippled her for the time. The greatest and most hurtful shock she received was when the English fleet appeared in the Sound without any previous declaration of war, and demanded the surrender of the Danish fleet. This demand being refused, General Cathcart landed some 30,000 men a few miles above Copenhagen, and then bombarded the town for three successive days. The result of these vigorous measures was that General Pyrmann was induced to comply with the English terms and surrender the Danish fleet. In the ensuing year war with Sweden followed, and still further crippled the financial resources of the Government, which was compelled to impose fresh burdens on the already heavily-taxed and impoverished country. Besides issuing an enormous amount of paper money, the Government was compelled in their extremity to apply to the Rothschilds for assistance, an application which, as we have said, met with a favourable response. Between 1804 and 1812 the loans issued by M. A. Rothschild on behalf of Denmark amounted to no less than 10,000,000 thalers; a large sum for any one firm to be responsible for at that time, when money was dearer than it is now. This large business proved, no doubt, very lucrative to the contractor, and gave a turn to the business of the firm which it has since retained. After 1812 the miscellaneous business was gradually abandoned, Government operations taking its place. It is not certain whether the last Danish loan was issued during the lifetime of Mayer Amschel or not; that, however, is a trifling matter. Having established the firm on a solid basis, Mayer Amschel during the last years of his life left the management to a great extent in the hands of his sons, and devoted himself to work more congenial to his better nature. His philanthropy and benevolence were unbounded, and endeared him to the memory of his fellow-citizens. The esteem in which he was held was proved by his being nominated by the Grand Duke a member of the Wahlcollegium, when Frankfort was made the capital of the new Grand Duchy. It was to the Grand Duke that the Jews of Frankfort were indebted for the grant of the full enjoyment of political and municipal rights which had hitherto been withheld. With the death of Mayer Amschel in 1812 the first period in the history of the firm closed—a period small and insignificant in results when compared with those that followed, but still considerable if compared with the results achieved by any other banking firm.

The second period in the firm's history dates from 1812 to 1826. On the death of their father, four sons out of the five started each a business of his own, in Paris, Vienna, Naples, and London respectively. The branch in London had, however, existed some time previously, having been founded by Nathan Mayer Rothschild, who saw that Frankfort was too small to afford scope for the operations of himself and his brothers. With his characteristic decision, he resolved to repair to England and win his way to fortune by his own unaided efforts. In subsequent pages we shall detail the business he conducted, and will content ourselves by stating here that the financial ability he displayed was so marvellous that he gained an unprecedented success in the country of his adoption. He contributed largely to the prosperity of the parent firm in Frankfort by inducing the English Government to entrust his father with the payment of its subsidies to its foreign allies. That this was a profitable business may be inferred from the fact that in one year the subsidies amounted to no less than £11,000,000, which must have left a handsome commission in the coffers of the firm. On the death of Mayer Amschel, an exception was made to the rule always since observed by the firm, that the eldest member should be regarded as its head and ruling spirit. The brothers, fully cognizant of his superior intellectual capacity, willingly acknowledged Nathan Mayer as the most fit to direct all their most important transactions. That they acted wisely in doing so, results have proved, as their business began from the year 1812 to assume cosmopolitan proportions, and to pervade all parts of the world. Its operations were of a most gigantic nature, whilst the success it achieved was correspondingly rapid. Its success was indeed so remarkable that the only explanation of it seems to be in the extraordinary vicissitudes and excitement through which many of the European States passed during that period, and of which the Rothschilds took advantage. From 1812 the firm quitted the old conventional paths and struck out a new line of business, which it has made peculiarly its own. Its fortunes and its resources had then grown so large that the old banking operations were no longer worthy of its attention. Government business, such as issuing State loans and the emission of Government funds, proved more congenial, and no doubt more profitable, so that we find the firm between 1812 and 1830 engaged in the transaction of a series of vast operations, which raised it to a position of power no other firm has ever attained. Its influence was so all-powerful that it was a saying, no war could be undertaken without the assistance of the Rothschilds, since the control exercised by them on the money markets was such that they could effectually withhold or procure the requisite funds.

The inauguration of this new business opened up a new field of industry, if we may so call it, which possessed such attractions in the shape of facilities for making and losing money, that it soon became popular. Every year the business in Government funds increased in value and importance, for the advantages the funds possessed were so many and so great that merchants and persons of every rank and station hastened to invest in them. By the purchase of Government securities the buyer knows he holds the best security for his money, since the credit and solvency of the country are pledged to him, and, as it is of the greatest public importance to preserve these uninjured, so his security is practically safe from destruction. No other way of investing money with equal safety exists, for in private enterprises, in which the security may be goods or landed property, the whole capital may suddenly be lost by fraud, fire, or other accidental causes. Then, again, an investor can rely with certainty on regularly receiving a fixed interest on his capital, whereas, were he to invest his money otherwise, the interest would be dependent on contingencies beyond his control. Another advantage, and a very great one, is that anyone can purchase what amount of Government stock he pleases, and in this way make use of all the money he can command. He is not limited to a round sum, as would be the case if he lent his capital on mortgage, which might demand either a larger or smaller amount than that at his disposal for the time being, but in Government stock he can invest the amount down to the last shilling. Most Government stocks are negotiable in all the leading European markets, so that their popularity may be due in no small measure to their portable and saleable qualities. It is scarcely to be wondered at that the demand for these stocks was for ever increasing, and that the business done in them became in a few years of the greatest importance. In addition to the intrinsic value of the stocks, an additional value was derived from the speculation which took place in them. By the exercise of a certain amount of shrewdness, and aided by good fortune in the choice of the moment for buying or selling, it was possible to make hitherto unheard-of gains. This possibility naturally caused a general desire to share in such easily-earned profits, and in this way speculation went on increasing. In the course of time, when the public appetite for investing was no longer appeased by Government funds, stocks and shares of every description were issued and snatched up with avidity. Year after year speculation grew, and gradually degenerated into one vast system of gambling. No objection can be raised to legitimate purchases or sales of stocks, but since the bulk of Stock Exchange business has been based on speculation there can be no doubt that the effects are far from beneficial. When it is possible to make enormous and fabulous gains, with comparatively no exertion, by operations on the Stock Exchange, it would be surprising if many business men were not found to quit the old paths in which their fathers made their fortunes by steady persevering industry, to enter upon one surrounded with such rosy allurements, where failure appears out of the question. The commerce of a country must be affected by this endless speculation, as the amount of capital sunk in keeping stocks up at fictitious prices must at times be immense. To make matters worse, everything imaginable is done to encourage this speculation. The disclosures recently made in connection with the managers of several of the London banks prove with what ease unscrupulous persons might without means embark in speculations amounting to hundreds of thousands of pounds. How largely chance enters into Stock Exchange operations is shown by the custom of buying or selling stocks for delivery at some future day. A man may perhaps sell an amount of stock now at a certain price to be delivered to the purchaser say a month hence, in which case he trusts to Providence to be able to buy the same amount of stock himself at a lower price before the time expires, and so clear a profit without having really risked any money. Should he buy, then the opposite principle guides his action. As a proof to what extent gambling of this kind is carried, we may mention that in the corn market crops are frequently sold before the seed has even been planted. The facilities offered are so great that speculators enter into operations out of all proportion to their means, for, being anxious to make as large a profit as they can, they are forced to engage in transactions on a gigantic scale. Should their calculations turn out wrong, or the fickle goddess not be amiable, the result is that ruin stares them in the face. But they seldom yield without making a violent effort to turn the tables in their favour. This they try to do in one of two ways: they either plunge deeper into the speculation, trusting by this plan to obtain a control of the market, or they resort to the fabrication of false news, hoping that the effect produced will be such as to once more make prices favourable to their operations. Rumours, lying, and every possible artifice are adopted by those who speculate on the Exchange, and it is certainly not beneficial to public morality that those should frequently succeed best who prove themselves the greatest adepts in this species of manœuvring. These few explanatory remarks, though perhaps out of place, will enable the reader to understand how practicable it is to acquire rapidly by speculation an enormous fortune, which in the ordinary course of business could be gained only after a life of persevering activity and industry.

The greater part of the Government loans which press so heavily upon the leading European States have been issued through the agency of the great financial and banking houses, at whose head stands the family of Rothschild. Being to a certain extent the originators of this description of business, and possessing such influence on the different European markets, in all of which they had branches or correspondents, it was only natural that the five brothers should manage to secure the goodwill and patronage of the various Governments. We have seen that they issued a series of loans for Denmark between 1804 and 1812, but it was not till tranquillity was restored to Europe in 1815 that the firm was called upon to show the great things of which it was capable. With that year the brothers began a period, lasting for fifteen years, during which they were incessantly engaged in the issue of Government loans. Unvarying success followed them in all their undertakings, and the firm rose to a position of such power and repute in the political and commercial world that they were the dictators of Europe. To give the reader an idea of their power, we may mention that Ferdinand I. of Italy was compelled to accept the condition named by them as the only means of obtaining their aid—the recall and reinstallation in office as Finance Minister of their friend the Chevalier de Medici. And this is no exceptional case; other Governments in their extremity have been forced to agree to the terms dictated by the great financial house. We do not intend to follow and analyze each individual step the Rothschilds made on their road to fame and fortune, but will content ourselves with giving a summary of the leading operations undertaken by them in the course of the second period of their history. According to the Chevalier von Gentz, the annual business of the firm during the twelve years preceding 1826 amounted to no less than eleven or twelve hundred thousand thalers, mostly loans, but partly subsidies. This period was undoubtedly the most prosperous, and at the same time most brilliant, through which the firm has passed. The explanation of this extraordinary activity is easy. The long struggle in which all the European States had been engaged for a quarter of a century, either as the friends or the enemies of Napoleon, had drained the State treasuries of their supplies, whilst the countries were impoverished by the excessive war contributions levied to meet the expenses incidental to the prosecution of the campaigns. When the efforts of the Allies to forcibly shake off the heavy yoke of the Emperor were rewarded with success, and Napoleon placed in a position where he was powerless to threaten the peace of Europe, it was possible to form an estimate of the enormous sacrifices and expense the struggle had cost. Every State, without exception, found itself burdened with debts which seemed to crush its energies and to defy any attempt that might be made to remove them. However, all this was set once more in order and prosperity restored between the years 1815 and 1830; thanks chiefly to the assistance lent by the Rothschilds. According to a careful estimate, the loans negotiated by them during this period for the five great European States, England, Russia, Austria, France, and Prussia, amounted to very nearly one thousand million thalers. Hitherto we have spoken in very general terms of the business of the firm, but it is almost impossible for the reader to form a just conception of the magnitude of the firm's operations without some details being given. We shall therefore proceed to describe a few of the principal loans brought out under the auspices of the Rothschilds.

One of the earliest loans contracted for by the Rothschilds was that issued in 1818 for the benefit of the Prussian Government. This loan, better known as the English loan, was for £5,000,000 sterling. The terms on which it was issued were far from favourable to the Government, and gave a good idea of the low state of credit prevailing at the time. The Government guaranteed interest on the loan at the rate of 5 per cent. They found, however, that they were utterly unable to obtain a better price than 70 per cent. on the first half. The other half was issued, in two portions, at the price of 72½ and 75 respectively, but the whole amount was not applied for. That everything was done to gain the favour of the public is clear, as provision was made to pay off 3 per cent. of the loan in the first year, 2½ per cent. in the second, 2 in the third, 1½ in the fourth, and 1 per cent. in the fifth. In 1830 the remainder of the amount was converted into a Four per Cent., to redeem which a sinking fund of 1 per cent. and the interest accruing from bonds drawn after 1835 were set aside. In 1822 a second English loan of three and a half millions at 5 per cent. was concluded, and was followed in 1830 by the third Prussian-English loan at 4 per cent., of which mention was made above.

Austria found herself compelled, like Prussia, to issue several loans, partly through the agency of the Rothschilds, and partly through them and other banking firms. The first loan was the lottery loan of 1820 for 20,800,000 guldens, contracted for by S. M. von Rothschild, in conjunction with David Parisch. The second followed in 1821, and was for 37½ million guldens, in shares of 250 guldens, bearing 5 per cent. interest. In 1834 Austria negotiated a third loan for 25 million guldens at 4 per cent., in shares of 500 guldens, with the firms of Rothschild, Arnstein, Eskeles, Sina, and Geymüller and Co. The same firms issued a fourth loan in 1839, amounting to 30 million guldens, in bonds of 250 guldens each.

Russia in 1822 raised a loan of 3½ millions sterling through the Rothschilds, and in 1847 France followed suit with a loan of 250 million francs, issued at 75. In 1834 a Greek loan of 66 million francs was issued at 94 per cent., whilst in 1831 Belgium floated one for 50 million francs. The operations of the firm were not confined to Europe, as on several occasions the Empire of Brazil sought its assistance—to the extent of £3,200,000 in 1824, and £800,000 in 1829.

In addition to these Government loans, others were issued in large numbers on behalf of the different German principalities. It was thus the Grand Duchy of Hesse obtained in 1825 6½ million guldens, and 2,375,000 guldens in 1834. The Duchy of Nassau in 1837 placed a loan of 2,600,000 guldens.

Besides these the following loans were issued at different periods. In 1821, for the kingdom of Naples, 16 million ducats, 20 millions in 1822, and £2,500,000 sterling in 1824. The Papal States, 16 million francs in 1831, followed by 2,160,000 francs in 1845. Hesse-Homburg, 1¾ million guldens, 1829; Hohenzollern-Hechingen, 260,000 guldens in 1829; Sachsen-Coburg-Gotha, 3½ million guldens; the Duchy of Lucca, 1,050,000 guldens in 1840, and 1,120,000 in 1843. Baden, in 1840, 1845, 1848, 1849, and 1850, issued loans for 5, 14, 2½, 1½, and 1½ million guldens respectively. Hanover in 1847 had a loan of 3,600,000 thalers; Bavaria, in 1848, 22 million guldens; Hesse, four loans from 1848 to 1851, amounting to 6½ million guldens; and Nassau, 1,200,000 guldens in 1849.

The above list is far from complete, but it will suffice, we think, to convey some impression of the vast proportions and unlimited extent of the business transacted by the Rothschilds since the commencement of their remarkable career. During this second period the reputation and influence of the firm may be said to have reached its zenith. Honours and decorations were showered by grateful Governments upon their benefactors, who were everywhere treated with a deferential consideration a monarch might well envy. In 1815 they were nominated private financial advisers to the Elector of Hesse, and in 1818 appointed members of the aulic commercial council of Prussia. In 1815 the Emperor Francis of Austria conferred upon them an hereditary title of nobility, and in 1822 raised them to the rank of barons. In addition to this the brother in London was appointed at first Consul and then Consul-General for Austria, an honour which his brother likewise enjoyed in Paris. In 1823 Baron James of Paris received the cross of Chevalier of the Legion of Honour, and was afterwards created a Commander of that order. Sir Anthony de Rothschild received his baronetage in 1846, and the title has now descended to Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild (Lord Rothschild), the present head of the London firm.

The third period of the firm's history dates from 1830 to the present time. During the latter part of the second period there occurred in the financial and commercial world that memorable crisis, even now recollected by many as if it were but of yesterday, so terrible was the panic it created. Owing to the abundance of money in the years immediately preceding, some difficulty was experienced in investing capital in good paying undertakings, and by degrees a speculative mania, which reached its climax in 1825, took possession of the public. A collapse ensued, and in 1826 its effects began to be felt, as one by one firms and banks of hitherto undoubted credit and solvability failed. The ruin and distress caused by these failures were widespread, the whole country being more or less affected; and, as is usual in such cases, the evil was felt most by persons who had been led away by the plausibility and specious promises of designing rogues. So great was the blow given to credit, that many firms were brought to the verge of ruin owing to the support of the banks being suddenly withheld. The Bank of England even came in for a share of suspicion, or at least the confidence of its customers was so shaken that a run upon its coffers took place, and threatened at one time to make it close its doors. That this was prevented was, as is well known, largely due to the loyal support rendered the bank by Nathan Mayer Rothschild. Scarcely had credit recovered from this shock, and commerce once more regained its prosperity, than an unexpected blow was struck, and again shook the financial world to its very foundations. In 1830 the French Revolution of July took everyone by surprise, and brought about a period of great uncertainty and anxiety. On this occasion, as in 1826, the Rothschilds rendered great and inestimable services to the public by aiding, with their immense means and credit, many houses threatened with ruin through no fault of their own. There can be no doubt that this bold and public-spirited course of action went far to restore confidence, whilst it certainly added greatly to the repute and honour of the firm. For the next eighteen years after this subversion of things in France, matters remained undisturbed under Louis Philippe, the head and founder of the new dynasty, and Europe enjoyed a period of unbroken repose. And never did the star of the Rothschilds shine with such unrivalled brilliance as during these eighteen years, when their advice was sought for by those in power.

But at the expiration of that time events occurred with equal suddenness, and as little anticipated as those of 1830, which have had a prejudicial effect on the business of the great financial firm. During the period of undisturbed tranquillity through which France passed after the Restoration, time was found to attend to the introduction of much-needed reforms in the Government and Constitution. Necessarily the finances were the first subject to come under review, and in 1848, after a great deal of debating, a reform was made in the system by which the Government had been wont to raise what money it required to borrow, and the hitherto all potent influence of the Rothschilds received a blow from which it has never since recovered. From the beginning of this century the credit of the European Governments had risen steadily. In the early part of the century it was impossible for them to obtain even at 6 per cent. the money they required, whereas in 1848 no Government would have experienced any difficulty in borrowing what sum they pleased at 4 per cent. After the revolution of 1848 the French Government felt convinced they could obtain the money required by the State on easier terms than those previously accepted; they were confident they could procure first hand, without the intervention of any banker, the funds of which they stood in need; they addressed themselves frankly and directly to the people, and the people fully justified the faith reposed in their liberality by placing at the disposal of the Government sums frequently ten times the amount demanded. The quite unexpected success that attended the Government's action has had an immense bearing on the mode in which State finances have since been conducted, and has proved highly beneficial to the State itself, as well as to individual persons. Since that time the immense preliminary profits, in the way of commission, which always went into the banker's pockets, have been abolished, and, whilst the business is conducted far more economically, the intervention of bankers and others is done away with, and the State and its subjects brought into closer contact. The result of the new measures was that all the great banking firms who had been accustomed to undertake loan business for the Government were unable to secure for themselves any advantages not enjoyed by every private person, by every citizen; the old connections with the Government were severed, and thenceforth financiers, banking houses, and citizens were equal. The gilt having been so roughly taken off the gingerbread, the great houses were forced to seek the profits they had been wont to make out of Government business in enterprises of another description. Gradually we find commercial undertakings engaging the attention of the leading capitalists and bankers.

The new arrangements of the Government were a severe blow to the Rothschilds, who had issued for many years the majority of the loans needed by the different States. From that time forward, from that "mad year 1848," so detrimental to their interests, the great firm have pursued an entirely new path. They have, for instance, aided in the formation and establishment of every description of industrial enterprises, in railways, mining, and such-like companies, but more especially in banking and credit institutions, all of which formed admirable foundations for speculation. It cannot be denied that the immense and preponderating influence possessed by the Rothschilds up till that time, began to wane when they lost the business which had been regarded as peculiarly their own, and could no longer sway the money market by their nod as of old. They were forced to put themselves on a level with many other great banking and financial firms. In writing thus it must be distinctly understood that we do not mean to say that the pecuniary resources of the firm were in the least affected by the change; their financial position was as strong as ever, but naturally their having been for so long the trusted and favoured agents of the Government had lent their name a certain pomp and splendour which disappeared when the Government determined to act in future without their aid. Backed up as the Rothschilds are by the enormous wealth of the whole family, and the immense credit attached to their name, they are able still to make large profits in their enterprises, as they are able to wait until a favourable moment occurs for securing the success of their operations. Nothing proves more strongly the energy and vigour of the firm and their capability of still engaging single-handed in colossal enterprises, than the assistance they have of late years lent the English Government. In 1876, as is well known, they advanced the sum of four million pounds sterling to the British Government, to enable the latter to complete the purchase of Suez Canal shares from the Khedive, and in 1884 they once more responded to an appeal for pecuniary aid, by lending the Egyptian Government a sum amounting to one million sterling. Though perhaps more sedate in its movements than in its earlier years, the great firm shows no sign of decay or weakening of its powers.

The first, and head establishment of the firm, was that founded by Mayer Amschel Rothschild in Frankfort-on-the-Main. It was the only one till 1798, when a second establishment was formed in London, to be followed, in 1812, by that in Paris. These two establishments belong to the first period of the firm's history. In the second period falls the creation of the other great houses, namely, that of the Vienna house, about 1816, and that of the house in Naples, in 1820. At the head of these five houses were the five sons of Mayer Amschel. The eldest, Anselm, directed the affairs of the Frankfort house until his death on the 3rd December, 1855; the third brother, Nathan, guided the fortunes of the London firm until 1836, in which year he died. James de Rothschild, the youngest of the five sons, presided over the destinies of the Paris house; he outlived all his brothers by some ten or twelve years, dying on the 15th November, 1868. Salomon von Rothschild of Vienna, died on the 27th July, 1855, and Carl Mayer de Rothschild, the head of the Naples firm, on the 10th March of the same year. The Naples firm has since ceased to exist, but at the head of the remaining four firms are the descendants of the five brothers. In addition to these great establishments managed by members of the family, there are, in every great capital, agents and representatives who watch vigilantly over its interests, and execute the orders given them.

The political events of this century have had so important a bearing on the fortunes of the Rothschilds that we may be allowed to give a brief summary of the leading incidents which have been so instrumental in promoting the success of the millionaire family. In the first period of the firm's history there occurred a succession of remarkable events which threatened the welfare of many European States. The first to attract attention was the outbreak of the War of Independence in America, a war which terminated so disastrously for the honour of England. But, disastrous as was the end of this outbreak to England, it was not to be compared with the evil and ruinous consequences the first French Revolution entailed upon France. Yet, harmful as these episodes were to the countries concerned, they were far from being so prejudicial to the interests of individual persons. To the Rothschilds nothing could have occurred more propitiously than the outbreak of the American revolt, and that of the French Revolution, as the two enabled them by their intimate relations with the Landgrave to lay the foundation of the immense wealth they have since acquired. To this same period belongs the gradual rise of Napoleon, and his elevation to the throne of France, followed at length by his overthrow and abdication, but not until he had forced all Europe to acknowledge and tremble beneath his despotic sway. As Napoleon's star sank and disappeared, that of the Rothschilds rose and increased in brilliance. When Napoleon was finally crushed at Waterloo, his star vanished for ever, whilst that of the Rothschilds seemed to grow every day in power and to dwarf all others. The Rothschilds belong to no one nationality, they are cosmopolitan, and, whilst on the one hand they provided supplies for the armies of Napoleon, on the other, they raised loans for his foes, who used the funds thus obtained in defraying the cost of their campaigns against him; they belonged to no party, they were ready to grow rich at the expense of friends and foes alike. The fall of Napoleon was the rise of Rothschild. By means of couriers and expresses who brought the great firm news of Napoleon's defeat long before the world generally was in possession of the joyful intelligence, the Rothschilds were able to purchase on a gigantic scale, so that when the news became known and the funds in response to the public joy rose with a bound, the gains accruing from the transactions were unprecedentedly large. From that time forward the house occupied a prominent position in the political world; it was regarded as a power whose opinions must be consulted before any great financial operation was undertaken. From that time forward the co-operation of the firm was sought by all the leading States whenever a loan was required, and to receive such assistance was regarded by the recipients very much as a favour not granted at random. With the French July Revolution the firm entered upon its third period, a period during which the influence and position of the several houses attained a height which would have vastly surprised the old banker, Mayer Amschel. History does not record another instance of any one private firm holding so prominent a position, or exercising such a powerful control over the destinies of nations, as is furnished by the Rothschild family. It is almost impossible to describe their influence upon the history of the last fifty years, for the effect of their actions and advice upon the policies of the different Cabinets is not easily seen, owing to the unobtrusive and undemonstrative way in which they always bore themselves in public affairs. They never held any official Cabinet rank, consequently their opinions were seldom publicly ventilated; but, notwithstanding this, they always enjoyed the full confidence of the different Governments who were forced on more than one occasion to seek the counsel of the powerful financiers. No firm or family has ever figured so prominently in history, and yet no family has been so uniformly quiet and unassuming in its demeanour. It never tries to force the public to adopt its opinions, but is content to bring the weight of its influence to bear privately, in a manner which cannot fail to secure careful consideration to whatever plans or suggestions it may think fit to propose. In France it is well known that Baron James was one of the most trusted and esteemed counsellors of the Bourbons and of the Emperor Napoleon, and it is the same in England, Germany, and Austria. The late Baron Lionel de Rothschild was for many years a member of Parliament, and sat on many of the Committees, where his opinions always commanded respect and attention. Nothing demonstrated so clearly the immense power exercised by the firm as the guarantee given by Baron Lionel at the conclusion of the Franco-German War to the German Government to maintain the stability of the foreign exchanges—a guarantee which greatly facilitated the payment of the indemnity.

The Rothschilds are not content to allow their influence to rest merely on the possession of boundless wealth; they seek to extend and increase it still further by becoming owners of land on a large scale—a course by which their interests and those of the nation are more closely linked together. In England, France, Germany, and Austria they possess immense estates, and there can be no doubt that the fact of their possessing such an important stake in the continued prosperity of the different countries, leads the public to attach greater weight to their opinions, and greater importance to their proceedings, than would otherwise be the case. One of the largest estates belonging to the family was that acquired by the purchase, in 1844, of the manors of Schillersdorf, Oderberg, and Hultschin, in Ober-Schlesien, near the Austrian frontiers. Schillersdorf was at one time in the hands of the Jesuits, and afterwards passed into those of the von Eichendorff family. This extensive property, which included a number of villages, was at first laid out for agricultural purposes by its new owner, and supplied the beetroot and turnips for the sugar manufactories which were erected on it. Owing to lower taxes and State subsidies, the manufacture of sugar could be carried on much more profitably in Austria than in the Zollverein, and the profits were still further increased by a little artifice which cheated the Government out of part of the duty. A large proportion of the sugar manufactured was for Russian consumption, and, as the manufactory was close to the frontier, the beetroots were brought across in a dried state, as produce for which the duty was a mere trifle. The weight being considerably reduced by this means, a large saving was effected in the duty. The profits derived from the estate were, however, not large enough to please its owner, and it was afterwards split up amongst a number of tenants. In France the Rothschilds have several very large estates and vineyards. Baron Alphonse's château at Ferrières is famed for the brilliant hunting parties that frequently assemble there, and has been the scene of more than one historic meeting. During the siege of Paris it was chosen as the headquarters of Prince Frederick William of Prussia and Prince Bismarck. It was there that Ferry went to negotiate for an armistice, and that the terms of the capitulation were finally arranged. In England the Rothschilds are amongst the largest landowners, and own between them a large part of Buckinghamshire and Hertfordshire, in which counties there is quite a cluster of their estates. Sir Nathaniel de Rothschild owns a fine property at Tring; Mr Leopold de Rothschild has an estate at Ascott, near Leighton Buzzard; Mr Alfred de Rothschild, one at Alton; Lady Anthony de Rothschild, one at Aston Clinton; Baron Ferdinand, from Vienna, one at Waddesden. In addition to these country estates, they each have a palatial town residence, where the most brilliant receptions and most sumptuous dinners are given. There is still to be mentioned the grand old Gunnersbury House, with its magnificent grounds, where the late Baron Lionel de Rothschild used to reside.

"How has the house of Rothschild amassed such untold wealth?" is a question one is continually striving to answer, but to answer it fully and completely would necessitate our examining and analyzing all the manipulations and undertakings of the great firm from its commencement. It is indeed remarkable that this one firm should have so speculated as not only to have enriched and strengthened itself, but to have risen steadily to a position exalted far above all rivals. The ways and means employed by its members were open to all, and all were at liberty to make what use they pleased of them; but the Rothschilds were ever masters in the art of speculation, and soon outstripped all competitors, and left them far in the rear. Their speculations were at once simple and clear. These masters of finance first laid down the lines of the speculation, and fixed the aim and object of their efforts clearly in their minds, keeping their whole attention fixed on the main points, and never troubling themselves about the details. The manifold and apparently often contradictory manœuvres effected by the firm were always dictated by an unswerving regard to the object they had in view. Nothing, indeed, was more simple than the mode in which they won their enormous profits. For instance, they issued a loan at a certain price—already, perhaps, 2 or 3 per cent. above the contract price. This of itself was a handsome profit to start with, and one which can seldom be secured now, when nearly all first-class loans are brought out on commission. Competition was less keen then, whilst joint-stock banks and kindred institutions were in their infancy. But the public had confidence in the loan, the Stock Exchange was in its favour, and it at once rose to a good premium on its issue price. An ordinary speculator would perhaps have been content with profits such as these, but not so the Rothschilds. They still further multiplied their gains by selling, buying, and reselling continuously the same stocks, until the profits reached, in many cases, an almost incredible figure. Through operations calculated to bring about a fall or a rise, as the case might be, in the prices of particular stocks, the Rothschilds went on unceasingly amassing their millions, and these operations, by the violent fluctuations they produced, formed the basis on which the fortunes of the firm were laid. In order to render these great speculative operations successful, every means at their command was employed. Every method that could be devised was resorted to; every Stock Exchange manœuvre and artifice called into requisition; every sort of rumour and false news promulgated; and money in large and small sums sacrificed to secure the success of their schemes. This, then, was how the earlier Rothschilds amassed their millions, which the present representatives strive to keep and augment steadily and cautiously, without grasping at the handsome, old-fashioned profits of by-gone days.

The greatest gains are made during times of great excitement, when war is imminent, or when a political crisis paralyzes trade and fills the public with anxiety and doubt. To obtain early and previous warning of such weighty occurrences is of the most vital importance to speculators, because, possessed of such information, they are often enabled to steal a march on their rivals and turn their knowledge to profitable account. To gain a start of a few minutes is of immense consequence, making a difference of perhaps thousands of pounds, and, certainly, in this sense, time is unquestionably money, for the fortune or ruin of many on the Stock Exchange is decided in a few moments. Knowing this, it has always been the first care of the Rothschilds to secure the earliest information possible of all such weighty events, more particularly of those in the sphere of politics, and it is especially their interest to discover and favour persons who, owing to their position in official or business circles, are likely to receive the earliest news of occurrences of that description. In addition to their agents and informants in political and official circles, they had in every great capital throughout the world representatives whose duty it was to hunt up and report all that was going on of a nature likely to affect the money market directly or indirectly. The excellence of their system of obtaining early information of passing events has been proved on many occasions, and they have been the first to furnish the Governments with details of more than one occurrence long before the reports reached them through official and privileged channels. The expresses and couriers of the Rothschilds tore along at break-neck speed, as if on a matter of life and death, whilst the Government couriers were content with journeying by comparatively short and easy stages. The news of Napoleon's defeat at Waterloo was, as already stated, known to the Rothschilds several days before the public learned the joyful tidings, and Lord Aberdeen was indebted to them for the first information regarding the outbreak of the French July Revolution. Then, again, the position they held with respect to the Continental railways was greatly in their favour. They were the "Hudsons" of the Continent; all the leading lines were of their creation, and at their disposal. This gave them an immense advantage, and it was nothing unusual when important news reached them to despatch a special locomotive with a courier to communicate the news as speedily as possible to their other houses. After the invention of the telegraph the capabilities and advantages of the new means of communication were readily appreciated by them, and most extensively employed to promote the success of their operations. It is indeed scarcely surprising, when the odds were so much in their favour, that their career should have been an almost unbroken success. It happened, of course, at times that their anticipations were disappointed, that their information proved incorrect, and that their calculations were upset; but such an occurrence was rare and exceptional.

The success of the Rothschild family is ascribed by the Chevalier von Gentz, an intimate personal friend of Baron Salomon von Rothschild, of Vienna, and consequently well qualified to form an opinion, to two causes, which he specifies in the following terms:—"The question how the house of Rothschild has been able to undertake and carry through in so short a time all that it has really accomplished has exercised the brains of many a business and political head. Perhaps, however, the answer is not so difficult as it is generally thought to be. He who, without waiting upon chance, has sufficient sense to perceive that the issue of all great transactions depends not alone on the choice and use of a favourable moment, but also, and even more, on the rigid adherence to once-recognized fundamental principles, will readily acknowledge that there were two principles especially, of which this firm never lost sight, and to which, combined with prudent management and profitable conjunctures, it is certainly indebted for the greatest share of its present prosperity.

"The first of these principles was that which led the five brothers to conduct all their businesses in a long and unbroken unanimity of aims and interests. This was the injunction left them by their father on his death-bed, and, if a lucky star has stood over them, they have ever remained firm in their resolve never to prove forgetful of that injunction. Since their father's death, every proposition, no matter from what quarter it came, has been the subject of their united consideration and discussion. Every operation, even if of only comparative importance, was carried out on a concerted plan, and with the united efforts of all, and all were equal participators in the profits. Though their places of abode have for some years been far apart, even this circumstance failed to destroy the close understanding which exists between the brothers, but rather worked to their advantage, since each, being more thoroughly informed of the state of affairs in the different capitals, was able to prepare and manage so much more effectively the businesses that were to be undertaken by the firm as a body." In this view the writer is backed by the author of "Society in London," who is evidently intimately acquainted with the family, and well qualified to express an opinion. "The family genius of the Rothschilds," says he, "shows itself equally in the understanding they maintain amongst themselves and the relations they establish with all those who can be useful to them. It is only natural that a house divided, as the Rothschilds are, into branches, each branch being a separate dynasty, should have its own little jealousies. There could be no more solid monument to their shrewdness and sagacity than that they should not suffer these jealousies to hold them apart at critical moments when union is strength. Nor do they choose their friends and agents outside themselves with less discrimination, or treat them with less of wise generosity and forbearance. They know exactly whom to select for their purposes, and, once having made their choice, they are loyal to it. Many men are indebted to the Rothschilds for their fortune. No one who has once placed his trust in them, and whom they have found it worth their while to trust, can reproach them with having deserted him."

"The other principle," continues Von Gentz, "which demands notice, is that which guided them never to strive after extravagant profits in any of their undertakings, but to set limits to their operations, and to render themselves independent, as far as human foresight and wisdom could do so, of the freaks of chance. In the maxim Servare modum, finemque tenere, lies one of the great secrets of their strength. There can be no doubt that with the means at their command they could, in this or that operation, have raised their profits to a much higher figure. Even if, however, the safety of their undertakings would not have suffered thereby, they would in the long run have gained less than by extending their forces to a larger number of businesses, ever requiring renewal under all kinds of circumstances. To fail in their undertakings was out of the question, for they staked not merely their wealth and their credit, but also the confidence with which the fairness of their demands, the punctuality of their payments, the clearness and simplicity of their plans, together with the clever way in which those plans were carried out, had inspired the various Governments and all the great business firms. What others sought to gain by so-called decisive strokes, which lead to victory on the field of business as on the field of battle, but which also often lead to great reverses, the Rothschilds have won by the happy use of the best principles of commercial strategy; not through boldness, but by prudence and perseverance.

"The personal and moral characters of the five brothers have contributed in no small measure to the success of their enterprises. If he is powerful enough it is not difficult for a man to secure a numerous following on his side, but in the present instance the voices of all parties unite, and the Rothschilds are, as the phrase goes, respected by great and small, not merely on account of their wealth, but for qualities of heart and soul not invariably associated with riches and power. To be always extending their sphere of kindness, to withhold their hand from none in distress, to advance readily to the assistance of all who solicited their aid, no matter to what class they might belong, and ever to bestow their most substantial favour in the kindest and most feeling manner,—these were the ways by which the Rothschilds won the real and well-merited popularity that is theirs, as many thousands of witnesses and whole families will testify. And this beneficence springs from their innate good-nature and humane disposition, and not from calculation. Moreover, they have been so fortunate as not to have raised up a host of enemies along with their host of friends, which is rarely the case with persons who have risen suddenly to wealth and celebrity. It may be truly said that they have disarmed envy itself, and rendered harmless the tongue of slander."

"There is but one power in Europe," said the French writer Weill, "and that is Rothschild. His satellites are a dozen other banking firms; his soldiers, his squires, all respectable men of business and merchants; and his sword is speculation. Rothschild is a consequence that was bound to appear; and, if it had not been a Rothschild, it would have been someone else. He is, however, by no means an accidental consequence, but a primary consequence, called into existence by the principles which have guided the European States since 1813. Rothschild had need of the States to become a Rothschild, while the States on their side required Rothschild. Now, however, he no longer needs the State, but the State still has want of him."

Chapter IV.

ANSELM MAYER VON ROTHSCHILD.

THE FRANKFORT FIRM (continued).

WHAT the considerations were which guided Mayer Amschel Rothschild when he turned his back upon Hanover to select Frankfort as the place for starting in business on his own account, and for laying the foundations of a fortune which was to eventually attain such colossal proportions, are of course unknown to us, but we may reasonably suppose that his choice was influenced by early associations. Frankfort was his birthplace, and it may be to this circumstance that it is indebted for the immense benefits it derived from the subsequent career of the great family within its walls. There can be no doubt that to the Rothschilds the city of Frankfort owes not only its present importance, but much of its commercial prosperity. In settling in his native town and in starting business there, Mayer Amschel increased the chances in his favour, as he was intimately acquainted with the neighbourhood and the opportunities of making money that were likely to present themselves. But, whatever may have been his motives for returning to and settling in Frankfort, we know that he did, in or about 1770, set up there in a humble way of business as a dealer in old coins, &c., with a capital derived from his savings, and that his industry and honesty were such as to enable him to extend his sphere of action by dealing in works of art, old gold and silver, and, in course of time, to add to these pursuits bullion and bill-broking. Gradually, as he strengthened his position, his business assumed more the nature of an ordinary banking business, which continued to raise the name and repute of the founder as a skilful and fair-dealing financier, in whom every confidence could be safely reposed. Little could Mayer Amschel have anticipated that the humble shop was destined to ultimately grow into one of the largest and most renowned banking firms of the world, and that his sons would in after years come to exercise such an unbounded sway that the peace of nations would depend upon their nod; that the powerful control they exercised on the European money markets would enable them to pose as the arbiters of peace and war, since they could at their pleasure withhold or furnish the pecuniary means required to carry on a campaign. But this, incredible as it may seem, was what their vast influence, combined with their enormous wealth and unlimited credit, enabled them to do, for no firms existed strong enough to oppose them for any length of time, or rash enough to take up a business which the Rothschilds had refused. To reach this exalted position Mayer Amschel and his sons required the co-operation of the States, but, when once he had climbed over their backs and reached the height of his ambition, he was independent of all aid and could act with the greatest freedom, whilst the States remained in a suppliant attitude at his feet.

The house of Rothschild when at the summit of its might was the ruling power in Europe, for all the political powers were willing to acknowledge the sway of the great financial despot, and, like obedient vassals, to pay their tribute without a murmur.

Frankfort, the birthplace of this great firm, derives its name from a fort built by the Romans on the banks of the Main, to guard the frontiers and to resist the incursions of the Goths, on the opposite bank, who, though daring enough in hand-to-hand contests, shrank from attacking an enemy hidden in a fort surrounded by high ramparts and deep ditches. By what Roman general Frankfort was built is not, we believe, known, but during the reign of Charlemagne the place acquired additional importance from the palace constructed there by that great warrior, who brought quite a colony in his train. The Römer, or town-hall, is probably part of this palace, which was erected on the same plans as that at Aix-la-Chapelle. The natural advantages which Frankfort possessed, from its favourable situation on the banks of the navigable Main, and the fruitfulness of the neighbourhood, were all conducive from an early date to the growth of its trade. The whole of the commerce of Germany was at that time of the smallest, and Frankfort was but a poor place, with an inconsiderable traffic, until the bright thought struck Charlemagne of uniting the Main with the Donau by a canal, thus enabling merchandise to be brought from Constantinople and the East directly into the heart of Germany. In order to attract thither people from other parts of Germany, and foreigners from other countries, he instituted yearly markets which afterwards gave rise to the famous fairs. In the midst of endless feuds between rapacious neighbours and rieving knights, and in spite of the disturbed times, Frankfort continued to grow in prosperity and importance, which were still further favoured and fostered by several laws, passed with a view to providing escorts and protection to all visitors and traders—for the emperors saw and recognized of what vast moment trade was to the public welfare. Warehouses, granaries, and shops were built in large numbers, and Frederick II. showed how greatly he appreciated the advantages of trade by granting the city a charter for its autumn fair, a privilege still further extended by Ludovic II., who contributed largely to the prosperity and consequence of Frankfort by the many diets he held there. There are numerous proofs existing to show that the power and influence of Frankfort during the Middle Ages was considerable. Cologne and Strasburg were its only business rivals. These three towns were by far the greatest centres of trade in that part of Germany. In wealth Frankfort was inferior to few, whilst its dignity cannot have been small when it took precedence of stately Nuremberg at the coronation of Maximilian I. The Golden Bulls of the Pope declared that the Roman elections should always be held in Frankfort, and this cannot have failed to favour the fortunes of the city, necessitating as it did splendid pageants and sumptuous banquets which made money flow freely into the pockets of the worthy citizens. In the course of time patents and privileges of all kinds tending to foster and encourage trade were conferred upon the city, and in 1510 the right of coining money was conceded to it by the emperor.

The powerful Hanseatic League had broken down, and the fetters which it had kept on commercial activity in Germany were removed. Frankfort was immediately sensible of the beneficial effects of the change, as Nuremberg began to send thither part of its manufactures, Augsburg its cloth and silk goods, and Ulm its linen and cotton goods. Even Aix-la-Chapelle and Dortmund entered into business relations with their young rival, who soon outstripped them in the race for first place, and continued to grow in consideration and wealth. The discovery of America was turned to profitable account, as the merchants and traders of Frankfort were among the first who endeavoured to extend their business relations to the New World. Trade in Frankfort during the early part of the seventeenth century had been severely affected by the war, but towards the latter part it began to make rapid progress towards recovery, owing, no doubt, in a great measure to the famous fairs which attracted men of business from all parts of Europe. The rapid revival of its trade was still further promoted by the disappearance of the Hanseatic League, which had till then enjoyed a monopoly of the English cloth trade. This, however, now passed out of the hands of its traders, as a direct market was found for English goods in Frankfort. The wine trade was equally flourishing, for Rhenish wines were highly esteemed in all parts of Europe. At this period a new branch of industry was started and rapidly extended by the enterprising traders—the trade in books. In a comparatively short time, owing to the extensive printing works which were erected, the book trade of Frankfort assumed enormous proportions. The great autumn fair soon came to be recognized as the lagest book fair on the Continent, for it was the rendezvous of booksellers and dealers from all parts of Europe. The concourse of persons attracted by the fair is said to have numbered as many as 400,000, so that the advantages derived from these monster gatherings must have been of the utmost value to the prosperity of the city. The rapid rise of Frankfort had been watched with bitter jealousy by many of its older rivals, who tried to injure and destroy its trade by all means at their command. How intense was the animosity they cherished against their younger rival is seen from the fact that Nuremberg carried its hatred and envy so far as to forbid its citizens under pain of death from attending the Frankfort fairs. Frankfort, however, shrank from no sacrifice and spared no exertion to secure the safety of its trade. In all its leagues with its neighbours the main condition of its co-operation was the support and protection to be given to the fairs. Everything was done to insure the safety of visitors and their goods, escorts even being provided for that purpose. These famous fairs have evoked the wonder and surprise of many writers, who have borne testimony to their importance by the lavish praise they have bestowed upon them. "The Frankfort fair," said one, "is the chief of the yearly markets of the world," whilst another concisely described it as "the world in a nutshell; or the magazine of the Germans." To the fairs Frankfort is indebted for its first newspaper, the "Messrelationen," which was in existence for some two hundred years. The fairs likewise called into prominence a branch of business, namely, bills of exchange, which has tended greatly to facilitate and develop commercial transactions all over the world. Instead of the inconvenient and cumbrous method of settling every transaction by a money payment, recourse was had to the far more convenient and reasonable plan of paying by the medium of bills of exchange. If some such plan as this had not been adopted the trade of Frankfort could never have gone on increasing as it has done. When dealings had to be settled by a payment in money, they were necessarily on a very restricted scale owing to the immense weight of the coin, to say nothing of the risks that a person would run who was in the habit of carrying about with him large sums in cash. With bills of exchange the risk is greatly reduced, whilst the advantages they offer in transferability and portability are such as to need no demonstration. The fairs, as we have said, brought a vast business to Frankfort, which was moreover a sort of half-way house for the rest of Germany, a large portion of the imports and exports passing through the hands of its merchants. Being then the centre of trade, and doing an immense business in bills of exchange, the Frankfort prices came to be watched and studied with as much care as those of other great commercial centres such as Rotterdam or Antwerp. The importance of the Frankfort Exchange after the Rothschilds had founded their extensive business was vastly increased owing to the intimate connections and vast influence possessed by the firm in the other large cities of Europe. In every large town they have either branches of their own, or active agents who are ever seeking to promote their interests, and ever faithfully reporting to them all that occurs in financial or commercial circles. This goes far to explain the problem how they have been able to amass their immense fortune so rapidly, for it must not be forgotten that the members of the family, while carrying on their respective businesses independently of each other, on all momentous occasions unite their forces for the common benefit, and temporarily concentrate all their thoughts and energies on achieving the success of the operations in hand. It is hardly strange, therefore, to find that the wheel of fortune, when the family bring their collective wealth and influence to bear in this fashion upon it, should yield to their persuasive efforts and take the direction they desire.

ANSELM MAIER VON ROTHSCHILD.

On the death of Mayer Amschel, the founder of the firm, the management of the affairs of the Frankfort house naturally passed into the hands of his eldest son, Anselm Mayer, who retained it until his death, which took place on the 6th December, 1855. Anselm Mayer was above all things a man of business, in which his inmost soul seemed concentrated. These words sum up his whole character. But, able and clever as he was, the individuality of his third brother Nathan, the head of the London house, was even more striking in regard to business matters, for he distinguished himself from his elder brother by his unrivalled financial skill and daring, by his greater shrewdness, and by his intuitive power of forecasting the course of either the money market or of politics, all of which gifts he turned to the utmost profit. In a word, Nathan Mayer was a greater financier, a greater speculator and manipulator, and, although self-taught, of more solid and useful acquirements. To the house this was, however, of secondary importance, seeing that the more weighty operations were planned and carried out by all the brothers in concert, whilst the times in which they lived were so eminently favourable to the success of their enterprises that to them they are as much indebted for the sudden growth of their immense wealth and power as to their own abilities and energies. It is here, indeed, that we must seek the explanation of the problem how they have been able in so short a time to extend and develop their business so amazingly. Circumstances, or, in other words, luck was on their side. Not that they trusted blindly to their luck, for they contributed in no small measure to their success by the prudent caution which marked all their dealings, and by the observance of maxims which had been carefully learnt and as carefully practised by all members of the family, and of these maxims the most important was: to seize upon the right moment in all political or commercial crises and turn it to profitable account.

We cannot pretend at this distance of time to be capable of giving a faithful and lifelike description of Anselm Mayer von Rothschild, the head of the Frankfort firm. We prefer, therefore, to reproduce the words of a writer who was for many years on the most intimate terms with him, and whose account may consequently be regarded as privileged and deserving credit:—

"Anselm Mayer is the oldest of the European Nabobs, with thoroughly eastern features and all the old Jewish customs and practices. He wears his hat down on the back of his head, which is covered with snow-white hair, and his coat, usually unbuttoned, hangs negligently down from his shoulders. He has an open and frank countenance, on which rests an air of assumed vivacity, whenever he thinks he is observed. His hands are usually in his trouser pockets playing with money. He invariably goes on foot, and to every beggar who accosts him he gives a coin of more or less value. His beneficence is very great—indeed, the poor Jewish families in Frankfort are mostly dependent on his bounty. It was he who contributed the greater part of the funds for the erection of the new Jewish hospital. When the weather is unusually severe, or when, for instance, a poor family is burnt out, he is particularly liberal in his charity. Should a hard frost or a prolonged drought set in, a large crowd is sure to be seen collected before the doors of his town residence in the Fahrgasse. His house in the above-named street is an ill-looking building from the outside, and no stranger, as he passed, would guess that it was the abode of one of the richest merchants in the world. Anselm Mayer sits in his office in the midst of his clerks like a Padischah; below him are his secretaries, and around him may be seen a crowd of brokers, for ever coming and going. With a few words he dismisses each, for like a true business genius he knows at once what answer to give to every question, and what decision to arrive at on any business that may be laid before him for consideration. No one in the universe, when Anselm Mayer's 'yes' or 'no' has once been pronounced, would venture to renew the discussion. To speak to him privately on a matter of business is well nigh impossible; everything in his office is done openly as in a law court. He observes and keeps the office hours as scrupulously as any of his clerks, and has indeed less opportunities for recreation than they have, seeing that even in the theatre he is likely to be disturbed and called away by the arrival of one of his couriers. For the same reason he is often forced to rise from bed in the night, to peruse the news and despatches just brought by an express, so that he can, in case of need, forward them on without delay to his brothers in Paris, Vienna, or London. To facilitate this business he has had an office erected adjoining his bedroom. He has many orders and titles, but usually he wears only the Hessian ribbon. The diplomatists resident in Frankfort, and those who may make a transitory visit there, vie in doing the great financier honour, and the most splendid banquets are given on each side. At these entertainments Anselm Mayer sits in true penance, as he never touches any viands or dishes that have not been cleansed or prepared in the Jewish fashion. This strict and unaffected observance of the religious injunctions of his faith is greatly to his honour; he is indeed regarded as the most religious Jew in Frankfort."

All writers agree in describing Anselm Mayer as a man of great shrewdness of judgment, with a thorough knowledge of mankind. By a sort of intuition he was able to form a pretty correct opinion of the character and motives of the men with whom he came in contact. No matter what cloak they might use to conceal their real object, he saw through their hypocrisy almost before they had said a word. He seldom erred in his judgment, and was remarkably quick in detecting the vanity or self-conceit of those who addressed him. True and able men were always appreciated by him at their just value: he would always deal with them at par. A man who showed himself quiet but efficient in the discharge of his duties was sure to be noticed and favoured. In his conversation Anselm Mayer was somewhat confidential, though he always allowed a certain reserve to be visible which effectually prevented the display of any want of respect towards himself. He was a man of some humour, and is remembered for the many sly and witty sayings which figured in his conversation, and with which he was in the habit of administering keen rebukes, or speaking unpalatable truths, calculated, if uttered in a stronger and plainer form, to have given offence. The many anecdotes related of him all display more or less the humour and shrewdness for which he was remarkable, and are often conspicuous for their brevity. He knew also how to clothe his sallies in befitting language. When Thorwaldsen passed through Germany he was received with enthusiastic welcomes everywhere, and innumerable banquets were given in his honour. At one of these gatherings Rothschild was introduced to the sculptor, and made the neat remark: "You look so handsome, Chevalier, that one is forced to believe you created yourself." Thorwaldsen afterwards acknowledged that he had never been paid a more novel or more flattering compliment.

Fond of wit and humour as he was, Anselm Mayer could recognize and reward wit in others, even if the sally was directed against himself. On one occasion a man wrote to him, simply saying, "Herr Baron, send me a thousand guldens—and forget me." The brevity and essentially witty character of the demand at once struck Anselm Mayer, who, in forwarding the sum demanded, replied: "I send you one thousand guldens—and have forgotten you."

When Baron Anselm Mayer went in 1832 to spend a few months of the summer at Ems, he took up his quarters in a private house on the Römerberg. At the same house there was also staying Baron von E——, a dashing Prussian Uhlan officer, with whom Baron Anselm soon became exceedingly friendly. One evening they went for a stroll in the direction of the Four Towers, and in the midst of a spirited conversation Rothschild came to a sudden halt. Taking advantage of this, an ill-clad man stole noiselessly up behind the famous banker and cleverly opened his pocket. Baron von E——, who had noticed the suspicious movement, naturally concluded that theft was the man's object; but to his surprise he noticed that the man quietly slipped a letter into the pocket and disappeared. Scarcely had Baron Rothschild resumed his walk ere the inconvenience arising from the recent contribution made itself felt. He put his hand into his pocket to discover the reason, and at once exclaimed, "Ah, I know now." It was evident that the mere touch had explained the mystery. The walk was continued along the road to Coblentz, and when they at last turned to retrace their steps dusk was already setting in. Suddenly from behind a tree a ragged fellow sprang forward and placed himself directly in Baron Anselm's path. The Baron's companion was about to strike the fellow, when he noticed the latter had neither pistol nor stiletto in his hand, but simply a begging-letter, which he sought in this violent fashion to force on Anselm Mayer. The latter betrayed not the slightest surprise or alarm, and it was evident he was by no means unaccustomed to this novel way of delivering begging-letters.

One very warm summer's day, when Baron Anselm was entertaining some friends at dinner, a window directly opposite his seat happened to be unclosed. Through the aperture thus left there presently came flying, during the dessert, a packet, so well aimed that it fell right upon the Baron's plate. The guests were not unnaturally astonished, but Anselm Mayer quietly felt in his pocket, took out a gold piece and put it in the cover of the still unopened letter, which he returned with the same celerity and by the same way it had come. This novel and unique mode of bestowing charity was highly appreciated by his guests. Rothschild, however, was not satisfied; he could not feel easy until he knew what had become of the letter and its contents. Apologizing, therefore, to the company, he asked permission to rise a moment. He then advanced to the open window, leant out and returned, evidently satisfied and happy, saying, half audibly, "placirt." It is interesting to notice how solicitous the wealthy financier was, from force of habit, to know whether even such a trifle as that which he had just given away, had been well bestowed.

Baron Anselm Mayer was proud and aristocratic in his manners only to the extent that the consciousness of his personal importance and influence was allowed to be visible; but still without any arrogance. He related, not unwillingly, the small beginnings and struggles of his firm, his walks to the office, the Friday evenings spent in the old house in the Judengasse, where white bread and roasted nuts were his fare. He referred with sovereign contempt to the conceit and arrogance of certain upstarts. He did not mix himself up with politics, and invariably spoke with considerate forbearance of the different Governments, though his partiality for Austria was always unmistakably manifest. He bestowed enormous sums in almsgiving, and, when they remembered the many calls upon his purse, and the immense amount actually distributed by him every year among the poor and the suffering, many persons, whose petitions soliciting aid for themselves or for others failed to meet with the response anticipated, have come to think more favourably of the seeming coldness they had experienced. It is impossible to estimate or describe the wonderful good effected by means of Baron Anselm's beneficence. But how great it was and how profoundly appreciated, is evidenced by the thousands of applications for relief which were annually submitted to his consideration. When he died the poor lost one of their most liberal, and at the same time most unostentatious benefactors.

He had been brought up in the midst of a family struggling hard to earn a living; his youth was passed in continued and incessant toil, so it is but natural that he was not able to boast of a very high or classical education. In later years he tried, not without success, to improve his knowledge of languages and history, and to strengthen his bodily powers, but, ever conscious of his shortcomings, he would turn away offended if any sycophant flattered him on his horsemanship or any other accomplishment. French and English he spoke very indifferently: indeed, it was only the interests of his business and perhaps a little vanity that led him ever to converse in these languages, which he spoke even worse than he did his native German. Towards ladies he always displayed a very engaging address, a lively gallantry, which he retained to the last. His love of art showed itself most strongly in his taste for coins and old metal-work; but still on paintings he was often heard to say a shrewd word of criticism. Above all things, however, he loved his garden; it was his delight to revel among his beautiful flowers, of which he never grew weary.

His position as a resident in Frankfort differed in no way from that of any other member of the Jewish community. Great as were his wealth and influence, they did not enable him to share the civil and political rights enjoyed by every Christian living in the city. For a brief period the Jews were permittted by the Prince Primate in 1812 to rank on an equal footing with their Christian neighbours, but in 1815 they were deprived of these privileges, which were not restored to them till 1853 and 1864. Whilst at one time the founder of the house of Rothschild was a member of the Elective Assembly, his son, equally with the poorest Jew in Frankfort, was debarred from taking any active part in the management of civic affairs, for he lacked the first qualification—the freedom of the city, without which none could hold office. Although siding with the strictly orthodox party of the Talmudic Judaism, Anselm Mayer did not allow any difference of opinion to disturb his sympathies with his co-religionists, and he is known to have frequently contributed largely to the erection of synagogues where the teaching would be wholly opposed to that which he favoured. At his death he left a fortune estimated as amounting to from fifty to sixty million guldens, which he willed to one of his nephews. To the Jewish community he bequeathed a handsome legacy of 1,200,000 guldens, and several others proportionately large for the benefit of the poor, who, he was fond of saying as he walked through the streets, were his "courtiers." He also left strict orders in his will for the maintenance and preservation of the old house in the Judengasse. Strict Jew as was the head of the Frankfort house, opposed as he was to every innovation in the doctrine and ritual of the synagogues, and exact as he was in his observance of the Sabbath, he nevertheless did not hesitate to trade and make money on feast days. Thus, on one occasion when he was in Aix-la-Chapelle taking part in the Congress there, a sum of money amounting to 160,000 thalers fell due to him on a Saturday. At the proper hour he presented himself at the office and demanded his money. On his attention being called to the day, he pointedly answered: "It is not every day one has to receive 160,000 thalers." He then carefully counted and pocketed the money.

The extent of the business transacted by the parent firm in Frankfort was something immense. It not only embraced the majority of the German states and principalities, but included in its clientèle a large proportion of the nobility and aristocracy, especially those of South Germany, whose pecuniary resources were so embarrassed as to render the assistance of a financial house necessary and unavoidable. The number of accounts of the Frankfort house probably far exceeded that of any one of the other houses in London, Paris, or Vienna. To prove how liberal the Rothschilds were to the German princes, and to show what profitable customers the latter must have been, we give a list of those who were forced to apply to the firm for aid. Against the name of each we place the total amount of the loans, as far as can be ascertained, which he obtained :—

	Guldens.
Isenburg-Birstein	1,100,000
Löwenstein-Wertheim	1,250,000
Sayn-Wittgenstein-Berleburg . . .	300,000
Waldburg-Zeil	172,000
Graf Sandor v. Szlavnicza	670,000
Ritter von Riese	250,000
Isenburg-Wächtersbach	294,000

	Guldens.
Solms-Lich	300,000
Löwenstein-Rosenberg	350,000
Prince Victor zu Isenburg	140,000
Count Viczay	700,000
„ Szapary	300,000
„ Leiningen-Westerberg	80,000
„ von Niczky	340,000
„ von Hunyady	500,000
„ von Szechenyi	1,800,000
„ Henkel v. Donnersmark . . .	1,125,000
„ von Froberg	100,000
Prince von Galantha Esterhazy . . .	6,400,000
Freiherr von Greifenklau	130,000
Prince Schwarzenberg	5,000,000
„ Waldburg-Wolfegg	800,000
„ Waldsee	350,000
Count K. von Wartemberg	2,070,000
Total Guldens	16,021,000

This list is far from complete; still, even as it is, it gives some idea of the large business done by the firm with its private clients.

In conclusion, we may say a few words respecting the sovereignty of Baron Anselm Mayer over the Frankfort Bourse, and of the complete subordination of that institution to his will. Before the advent of the Rothschilds, Frankfort could claim no precedence over the other great trading cities of Germany; it had a large commerce, and large operations were carried on in foreign bills, but still its quotations were not so important or so influential as to cause them to be closely watched and studied. All this, however, is now altered: the movements of the Frankfort Exchange have through the magnitude of the transactions carried out by the house of Rothschild acquired an importance which makes itself felt on the markets of other leading financial centres. Paris, Frankfort, Vienna, and London are in such close communication and connection through the houses established there by the Rothschilds, that no great movement can take place in one of them without creating a marked impression in the rest. In Frankfort the control and sway possessed by the parent house were more marked and manifest, perhaps, than was the case with its branches elsewhere. Loud and frequent complaints were made by other banking and financial firms of the prejudicial effects on business caused by the entire dependence of the Frankfort Bourse on the will of Anselm Mayer, who could at his pleasure raise or depress prices to the discomfiture of all who might happen to oppose him. The public prints were for ever complaining of and animadverting upon the pressure of the great firm on the energies and spirits of the Bourse. Their complaints were always worded in the same unvaried strain, so that they became quite monotonous in their repetition. For instance, the remark that "money was more abundant, and might become still more so, were it not for the knowledge that the Rothschilds are so completely masters of the situation, and have the market under complete control," was a stock expression with the Frankfort editors. This pressure could not fail to prove injurious to many smaller houses, but complaints availed not; business was free to all, and speculation unhindered. The Rothschilds were at liberty to conduct their operations on whatever lines they pleased, without asking permission of any. The same freedom of action belonged to all, whether great or small. Might on the Stock Exchange means right, and if weaker speculators were made to pay heavily for the opposition, however slight, they offered to the rule of the colossal firm, they had but themselves to blame for their folly and loss.

Foreign loans became the perquisites, if we may so call them, of the Rothschilds, who were ever on the alert to secure them before a rival had any chance to step in. On one occasion another firm was bold enough to undertake a Belgian loan, on its own sole responsibility behind Rothschild's back, but was quickly made to repent of its temerity, as Rothschild put his forces in motion and bore down upon it with such resistless force that the rival house was soon glad to give in its submission and tender an apology for its presumption. But, on the other hand, it is totally undeniable that, at different times, in circumstances of great financial pressure and during commercial crises, Rothschild rendered immense services by means of his unbounded wealth and credit to many houses, who, but for the support thus liberally provided, would have been forced to suspend payment. Not that we wish it to be supposed that Rothschild made such sacrifices from purely unselfish motives, for, however unfavourable they might appear, he usually managed to turn the circumstances of the case to profitable account. For instance, in 1832, a well-known banking establishment in Paris had accepted without adequate security a large number of bills drawn by a bank in North America, whose credit at that time was decidedly low. The suspension at an early date of the bank in Paris, was discussed and anticipated. Rothschild himself had a great many of these doubtful acceptances in his portfolio. What did he do? He voluntarily placed the sum of forty million thalers at the disposal of the bank, whose failure was averted, if only for a moment, as the public, seeing the apparent confidence of Baron Anselm in its solvability, not unnaturally concluded he had good reasons for his liberality and that the rumours to the contrary were ill founded. The Paris house was saved, whilst the transaction proved very remunerative to Rothschild himself, as he had remitted this sum not in specie, or bills on other firms, but in bills, which he had bought dirt cheap, upon the bank itself.

"In this way," wrote a German journalist of Baron Anselm Mayer, "he has made himself king of finance, and his kingdom is no poetical creation but a reality. His vassals are the other banking firms and financial institutions, whom he can destroy, if he so pleases, when he no longer needs them, or support and strengthen as long as they are useful and necessary for his purposes."

Since the death of Anselm Mayer, the business of the Frankfort firm has been managed by his nephews, Baron William and Baron C. von Rothschild, who have faithfully observed the traditional policy of the family in all their financial operations. The wealth of the two brothers continues steadily to augment, thanks to the prudence and caution which mark all their undertakings. Baron Carl is a great patron of the arts, and has a collection of pictures and sculptures such as is possessed by only very few. Baron William is a most strict Jew, and rigidly observes the fasts and feasts of the Jewish calendar.[1] [1] The death of Baron Carl, which took place quite recently, leaves his brother the sole head of the Frankfort house. Baron Carl's magnificent collection of art treasures will become the property of Lord Rothschild.

Chapter V.

NATHAN MAYER ROTHSCHILD.

THE LONDON FIRM.

THE first step towards extending the business of the original house in Frankfort was taken in 1798 by Nathan Mayer, the third and most remarkable of all Mayer Amschel's sons, who in that year started for England with the object of creating a business of his own. To Nathan Mayer may be ascribed much of the subsequent prosperity of the family, as, by his splendid financial abilities and untiring energy, he contributed far more than any of his brothers towards raising the firm to the brilliant position it has held for the last fifty years. He it was who, by his vast schemes and far-reaching speculations, gave the firm its cosmopolitan character, whilst the great services which he, in common with his brothers, rendered to all the Governments of Europe in turn, gained for his family a reputation and a consideration such as no other firm has ever enjoyed. In an earlier part of our narrative we stated that, previous to 1798, all the business of the Frankfort house with England was transacted through the firm of Van Notten in London, who acted as the attorneys of the Elector of Hesse in receiving the latter's subsidies from the British Government, and collecting his dividends. When Nathan Mayer had established himself in London, these powers were transferred to him, and so great was the confidence reposed by the Elector in his integrity and shrewdness, that he was allowed carte-blanche as to the disposal of the moneys he received. He was left perfectly free and unfettered in dealing with the Elector's funds and stocks; he could buy or sell at his own discretion. The choice of London from all the European capitals, as promising the best opening for a branch business, affords a convincing proof of the natural shrewdness of the man. Before many years had elapsed, the splendid success he achieved forced the whole world to acknowledge the soundness of his judgment. His name, by that time, had become familiar to all the leading European statesmen, whilst the business conducted by him in London far exceeded, in the vastness of its proportions, that of any of his brothers. This, after all, was but natural, seeing that London, with its gigantic commerce, its unceasing activity, was the pivot round which the trade of the whole world revolved. That a man of Nathan Mayer's temperament, whose chief delight was in vast and complicated operations, should have taken advantage of the opportunities which London afforded for embarking in enormous undertakings might have been safely anticipated. He could hardly have selected a spot more suited to his plans. A born speculator, he found himself in the midst of an incessant whirlpool of gambling and speculation, from which none but one possessing, as he did, a cool head and a shrewd intellect, could have emerged with flying colours. Whether intuition or instinct dictated his choice, or whether it was due to mature consideration, we do not pretend to say, but the results accruing from his selection must have far surpassed his most sanguine anticipations, as his family, through his influence and skilful management, became the supreme rulers of the money markets of the world, and gained the monopoly and control of all important financial enterprises.

At the beginning of the present century, Great Britain was hardly a pleasing picture to look upon, as, owing to false principles of government, to the ignorant and blind cultivation of our home trade, and the neglect of our foreign trade and manufacturing industries, it had the appearance of a State driven to the most opposite and contradictory extremes. Priding itself on the possession of the freest constitution in Europe, England yet concealed the greatest tyranny; possessing unbounded riches, it yet allowed the poor peasantry in Ireland to die of hunger, whilst the privation and distress prevalent among the labouring classes generally were so great and indescribable as to threaten to end in riot and rebellion. The hardships endured by the poorer classes in many parts of the country were still further aggravated by the disgraceful condition of our political system. Morality was at a discount; bribery and intrigue were the order of the day. It was a time when the thoughts of all were turned to their own advancement and to the complete forgetfulness of the sufferings of others. Before the Reform Bill of Lord Grey, corruption was so widespread that the independence of the Crown and that of the constituencies were threatened by the machinations of unscrupulous politicians. The majority of the votes were in the hands of a limited few, eager and ready to advance their own interests at the expense of the nation at large. The Reform Bill in a great measure remedied the evil, which, however, was by no means annihilated. Corruption sought fresh pastures on which to flourish, and other malpractices ere long came into fashion. Apparently the democratic element had been admitted into the constitution, but we may fairly question whether the power of the landed aristocracy was in any way injured. The limited few still controlled the votes of the majority. Formerly the landed aristocracy ruled the elections, as they were able to influence their tenants, and so secure the return of particular candidates; but much of this power now passed into the hands of the moneyed aristocracy, the large capitalists, who, besides enjoying this addition to their political might, are the principal ruling force in the financial and commercial world. The great landed aristocracy still exercises an important influence in the political world, but the few noble families who previously possessed the monopoly of the boroughs have now to share their power with their rivals, the landed capitalists. The repeal of the Corn Laws was, as D'Israeli truly said, the abolition of the landed aristocracy by the moneyed aristocracy, of the nobility by the bourgeoisie, of pedigree by money.

The agitation preceding the repeal of the Corn Laws was instrumental in expunging from the political creed an article then generally accepted, which had caused much of the distress among the labouring classes, and had largely contributed to the stagnation of the home industries. Politicians up to that time had been unanimous in asserting that the true remedy for the prevailing distress, and the only reliable source of prosperity was to be looked for in agriculture, with a powerful landed aristocracy at its head. It was, they declared, a Quixotic idea to suppose that the prosperity of the country could be permanently benefited by cultivating and extending our foreign trade and our manufacturing industries. The first to recognize the absurdity of this belief, and to point out the evils which would inevitably follow from such a mistaken policy, was Mr C. P. Villiers, the pioneer in the Corn Law crusade. "My charge against the Corn Laws," said he in one of his speeches,

"is, that they limit and endanger our foreign trade, and that all such laws proceed upon a policy directly the reverse of that which is recommended by the present circumstances and condition of the country. And my charge against the legislature is, that this policy has been pursued in this country since the close of the last war, now twenty-three years ago, though each year has proved the folly of it by the injury it has entailed, and is now inflicting upon the country. . . . . So that, proceeding at home upon the monstrous fallacy that agriculture was the source of all our greatness, and abroad stipulating nothing for our foreign commerce, we were doing everything in our power to cripple our manufactures. Now, if all this had been the error of a particular Government, or the folly of a party that had ceased to exist, it would, I know, be idle to refer to it, the time to remedy the evil being now past; but it is our misfortune that it is the policy of the present hour. The policy of that day—that the home trade is the best trade, and that we ought to create customers by Act of Parliament for that trade, and be as little dependent as possible upon foreign trade, is the ground on which the Corn Laws are defended to-day." The support and protection accorded by the legislature to the landed aristocracy in England were not enjoyed by the noble orders abroad. The conditions on which land was held on the Continent had undergone extensive modifications, and the nobility had by degrees, owing to the Revolution or modern legislation, lost the direct ownership of the land, with its attendant seigneurial rights and privileges. The tendency abroad has been to split up the land into small holdings, a course which rendered the disappearance of large proprietors inevitable. In England the contrary is the case; the tendency is towards consolidation in the hands of a few large proprietors. It could hardly be otherwise. The main principle in the English law of land tenure is, that the owner must either cultivate his land to the best advantage himself, or else lease it to those who will do so. This was hard upon small proprietors, who were called upon not only to cultivate the land but to contribute towards its improvement, and this a series of bad seasons would render impossible. The consequence was, that they were compelled to sell their land to the large landowners. In this way the small landed proprietors disappeared, and gave place to the thrifty tenant farmer. Whether it is right or wrong that the land should thus be concentrated in the hands of a limited few, is a question which has agitated the minds of many, and which we, for our part, do not feel called upon to decide. There can, however, be no doubt that, since it has been generally acknowledged that the prosperity and greatness of the country are dependent upon a flourishing foreign trade, the tendency has been to abandon agriculture for manufacturing pursuits, and to leave the cultivation of the soil to those whose wealth renders them independent of the profits or losses attending their labours.

Injurious as were the effects produced by this mistaken policy of fostering the home trade and neglecting the foreign, there can be no question that the country has also suffered severely from the evils resulting from the creation of the National Debt. To the increased taxation and the widespread corruption it engendered, may be ascribed much of the want and privation the poorer classes of the community have had to encounter. However much we may deplore the existence of the National Debt —or national nuisance, as some would call it—we must confess that William III. had no other plan left by which he could procure the money he required. Great events from little causes spring, and it is to the necessities of earlier monarchs rather than to William that we must trace the origin of the system of State borrowing embodied in the National Debt. When our earlier rulers found themselves short of funds, they were accustomed to apply to their faithful subjects for aid, and, as they were not always couched in the most gentle terms, or made with that courtesy which so befits kings, the applications were sure to attract gold to the royal exchequer. In the pursuit of cherished schemes of ambition or revenge, monarchs would recklessly embark on enterprises the cost of which their loyal subjects were afterwards forced to liquidate. Richard I., in his eagerness to visit the Holy Land, stopped short of no device to procure the funds necessary for his object. He extorted money from his subjects, he farmed the revenues, mortgaged the customs, and even threatened to sell London rather than abandon his crusade. His successors imitated and improved upon his system of extortion. Henry III. seized the merchandise of his subjects, and managed to borrow a large sum under the tempting offer of high interest, but, with a forgetfulness characteristic of the times, neither capital nor interest was ever paid. Under the pretence that he was about to start on a crusade, Edward I. seized the plate and money of the monasteries, but, once secure in the possession of the spoil, declined to go. Edward III. imposed heavy taxes, created monopolies, raised forced loans, and availed himself of every possible means to wring money from his unfortunate subjects. As time rolled on, each succeeding monarch strove apparently to rival and outdo his predecessor in unscrupulous exaction. Edward IV. enjoyed the reputation of being the handsomest tax-gatherer in the kingdom. When on one occasion he kissed a buxom widow to show his appreciation of the readiness with which she yielded to his demands, it is said that she at once doubled her contribution in the expectation of being again favoured by the royal lips; but kingly gratitude did not go so far. Henry VII. was guided by logic in his extortion. He forced frugal people to contribute largely, on the ground that they must have saved money by their economy. Henry VIII., owing to his extravagant habits, was continually replenishing his exchequer from the pockets of his subjects; nor was he by any means particular as to the methods by which the supplies were obtained. He seized upon the accumulated property of the monastic orders, and raised a loan of ten per cent. on all property from £20 to £300, increasing the percentage on sums above the latter amount. By courtesy the money thus raised was termed a loan, but, when years later he refused to pay the capital or to acknowledge his debt, the transaction was known by a harsher name. Elizabeth displayed a great deal of 'cuteness in her financial operations: she would borrow large sums of her devoted subjects, and, if at any time she had a balance lying idle, would graciously deign to lend it back again to her faithful citizens at a high rate of interest. The Stuarts were not behind their predecessors in recklessness or extravagance, while in extortion they went to extremes of which no one had ever dreamt. Charles I. found to his cost that he had no sovereign right to the property of his subjects, and paid a heavy penalty for rashly endeavouring to force them to yield to his exactions. His failure, however, did not deter Charles II. from similar practices, and the Merry Monarch fairly excelled all his rivals in barefaced thieving, for that is the only term applicable to his action in closing the Exchequer and appropriating to his own use the money deposited there. James II. would have liked to imitate his brother, but the offences which the nation overlooked in the graceful, rollicking Charles, were not to be excused or tolerated in one so universally hated and suspected as his successor. The Stuarts seem to have laboured under the impression that they had a sovereign right to whatever of their subjects' property they might fancy, and regarded all those who declined to accede to their oppressive demands as disloyal subjects and traitors. The result of this difference of opinion is too well known to need description here. William III., on his accession, created, willingly or unwillingly, the National Debt, and by so doing acknowledged the indebtedness of the Crown to the public for the money placed at its disposal. Whatever faults he may have had—and he was by no means faultless—William III. at least deserves all credit for having laid down the principle which has ever since been maintained, that the faith of the State must be preserved inviolate towards its creditors.

NATHAN MAYER ROTHSCHILD.

The creation of the National Debt has been severely criticized and disapproved by later generations, wiser in their time than their ancestors.

We must, however, in justice to William III., remember that he had no option in the matter; it was a case of Hobson's choice. Had he been able to devise a better plan of obtaining the money he required to carry on the war with France, he would, we feel sure, have adopted it, but as no other method suggested itself he was forced to avail himself of the National Debt. To crush his life-long rival, Louis, was a mission which William felt called upon to perform, and which nothing would induce him to abandon. From his earliest years he had learnt to hate the name of France, and his life had been passed in one long struggle to humble the French monarch and frustrate his ambitious schemes. He, who at the head of the small but resolute Dutch Republic had defied single-handed the power of the two strongest nations in Europe; who had seen his countrymen tear down the dykes and canal banks to let loose the waters they confined rather than behold their fatherland desecrated by the presence of the conquering invader, was hardly the man to relinquish the struggle when his hands were strengthened by the resources and energies of England. Time had not effaced from William's memory the recollection of the wrongs and affronts his country had suffered, so that, on his accession to the English crown, he renewed hostilities with even greater zeal and determination than before. Louis on his side, being as anxious to crush William as William was to crush him, did not relax his efforts, but exerted all his strength, brought into play all the arts of diplomacy and intrigue to attain his cherished object. When he remembered how both Charles II. and James II. had been in his pay, how completely successive English ministers had been his tools, it must have galled him to find his hated rival placed on a throne which gave him such greater powers of defiance. Deep as his hatred of William had been formerly, it became deeper and more bitter as he noticed the resolute front and undisguised contempt displayed towards France by his foe after he landed in England. The rage and annoyance, the bitter disappointment and chagrin felt by Louis, were well known, for he made no attempt to conceal them. He sheltered the dethroned James, surrounded him with a mock Court, and did all in his power to irritate the Court of St James's. The contest was maintained by William with a certain amount of personal pride, but, however ardently he may have desired to see France humbled, it was even more important to the interests and welfare of England and of Europe that the ambitious designs and tyrannical projects of Louis should be checked by the strong hand. In addition to his own military genius and undaunted courage, William III. called into requisition the strength and riches of the British Empire. The creation of the National Debt was, under the circumstances, fully justified. "Had he employed," remarks Mr Francis, "the arbitrary mode of levying supplies of the earlier monarchs; had he made forced loans, and never repaid them; had he seized upon public money and wrung the purses of public men, the country might as well have been governed by a James as a William, and would in all probability have recalled from exile the unfortunate house of Stuart. The evils of William's reign were in the facts that his power was not sufficiently established to borrow on equitable terms; that the bribery, abuses, and corruption of men in high places increased with their position; and, above all, that instead of paying his debts by terminable annuities he made them interminable."

In spite of the great difficulties he experienced in obtaining supplies, William would never abandon the contest, which continued more or less languidly for a number of years, until both parties were thoroughly exhausted by it. At length Namur was forced to capitulate, and the long-desired suspension of hostilities came. The power of France in Spain was shaken; its coasts were assailed, and Louis, having lost his great captain, was glad to resume his overtures for peace. The peace of Ryswick terminated this memorable struggle, which had cost Europe 480 millions of money and 800,000 men. No great achievement was recorded of this protracted war, nor was the peace it produced of long duration. Its earlier history, like that of most English wars, was not remarkable for its successes. The unanimity so essential to great deeds was at that time an impossibility, owing to the divided state of political parties. Had greater patriotism and less self-interest and advancement been displayed by the House of Commons, William might have been able to bring the war to a successful issue years before.

The principal objection to William's financial innovation was, as we have already observed, that he borrowed on irredeemable annuities. Had he borrowed on annuities terminable at a certain date, the operation would have been very little dearer, whilst, instead of saddling posterity with a heavy burden, the pressure would have decreased year by year, until the debt finally disappeared. Credit, moreover, would have improved as time went on, and the discontent have lessened. Whatever blame may be attached to William, still stronger must be the blame attached to the advisers of succeeding monarchs, who although perfectly well acquainted with the objections to the raising of money on irredeemable annuities still continued the practice. It was predicted by Sir Robert Walpole that the country would be ruined when the debt amounted to 100 millions. If such was his sincere belief, he is much to be censured for steadily omitting to take steps to avert the calamity. It is needless to say that the debt has long since exceeded Sir Robert's limit, and yet the country is still far from being bankrupt.

In 1696, while the gold was being recoined, exchequer bills in amounts of £5 and £10 were introduced. These were found of great convenience in business, for, being issued on the credit of the Government, they were regarded as equal to gold, and passed freely from hand to hand under the confident knowledge that they would be paid off at par. The Treasury was authorized to contract with capitalists for the supply of cash, and, although these bills were for a short time at a discount, they soon stood at a premium. At first they bore no interest, but, when they were re-issued, interest was paid on them. They have always continued to be a favourite source of supply with succeeding ministries, and when it is found inconvenient to pay them off they are liquidated, with the consent of Parliament, by being added to the fixed debt of the country.

It is amusing and instructive to note the variety of expedients William was compelled to employ to obtain his supplies. At one time it was a mild remonstrance, at another a haughty menace, and often a reproach that he had risked his life for an ungrateful country. Heavy as was the cost of maintaining the war with France, the money spent with that object was as nothing compared with the enormous sums expended in buying members of the Lower House. Corruption was rampant throughout society; every man of influence had his price. Some were bribed with contracts, some with portions of loans, while others received titles, commissions, or places. So low had public credit fallen and so high were the demands of members and the premium on money, that of 5 millions voted for the war only 2½ millions reached the exchequer. Mr Francis, to whom we are indebted for much of the matter in this chapter, describes very faithfully the state of the finances and of society at that time: "Long annuities and short annuities, lottery tickets and unredeemable debts, made their frequent appearance, and the duties, which principally date from this period, were most pernicious. The hearth-tax was nearly as obnoxious as the poll-tax. The custom and excise duties were doubled. The hawker and the hackney-coach driver, companies and corporations, land and labour, came under supervision. Births, burials, and bachelors were added to the list, and whether a wife lost a husband or whether a widow gained one, the effect was alike. Beer and ale, wine and vinegar, coal and culm, all contributed to the impoverished State; and although some, who looked back with regret, occasionally indulged their spleen, the general tone of Parliament was submissive. Still there were times when the truth was spoken, and truths like the following were unpleasant:—'We have provided,' said Sir Charles Sedley, 'for the army, we have provided for the navy, and now we must provide for the list. Truly, Mr. Speaker, 'tis a sad reflection that some men should wallow in wealth and places, while others pay away in taxes the fourth part of their revenue. The courtiers and great officers feel not the terms, while the country gentleman is shot through and through. His Majesty sees nothing but coaches and great tables, and therefore cannot imagine the want and misery of the rest of his subjects. He is encompassed by a company of crafty old courtiers.'" The corrupt transactions which tended so much to increase the National Debt are very remarkable. The assembled Commons declared in a solemn vote: "it is notorious that many millions are unaccounted for;" Mr Hungerford was expelled from the Lower House for accepting a bribe of £21, and the Duke of Leeds impeached for taking one of 5,500 guineas. The price of a Speaker—Sir John Trevor—was £1,050, and the Secretary to the Treasury was sent to the Tower on suspicion of similar practices. Money receivers lodged large sums of public money with the goldsmiths at the current interest. Others lent the Exchequer its own cash in other persons' names, and, out of 46 millions raised in fifteen years, 25 millions were unaccounted for. The commissioners of hackney coaches were accessible, and peculation in the army was discovered by the chance petition of the dwellers in a country town. By this it appeared that the inhabitants of Royston in Hertfordshire had large claims made upon them for money by colonels, captains, and cornets, in addition to the food and lodging which were their due. A few independent members took up the question; the public supported them; and at this juncture a book was delivered at the lobby of the house, which asserted that the public embezzlement was as enormous as it was infamous, and that the writer was prepared to make disclosures which would astonish the world. The offer was accepted; a searching inquiry was instituted, and defalcations were discovered, so great, that all wonder ceased at the increase of the National Debt, and at the decrease of the national glory. The abuses in clothing the army were plain and palpable. The agents habitually detained the money due to the soldiers and used it for their own advantage, or compelled the troops to pay so large a discount that they were in the utmost distress. The subaltern officers were not better off. Colonel Hastings—afterwards cashiered for the offence—obliged them to buy their raiment of him. If they hesitated he threatened; if they refused he confined them. In 1693, an inquiry was ordered into the application of the secret service money, when severe and deserved animadversion was passed upon those through whom it circulated. The power possessed by Government under such abuses may be imagined. They were sure of the votes of those who had places and pensions, and they were sure also of the votes of that large class of expectants which always haunts a profuse ministry; and thus "the courtiers," as the ministerial party was long designated, could baffle any bills, laugh at all grievances, stifle any accounts, and raise any amount of money.

Under Queen Anne intrigue and corruption still permeated the political world. Money had learnt its innate power, and day by day its influence upon the politics of the nation grew more marked and unmistakable. Through the interest and pressure of the State creditors, the moneyed classes, a law was passed enacting that for the future no one should be eligible to represent a borough in Parliament unless he had an income of £300 a year, or £600 a year in the case of a county member. The power exercised by money waxed every day more prejudicial to the true interests of the country, and the greater that power grew the more baneful became its effects upon the morals of the nation. Bribery was universal. An eager scrambling after wealth disgraced the whole of society, and noble names of all ranks and parties were tarnished by an utter disregard for the laws of common honesty. Everywhere the cry resounded :—

> "Get money, money still,
> And then let virtue follow if she will."

Marlborough, it is well known, did not scruple to satisfy the cravings of his avarice at the expense of the soldiers to whom his successes were due. His victories were but a source of gain to him; the blood of his gallant veterans, a trifle unworthy of consideration if it interfered with his plans. Somerset, Newcastle, and other ministers lent the State money on terms settled by themselves.

The Funds were diverted from their legitimate purposes and employed in buying the votes of the Lower House. When the Tories came into office no less than 30 millions sterling were found to be unaccounted for in the budget. The scandal connected with this discovery was not diminished when the investigations afterwards instituted proved abortive. The whole tone of parliamentary morality was infamous, and the financial condition of the country was proportionately unsatisfactory and alarming. The National Debt is in a measure answerable for much of the corruption that prevailed, and there is undoubtedly much truth in the arguments which have been urged against this method of raising the money required by the State in emergencies. The objections are directed, not so much against the debt itself as, against the evils it has brought in its train. Speculation was promoted and encouraged by its creation, which, from a business point of view, has certainly been of little benefit to the mercantile world. Seeing fortunes quickly and easily won by speculations in the Funds, merchants were seduced from their own legitimate pursuits. In 1697 the debt amounted to 20 millions, and it was found to be such a convenient agent, with such elastic qualities, that its proportions were for ever on the increase. The deficit in that year was no less than 5 millions. This state of things was turned to account by speculators, who set afloat rumours of every description to disparage the Government. Capital was made out of the distresses of the Ministry, the interest on the debt was declared to be uncertain, and the public credit was depreciated by any and every means. The Funds in consequence attracted an amount of attention and acquired an importance which have but increased with the progress of time. The great Hebrew capitalist and speculator Medina aroused the envy of many by the large fortune he amassed in a comparatively short period. Eager to imitate and rival his success, English merchants began to dabble and speculate in the Funds, and the Royal Exchange soon became—as Change Alley was later—the rendezvous where men of all creeds and nationalities met to tempt the fickle goddess, and enrich themselves by this privileged mode of gambling. Jews and Gentiles, Quakers and Ministers, rogues and hypocrites, all mingled in the fray. On that common ground all prejudices and enmities were sunk and forgotten. A greed for money swayed the hearts and minds of these worshippers of Mammon. The speculation fever spread with surprising rapidity; each day saw the crowd grow in proportion. If business in the Funds slackened, other sources of speculation were discovered: bargains in annuities, lottery tickets, tontines, exchequer bills were made briskly, and bubble companies were promoted with almost the same facilities as in the nineteenth century. "The poor English nation," said one writer, "run a madding after new inventions, whims, and projects, and this unhappy ingredient my countrymen have in their temper; they are violent and prosecute their projects eagerly."

William III. created the National Debt, but the foundation stone was indirectly laid by Charles II. when, in 1672, he appropriated to his own use half a million of money deposited by merchants and goldsmiths in the exchequer. Charles, however, repudiated all claims made upon him for the restoration of the money thus taken, and to William belongs the merit of having first acknowledged the indebtedness of the State to its creditors. Not only did he own his liability for sums he himself borrowed, but he added to them the amount misappropriated by his predecessor. The condition on which he negotiated his first loan was that those who advanced him money should receive stock representing double the value of their contributions.

Forty firms expressed their readiness to assist him on these lucrative terms, and in this way he raised half a million sterling towards carrying on the war with France. By making so liberal an offer he gained two immense advantages: he not only obtained the money he required, but he secured the support of the great body of English merchants, who, having placed their capital at his disposal, were naturally interested in the maintenance of his rule. At the same time he won the gratitude of the nobility, who on previous occasions had always been called upon to prove their loyalty by large sacrifices. In 1694, being again in want of funds, William announced that he wished to raise £1,200,000, and that he was willing to grant those merchants who first subscribed this sum, a charter in their joint capacity under the title of the Bank of England. By this charter they were allowed to carry on a general banking business, and were given certain privileges in buying and selling bills of exchange, bullion, and other commodities. The money was soon subscribed, and in this way the first public debt was handed down to posterity. At William's death it amounted to 16 millions, but so rapidly did it accumulate that it was 54 millions when his successor died. The increase is partly accounted for by the cost of Marlborough's war, but by far the greater portion was due to the prevailing bribery and corruption.

In 1782 William Pitt first entered the Ministry, holding the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the following year found him, as Prime Minister, at the head of the affairs of the country. To improve the finances was the task which before aught else claimed his attention. This was a problem worthy of his great genius, and the results of his remarkable skill and untiring energy were manifest before many years had passed. The revenue increased rapidly. In 1783 it amounted to but 10 millions sterling, but by 1800 it had risen to 26 millions, while in 1810 it was no less than 62 millions. By Pitt's skilful plans the national finances which, under Lord North's administration, had been allowed to fall into a deplorable condition, were once more re-established, and public credit restored. The most convincing proof of the soundness of Pitt's financial policy is that his measures have been the basis of all subsequent legislation affecting the revenue and expenditure of the country. He likewise instituted a scheme for the reduction of the National Debt. The result of the various steps taken by him was so favourable that Consols, which in 1784 stood at 54, already reached 76 in 1786, and by 1792 had risen to 96, or a rise of 42 per cent. in eight years.

No event in the financial history of England has had such important results immediately and remotely as the suspension of cash payments during the reign of George III. In 1797 the English banks found themselves deeply embarrassed, mainly in consequence of the demands of the Government, who borrowed millions every year for the war, and for the support by subsidies of half the Continental Powers. All cash payments were forbidden, the consequence being that Bank notes fell at once to a discount. The £1 note became worth only 17*s*. or 18*s*. The House of Commons at length voted that the value must be restored to par; but the mere vote was insufficient to stop the depreciation. At length, under Lord Liverpool's Ministry, cash payments were resumed, and all who had contracted debts during the depreciation found themselves compelled to pay in cash, by which they lost heavily. Bankruptcy and ruin were the inevitable results. Having given this hasty and imperfect sketch of the finances of the country up to the beginning of this century, we will proceed to narrate the career of Nathan Mayer Rothschild, the founder of the firm in London.

The London firm was the first branch of the Frankfort business, and was, as we have said, started at the commencement of this century by Nathan Mayer Rothschild, the third son of old Mayer Amschel, of the Judengasse. The immediate cause of his repairing to England was a dispute with one of the great cotton manufacturers from Lancashire, who treated Nathan Mayer, himself a rough, unpolished man, in an arrogant, overbearing fashion, which was keenly resented. At that time the Continent, Germany and Austria especially, was entirely dependent on England for its supplies of cotton goods, and the English manufacturers, secure as they thought in their monopoly, abused their position and treated their foreign customers in a very cavalier fashion. In their opinion it was quite a favour on their part to dispose of their wares at all. The Frankfort house did a large business in cotton goods, and it was the behaviour of one of the manufacturers who visited the firm that caused Nathan Mayer to adopt the sudden resolve to go to England.

We cannot do better than repeat his own version, as published in Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton's Biography, of his first experiences and successes in England. In one of his letters Sir Thomas says:—

"We dined yesterday at Ham House, to meet the Rothschilds, and very amusing it was. He (Rothschild) told us his life and adventures. He was the third son of a banker at Frankfort. 'There was not,' he said, 'room for us all in that city. I dealt in English goods. One great trader came there who had the market all to himself; he was quite the great man, and did us a favour if he sold us goods. Somehow I offended him and he refused to show me his patterns. This was on a Tuesday. I said to my father: 'I will go to England.' I could speak nothing but German. On the Thursday I started. The nearer I got to England the cheaper the goods were. As soon as I got to Manchester I laid out all my money, things were so cheap, and I made a good profit. I soon found out there were three profits—the raw material, the dyeing, and the manufacturing. I said to the manufacturer, 'I will supply you with material and dye, and you supply me manufactured goods.' So I got three profits instead of one, and I could sell goods cheaper than anybody. In a short time I made my £20,000 into £60,000. My success all turned on one maxim. I said, 'I can do what another man can, and so I am a match for the man with the patterns and for all the rest of them.'"

Nothing could demonstrate more clearly Nathan Rothschild's profound confidence in his own powers, and his resolute character, than this simple narrative. So rapid was his success in Manchester, that before many years had passed he found even that was too limited a sphere for the mind which could grapple with three profits. He accordingly at the beginning of this century established himself in London, where he was afterwards destined to make such a name. Previous to his arrival in London, the business of the parent house in Frankfort had passed through the hands of the banking firm of Van Notten, but Nathan Mayer at once assumed the control and management of the firm's interests in England. In the concluding portion of his letter, Sir T. F. Buxton writes:—

"I forgot to say that soon after Rothschild came to England Buonaparte invaded Germany. 'The Prince of Hesse Cassel,' said Rothschild, 'gave my father his money; there was no time to be lost: he sent it to me. I had £600,000 arrive unexpectedly by post; and I put it to such good use that the Prince made me a present of all his wine and linen.'"

The immense profits realized by these early transactions, Nathan Rothschild soon found means to multiply. It was a period when a man gifted with his remarkable shrewdness and business capacities was bound to succeed. However great his folly may have seemed at the time when Napoleon's forces were trampling all Europe beneath their feet, Nathan Mayer learnt to form a favourable idea of the immense strength and resources of England, and his calculations as to the ultimate issue of the struggle were all in favour of his adopted country. Acting on his convictions, he on one occasion purchased a large amount of bills of the Duke of Wellington at a heavy discount, but knowing that the credit and faith of the country were pledged to their payment he felt he had made a good bargain. To quote his own words once more:—

"When I settled in London, the East India Company had £800,000 worth in gold to sell. I went to the sale, and bought it all. I knew the Duke of Wellington must have it. I had bought a great many of his bills at a discount. The Government sent for me and said they must have it. When they had got it, they did not know how to get it to Portugal. I undertook all that, and I sent it through France, and that was the best business I ever did."

Nathan Mayer was generally termed a merchant, but, although his commercial transactions were large and important, the scene of his greatest and most profitable triumphs was the Stock Exchange. At a time when the prices of the Funds and all securities were subject to violent fluctuations, the temptations to a great capitalist, with the speculative instinct so strongly developed as in Nathan Mayer, were irresistible. Though a mere stripling among the grey heads of the money market, his almost preternatural sagacity in the art of money making brought him at once into prominence, and he became the leading man on the Stock Exchange, none of the members of which could boast, like him, of having "multiplied their capital 2,500 times in the course of five years." He had now a field opened out to him for the display of his remarkable powers, and his immense speculations in the Funds, by which he realized large profits, proved him to be gifted with a wonderful intuitive foresight as to the course of events, combined with great fertility of resource, and unrivalled boldness. The introduction which his first business with the Government had secured him to the Ministers, was invaluable in his after career, as it enabled him to procure from privileged sources early information of all that passed in the political world likely to affect the money market. Every piece of early information was worth thousands to him on the Stock Exchange, the pulse of which none knew better how to feel than he. But he was ere long dissatisfied even with the privileges secured to him by his connection with the Government, and he originated a system of intelligence by which news was conveyed to him long before the arrival of the Government couriers and messengers. He had his own staff of active agents and couriers, whose duty it was to follow in the wake of armies or attend at the different Courts to collect and transmit to him regularly, without regard to expense, reports of all that transpired. He organized a system of pigeon post, by which news was conveyed to him from the Continent rapidly and at short intervals. He was known to have spent immense sums on his pigeons, and was ever ready to pay liberally for birds possessing great strength and swiftness. The superiority of his intelligence over that of the Government was proved on several occasions. He was the first to inform Lord Aberdeen of the Paris July revolution, as he had been to announce the defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo. In connection with Waterloo an interesting little romance has been written upon the immense sum Nathan Mayer gained by his early knowledge of the victory of the Allies, which his financial strategy enabled him to use to the fullest advantage on the Stock Exchange.

Many of his large speculations had been based on the presumed success of the English arms, and he was perhaps congratulating himself on his shrewd foresight and the soundness of his calculations when the sudden and treacherous return of Napoleon from Elba shattered at once his golden dreams and renewed all his previous anxiety and fears. No man, indeed, had greater cause to tremble at the reappearance of the mighty despot than had Nathan Mayer; when the fruits of his victory seemed almost within his grasp, they were at a blow removed, and he was left surrounded with doubts and contingencies. In the midst of its rejoicings the whole of Europe was startled with alarm and dismay. That the deposed Emperor should ever return to harass and devastate Europe, had never occurred to men's minds; it was a possibility of which no one had ever thought. The public alarm was only increased as the news of the glad welcome Napoleon received on his way to Paris became known. So upset was Nathan Mayer by the news, and so intense became his anxiety to learn how matters progressed and were likely to end, that it would not allow him to rest satisfied with the speed of his couriers, but drove him to go himself to the Continent to watch the course of events with his own eyes. He accordingly proceeded to Belgium and followed close in the wake of the English army. When at length the Duke took up his position at Waterloo, and quietly awaited the French forces, Nathan Mayer felt that the critical moment on which hung the fortunes, not of Europe alone, but of the Rothschilds also, had arrived. He had such an immense stake dependent upon the issue, that his feverish anxiety would not allow him to remain in the background. He proceeded to the battle-field and took up a position commanding a view of both armies. We can imagine how eagerly he scanned the field, and noted the disposition and strength of the opposing forces. Those under the command of the Iron Duke must, we should fancy, have struck him as being outmatched and standing but a poor chance with the French army, which included the famous and hitherto invincible "Old Guard." Turning to the distinguished personages around him, among whom were to be seen Count Pozzo di Borgo, Baron Vincent, General Alava, Baron Müffling, and others of equal note, Nathan Mayer questioned eagerly and wistfully all who cared to give him a hearing. The answers he received were discouraging and but increased his fears, for all were too well aware that the struggle between two such remarkable commanders would be long and stubborn. Though hoping for victory, none felt confident enough to predict such a result. The battle began. A dense smoke, from the furious cannonade, soon enveloped the whole field in a cloud; but Nathan Mayer's straining eyes were able from time to time to see the fierce charges of the French cavalry, by which the safety of the English lines was more than once imperilled. Cold steel, however, conquered, and the assailants recoiled before the bristling hedge of bayonets. And so the battle grew and waxed fiercer as the day progressed. On the opposite hill of Rossomme, Napoleon was seated with a map outstretched before him, and from there he issued the orders for a last and desperate charge, on which all his hopes of victory were placed. The Old Guard, with the gallant Ney at their head, rushed forward to retrieve the fortunes of the day; but in vain. They had met their masters. They were driven back by the British bayonets, and were soon to be seen making their way from the battle-field in the greatest confusion and disorder. With a ringing cheer that told which side had won, the English forces rushed after their foes, whilst Nathan Mayer, his anxiety allayed and his spirits restored, spurred his horse back towards Brussels. It was dusk as he quitted the field, and his solitary ride in the darkness must have been intensely exciting to his already highly taxed brain. It was a ride he cannot readily have forgotten. Having reached Brussels, he procured, after some difficulty, a carriage to convey him without delay, and at all speed, to Ostend, where he arrived, travel-stained and weary, on the morning of the 19th June. Tired as he was, he would not stay to rest. In spite of the tempestuous sea, and the threatening weather, he wished to make his way across the Channel, but even the fishermen shrank from the attempt. In vain he offered bribes of five hundred, six hundred, eight hundred francs to the poor fellows; they would not venture. It was not until the offer reached two thousand francs that one of them consented to brave the tempest, and endeavour to take Nathan Mayer across to England, on condition that the money was paid to his wife before starting.

They set sail, and before they had gone far the threatening weather changed for the better, whilst a favourable breeze sprang up and considerably accelerated their passage. In the evening they sighted Dover and shortly after Nathan Mayer dragged his weary limbs ashore. Even here he would not rest, but, after procuring the swiftest post-horses to be had, resumed his journey to London. The next day he was to be seen leaning against his well-known pillar on the Stock Exchange, apparently broken in health and spirits, and looking as if he had been overwhelmed and crushed by some direful calamity. The greatest gloom and despondency had for days prevailed in the City, and as men looked at Rothschild, and then significantly at each other, they seemed to come unanimously to the conclusion that their hopes had been blasted, and that the worst was yet to be known. Had not Rothschild travelled post-haste from the Continent, and were not his agents already selling out? The Stock Exchange, generally so full of life and noise, was unusually silent; speculators moved about in a listless, aimless way, now and then stopping to discuss in low whispers the cause of the great financier's sales. The gloom and despondency was not lessened when a rumour became current that Rothschild had told a friend in confidence that Blucher with his 117,000 Prussians had been defeated on the 16th and 17th June at Ligny, and that Wellington could not hope with his handful of soldiers to arrest the progress of Napoleon's victorious and far larger forces. The evil news spread through the City like wildfire. The Funds dropped rapidly, and the greatest uneasiness and despondency prevailed. The change was so violent and so sudden. It seemed as if it were but yesterday that Europe had been exulting over the discomfiture of Buonaparte and the restoration of peace. The public thanksgiving, the grand reviews, the public rejoicing, the fireworks, had hardly yet finished, and now,—the whole was in vain, —the scourge of Europe was loose again. And so the day closed, with not a ray of hope to brighten the all-pervading gloom. But the next afternoon a sudden, wild reaction set in. It was everywhere reported, with sparkling eyes and heightened colour in men's cheeks, that Wellington was victorious, and the French defeated. Nathan Mayer had himself been the first to announce the good news with undisguised delight and satisfaction to his friends on the Stock Exchange. When the glad tidings received official confirmation some hours later the public joy knew no limits. The Funds rose again at a bound. Many pitied Rothschild for the enormous losses he had, as they thought, suffered; they little suspected that, while his known agents had been selling openly, his unknown agents had bought up secretly every piece of scrip they could secure. Far from losing, he had by his manipulations pocketed nearly a million sterling.

In 1806 Nathan Mayer Rothschild married a daughter of Levi Barnet Cohen, one of the wealthiest Jews at that time living in London. After accepting Rothschild as his daughter's suitor, Cohen had some doubts as to the extent of his future son-in-law's riches. A man who speculated so boldly and so largely was not unlikely to be speculating with other persons' money, so Cohen prudently asked for some proof of his reputed wealth. This Rothschild declined to give, saying that as far as wealth and good character went, Mr Cohen could not do better than give him all his daughters in marriage.

The name of Rothschild became familiar to the English public mainly through its connection with loans issued for various Governments. This loan business was perhaps the most profitable of all the many enterprises on which the firm embarked, as, to begin with, there was the certainty of a handsome commission; whilst the endless Stock Exchange speculations to which the loans gave rise were a fruitful source of gain to Nathan Mayer. He may fairly be said to have been the first to introduce foreign loans into England, and to have made them popular as investments. Foreign stocks had, of course, been largely held by English capitalists for years, but they had never enjoyed public favour, owing to the interest and dividends being payable abroad. Rothschild, however, arranged that they should in future be paid in London, at fixed rates in sterling money, an arrangement which contributed largely to the success of the loans brought out under his auspices. It speaks well, indeed, for his prudence and caution, that, although the loans issued through other firms were often repudiated and the interest stopped, none that he took up were ever known to suffer from the bankruptcy of the Governments for whom they had been issued. Rather than allow his loans to acquire a bad name through the inability of the contracting State, owing to temporary difficulties, to provide the funds necessary for the payment of the interest, he was known to have advanced his own money for that purpose, trusting to his influence and power to secure its due return. However unfavourable an opinion people may entertain of some foreign loans, it is quite certain that they cannot point to any loan issued by the Rothschilds that has come to a bad end. The first occasion on which he assisted the English Government was in 1819, when he undertook the loan of £12,000,000. This operation was unsuccessful, as the loan fell to a discount; but Rothschild had cleverly shifted the burden on to other shoulders. The list given below, which is by no means complete, will show how varied his loan operations were, and will enable the reader to form an idea of the immense profits attending this line of business. On one single loan he made a profit of £150,000, with which he purchased the well-known Gunnersbury House and grounds. This historical mansion was formerly the residence of Princess Amelia, the aunt of George III., and on her death the house and grounds passed into the hands of a Mr Copland and ultimately became, as we have said, the property of Nathan Mayer Rothschild.

The principal loans issued by Nathan Mayer were the following :—

1818	Prussian	5%	£5,000,000
1822	„	„	3,500,000
„	Russian	„	3,500,000
1823	Austrian	„	2,500,000
1824	Neapolitan	„	2,500,000
1825	Brazilian	„	2,000,000
1829	„	„	800,000
1832	Belgian	„	2,000,000
		Total	£21,800,000

The majority of these loans were remarkably successful; but at times the sunshine was broken. On more than one occasion Nathan Mayer sustained such heavy losses that the stability of any other firm but his would have been endangered. He is estimated to have lost not less than half a million by Lord Bexley's scheme for funding Exchequer bills in a Three and a half per cent. stock. In 1823, at the time of the French invasion of Spain, he was threatened with severe losses through the French loan, but fortunately for him he saw his danger in time, and managed to distribute the loss among others less alert.

He would often decline proposals for loans without troubling himself about the terms, if the country soliciting his assistance was under the least suspicion, or subject to internal disorganization. With Spain, or the South American states which had formerly acknowledged the Spanish flag, he would never have anything to do. He always cautiously steered clear of every doubtful or unsafe business. During the great speculation fever of 1824 and 1825 he kept studiously aloof, and warned others to follow his example. It is true that, during this time, he established the Alliance Marine Insurance Company, but the history of the causes which led to its formation would seem to show that its establishment had no connection with the speculation then prevailing. When the numerous bubble companies which had been floated burst in rapid succession, and the inevitable panic occurred, Rothschild greatly relieved the market by his readiness to purchase at a fair price any amount of stock that might be tendered him. Brokers in many instances preferred accepting his offers to realizing their stock on the market. Nothing demonstrated more clearly the power and stability of the firm during this trying period, when the Bank of England had nearly to close its doors, than the unstinted and fearless manner in which it advanced funds to the Bank to enable the latter to meet its calls.

In 1831 Nathan Mayer did what he regarded as a very clever stroke of business. Mercury, as is well known, is a valuable article, indispensable in many trades, as well as in the dispensing-room. It is a powerful medicine, and is also largely used to separate gold and silver from the earthy impurities with which they combine. Most of the quicksilver found in Europe was derived either from the mines at Idria, in Austria, or from those at Almaden, in Spain. The latter mines had at the time of which we are writing been allowed to fall into disuse, but their richness was well known, even the Greeks and Romans having realized immense profits from the rich deposits there. Spain in her difficulties thought of her once famous mines, and willingly mortgaged them to Rothschild as security for the due payment of the interest on the loan he had undertaken. The immediate result of this agreement took the public quite by surprise: the value of Almaden quicksilver was doubled. Under these circumstances, they naturally turned to the Idria mines for their supplies, but only to find that the price there likewise had been doubled. Rothschild had managed to get the Idria mines also under his control, and by so doing had secured the monopoly of mercury. "This clever stroke of business—as profitable as it was clever—had one notable consequence for the sick and suffering of all nations. Mercurial preparations, largely employed in medicine, are at the present moment no more manufactured from the pure metal as obtained from the mines, but from the refuse of other articles containing quicksilver, such as the foil of old mirrors and looking-glasses." This piece of stratagem brought down upon Nathan Mayer a shower of abuse and condemnation from the press.

On another occasion he forced even that venerable institution, the Bank of England, in spite of its prestige and its Government support, to confess that it was no match for the finesse of the great financier. Rothschild particularly required an amount of bullion to promote the success of an operation he had in hand. This bullion the directors willingly lent him on condition that it should be returned by a certain day. On that day Rothschild appeared at the Bank to fulfil his engagement. When asked if he intended to return the bullion, his reply was to produce a bundle of notes for the amount. He was reminded of the terms of the agreement, the directors pointing out that to oblige him they had touched their reserve, and that they now urgently required the bullion. "Very well, gentlemen," he is reported to have said, "return me my notes; I dare say your cashier will honour them with gold from your vaults, and then I can return you bullion."

This story is so characteristic of the man, that its authenticity seems undeniable, but the same cannot be said of the following anecdote, which is evidently due to the fertile brain of some imaginative writer. The very minuteness of detail and the dramatic completeness of the narrative are enough to make one suspicious of its genuineness.

The elements of improbability are too prominent and manifest to fail to strike the reader. The story runs that the Bank mortally offended Nathan Mayer, by refusing to discount a bill drawn upon him for a large amount by his brother Anselm of Frankfort. The Bank had haughtily replied that they "discounted only their own bills, and not those of private persons." But they had to deal with one stronger even than the Bank. "Private persons!" exclaimed Rothschild, when the fact was reported to him; "private persons! I will make these gentlemen feel what sort of private persons we are!" Three weeks afterwards, Nathan Mayer, who had employed the interval in collecting all the bank-notes he could procure in England and on the Continent, presented himself at the Bank as soon as it was opened. He drew from his pocket-book a £5-note, and the clerk naturally counted out five sovereigns, at the same time looking with great astonishment at Rothschild. It seemed strange that he should trouble himself for such a trifle. He, however, examined the coins carefully one by one, and put them in a little canvas bag; then drawing out another note, a third, a fourth, a tenth, a hundredth, he kept demanding change for his notes, never placing the money in his bag without first scrupulously examining the pieces. In some cases he would try them in the balance, "as," he observed, "the law gave him the right to do." The first pocket-book being emptied, and the first bag filled, he passed them to his clerk, and received a second supply of notes, thus continuing to drain the Bank of its gold till the doors were closed. He had spent seven hours in changing £21,000. But as he had nine of his employés engaged in the same manner, it resulted that the Bank had lost £210,000 from its reserve of gold. Moreover, Nathan Mayer had kept the tellers so occupied that no other persons could change a single note. Everything that bears the stamp of eccentricity always pleases the English public, and in this instance the pique of the great millionaire caused endless amusement. The directors, however, laughed less, when they saw him reappear next day at the opening of the Bank, accompanied by his nine allies; they laughed no longer when they heard the financial despot say, with ironical simplicity: "These gentlemen refuse to take my bills; I have sworn not to keep theirs. I will merely warn them that I hold notes enough to keep them occupied for two months." For two months! eleven millions of gold drawn from the Bank! The Bank grew alarmed; something had to be done. The next morning a notice appeared that in future Rothschild's bills would be taken as readily as their own.

Shrewd and 'cute as Nathan Mayer proved himself to be, the laugh was not always on his side. He at times met with rivals whose cunning and strategy were too much even for his subtle calculations. A leading banker once lent him a million and a half against the security of Consols, which were then quoted at 84. The terms on which the money was advanced were clear and simple; the banker was to have the option of buying the Consols at 70, should the price recede to 74. Rothschild felt satisfied with his bargain, for the possibility of Consols dropping 10 per cent. appeared to him a very remote contingency. The banker, however, had acted on an idea which subsequently fully justified his course of procedure. He at once began unloading Rothschild's Consols on the market, following this up by a similar amount in his own possession. The market grew alarmed at the gigantic sales; uneasiness and doubt followed; the Funds dropped rapidly, and other circumstances occurring to help the depression, the fatal price of 74 was at length reached. The Christian had outmatched the Jew.

When he lived at Stamford Hill, Nathan Mayer had as an opposite neighbour a wealthy stockbroker named Lucas, who, on returning home late one evening, noticed Rothschild's carriage standing ready at the gate. Thinking something must be in the wind, Lucas directed his coachman to drive round to the stable and not unharness the horses, but to wait till he sent for him. Concealing himself, he presently saw Rothschild and two companions enter the carriage, the driver being ordered to drive "to the City." Hastily summoning his own carriage, the stockbroker started in pursuit, and saw them alight at New Court. A few minutes later he followed, and, reeling past the housekeeper in an apparently hopelessly drunken state, forced his way, in spite of all opposition, to the financier's private room, where he fell prostrate on the floor. Nathan and his friends were not unnaturally startled by the sudden inrush of their unwelcome and uninvited visitor. They raised him, bathed his face with cold water, but without any benefit, the only result being a convulsive trembling and shrinking.

They were at a loss what to do with Lucas, but, noticing that he seemed at length to settle into a heavy slumber, determined to let him remain where he had fallen. Time was precious; they had important matters to discuss, so they covered the reveller with a rug, and proceeded with their business. Important news had been received from Spain, and the result of the consultation was to order certain brokers to commence at once buying up cautiously a particular stock. This settled, Rothschild and his companions separated. After they had gone, Lucas began slowly to recover, and although still uncertain and shaky on his legs, and suffering from a dreadful headache, as he said, he insisted, in spite of the housekeeper's remonstrances, upon going home. On reaching the street he went at once to his office, where he made arrangements for buying up all the stock he could procure. Rothschild was dreadfully upset by this trick, and used always to refer to it as the "base, dishonest, and nefarious stratagem" of Lucas.

In addition to his loan business and speculations, Rothschild embarked in many commercial enterprises, for he was ready to support any undertaking which appeared to him at once sound and likely to prove lucrative. By his immense bill transactions he must have won hundreds of thousands of pounds. A writer in "The Gentleman's Magazine," shortly after Rothschild's death, said: "He never hesitated for a moment in fixing the rate, either as a drawer or as a taker, on any part of the world; and his memory was so retentive that, notwithstanding the immense transactions on which he entered every foreign post-day, and though he never took note of them, he could, on his return home, with perfect exactness, dictate the whole to his clerks." Nothing was too gigantic for his grasp; nothing too minute to escape his notice. His mind was as capable of contracting a loan for millions, as of calculating the lowest salary on which a clerk could exist. "It was characteristic of Nathan," says Martin, in his "Stories of Banks and Bankers," that "he never paid his employés a farthing more than was necessary for their bare subsistence—or at least not a farthing more than they could compel him to pay. This meanness towards those who assisted him in building up the edifice of his enormous fortune is a reproach to the character of the man from which even his warmest adulators have not been able to free him." This is a reproach from which we are glad to say the present heads of the firm are free, for their liberality is too well known to require our confirmation.

"One cause of his success," says the author of "The Stock Exchange," "was the secrecy with which he shrouded all his transactions, and the tortuous policy with which he misled those who watched him the keenest. If he possessed news calculated to make the Funds rise, he would commission the broker who acted on his behalf to sell half a million. The shoal of men who usually follow the movements of others sold with him. The news soon passed through Capel Court that Rothschild was bearing the market, and the Funds fell. Men looked doubtingly at one another; a general panic spread; bad news was looked for; and these united agencies sank the price two or three per cent. This was the result expected, and other brokers, not usually employed by him, bought all they could at the reduced rate. By the time this was accomplished, the good news had arrived; the pressure ceased; the Funds rose instantly; and Mr Rothschild reaped his reward." To tell who was and who was not his agent was well-nigh impossible, for he is known to have made his very enemies his tools to serve his purposes. He was informed one day that a broker had been openly abusing him on the Stock Exchange, and boasting "how thoroughly he detested Rothschild and the whole Jewish race." Nathan listened quietly and unmovedly to the statement, merely remarking—

"Thank you; I am much obliged. That man will be useful."

Shortly afterwards this abusive broker sold out on behalf of a third party, acting secretly for Rothschild, £600,000 Consols; "For," said Nathan, "they will never suspect he is bearing the market on my account." It was a common practice with this mighty speculator to have one set of agents selling, and another buying, the same stock, so that there was no ascertaining what in reality was the object of his manœuvres. The probable result was a secret confined to his own breast. Owing to his enormous power, subtle stratagems, and profound mystery, no one could conjecture, with any certainty, his purposes. A general suspicion and mistrust followed him in all his actions. If business was flat and dull, it was caused by Rothschild, while, if matters improved, the improvement was declared fictitious and only temporary. The whole Stock Exchange became filled with an uncomfortable atmosphere of suspicion and incredulity, which kept the members ever in a fever of apprehension and doubt.

It may not be out of place to mention that Nathan Mayer attributed much of his success to the observance of two maxims: "Another advantage I had. I was an off-hand man; I made a bargain at once." The second maxim shows that he had a grain of superstition in his composition, for he would never, as he said, have anything to do with an unlucky man or an unlucky place. "I have seen many clever men, very clever men, who had not shoes to their feet. I never act with them. Their advice sounds very well, but fate is against them; they cannot get on themselves, and, if they cannot do good to themselves, how can they do good to me?"

His methods of business and his conduct procured him many enemies. The satirists were ever ridiculing his portly figure and slovenly appearance, caricaturing his Jewish accent and his uncouth manners. He was indeed a subject created for caricature, but he was at the same time utterly insensible to the jeers and laughter he occasioned. He pursued his path without paying the least regard to anything that might be done to give him offence.

Undoubtedly he was responsible for much of this satire and ridicule. In his manners and address he seemed to delight in displaying his thorough disregard of all the courtesies and amenities of civilized life. They were to him superfluities and shams. He appeared to pride himself on his blunt and outspoken style of speech, which he mistook for frankness, but which was usually so violent and uncouth that in any other than a millionaire it would not have been tolerated. He was, like most of his family, a man of unbridled temper, which led him into excesses of passion and language quite unworthy of his position in society. A clever anonymous writer thus describes him as he was seen on "'Change":—

"There is a rigidity and a tension in his features too that would make you fancy, if you did not see that it was not so, that someone was pinching him behind, and that he was either afraid or ashamed to say so. Eyes are usually denominated the windows of the soul; but here you would conclude that the windows are false ones, or that there was no soul to look out of them. There comes not one pencil of light from the interior, neither is there one scintillation of that which comes from without reflected in any direction. The whole puts you in mind of a skin to let, and you wonder why it stands upright without at least something in it. By-and-by another figure comes up to it. It then steps two paces aside, and the most inquisitive glance that you ever saw, and a glance more inquisitive than you would ever have thought of, is drawn out of the erewhile fixed and leaden eye, as if one were drawing a sword from a scabbard. The visiting figure, which has the appearance of coming by accident and not by design, stops but a second or two, in the course of which looks are exchanged which, though you cannot translate, you feel must be of most important meaning. After these the eyes are sheathed up again, and the figure resumes its stony posture. During the morning numbers of visitors come, all of whom meet with a similar reception and vanish in a similar manner; and, last of all, the figure itself vanishes, leaving you utterly at a loss as to what can be its nature and functions." Nathan Mayer must indeed have at once attracted attention as he leaned against his favourite pillar, with his shoulders drawn up to his ears, and his hands plunged deep in his breeches-pockets, motionless, and apparently speculationless.

ROTHSCHILD ON EXCHANGE.

"The name of this gentleman, the entertainments given by him, the charities to which he occasionally subscribed, and the amount of his transactions in the money market were blazoned abroad. Peers and the princes of the blood sat at his table; clergymen and laymen bowed before him; and they who preached loudest against mammon, bent lowest before the mammon-worshipper. Gorgeous plate, fine furniture, an establishment such as many a noble of Norman descent would envy, graced his entertainments. Without social refinement, with manners which, offensive in the million, were but brusque in the millionaire, he collected around him the fastidious members of the most fastidious aristocracy in the world. He saw the representatives of all the States in Europe proud of his friendship. By the democratic envoy of the New World, by the ambassador of the imperial Russ, was his hospitality alike accepted; while the man who warred with slavery in all its forms and phases was himself slave to the golden reputation of the Hebrew. The language which Mr Rothschild could use when his anger overbalanced his discretion was a licence allowed to his wealth; and he who, when placed in a position which almost compelled him to subscribe to a pressing charity, could exclaim, 'Here! write a cheque; I have made one —— fool of myself!' was courted and caressed by the clergy, was fêted and flattered by the poor, was treated as an equal by the first minister of the Crown, and more than worshipped by those whose names stood foremost on the roll of the commercial aristocracy. His mode of dictating letters was characteristic of a mind entirely absorbed in money-making; and his ravings when he found a bill unexpectedly protested, were translated into mercantile language ere they were fit to meet a correspondent's eye. It is painful to write thus depreciatingly of a man who possessed so large a development of brain; but the golden gods of England have many idolaters, and the voice of truth rarely penetrates the private room of the English merchant. There was, however, an occasional gleam of humour in him, sternly as his thoughts were devoted to heaping up riches. 'I am as good as you,' said he to the Duc de Montmorenci, when his title was granted, 'you style yourself the first Christian baron, and I am the first Jew baron.'"

This reminds one forcibly of another anecdote. A German Prince, bearing letters of introduction and credit to the great financier, called at New Court, and was shown into the private room where Nathan Mayer was sitting busy with a number of papers before him. On hearing his visitor's name, Rothschild nodded and motioned him to take a seat, whilst he went on steadily with the examination of his papers. This cool treatment was not quite what the Prince expected should have been shown to one of his dignity and rank. After standing a minute or two, he exclaimed: "Did you hear, sir, who I am? I am ——," naming his full title. "Very well," said Rothschild, "take two chairs." More often the point of his jokes was due to his imperfect pronunciation of English. When dining at the Mansion House one evening, he was heard to remark to a guest who had declared his preference of mutton to venison: "Ah, I see; you like mutton because it is sheep (cheap); others like venison because it is deer (dear)!"

Wealth, whatever luxuries it might command, was unable to secure its possessor happiness or tranquillity of mind. Rothschild was a prey to empty fears, and the care and anxiety inseparable from the control and safe-keeping of his millions effectually prevented him from ever enjoying any peace of mind or relaxation. He had made numerous enemies; he had ruined many a man of business by his stratagems and speculations, so that it is not surprising to learn he was continually haunted by dreams of assassination. Threatening letters poured in upon him by the hundred, and one in particular, sent to him by a secret political tribunal on the Continent, which declared that as he, by his loans, had supported the Governments in their tyrannical oppression of their subjects, his death had been decided upon and the agents appointed to carry out the crime, is said to have caused him special uneasiness. So great a hold did his fears have over him, that for many years before his death he is reported to have slept with loaded pistols at his side. "You must be a happy man," said Sir T. Fowell Buxton, as he surveyed the comforts and luxuries of his splendid mansion, "in such a home as this." "Happy, I happy!" was the bitter reply; "what! happy, when just as you are going to dine a letter is placed in your hand saying: 'If you do not send £500—I will blow your brains out.' Happy, I happy!"

Two tall, dark men, with heavy moustaches and penetrating eyes were once ushered into his room.

The financier bowed; the visitors on their side did the same, but said nothing. They were feeling in an anxious, nervous manner in their pockets, as if to find something they had concealed there. Rothschild's fears at once led him to the conclusion that his assassins were at last before him, bent on carrying out the foul deed. Without a moment's hesitation or thought, he seized a ledger within his reach and hurled it with all his force at the unsuspecting visitors, and shouted for assistance. When at last an explanation was forthcoming, and Nathan Mayer discovered that the strangers were two bankers bearing letters of introduction, which they in their nervous haste were unable to discover, his mortification was intense, and he was heard to mutter to himself: "Poor unhappy me! a victim to nervousness and fancied terrors! and all because of my money!"

What little pleasure and happiness Nathan Mayer did enjoy was derived not so much from the possession of unbounded wealth, as from the excitement and intriguing attending the making of it. He revelled in the plotting and tricking, the manipulations and stratagems which his gigantic speculations necessitated and created. "This is the key," said one who knew him well, "to an understanding of Rothschild's character. His ambition tended to the accomplishment of elaborate financial operations —of making money, if you like; but in this phrase the emphasis must be placed on the making; for he did not value either money in itself or the things that could be procured by it. He had no taste or inclination for what every Englishman seeks as soon as he has money enough to buy it— comfort in every respect. His ambition was to arrive at his aim more quickly and more effectually than others, and to steer towards it with all his energy. When his end was reached it had lost all its charm for him, and he turned his never-wearying mind to something else." This view of his character and disposition is confirmed by his own lips, as he declared in answer to the question asked by one of his guests: "I hope that your children are not too fond of money and business to the exclusion of more important things. I am sure you would not wish that?"—"I am sure I should wish that," was the outspoken reply; "I wish them to give mind, soul, and heart and body—everything to business. That is the way to be happy. It requires a great deal of boldness, and a great deal of caution, to make a great fortune, and, when you have got it, you require ten times as much wit to keep it." Outside his business Rothschild had few pleasures. Whilst his mansions were crowded with works of art, and the most gorgeous appointments, it was not because he was a patron or admirer of the arts, but because, with his millions, it was expected of him. When Spohr, the famous violinist and composer, called upon Nathan, with a letter of introduction from Nathan's brother in Frankfort, he was told by the banker: "I understand nothing of music. This" —patting his pocket and making his money rattle and jingle—"is my music; we understand that on 'Change. But you can come and dine with me." "Nevertheless," added Spohr, "the letter of recommendation to Rothschild was not wholly useless, for he took a whole box at my benefit concert." At long and rare intervals Rothschild would be seized with a charitable freak; but that his benevolence was due to nothing better than caprice is proved by his own words: "Sometimes to amuse myself I give a beggar a guinea. He thinks it is a mistake, and for fear I should find it out off he runs as hard as he can. I advise you to give a beggar a guinea sometimes. It is very amusing."

The directions of old Mayer Amschel of Frankfort, that his sons should always remain united, were carried out to their fullest possible extent, by the practice of intermarriage. Thus Baron James, the head of the Paris house, had married one of his nieces; and in 1836 it was decided that Lionel, Nathan Mayer's eldest son, should marry his cousin, the daughter of Anselm Rothschild of Frankfort. Nathan Mayer went to Frankfort to be present at the marriage festivities. He was in bad health at the time, suffering from a carbuncle. On the day of the wedding he was taken seriously ill, but he obstinately maintained that it was but a passing attack. He grew, however, rapidly worse, and, when matters had assumed a threatening and hopeless aspect, his physician was sent for from London. But his services were summoned too late, and the great man, after being delirious for a day or two, gave in to his great enemy. He died on the 28th July, 1836. The first news of his death was conveyed to England by one of his own specially-trained pigeons, which was shot by a sportsman near Brighton. On a slip of paper attached to its leg were the words, "Il est mort." His remains were brought over from Frankfort for interment. Surrounded as he had been during his life by all the luxuries which money could command, he was placed in his last resting-place with a gorgeous pomp and display that seemed hardly appropriate to the solemnity of the occasion. The coffin which contained his remains was described in the press as being "different in shape from those made in this country, and so handsomely carved and decorated with large silver handles at both sides and ends that it appeared more like a cabinet than a receptacle for the dead." A procession of carriages, nearly a mile in length, followed it. Among those who were present in the Jewish East-end Cemetery out of respect to the Deceased, were the Austrian, Russian, Prussian, Neapolitan, and Portuguese ambassadors, besides the Lord Mayor, the sheriffs, aldermen, and a crowd of minor dignitaries.

Much speculation and curiosity was manifested by the public after Nathan Mayer's death as to the amount of the fortune he had left his children, but this was not made known in the will, and has consequently always remained a secret. The directions to his executors were clear and simple. Those gentlemen were expressly bidden to confine themselves to their administrative duties, and not seek to pry into matters which were outside their functions. No statement of the amount of his property, or of the securities in which it was invested, was given in the will, and the main points touched upon were the conduct of the business and the marriage of his daughters. The business was to be conducted by the four sons in co-operation with their uncles abroad. To each of his daughters he left £100,000, which was to be forfeited if they ever married without the consent of their mother and their brothers. Legacies to his employés and dependents, as well as charitable bequests, were conspicuous by their absence—there were none.

Chapter VI.

BARON LIONEL DE ROTHSCHILD.

THE LONDON FIRM (continued).

NATHAN MAYER ROTHSCHILD left four sons and three daughters to participate in the immense fortune he had won. Of these four sons, one, Nathaniel, chose France as his home, whilst the other three, Lionel Nathan, Mayer, and Anthony, succeeded to the management of the fine business bequeathed them by their father. The control and management were really confided exclusively to Baron Lionel, for his abilities and skill justly entitled him to that proud position, whilst his brothers, having no great inclination for financial matters, were content to concentrate their attention and energies on more congenial pursuits—the encouragement of art and sport in all their forms.

Baron Lionel was only twenty-eight when his father died—an early age at which to be called upon to direct and conduct a business so complicated and so vast as that which he had inherited.

But Baron Lionel proved himself fully equal to the responsibilities of his new position. He possessed great natural abilities, and much of his father's financial skill, which had been cultivated and developed under the careful eye of his father himself. For some years before the latter's death, Baron Lionel had assisted him in the business of the firm, and, owing to a wise rule followed by Nathan Mayer, had acquired a thorough insight into all its various details and perfectly mastered the principles on which it was conducted. Nathan Mayer invariably insisted that all the correspondence and negotiations respecting important transactions should be carried on either by himself or his sons; he discussed the details with them, and encouraged them to study every financial proposition in all its bearings, thus making them participators in the wisdom derived from his vast experience, and training them in the best possible way for the charge which must eventually become theirs. Young as he was, Baron Lionel, thanks to the thoroughly sound training he had received, and to the great financial talents he had inherited from his father, soon showed that the fame and reputation of his firm would not diminish whilst the management remained in his hands.

Nathan Mayer had wisely observed that it took a "great deal of boldness and a great deal of caution to make a great fortune, and ten times as much wit to keep it when you have got it," and the justice of this remark was fully appreciated by his son. Baron Lionel, having perhaps little inclination for gigantic speculations, with all the excitement and worry attending them, such as his father had revelled in, concentrated his thoughts exclusively on the consolidation and preservation of the immense fortune and business his predecessor had made with such unparalleled rapidity. Great prudence and unfailing caution invariably marked the enterprises on which Baron Lionel entered. He never mixed himself up with any bubble companies, and carefully avoided purely speculative undertakings. On the Stock Exchange he dealt largely, but he never stooped to avail himself of any of the tricks and stratagems to which his father resorted so successfully. The unrivalled sway and control his father possessed over the stock market Baron Lionel did not aspire to retain in its entirety, as that would have necessitated the employment of those underhand manipulations and expedients which were in his eyes anything but admirable, even if generally adopted by the members of the Stock Exchange. Naturally his influence on the stock market was great, still it was far below that which his father had enjoyed; but what the firm lost in influence they more than gained in the respect and favour of the public.

In the negotiation of foreign loans Baron Lionel was particularly active, as this business, at once lucrative and comparatively free from risk, was one which he preferred before all others. During his lifetime his firm was interested in the issue of no less than eighteen Government loans, amounting in the aggregate to one hundred and sixty millions sterling. To enter into the details of these transactions would be to give the financial history of Europe for the last fifty years, and after all no advantage would be gained by our doing so, as the immediate cause of the whole of them was the same—the pressing necessities of the borrowing States. The only difference was the circumstances and conditions under which each loan was issued, and these particulars belong rather to the history of the individual countries than to that of the Rothschilds. In all these great loan transactions the direction was invariably left with Baron Lionel, not only on account of his influence as head of the family, but also on account of his matured judgment. His skill in detecting the moment for buying or selling, his delicacy in feeling the pulse of the market, and his promptness in seizing every opportunity favourable to his purposes, were universally recognized. Among the many loans issued by Baron Lionel we may mention the Irish Famine loan, which he negotiated in 1847 for the English Government, for whom he also in 1854 raised a sum of £16,000,000. During more than twenty years he was the agent for the Russian Government. In the successful funding of the debt of the United States he took a prominent part, and in 1876 he advanced the English Government the sum of four millions sterling for the instant purchase of Suez Canal shares from the Khedive. By the latter transaction alone he cleared a profit of nearly £100,000. On the conclusion of the Franco-German war, Baron Lionel, at the head of a group of bankers and financiers, guaranteed to maintain the foreign exchanges, and so facilitated the payment of the French indemnity. The fact of this delicate and important business being confided to his management was a remarkable and flattering tribute paid to his great financial ability and unerring judgment.

BARON LIONEL DE ROTHSCHILD.

Whilst speaking of foreign loans, we may be allowed to recall an anecdote in connection with a Russian loan which Baron Lionel was asked to negotiate. He was a man of action, quick in coming to a decision, and prompt in carrying it out. On this occasion an unusual hesitation and irresolution overpowered him, and led to the loss of the loan. The cause of this unwonted irresolution was that he found himself placed in an awkward predicament in which he must either abandon a profitable business, or else damage himself in the eyes of the public. It was at the time when he was posing as the champion of freedom, and of the liberties of the subject; when he was fighting the House of Commons to obtain possession of the seat to which he had been elected. On the other hand, the loan was required by the Russian Government presumably to enable it to carry on its campaign against Poland, then in arms against the despotism and oppression of the great Russian autocrat.

Baron Lionel was in a dilemma. If he negotiated the loan, he would be publicly accused of having proved false to his spoken opinions, of having cast aside all his regard for the liberty of the subject as soon as his pocket was affected. In place of the public support and favour, he would at once bring down upon himself a shower of sneers and satire.

If he were once to estrange the public from him, if he were once covered with obloquy and contempt, he knew full well that all chance of bringing his struggle with the House of Commons to a successful issue would be gone. But he did not wish to lose the loan. Indeed, he was anxious to secure so profitable a business. The Russian Government, he was aware, had not limited its negotiations to himself, but had communicated with other and rival firms on the subject. Baron Lionel knew that a decision must be made promptly, but he was so assailed by opposing considerations, that he could not decide which to sacrifice: his political popularity, or his profit. When at length he had resolved to undertake the negotiation of the loan, he found that his hesitation had lost him the business, as a more energetic competitor, unembarrassed by any such considerations, had succeeded in coming to an arrangement with the representatives of the Russian Government. This was a lesson the Baron never forgot.

Whilst the business life of Baron Lionel calls for no detailed narrative, it is different with his political career, owing to the remarkable and persistent efforts he made to procure the abolition of the civil and political disabilities with which the Jews were hampered. It is hardly necessary to say that Baron Lionel was never ashamed of the race from which he had sprung. His wealth did not, as in the case of Samson Gideon, lead him to turn apostate to the creed which his fathers and forefathers had professed and followed. In all that concerned the welfare of the Jewish community, of which he was the recognized head and leader, Baron Lionel took an active interest and was always foremost to do all that his influence and money could command to ameliorate the condition of his co-religionists. He was for many years president of the Great Synagogue, and was also, for some time, one of the council of the United Synagogue. In 1869 he laid the foundation stone of the Central Synagogue. At the time of his death, in 1879, he was a member of the Jewish Board of Deputies. In common with all his co-religionists, Baron Lionel was placed under a ban in the eyes of the law, for, great as had been the services rendered by them to the nation in time of need, the Jews were still regarded as an outcast race, not worthy to be ranked on the same level as their Christian fellow citizens. When the law was passed emancipating the Roman Catholics from all the civil and political disadvantages they had suffered, and they were given equal rights with the Protestants, it occurred to some of the leading members of the Jewish community that the moment had arrived for them to make an effort to free themselves from the fetters which restrained their liberty. Conscious of being to the full as orderly and as good citizens as the Roman Catholics, they saw no reason why they likewise should not, in this land of freedom, enjoy the same political and civil privileges as Protestants and Catholics now possessed in common. They little imagined they would meet with a long and protracted opposition to their wishes, still less did they see in their demands any danger to the constitution. All this and much more did the enlightened Christians, professing liberal principles, perceive in the agitation for the removal of the Jewish disabilities. The Christians were undoubtedly influenced and blinded by prejudice, by the stigma which has always been connected with the Jewish race. At the beginning of the present century no Jew could serve as a magistrate or hold office as sheriff in any of the municipalities, owing to the test of the sacrament and other obstacles in his way. Gradually these hindrances as far as regards municipal offices were abolished. In 1837 Sir David Salomons was elected Sheriff of London and Middlesex, but could not fill his office owing to the state of the law. Anxious to propitiate the City by conferring on its citizens a boon which the Ministry valued very lightly, Lord Campbell introduced and carried a bill which enabled Sir David Salomons to accept the shrievalty. But even this did not enable Sir David to serve as alderman, so Lord Lyndhurst was eventually compelled in 1844 to alter the declaration which had barred him from that office. Although all impediments in the way to municipal offices were thus removed, the Jews found themselves still barred from entering upon a parliamentary career, owing to the Oath of Abjuration which every member was bound to take before being allowed to sit and vote in the House. This oath concluded with the words "on the true faith of a Christian," which no Jew could conscientiously repeat. Owing to the powerful majority of the Tory party in both the Lords and the Commons, no move was made to procure the abolition of the Jewish disabilities for some years, as any agitation for that purpose would have been vain, owing to the great repugnance which the Tories displayed to all measures of reform. To have introduced a measure at that juncture would have been to court defeat, seeing that it was certain to be violently opposed and rejected.

When, however, Baron Lionel was elected in 1847 a member for the City of London, with Lord John Russell as his colleague, appearances seemed more favourable to the attempt. Accordingly his Lordship, who was then Premier, took an early opportunity of moving a resolution: "That the House do resolve itself into a committee to consider the propriety of the removal of the civil and political disabilities now affecting Her Majesty's Jewish subjects." In his speech supporting this resolution, the noble lord stated that the question concerned the rights, political and religious, of a commuuity numbering more than forty thousand souls, distinguished by their love of order and their industry, who were neither inclined nor able to instigate a public agitation in support of their rights, nor to threaten the security and peace of the empire if those rights were withheld. He showed that historically the Oath of Abjuration had no reference to the Jews, and pointed out that it was mere prejudice which led the Government of 1753, after passing an Act for their naturalization, to repeal it hurriedly and without due consideration the next session. Having carried the resolution successfully, his lordship announced his intention of introducing at an early date a bill dealing with the subject. The debates on this resolution were remarkable for the support given to the Whigs by Mr Gladstone, who with Sir Robert Inglis at that time represented the University of Oxford in the Tory interest. His support was all the more noteworthy as his colleague was one of the most bitter and vigorous opponents of the proposed reform. On previous occasions Mr Gladstone had objected to the removal of the Jewish disabilities, but having once acknowledged the Jews meritorious citizens, worthy to fill magisterial and municipal offices, he confessed it would be illogical and inconsistent to prevent them from entering parliament. Mr Disraeli, then the Tory member for Buckingham, also supported the resolution, making an earnest appeal to the House to perform a great act of national justice, and to discard the superstitions of the Dark Ages which influenced them in their opposition. The bill embodying this resolution was introduced early the next year, and the debates to which it gave rise remind one forcibly of the Bradlaugh scenes. In both cases the agitation turned upon religion and prejudice. There was, however, one noteworthy difference in these two agitations. The House of Commons recognized the justice of the claims of Baron Lionel and the Jews, whereas they were strongly opposed to the admission of Bradlaugh and his co-irreligionists. The arguments were very similar in both cases. The opponents to the admission of the Jews asserted that the latter sneered at Christianity, and were consequently unfit persons to sit in the House. On the other side, it was argued that, even if this were true, it was notorious that many prominent members of the House had openly sneered at and ridiculed Christians and Christianity. Gibbon, a rank Deist, was admitted to Parliament, and allowed to take the Oath of Abjuration unopposed, although he openly expressed his disbelief in the doctrines it was supposed to involve. No objection either was raised to the admission of Hume, who was certainly far from being a Christian, and whose works were calculated to damage Christianity much more than the voice of any Jew. Moreover, it was argued that the clause "on the true faith of a Christian," to which the believers in the Mosaic dispensation chiefly objected, had been introduced only during the reign of James I., and that another formula had been previously used. In addition to all these arguments, it was urged that, as the Jews already possessed the franchise—a far more important privilege to the community than that one of its members should be chosen a representative of the electors in Parliament—and could "send the makers of Acts of Parliament to Parliament," it was illogical and weak to curtail their right and to debar them from the House. After a lengthy discussion, a division was taken, and it was found that the Bill had been carried by a respectable majority; when, however, it was submitted to the Lords, it was thrown out by thirty-five votes. In consequence of its rejection Baron Rothschild at once resigned his seat. Not that he meant to allow the matter to end so quietly as that; he was of too determined a disposition to abandon a struggle at the first reverse, when he felt that justice was on his side.

He offered himself for re-election, and was once more returned a member for the City by some seven thousand votes. Great indignation and discontent prevailing among the prominent City politicians at their representative's being kept out of his seat, pressure was brought to bear on the Ministry to provide a remedy for the evil. Lord John Russell, as another member for the City, was almost bound to move in the matter owing to the forcible representations made to him by his constituents. He had indeed pledged his word to see the matter brought if possible to a satisfactory conclusion, and a second Bill was accordingly introduced and read for the first time on the 30th May, 1850. The Ministry being apparently very lukewarm in supporting the measure, and not too desirous of pressing it on to the Lords, the citizens summoned a large meeting in the City, at which it was decided that the Baron, who had hitherto studiously avoided asserting his rights in the House, wishing to have his claims recognized peacefully and amicably, should present himself before the Speaker and have some decision as to his right of admission. Accordingly, on the 26th July, 1850, Baron Rothschild walked up to the table of the House of Commons, and demanded to be sworn as one of the members for the City of London. When asked by the clerk whether he wished to take the Protestant or the Catholic oath, he replied: "I desire to be sworn on the Old Testament." The attention of the Speaker being called to the subject, Baron Rothschild was forthwith requested to withdraw, which he did. A fierce discussion, opened by Sir Robert Inglis, at once took place, and was brought to a close by the Attorney-General, who proposed that the Baron should be heard at the bar of the House, either by himself, or by his counsel or agent, with reference to his claim to sit and vote in the House after having been sworn on the Old Testament. This proposition was violently opposed, and, when the debate had been adjourned several times, it was finally resolved on the 5th August, "That the Baron Lionel de Rothschild is not entitled to sit in this House, or to vote in this House during any debate, until he shall take the Oath of Abjuration in the form appointed by law." This forced the Government to redeem its promise to effect some alteration in the statute, so that Jews should no longer be kept out of their seats. Even if no such promise had been made, some action must have been taken, as matters were fast approaching a crisis. In 1851 Sir David Salomons was returned a member for Greenwich, and, in defiance of the rules of the House, sat and voted without having previously taken the oath. For his contempt of Parliament he was fined five hundred pounds by Baron Alderson. But this incident, combined with the active agitation conducted by Sir Isaac Lyon Goldsmid and his son, Sir Francis Goldsmid, Q.C., rendered some action on the part of the Government necessary and unavoidable. Early in April, 1851, a new Abjuration Oath (Jews) Bill was submitted to Parliament, and rapidly passed through the Commons, only to be again rejected when it reached the Lords. The complications with Russia and the outbreak of the Crimean war distracted attention from domestic politics for a while, but, although the Jewish question was momentarily shelved, it was by no means forgotten. In 1852 Baron Lionel was once more elected, and, when the question was re-introduced to Parliament in 1853, a fresh Bill was presented and passed by a larger majority than ever. Once again the Lords showed their opposition, but on this occasion the majority against the Bill was much smaller than on previous occasions. Matters had now reached a climax, for, the faithful citizens showing once again in 1857 their firm resolution to see their chosen representative admitted to take his seat, it became clear that a solution of the difficulty must be soon found. A fresh Bill was introduced, but, although Lord John Russell urged that some recognition of the persistency and determination of the electors should be made, the Lords refused to listen to his counsel, and rejected the Bill as they had done all its predecessors. It was, however, their last effort. Day by day it became more evident that the claims of the electors must be recognized, and the Lords at length managed to save their dignity, and yet yield to the pressure brought upon them, by rejecting the Bill presented by the Commons and passing a measure of their own, with practically the same enactments for the removal of the Jewish disabilities. This Bill received the Royal Assent on the 23rd July, 1858. On the 26th of the same month Baron Lionel presented himself to be sworn, and, on being offered the form of oath prescribed in the Bill just passed, declared in the words of the clause intended to meet his case, "Sir, I beg to state that, being a person professing the Jewish religion, I entertain a conscientious objection to take the oath which by an Act passed in the present session has been substituted for the oaths of supremacy, allegiance, and abjuration, in the form therein required." The attention of the Speaker being called to this circumstance, Baron Lionel was requested to withdraw. Lord Russell then moved a resolution that the words: "on the true faith of a Christian" should be omitted from the oath, and, this being carried unanimously, Baron Lionel was re-admitted. He then was sworn on the Old Testament, signed the oath, and at last was allowed after nearly ten years' contest to take his seat. In commemoration of the successful issue of this hard struggle, he endowed the City of London School with its most valuable scholarship, and it was no doubt most gratifying to his feelings to see this scholarship carried off in 1866 by a scholar of the Jewish persuasion. He continued to represent the City almost without a break until 1874, when he suffered in the general Liberal defeat. He had never taken a prominent part in politics; indeed, he is not known to have spoken in the House on a single occasion.

It was not his ambition to shine in the political arena, although in his quiet unobtrusive way he exerted considerable influence on the Ministry. For many years he had been unable to walk owing to the rheumatic gout, from which he suffered severely, and, as this prevented him from making an active canvass, his failure to secure re-election is not surprising. His colleague, Mr Goschen, declared publicly that Baron Lionel from his desk in New Court exerted far greater influence than a much more active representative could exercise; but this, though true, would not satisfy the City electors. Besides, Baron Lionel himself contributed largely to his defeat by a bold and unpopular proposal he made. He pointed out that Mr Gladstone's scheme to abolish the income tax would cause a large deficiency in the budget, and he suggested that this deficiency should be met by the creation of fresh taxes. When his audience shouted "No" and "Economy," he replied that economy would not enable us to save four and a half millions a year. The great objection against the income tax arose from its inquisitorial character, and Baron Lionel thought that new taxes should be on property. He therefore suggested the introduction of licence duties, such as were paid by commercial men in Austria. This self-denying ordinance was not, however, approved by the City.

The Baron was, as we have said, a great sufferer from rheumatic gout, brought on by exposure in the hunting-field. He was for many years before his death unable to take any exercise whatever; he wheeled himself about his office in a chair made specially for him, and had to be carried to his carriage. The consequences of such a painful infirmity could hardly fail to be prejudicial to the temper of the most passive and resigned of mortals, and its influence on the manners of the Baron was unmistakable. The worry and anxiety attendant upon the management of his vast business were of themselves calculated to affect his nerves and spirits, independently of the painful malady with which he was afflicted, so that if he was peevish and harsh in temper, giving way at times to violent bursts of passion, there was much to be said in excuse of his conduct. However fractious and irritable he may have appeared, it is certain that his natural disposition was really a kind and benevolent one. Those who knew him well will bear us out when we say that under his rough and forbidding exterior there beat a warm heart. He would never withhold from anyone whom he knew to be deserving and honest a helping hand or a kind word. In his paroxysms of pain he could not always control his temper, and none regretted his immoderation more than he himself did afterwards. He had great administrative abilities, and always insisted on superintending personally all the details of his vast business. Nothing irritated him more than to learn that any of his clerks had had the audacity to give an answer on any business or to come to a decision without having first asked his advice. This practice naturally entailed upon him much worry and annoyance which he might well have spared himself, though on the other hand it kept the whole of the machinery in first-class order. To particularize the philanthropic actions of Baron Lionel would be impossible, seeing that they were frequently unknown to his most intimate friends. Many of his donations were given on the strict understanding that they should not be published, and whenever his sons attended a charity festival there were always large anonymous subscriptions, the origin of which it is not difficult to guess, although there is nothing to confirm the justice of the conjecture. Large acknowledged donations were given with munificent liberality to the charities of all creeds and nations, and it is said that, enormous as was the Baron's income, he distributed more than a tithe of it in the relief of suffering and distress. If the distress to be relieved was abroad he was the first to send remittances direct through his agents, besides subscribing afterwards to the funds that were organized. His exertions in organizing the Irish Famine Fund were acknowledged by the "Times" in the following words: "It was in Baron Lionel's own room in New Court, in December, 1846, that the 'British Relief Association' was organized, Messrs. N. M. Rothschild and Sons subscribing with others the munificent sum of £1,000. This led to the formation of a committee, consisting of the most eminent merchants and bankers of the City of London, of which Mr Samuel Jones Loyd, afterwards Lord Overstone, was subsequently elected chairman, and the collection of a fund amounting in the aggregate to upwards of £500,000, for the relief of the starving peasantry of the sister kingdom. Throughout the period of extreme pressure Baron Lionel was indefatigable in his exertions."

Bound to his seat as he was by physical suffering which made his manner varying and sometimes harsh, so that his temper grew to be something watched like the weather for its influence on the Stock Exchange, Baron Rothschild found his relaxation in giving, and his eyes glistened when he heard that his alms had been beneficially bestowed. Great, however, as was his charity, he was perhaps outdone in sympathy with the suffering and the distressed by his estimable Wife. This worthy lady devoted the whole of her time to philanthropic deeds; her delight and pleasure seemed to be in works of love. She was indeed the almoner of the family, and was particular in ascertaining that the objects of her sympathy were deserving of it. She would not rely on reports or hearsay evidence, but was in the habit of personally visiting her pensioners, said to number nearly two thousand. Many a struggling artist or student was indebted to her quiet but substantial aid, accompanied by kind words of encouragement, for his subsequent success. This estimable lady died in 1884, leaving by her will to charities in which she was interested donations to the extent of £120,000.

In 1857 society was set agog by the marriage of Baron Lionel's eldest daughter, Leonora, with her cousin Alphonse, the eldest son of Baron James de Rothschild, and now the head of the Paris house. It is needless to say that the wedding was one of the most magnificent of the season, and was attended by the most distinguished and noble members of all ranks of fashion and society. At the banquet after the marriage ceremony, Count Persigny, the French Ambassador, proposed the health of the bride and the bridegroom. He was followed by Mr Disraeli, whose duty it was to propose the health of the bride's parents. His speech on this happy occasion is said to have been one of the best social addresses he ever delivered, which is not strange, for he is known to have been for many years one of the most intimate friends of the family, and of Baron Lionel in particular. In the course of his speech he made a remark worth reproducing:—"Under this roof are the heads of the name and family of Rothschild—a name famous in every capital in Europe and every division of the globe—a family not more regarded for its riches than esteemed for its honour, virtues, integrity, and public spirit." Eight years later another festive gathering brought the family together. On June 7th, 1865, the youngest daughter, Evelina, was married to Baron Ferdinand, the eldest son of Baron Salomon, of Vienna. Unhappily, these joyful festivities were followed by a mournful conclusion, as the bride, who had been at all times so charming for her sweetness of disposition and gracious manners, died the next year in giving birth to her first child. The shock was a severe one to both Baron Lionel and his amiable wife, for both had been fondly and tenderly attached to their daughter. They neither of them ever recovered from the blow, rendered all the more painful by the death of the child, which did not survive its mother. The Evelina Hospital in Southwark was built by Baron Ferdinand in memory of the wife he so fondly loved, and so early lost.

The town residence of Baron Lionel was the well-known mansion adjoining Apsley House, a magnificent building some six storeys high, fitted up with every modern luxury and improvement. It is said that when Baron Lionel determined on building this palatial mansion he was anxious to secure the next house, belonging to Sir Edmund Antrobus, and throw it into his own, but his brother banker, although asked to state his own terms, would not, like Esau, sell his birthright, and declined all overtures. He was indeed so fired with rivalry, that he even had an additional storey built to his own house to make it overtop that of Baron Lionel—a peculiarity that may be at once noticed. Here it was that Baron Lionel was wont to give his sumptuous dinners—the wonder and the talk of society.

The following graphic description of one of these dinners will convey to the reader a very good idea of the luxury and comfort by which Baron Lionel was surrounded:—

"My daughter and myself left Paris and reached our hotel in time to fulfil an engagement to dine with the Baroness Lionel de Rothschild, to meet Lord and Lady Lyndhurst, for whom the dinner was given. Nothing could exceed the splendour of the banquet. Silver and gold plate shone on the table and buffets; exquisite flowers delighted the eye; while the retinue of servants in full dress, so well trained that not a footfall told of their presence, and the ease and repose that prevailed, the result of perfect training, were forgotten in the distinction of the company. Another still more splendid and prolonged fête in Lord Lyndhurst's honour, to which we were also bidden, was given by the Baroness Mayer Rothschild at her Venetian villa at Mentmore—rather palace than villa, however. The Baroness had sent early in the week to have the house and grounds put in perfect order. Such pictures, such furniture, such park scenery, race-horses and hounds! Such a breakfast and lunch al fresco, afterwards a dinner at Baron Anthony's, as words cannot describe."

Baron Lionel was not by nature a society man, and he was further prevented from participating in fashionable gaities by his physical infirmities. The true representatives of the family in society were his two brothers Anthony and Mayer, who had little inclination for business, and were far more inclined to pleasure and sport in all their forms. The only relaxation from the worry and trammels of business that Baron Lionel knew was derived from his pictures and flowers. A writer intimately acquainted with the Baron stated that "when, after many hours of absorbing transactions, he left the precincts of his City establishment and entered his home, he found himself at once transferred into an atmosphere of beauty which freed and raised the mind and restored it to its harmony and equipoise. For to him works of art were no mere decorative ornaments. That remarkable soundness of judgment which he displayed in all practical concerns of life guided him no less safely in matters of taste; and the pictures he had acquired comprised examples of the finest works from the brushes of the principal masters. These treasures were not his pride but his joy; they proved to him an unfailing source of regeneration. In such genial surroundings the mind spontaneously opened itself to a simple and healthy cheerfulness, which now took pleasure in the sallies of wit, and now followed with interest some of the graver questions of the present or the past."

That there was a vein of humour running in Baron Lionel's disposition the following anecdote will show. He was dining at a friend's house and chanced to sit next to a lady who had an only son whom she was anxious to bring up in business rather than in a profession. Like most fond mothers she was extremely anxious to do the best for the youth in whom all her hopes were centred. She determined to utilize to the utmost the favourable opportunity she had of consulting a man so well qualified by his vast mercantile experience and sound judgment to advise her on so important a question. Accordingly she plied the Baron with questions, and extracted all the information she could, but, when the vital question was asked: "What he would consider the best business for her son to adopt," she found her neighbour become suddenly reserved and uncommunicative. The truth was the Baron strongly objected to giving advice, to which a certain responsibility was always attached. Again and again the lady returned to the attack, but the Baron was always on the alert, and turned the conversation adroitly to other subjects. At length, finding that she would not be denied, he replied, "Well, madam, in my opinion, selling matches is a very good business, if there is enough of it." A trite and pithy remark, displaying much common sense and wisdom.

Baron Lionel continued to manage and superintend the affairs of his firm up to the very eve of his death, which happened with painful suddenness on the 3rd June, 1879. He had for twenty years been a sufferer from rheumatic gout, but this did not prevent his attending at his office up to the very last. His death occurred quite unexpectedly—without the slightest warning. On Friday the 30th May, 1879, he held his usual business levée at New Court, and those who from time to time brought him reports of the various markets, or went to him for the purpose of obtaining subscriptions to charities, perceived no indication that they then for the last time saw proof of the well-stored mind, the tenacious memory, and the sound decision which were known throughout Europe. The Baron was in the habit of driving daily to Gunnersbury Park, the favourite residence of the Baroness, the gardens of which are famous in horticulture, and situated in the midst of a wide domain of land belonging to the family. He passed some time there as usual, and returned to Piccadilly on Sunday afternoon. He then complained of feeling unwell and appeared to be forgetful. The symptoms were declared by the doctors to be those of gout, which need give rise to no alarm or anxiety; but on Monday, about noon, he was seized with an attack of an epileptic character from which he never rallied. He died early next morning. His brothers, Baron Mayer, or (as the name was afterwards spelt) Meyer, and Sir Anthony de Rothschild, had both died some years before; Baron Meyer on the 6th February, 1874, and Sir Anthony on the 3rd January, 1876. Both were highly popular in society owing to their amiable dispositions and agreeable manners. The banquets and receptions they gave were of the most brilliant and dazzling description, whilst their mansions were embellished by the choicest works of art which money could procure. They were both patrons of the turf, not so much on account of the excitement attending horse-racing as from a laudable ambition to see the Rothschild colours take the foremost place in sport as in everything else. In chronicling the death of Baron Meyer—to the public the real "Baron Rothschild" owing to his great popularity—the "Times" paid a very flattering but well merited tribute to his memory. It ran as follows:—"Baron Meyer was the youngest surviving son of the distinguished founder of the London house of Rothschild, and his death is in every respect premature. He was only fifty-five, and in the enjoyment of the interests and pursuits to which he had devoted himself. He held a seat in the late Parliament at the time of its dissolution, but it was well understood that he would not stand again. It is not in Parliament, however, that he will be chiefly missed. Like all his house, he was a steady adherent of the Liberal party, but, like them also, he was a silent member. It is the world of Art and Sport which will suffer by his loss, and he will there leave a vacant place that will not easily be filled. His splendid hospitalities at Mentmore, his numberless charities, his munificent patronage of art, his unstinted support of the highest kinds of sport, formed a rare combination which we could have wished to preserve among us for many more years. Rich men are not uncommon in England, and the world is seldom observant enough to notice distinctions in the use generally made of wealth. For such a man to surround himself with everything beautiful and agreeable in houses, estates, pictures, sculptures, and all the pleasures of the field has in it at first sight nothing to attract attention. It may seem, and may be, nothing more than a lavish expenditure of money on not unworthy objects. But men are not apt to suspect nor ready to admit that there may be an opportunity in such a life for the exercise of the finer qualities. It does not seem like the career of a man of business, or a politician, or a financier. But there is a great error in such a hasty estimate, and Baron Rothschild set an example which should tend to correct it. The ancient world had a conception, which we have in great measure lost, of there being a distinct excellence to be aimed at in the expenditure of great wealth. The common idea among ourselves is simply that a great man should do good with his money, but we do not go beyond the moral virtue of benevolence and just management. The ancient conception we think once prevailed in England and perhaps, like most other sentiments connected with the finer tastes, it was trampled out by the Puritans, or corrupted by the Cavaliers. But the Greeks at all events recognized that magnificent expenditure had a virtue of its own, distinct from mere liberality or unselfishness. It was the art of using great wealth appropriately as distinguished from that of using moderate wealth rightly. There are some developments of human genius and civilization which men of great resources can encourage, and which cannot be, or ought not to be, encouraged by any one else. The highest art in such matters as painting, or sculpture, or in animal culture, would never be pursued for the sake of the demand which men of ordinary means could maintain. Great literary works can be multiplied, and the literary artist can consequently appeal to so wide a circle as to be independent of individual support. But it is otherwise where the product of genius or skill is something of which the charm or excellence is incapable of indefinite multiplication. Rich men can foster the labours of genius in such matters, and it is one of their functions to do so. It is their function, moreover, to do it well and thoughtfully. It is easy, of course, for a great man to get rid of his superfluous money by lavish orders to architects, painters, sculptors, and musicians. But a man may foster bad as well as good art by such means, and both patron and artist lose in dignity and in the artistic capacity, which is associated with it, by indulging the mere extravagance of luxury. It is possible to be frugal and conscientious in dealing with millions not less than to be lavish and thoughtless in dealing with hundreds. It was Baron Rothschild's merit to understand this function and to discharge it thoughtfully. A passion for art of all kinds engrossed his life to the last; but he indulged it under a control and with an orderliness similar to the qualities which in business have made the fortunes of his house. He spared no money for his purposes; but he had a purpose in all his expenditure. It was easy for him to make Mentmore a palace, supplied with every form of modern luxury; but he made it much more. It was a Museum, adorned with all that is beautiful. In such an expenditure of vast wealth there was felt to be nothing inappropriate or out of place, because the sense of waste could never be felt. Great resources had been bestowed to produce a great result, and the result was something which had an æsthetic value of its own.

"Baron Rothschild's career on the turf was marked by similar qualities, and if his example were more generally followed this national sport might yet be saved from the degradation which threatens it. The professed object of racing is to improve the breed of horses, and no doubt if rich men would pursue it with this single object they would do what cannot otherwise be done. To Baron Rothschild, accordingly, a fine racehorse was an animal worth producing for its own sake, and he applied himself systematically to breeding racehorses. He never squandered money in speculative purchases, but kept a stud which he diligently and patiently improved, and it was by the qualities of a thorough man of business that he at length achieved a conspicuous success. When he won, two years ago, the Derby, the Oaks, and the St Leger, all the world felt that a piece of good and useful work had been justly rewarded, and they rejoiced at the evidence thus shown that the Turf was capable of reinvigoration. We cannot afford in these respects to forget his example. This is an age of great fortunes and, though few can be compared with those of a Rothschild, there are many who have similar opportunities, and it cannot be said that these are at present turned to the best account. . . . Baron Rothschild pursued a career that will always have attractions for men of wealth, but he pursued it in a manner which enabled him to render real services to the community. His friends will always bear in mind his kindness and generosity, and he will be personally regretted among a large circle. But the public will also feel that they have lost a man who had a rare capacity for making a really magnificent use of great wealth."

The destinies of the firm, since the death of Baron Lionel, have rested in the hands of his three sons, Sir Nathaniel (Lord Rothschild), Leopold, and Alfred de Rothschild. Sir Nathaniel, who came into the baronetcy on the death of his uncle, Sir Anthony, is in reality the ruler of the fortunes of the London firm. He is heart and soul a man of business. All his thoughts are centred upon the welfare and prosperity of the firm; he allows

LORD ROTHSCHILD.

(From a Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons.)

neither the pleasures of society nor the excitement of the racecourse to withdraw his attention from his duties as the head of the family in England. He is a great reader, and what little relaxation he can snatch from the worry and toil of business he finds either in the company of his books, or in quiet rambles through the open fields. Conscious of his greater abilities and more thorough devotion to the interests of the firm, his two brothers are content to leave the control and management in his hands. Not that we wish to say that either of the two brothers is in the least indifferent to its interests. Both attend regularly at New Court to participate in the conduct of affairs, but, as they cannot boast of such an intimate acquaintance with the smallest details as Sir Nathaniel possesses, their duties partake largely of a mechanical nature. They are both shrewd, quick-sighted men of business, and, if they were to study the welfare of the firm as closely as does their eldest brother, they would soon rival him in ability and business knowledge. Much, however, of their time is devoted to other objects. Mr Alfred is as essentially a man of pleasure as Sir Nathaniel is a man of business. The balls and dinner parties given at Seamore

Place are the talk of London society. They are arranged in the most sumptuous and luxurious style. Art and wealth are called into requsition to satisfy the most varied and exacting tastes, so that it is scarcely surprising that the élite of society throng together at these receptions. There one may safely reckon on meeting the most distinguished personages in the diplomatic and political world, with the probability of discovering that royalty is likewise represented. But the pleasures of society do not monopolize the whole of Mr Alfred de Rothschild's attention. He is a munificent patron of the arts. He delights to encourage talent, whether it be found in the ranks of sculptors, painters, or actors. Many a man who has acquired distinction in his profession owes his success to the liberal support and patronage so readily accorded by Mr Alfred to struggling talent. Different from his brother Alfred, Mr Leopold de Rothschild is seldom seen in London society. A country life, with its hunting and horse-racing, has irresistible charms for him. When free from New Court, he hastens down either to his stud at Newmarket, or to his hounds at the same place. Racing, or rather the breeding of racehorses, absorbs the greater part of his time. Nothing so disappoints or discourages him as for his horses to prove failures on the turf. Following racing as a hobby, and betting very little, it annoys him greatly to find that his efforts at improving the speed and stamina of the English racer meet with very poor success. The disappointments and disgust which many of his favourite horses cause constitute perhaps the greatest trials in life he has to endure. Individually, Mr Leopold de Rothschild is good-nature personified. His charity and benevolence are unlimited. He is as pleased and as ready to relieve distress as the recipients of his bounty are glad to receive the welcome and much-wanted aid. He cannot, in fact, refuse aid to a suppliant without doing violence to his inclinations. A playfully ironical, but accurate, description of the three brothers was given in a book recently published, entitled: "Society in London," which attracted much attention. This description we cannot do better than reproduce here:—

"It is, so far as the Rothschilds themselves are concerned, a species of trinity, the first person of which is Sir Nathaniel (now Lord Rothschild), the second Mr Alfred, and the third Mr Leopold de Rothschild. The baronet is the supreme head of the establishment, occupying the first place at the family tribunal, receiving visitors, and treated with a marked deference by his two brothers. You will find him, at first, a gentleman of curious manner. He is so pre-occupied by the cares of business, he is so habituated to the exercise of authority, that he can spare little thought for the amenities of life, and he is not so much intolerant of contradiction by others as fond of contradicting others himself. But this is merely one of the superficial idiosyncrasies of the man. A contradiction with him means no more than an interrogation with you. It is only the way in which he puts a question. Instead of asking on what evidence your assertion rests that the day is fine or wet, he considers it the more effectual to meet your statement that it is wet or fine with a pointblank denial. In this fashion he hopes to elicit your reasons, to put you on your mettle, to compel you to retract your declaration, if it is hasty and ill-considered, or to demonstrate that it is based upon testimony entitled to respect. People who make 'Natty's' acquaintance for the first time may be forgiven if they conceive the idea that he is disposed to be imperious, overbearing, and harsh. There could be no greater mistake. He is not any one of these things. He is, on the contrary, when his interest or regard is enlisted, a generous and loyal friend.

"His two brothers discharge, respectively, parts essential to the economy of New Court. The youngest, Leopold, is occupied with the mechanical minutiæ of the business. In the City his vocation appears humble, and he himself little more than a drudge. Outside the City he is a person of importance, a man of sport and pleasure, a member of the Jockey Club, an owner of racehorses and of a modest establishment in Buckinghamshire. The second of the three Rothschild brothers has functions, as he has a physiognomy, altogether unlike either of his two brothers. He is light of complexion, while they are dark, with tawny hair and drooping moustache of the same colour and cut known as the Dundreary. He bestows much attention on the graces of manner. His hospitalities in London and in the country are upon an elaborate scale. The Prince of Wales is frequently amongst his visitors, and no opportunity is wanting to enable him to form an accurate idea of the opinion held by the privileged or official classes in English Society. Add to this that the Rothschilds in London have at their disposal a little army of brokers and touts in the City, a choice detachment of politicians and financiers, whether they do or do not belong to the public service, at the West End; bear in mind, too, that they receive early information from their kinsmen and correspondents in every part of the earth of what is happening or is likely to happen, and you will not be surprised to know that New Court is the abode of power."

Last year the Queen was pleased to raise Sir Nathaniel to the peerage under the title of Lord Rothschild. None will dare assert that the honour was unmerited. Few who have gained this coveted distinction can show a better claim than that which Lord Rothschild possesses in the record of the services rendered by his family to the English Government during the last fifty years and more. During that period the nation has on more than one occasion benefited by the counsel and aid tendered by the great financial firm. Lord Rothschild may well be proud of his title which, though tardily conferred, has been won by merit alone, and is no sign of royal favouritism. The honour is the greater as Lord Rothschild is the first avowed Jew who has entered the House of Lords. Samson Gideon founded the family of Eardley, but he, during his lifetime, abandoned the Jewish Creed. In thus raising Lord Rothschild to the peerage, the Queen has done honour to the whole Jewish race, and taken a step which cannot fail to remove the great barrier of distrust and prejudice which has so long separated Jews from Christians.

As they have scarcely emerged from their business teens, since their father died only in 1879, it is as yet too early to form a judgment of the business qualities possessed by the three brothers. Short as the period is they have yet been able, between 1879 and 1885, to undertake and carry out successfully several large loans, such as those for the Hungarian, Brazilian, and Chilian Governments. The most important business they have transacted has, however, been in connection with the Egyptian Government. While the European Powers were quarrelling about their rights in Egypt, bankruptcy slowly threatened the future of that country. This disaster was happily averted by advances made by the Rothschilds, on their own responsibility, and against security little better than waste paper. Sir M. Hicks-Beach, when Chancellor of the Exchequer, testified in Parliament to the immense services conferred on Egypt by the liberality of the Rothschilds in the following words:—"The late Prime Minister has stated that Egypt was in imminent danger of bankruptcy. In fact it was saved only by monthly advances made by Messrs Rothschild upon no legal security, but simply on the security of a private note from the late Foreign Secretary. The greatest dangers might have occurred if the issue of the loan had been any longer delayed." This proves beyond question that the risks run by the Rothschilds in advancing a million sterling to the Egyptian Government were by no means visionary, as some would assert, but real and serious. Those who envy the Rothschilds the profit accruing from the loan of nine millions issued in 1885, should not overlook the sacrifices which they made, and which gave them a good title to all they earned. The success of the loan was remarkable: the scene in St Swithin's Lane on the morning the loan was issued was one not easily to be forgotten. New Court and its approaches were thronged with a huge, eager, struggling crowd, all anxious to obtain allotments. The stream of applicants poured in so fast that the whole loan was subscribed for soon after the doors were opened. The list was closed an hour or two before the appointed time, a proceeding which gave rise to loud expressions of disapproval and disappointment among the many persons who were thereby prevented from obtaining any portion of the loan.

The successful manner in which these loan operations have been conducted demonstrates, beyond dispute, that the present heads of the firm are by no means deficient in financial skill; but still, without any disparagement, we think they cannot claim to inherit the marvellous powers or the shrewd far-seeing judgment of their father. This they would, if questioned, we think, readily acknowledge. Baron Lionel was a man of uncommon ability; his intellect was of the highest order, enabling him to grapple with and master the most difficult questions. To expect his sons to be as highly gifted as he was would be expecting too much, for it is very rare to find equal talent in two generations of the same family; nor, after all, are such extraordinary powers of mind required by the present heads of the firm; their business is established on so firm a basis, and their wealth is already so immense, that their chief solicitude and care must be to discover safe and reliable investments by which their money may accumulate automatically, rather than to increase it by leaps and bounds through speculative and risky enterprises. This, to all appearances, is the opinion they hold, as all their movements are distinguished by great caution and prudence, qualities which can hardly fail to render their career prosperous and worthy the traditions of their family. It is difficult, nay, impossible, to foresee to what extent their fortunes and repute may even yet grow, if the advice of old Mayer Amschel is followed as faithfully in the future as it has been in the past. Of late years the family seems inclined to break through the rule that its different members should seek to tighten still further the bonds of union by intermarriage. Against this innovation we see no objection—indeed, it is, we think, to be approved. Had the Rothschilds, however, adhered strictly to the intermarriage-system, there is no knowing how wealthy they would have become in the course of time, by thus confining their riches within such narrow limits. Under present circumstances, and always excepting carelessness and want of caution, they cannot help growing richer and richer, as the cream of business invariably falls to them. Large and lucrative undertakings are submitted daily to them, and constantly declined, as they very properly refuse to entertain, or embark in any enterprises which do not come within the well-defined and strictly recognized sphere of their business. Many houses would greedily snap at the proposals the Rothschilds unhesitatingly decline. The great requisites in the heads of the firm at the present time are caution and prudence—qualities which they seem determined to foster. If these are diligently cultivated, the firm must eventually become a dynasty, whose widespread power and all puissant influence—though recognized by no constitution—will far exceed those of any ruling family in Europe.

Chapter VII.

BARON CARL VON ROTHSCHILD.

THE NAPLES FIRM.

ITALY once consisted, like Germany, of a number of separately governed States, which, however, were not as in Germany associated in a general "Bund" or confederation for the protection and support of their common interests. The language was the only link that joined the various Italian States together. In all else they were separated by long-standing hatreds and jealousies, which were the greatest obstacles to the progress and prosperity of the nation. It was these continued feuds and the enmity of Austria that so long barred the way to the formation or development of a united Italy worthy to take a leading part in the affairs of Europe. To establish a branch of their business in the leading State of Naples, when the political condition of the country was so disturbed and uncertain, may at first sight appear to have been a somewhat rash and ill-advised move on the part of the Rothschilds, but a little consideration will show that this step was the result of mature deliberation and shrewd calculation. The very feuds and jealousies so prejudicial to the welfare of the land proved the source of much of the profitable business which the firm afterwards secured. The States were always in need of funds to carry on their wars, and, being well-nigh bankrupt from past campaigns, were forced to seek from other quarters the assistance they required. Besides, the system on which the administration of the finances of most of the States was conducted was so thoroughly rotten that borrowing was perhaps the only way left open to them of meeting the current expenses. The extent of the business transacted by the Naples branch was small compared with that transacted by the houses in Paris and Frankfort, still it was in proportion, perhaps, more lucrative. The number of its clients was limited, but these few clients were regular and frequent applicants for assistance. In addition to this, trade and commerce, favoured by the situation of the country so surrounded by the sea, through the extensive bill business they created, proved no unimportant source of profit to the banker, and over this business Rothschild by virtue of his peculiar relations with the Bourse and the State, held undisputed sway.

During the present century a wonderful transformation has been brought about in the political condition of Italy. Formerly, as we have already said, the numerous states and principalities were divided from each other by continual hostilities and old-established family feuds; to look upon themselves as forming one great people never entered their thoughts, for from their birth all the great princes had been taught that it should be their first duty and absorbing ambition to avenge the insults their family had suffered through the instrumentality of their traditional enemies. To shake hands with their hated rivals, and, for the good of the nation, to live in brotherly amity together, would in their opinion have been dishonourable and infamous. With time, however, these bitter feelings have passed away, for the misfortunes which the various States all suffered in common gradually drew them together, and year by year Italians grew more willing to recognize that they all belonged to one great fatherland, and insensibly yielded to the more elevating inspiration that one invisible bond of union linked them all together. At length an ardent longing to see the nation rise from its ashes, and like a giant refreshed open out for itself a new path of honour and fame, took possession of many energetic minds, who strove, and ultimately with success, to create a "United Italy." The story of Mazzini and Garibaldi, and of the association of "Young Italy," hardly belongs to these pages, and is, after all, too well known to require repetition.

The social conditions ruling in Italy offer the student many an agreeable picture, which he in vain seeks elsewhere. The line which marks the distinction between the nobility and the less favoured orders is not so sharply drawn as in other countries. This is indeed clearly shown by the history of many of the noble Italian houses who rose to their rank from having won wealth and fame as energetic and enterprising merchants; and it is undeniable that the commoners were always highly esteemed, and enjoyed an aristocratic importance which no doubt fostered the opinion, so prevalent in Italy, that it was no disgrace, but rather an honour, for a noble to increase his own wealth and the prosperity of his dependents by commercial enterprises. The nobles and the commoners in Italy were not separated from each other by the haughty pride and the overbearing manners which have in other lands kept the two orders so far apart. This, perhaps, is the reason why the nobility of Italy have furnished so many talented writers and poets, for they were not kept by false pride from the pursuit of knowledge, but displayed a praiseworthy zeal to place themselves on a level with their rivals, of whatever rank, in science or art.

The finances of the Papal State form one of the darkest and most unattractive pages in the history of the country. We shall not carry our review further back than to the period of the first French Revolution. In the year 1790 a small detachment of French troops marched against Rome. Willing or unwilling, the Romans were forced to accept the revolution; the Republic was proclaimed in the Forum, and the French constitution introduced. To the French commander-in-chief at that time the power of a dictator was given. Bills for large amounts were issued upon the richest of the Romans, on whose behalf the French general was kind enough to accept them, and afterwards to compel their payment on penalty of death. Under the extravagant rule of Pius VI. the finances of Rome were in the most deplorable confusion, and the paper money fell to an unusually low value. The French Government entered into a contract with Torlonia, the banker, by which the latter undertook to purchase some millions of such money, which he could issue afterwards at his own risk. The paper was sometimes quoted at ten per cent., often only at five, but the public had taken it up at almost double this price in silver, so that Torlonia was not only able to carry out his engagement, but to make an immense profit by the transaction. The Roman system of finances was based on the law of the 19th March, 1801, and the mode of carrying it out on the principles borrowed from France was so utterly bad, that it can be safely affirmed that the financial administration could not well have been worse. The cost of collecting the taxes was enormous, but the peculation and fraud prevailing were indescribable. The treasuries should have been full to overflowing, nevertheless they were empty; the State expected to obtain money at a low interest, but could with difficulty obtain it even on the most usurious terms. No budget was drawn up, nor were the accounts examined; no one concerned himself with the financial balance-sheet.

KARL VON ROTHSCHILD.

Under Sextus V., the income of the Papal Chamber was infinitely less than that contributed by the faithful Catholics all over the world to the Roman spiritual tribunal. The taxes, with the exception of the direct taxes, were all increased, as the falling off in the revenue became evident; the price of salt was raised, and the lottery established. Loans were called into requisition, the interest on them being gradually reduced from six to three per cent., and paper money, which had been so extravagantly issued by the unscrupulous Government of Pius VI., was again put into circulation. When Pius VII. ascended the Papal chair, the people had been drained to their last drop of blood, and, as the paper money had become almost worthless and the credit of the State was gone, it was difficult to see any way out of the impending ruin and bankruptcy. When matters were in this most distressing condition, the financial decree of Cardinal Lante of the 19th March, 1801, was issued. By this the land-tax was fixed according to the register of 1777, and all the other old taxes abolished. A house-tax was imposed, as was one on all loanable capital: foreigners and travellers were also affected by the new regulations, and a succession duty was made law. In addition there were salt and malt-taxes, whilst the same law decreed the reduction of the interest on all the loans to three per cent., and the realization of all common lands.

After the abolition of the Roman States in 1809, the French system of taxation was introduced, with some necessary modifications, on this side of the Apennines, the Italian system remaining in force in the provinces on the further side; for instance, the meal-tax was retained in place of the droits réunis, the land-tax was augmented, and registration adopted. When the Papal Government regained possession of their land in 1814, the earlier system of taxation was restored. The motu proprio of the 6th July, 1816, lowered the land-tax about 400,000 scudi, and, after various gradual modifications, the old system was practically restored. The gross receipts were estimated at nine million scudi, though in all probability they did not exceed seven millions.

Previous to the first French Revolution, almost two and a half million Roman florins in Church-dues found their way from the faithful Catholics to the Papal coffers in Rome. To this large sum Spain contributed 640,000 florins, Germany and the Netherlands, 488,800; France, 357,000; Portugal, 260,000; Poland, 180,700; the two Sicilies, 136,170; the other Italian States, 170,000; and Switzerland, 87,000; while about the same amount was received from Northern Europe. These subscriptions in aid of the Head of the Church afterwards showed a great falling off, consequently the financial situation of the State changed gradually for the worse. Since the incorporation of the Papal States by Victor Emmanuel in the kingdom of Italy, they have ceased to have a separate financial system of their own, as the taxes imposed on the rest of the country are enforced in what was formerly the Pope's material dominions.

The expenditure of the Duchy of Parma was estimated, in the year 1854, at two and a half million lire, and its debt at fourteen millions. The latter had been increased in 1827 by a new loan of twelve million lire, which the Duchess arranged through the mediation of the Rothschilds and the firm of Mirabaud and Co., in Milan. In addition to the compulsory loan, issued in 1849, of 2,700,000 lire, Parma was saddled in 1854 with another five per cent. loan, voluntary in this case, of 2,470,000 lire, in obligations of 500 and 1,000 lire each. This last loan was secured upon the State property and the private possessions of the ruling family.

The expenditure of the Grand Duchy of Tuscany with Lucca was estimated at five million florins, the receipts at about the same sum, and the bank-note and paper circulation at two million florins. Their joint debt dated first of all from a loan of thirty million Tuscan lire, which was issued in bonds of 1,000 lire, bearing five per cent. interest. An additional loan of twelve million lire, in bonds of the same amount, and bearing the same interest as the above, was made in the course of the year 1851, through the intervention of the firm of M. A. Bastogi and Son in Leghorn. As security for this loan the iron mines and foundries belonging to the State were hypothecated. The small three per cent. loan, of three millions, concluded towards the end of 1852, in bonds of 2,000 lire, can hardly be reckoned as forming part of the State debt, as it partook more of the nature of a compulsory loan, issued only to meet immediate and pressing wants. We should have passed it over in silence had not the firm of Rothschild taken part in its issue, as they did in both the loans for the Duchy of Lucca in 1836 and 1843, which, after the union of that Duchy to Tuscany, were added to the public debt of the latter State.

The kingdom of Sardinia, with over five million inhabitants, had an old standing debt on which 5,336,393 francs rente were annually paid, and this debt was increased in 1848 and 1849 by the addition of 13,771,680 francs rente, so that at the commencement of 1850 the total debt amounted to 382 million francs, costing the State annually 19,108,073 in the way of interest at five per cent. In 1850 a loan of 140 millions and a premium loan of 18 millions were found necessary, and were followed in 1851 by one for 3,600,000 francs, all being required by the share Italy took in the campaign of the Western Powers against Russia. The State expenditure in 1847 amounted to 90 million francs; in 1856 it had risen to 139,157,335 francs. Between 1848 and 1856 no less than thirteen new loans were brought out, amounting in the aggregate to 553 millions, and swallowing up yearly thirty million francs in interest. What comparatively little profit the State derived from the loans is seen by the loan of the 12th July, 1850, for eighty millions, which, however, only brought in sixty-four and a half millions. So great was the drain upon the resources of the kingdom, caused by the cost of the army in the Crimean war, that a further loan of thirty millions was found unavoidable and necessary. The Sardinians might well adopt for their motto the well-known saying of the Prussian finance minister, Hansemann: "Freedom costs money," for the debt by which the State was burdened was out of all proportion to its population. Sardinia, however, was self-reliant and patriotic, and always showed itself ready and willing to respond to the calls made upon it by its rulers. In the case of the loans which were brought out the Sardinians displayed extraordinary unanimity in supporting the Government, for they themselves not unfrequently covered these loans several times over, thus rendering any appeal to the assistance of foreign bankers and nations unnecessary. For instance, in 1849 and 1850, besides providing the annual interest on the large debt already existing, the Sardinians subscribed an additional loan of eighteen millions, and in 1851, when a further loan of eighteen millions was asked for, more than double the amount required was subscribed in a very short time by the native bankers and capitalists alone. Of the many loans brought out by the Rothschild house, only that for eighty millions in 1850, and a second for rather more than sixty-seven millions in 1853, were for the kingdom of Sardinia, whose usual agents for this sort of business were the firms of Barbaroux and Tron, Migone in Turin, C. J. Hambro and Sons in London, and the Gebrüder Bethmann in Frankfort.

The kingdom of Naples, or the Two Sicilies, suffered for a number of years from the evil influence of a bad financial system, combined with the calamities and trials through which it passed. Measures of every sort—from the introduction of new taxes to the sale of the State domains, from the raising of the taxes to compulsory loans—were all tried to effect some alleviation of the State's difficulties after Joachim Murat was deposed and Ferdinand I. ascended the throne. In order to pay the interest on the State debt, loans were repeatedly found necessary. In January, 1821, the yearly rente payable on the debt amounted to three millions eight hundred and eighty-two thousand Neapolitan ducats. In 1822 the Government contracted a loan of sixteen million ducats with the Rothschilds. This was followed by three successive loans, which Baron Carl von Rothschild, the head of the Naples house, refused positively to undertake, unless his friend the Chevalier Medici, who had been banished to Florence, was recalled and reinstated as Minister of Finance. On this condition, and this only, would Baron Carl assist the Government, as that would be the sole guarantee he could, he said, possibly accept of their fidelity and good intentions. There being no other person at that time capable of assisting the Government, it is almost superfluous to add that his terms were accepted, though not with a very good grace. Medici was once more restored to the favour of the King, and the three loans were issued. The first of these so-called English loans concluded with the Naples house of the Rothschilds, was that of 1821, amounting to sixteen million ducats capital, bearing eight hundred thousand ducats interest; the second loan, bearing interest at five per cent., was for twenty million ducats, costing yearly one million rente; the third was that known on several of the European markets under the name of "Rothschild's Bonds," and was for two million five hundred pounds sterling.

By a decree of the 26th May, 1821, the King separated the finances of Sicily from those of the kingdom of Naples, and concluded a loan for the benefit of the former for 1,500,000 ounces (4,500,000 ducats), in bonds of 400 ounces to bearer. The interest on this loan was paid through the Rothschilds in Paris.

In 1834 the Papal Government proposed to convert the Papal five per cent. debt into a three per cent. debt, for which the opportunity seemed highly favourable, seeing that the five per cents. were quoted at 102 to 104. To carry out this scheme, Cardinal Tosti, the Papal treasurer, started off to Paris, in order to arrange for a concerted plan of action with several banking firms in that city. At that time the Parisian financial world stood in peculiar relations with the Rothschilds. The notorious omnipotence the latter exercised in all government loan business, not only of France but of other countries, was an intolerable burden to the notabilities of finance, the other bankers, who resolved at length to make an effort to cast it off. Six of the leading houses, namely, J. Hagermann, André and Cottier, B. A. Fould and Oppenheim, J. A. Blanc, Colin and Co., Gabr. Odier and Co., and Wells and Co., accordingly combined to form a syndicate to challenge the Rothschilds, enter into spirited competition with them, and if possible shatter the fetters by which the financial world in Paris was bound.

In the first loan, a Sardinian one, arranged on the plan of the Paris State lottery, the syndicate obtained some success, as they managed to wrest this business out of the hands of the Rothschilds. J. Hagermann personally contributed greatly to the success achieved, as, having formerly been established in Genoa, where his firm was acknowledged to be the first and largest, he was on terms of intimacy with the Sardinian minister Caccia, and through him with the firm of Caccia in Paris. The latter, having neither means nor influence enough to carry out the business entrusted to him by his brother, placed it in Hagermann's hands.

The Rothschilds, who were never so forgiving as to allow a rival quietly to outbid them, felt, as might be expected, annoyed and vexed by this unexpected blow, and were not long before they let the weight of their wrath fall upon the presumptuous confederates by ruining what might under other circumstances have been a profitable transaction, and rendering it a costly and expensive one. The second time the syndicate tried to compete with the despots of the money market, they found that they had challenged a rival whose forces were so immeasurably superior that victory a second time was out of the question.

The fall manipulated by the Rothschilds in the value of French securities reacted upon and affected the prices of the Sardinian stocks, which continued to sink steadily until they reached a heavy discount. This was enough to render the six allies somewhat timid and nervous; still André and Cottier saw so clear a profit to be derived from the conversion of the five per cents. into three per cents., that they at length, after some consultation with their colleagues, declared themselves prepared to despatch an agent to the Papal exchequer to secure the business and ratify the contract. When the agent was admitted to an interview with the secretary of Monsignore Tosti, one of the first questions put to him was the weighty one—What guarantee will the Papal Government have for the due fulfilment of the contract about to be made? To this the agent replied, "The names of the allied Paris bankers," adding that he was for the moment forbidden to give their names, but that the secret would be divulged after the conclusion of the contract, and in the event of the names not being satisfactory that the contract could be considered null and void.

After the agent had had several conversations with the Cardinal, the matter seemed to be nearing its conclusion. Inviolable secrecy was promised on both sides, but the Papal officials are not remarkable for their discretion or for their fidelity in business matters. Scarcely had the agent quitted Rome than the matter was publicly rumoured about. The Rothschilds, too, through the many influential friends they have among the officials of every government, are always sure to hear of such negotiations, so in this case the Naples house got wind of the proposed financial operation, and at once sent one of the younger partners to Rome. No sooner did he learn the exact position of affairs, than he produced the contract entered into by the Papal Government, when the five per cent. loan was undertaken by Rothschild in conjunction with the firm of Torlonia. This contract contained a clause, till then forgotten, by which the Papal chair engaged to enter into no definite treaty for any subsequent loan without giving the Rothschilds previous notice, and also to accord them the preference when their terms were not higher than those offered by other firms.

The earlier loan had been concluded before Tosti had assumed the management of the finance department, consequently he was quite in the dark as to this important condition in the contract. He and the agent accordingly determined to draw up the conditions of the proposed conversion and leave the Rothschilds and the allied bankers to settle the rest. It was of course to be foreseen that, if the business proposed was lucrative, the Rothschilds would never let it slip from them, and whether it was likely to prove a profitable undertaking they were as well qualified to judge as their adversaries. On the other hand, the only chance left the latter was to undertake the business on much less favourable terms, should the Rothschilds see fit to place themselves in their way. Still, the coalition of the Paris bankers was not to be ignored by the Rothschilds, who might have experienced much annoyance and trouble from the opposition they would have called forth if they had made full use of their privileges and influence to secure the business for themselves. Finally matters were settled in an amicable fashion and a common understanding arranged between all parties with reference to the matter in dispute. Rothschild certainly did not lose by his forbearance, whilst the rivals learnt that their strength was still far too weak to damage the sway of the millionaire financier.

It is unnecessary almost to add that Baron Carl von Rothschild, for the many valuable services rendered to the Italian States and Princes, both by loans or by advances of money, was honoured with titles and orders of every description. He died on the 11th March, 1855. The business was for some years continued by his son, Baron Adolphe de Rothschild, who, however, soon tired of the anxiety and responsibility attaching to the management of so large a concern. Being of a nervous disposition, he could not hear without fear and alarm the rumours of the internal troubles which threatened Italy, and like a wise man, blessed with a handsome fortune, he retired from public affairs to enjoy the comforts and repose of private life.

Chapter VIII.

BARON SALOMON VON ROTHSCHILD.

THE VIENNA FIRM.

THE importance Vienna enjoyed from its being the capital of the Empire and the residence of the Emperor and his Court, as well as from the large commerce carried on there, was no doubt the reason which led to the establishment of a separate house of the Rothschilds in the Austrian dominions.

The Jews for centuries played a very distinguished part in the affairs of Austria, and in Vienna especially were to be found in the highest circles of society, possessing not only large influence, but holding also prominent positions among the leading public men. The great consideration and authority they commanded were due simply to their money, for the finances of the country and the Court had got so dreadfully embarrassed and confused that the money of the Jews was as a consequence eagerly sought for and demanded. In spite of the wealth of the aristocracy, the assistance of the accommodating Israelites was continually found necessary, and borrowing and lending were the order of the day. Even in the time of Ferdinand II. the Jews were on intimate relations with the Imperial Court, although they were at that time subject to a poll-tax, and compelled to wear pointed hats and a yellow patch on their left arm, that they might be at once distinguished from the Christian citizens. They were not even allowed to live where they pleased, but were cut off from the Christians and forced to dwell in a particular part of the city, the Leopoldsvorstadt. None the less they were readily tolerated, for they were extremely useful, not to say indispensable, to the Court. They also enjoyed very considerable privileges, and were under the direct protection of the Government. They knew how to amass fortunes by evil as well as honest means, for in the Frankfort Relationen of 1667 it was stated that "Hirschel Mayer had been arrested for having defrauded the Emperor during a period of twenty-three years of no less a sum than two million two hundred thousand guldens, contributions of his co-religionists." He was sentenced to life banishment from Vienna, and to the payment of a penalty of seventy thousand guldens. In 1670 the Jews and the students of Vienna had a collision, which terminated in rioting and other excesses, causing the Jews to be driven out and compelled to quit the Judenstadt, or, as it is now called, the Leopoldstadt, whilst their synagogue was converted into a Catholic church. However, it was not long ere the President of the Chamber, Von Sinzendorf, granted them permission to return to their homes. All the financial business with the Court was placed in the hands of the "Court-Factor," Samuel Oppenheimer, a privilege which secured him the deadly hatred of the whole commercial body. This bitter feeling vented itself in 1700, and again in 1706, in a violent tumult, during which his house was attacked and sacked, money and valuables stolen, letters and account-books torn to pieces. The rich Israelite had even some difficulty in escaping alive with his family. Still the lucrative relations he had held with the Court were resumed as before, notwithstanding that his firm became bankrupt in the interval between the two riots. In 1706, however, his affairs were again reviving, as he had secured the contract for supplying the army in Italy during the war of the Spanish succession.

Joseph II., in 1783, astonished, if he did not scandalize, the Christian world, by creating the first Jewish Baron in the person of the banker Joseph Michael Arnstein, whose wife, Fanny Itzig, of Berlin, was a special favourite of the Emperor. During the Congress of Vienna the families of the sovereigns of the money market, Arnstein and Eskeles, were conspicuous above all in the festivals and carnivals which then took place. The wives of both these financiers were natives of Berlin, being daughters of the rich Jewish banker Itzig, a well-known personage during the reign of Frederick the Great. The Austrian Government, not only before, but after the Congress, arranged many important financial operations with these two firms, as well as with several others.

The house of Rothschild, however, after establishing a house of business in Vienna to co-operate with those already existing in Frankfort and London, soon eclipsed all competitors by their enormous wealth and magnificent receptions. With the formation of this new establishment a fresh page opens in the history of the finances and money market of the Austrian empire, owing to the influence and sway exercised by Baron Salomon von Rothschild.

The Austrian empire, consisting as it does of a union of numerous and varied kingdoms and provinces, is one of the greatest confederations of people and nationalities in the world. Under the rule of its distinguished sovereigns Maria Theresa and Joseph II., its importance and power grew in all directions; its revenues and tax-paying capabilities increased and its finances assumed a flourishing aspect. Many of its loans were arranged through the Dutch bankers, Hope and Goll, and through the well-known firm of Bethmann Brothers, in Frankfort. The Austrian funds were in great favour with the public, and generally saleable at par. It was only when the political sky of Austria became overclouded, and when its financial schemes were exhausted that these foreign banking houses withdrew, and in their places appeared the Vienna firms of Fries and Co., Arnstein and Eskeles, Geymüller and Co., and Steiner and Co. By the agency of these four firms Austria, during the period of the war of the French revolution, and her struggle with Napoleon, contracted a number of loans on terms far less favourable than formerly. So low indeed had the credit of the empire been brought by the misfortunes and the sufferings incidental to its protracted efforts to oppose the ambition of the French, that the syndicate of the four bankers above named would consent to take up the five per cent. loan of 1809 only at a discount of forty per cent., and with the State domains pledged to them as security. After having amassed millions by their participation in the various Government loans, as well as through large and lucrative bill business on Augsburg for the Government account, the firm of Steiner and Co. were content to rest on their laurels, and withdrew from the syndicate. Little did Steiner, the head of the firm, a discreet and shrewd man, anticipate that within a few years of his death the millions he had bequeathed his heirs would be all lost or squandered away.

The place formerly occupied in the syndicate by Steiner and Co. was now filled by the firm of Rothschild, who brought with them new schemes on which to conduct the Government loans. The scheme adopted was the lottery plan, which at once became popular with the public. The amount produced by the loans was soon exhausted, owing to the yearly drawings which formed the leading feature of the innovation. The consequence was that the loans brought out on this plan were constantly being renewed. This the contractors by no means regretted, seeing that their profits were necessarily multiplied, and Stock Exchange speculation promoted. After the overthrow of Napoleon, the Rothschilds acted on principles directly opposed to those on which they had always hitherto proceeded. Their object was apparently to reverse all that they had previously done, and so, whereas they had formerly striven to depreciate the Government funds, they now did their best to force them up in the market. Steadily and by degrees the prices recovered, so that the five per cent. loan, which we have said was issued at a loss of forty per cent., was eventually redeemed at 106 to 109. The difference between these two prices was not at all a bad profit for the Rothschilds to realize as the result of their operations. Not so fortunate was the firm of Fries and Co. in its association with the Government loans. Although the only son, Count Fries, inherited some six or eight million guldens and through his bill business gained a hundred thousand annually, he was nevertheless forced in 1824 to abandon the Court and Vienna, and fly to Paris, where he soon afterwards died. By this catastrophe the remaining members of the syndicate were reduced to the firms of Geymüller, Arnstein and Eskeles, and Rothschild. Later on they admitted into their ranks the Vienna millionaire and banker Baron Simon George Sina, and these four firms continued to undertake the frequent and endless loans which the Government were forced to solicit from its subjects. The two brothers Geymüller, by whom the business was founded, had already retired and were living on the fortunes they had gained. The sole head of the firm after their retirement was their nephew Falkner, who subsequently assumed the name Von Geymüller, and whom they had brought up and adopted as a son. He possessed a capital of one million thalers, which, however, he soon ran through, and then made off one night without leaving any clue as to his destination. On the 12th February, 1843, nineteen months after the failure of the firm, a warrant was issued and published for the arrest of the fugitive on a charge of embezzlement. In like manner the brothers Schickh, Steiner's heirs, were advertised, arrested, and brought to trial. At that time nearly all the business firms were imperilled, and shaken to their foundations. The Rothschilds alone met the shock unmoved, deriving additional power and strength from the trials they had so successfully encountered.

Besides this Government business, the Vienna house of the Rothschilds, at the head of which was Baron Salomon von Rothschild, the second son of old Mayer Amschel, was ever ready to embark in enterprise of any sort which promised to prove lucrative. For Prince Esterhazy and many other members of the high Austrian nobility he issued in conjunction with the house in Frankfort many loans, of which we gave particulars in a previous page. He also established a Fire Insurance Company, the shares of which he was able to sell at a handsome premium. In addition to all these enterprises he had his immense bill business, which brought him in a regular and unfailing profit.

In 1836 the firm took over from the Austrian Government the contract for the construction of the railway from Vienna to Bochnia, and before even a sod had been turned or a shovel used the whole of the twelve million shares were sold at a premium of fifteen per cent. The shares in 1841 had already fallen from 115 to 62, and the Government were compelled to assist the undertaking by an advance of five millions, but before the end of the year they took into their own hands the completion of the line.

SALOMON VON ROTHSCHILD.

As in all other countries where the Rothschilds were domiciled, so in Vienna, the money market was completely under the control of the house established there. The prices of the funds and other securities rose or fell according to the pressure or support they received at the hands of Baron Salomon. Every day, from the opening of the Bourse at twelve o'clock to its close at four, he was besieged by brokers and stockjobbers anxious to give him reports of the tendency of the market, and eager to receive and execute his commissions. Speculation in stocks was, however, far from confined to these hours, as long before and long after the Bourse was open the speculators were in the habit of congregating in the well-known café in the Grünangergasse, which establishment was rented by the Stock Exchange folk, and free to the public. Here the dealings and speculations in stocks were carried on without intermission till late at night, for the prices of the funds and shares of every sort were quoted and dealt in as regularly as on the Bourse itself. The transactions were indeed far larger on this unofficial market than on the privileged and recognized Bourse. Rothschild had in his service a stockjobber at a fixed salary of 12,000 guldens, irrespective of his immense commissions. This person used to wait upon Rothschild early every morning, when together they concerted the plans for the day's operations. The stockjobber had his clients and customers not only on the Bourse but also in the "Panduren-Lager," with whom he concluded his purchases and sales. He kept a number of runners in his employ, whose sole duty it was to run backwards and forwards from him to Rothschild's with reports of all the fluctuations in prices and the disposition of the markets, and to return with orders to be carried out for the purpose of raising or depressing prices as circumstances or convenience dictated. Naturally those speculators and gamblers who were not initiated into his plans fared badly, and were frequently ruined by Rothschild's manipulations. This factotum of Baron Salomon was a poor man when he first became acquainted with the great financier, but it was not long ere he also joined the ranks of the millionaires. So strong were the faith and confidence placed in him, that he was entrusted with the control of affairs and the procuration signature whenever Baron Salomon left Vienna on business or pleasure.

The house of Rothschild played a prominent part in nearly all the great Austrian financial operations. Most of the loans have passed through its hands, and on more than one occasion was the head of the firm consulted with respect to the private fortune of the Imperial family. He was a trusted counsellor with whom family secrets were perfectly safe, and he had always free access to the ministerial Cabinet. Councillor Brentano, of the Finance Department, had indeed formerly been the agent in Trieste of the Frankfort house for its money transactions with the East, but its present agents there are Messrs. Morpurgo and Parente. The energies and influence of the firm were not by any means confined to purely financial matters, for it was known to have been interested in the success of several mining and industrial adventures. It is no secret that the large quicksilver mines of Almaden in Spain are mortgaged to the Rothschilds. These mines are the only rivals worthy of the name with which the Austrian mines in Idria, producing some 3,000 centners annually, have to contend. To prevent any injurious competition between the Spanish and the Austrian mines, an understanding was effected through the all-powerful influence of the Rothschilds. By this understanding the price of both quicksilver and cinnabar was kept up at a certain figure, which was not to be altered unless both parties consented to the change. The agreement, however, has for some years past been null and ineffective, owing to the discovery of immense quicksilver deposits in America—a discovery which has put an end to a uniform price being maintained for any length of time in Europe.

The city of Vienna derived many direct and indirect benefits from the presence of Baron Salomon, as, independently of his noble beneficence and liberality, its general prosperity must have been increased by the immense business introduced by his firm. A very pleasing recognition of his great services was made him in 1843, when the Mayor of Vienna, accompanied by the Austrian ministers von Kolowrat and Hardegg, handed him as a New Year's gift the diploma or deed stating that he had been elected an honorary freeman of the city, as he was prevented by his nationality and religious persuasion from ever becoming a free citizen. This document stated that he had been elected an honorary freeman not only "on account of his services to the monarchy in general, but more especially in recognition of his great and praiseworthy exertions on behalf of the welfare of the city, by means of his quiet and unobtrusive charity, which had won him universal respect and esteem."

An amusing tale is related of Baron Salomon with reference to a certain Cabby, who it is to be presumed was generally employed by his son,—a great patronizer of cabs, and a very liberal man with his money. It was nothing unusual for him to give the drivers four or five times the amount of their legal fare. On one occasion Baron Salomon after alighting paid the man the legal fare, not a penny more nor less. The Jehu regarded the coin in his open palm with a significant glance, which caused the Baron to inquire whether it was not correct. "Quite correct, and I am much obliged; but your son would have given me three, four, or six times as much." "Indeed, would he? Well, he has a rich father. I have not."

As we have already mentioned, the Vienna house issued, now alone, now in conjunction with other firms, several loans on behalf of the Austrian Government. The first of these loans was that of 1820 for twenty million eight hundred thousand guldens, undertaken by the Rothschilds and David Parisch in Vienna. This was issued in tickets of one hundred guldens each, bearing premiums, and was paid off in the regular course of time by the end of 1840, by means of yearly drawings. The success of this loan was due mainly to the great inducement held out to the public in the shape of the large prizes to be won.

The same two firms contracted for the second loan of 1821, amounting to thirty-seven and a half millions, in bonds of 250 guldens, and redeemed by means of fourteen drawings by the end of 1841.

At the close of 1823, Austria opened a loan of twenty-five million guldens with Rothschild, Baring Brothers and Irving and Co., in London. This loan was required to provide the payment of the subsidies of two and a half millions sterling due to England for her defence of Belgium.

Again, on the 1st December, 1829, a loan of twenty-five millions, required to pay off treasury bills, was concluded with Rothschild, Geymüller and Co., Arnstein and Eskeles, and Sina. In 1834 a further loan of twenty-five millions was issued by these four allied firms, and was followed in 1839 by one of thirty millions. Both these loans were issued on far more favourable terms to the Government than had been the case on previous occasions, the interest payable on the first being five, and on the second four per cent.

In 1842 Austria was again forced to seek the assistance of Rothschild and his colleagues, the result being a loan of forty million guldens, on which the contracting bankers are estimated to have made four millions clear profit.

After the death of Baron Salomon, the business passed into the hands of his son Baron Anselm von Rothschild, who retained the direction until his death in 1879, when his three sons Ferdinand, Nathan, and Salomon Albert, succeeded him. The two first-named have never taken any active share in its control, preferring to leave the helm wholly and solely in the hands of their youngest brother, Salomon Albert. They were not anxious to face the worry and responsibility attaching to the management of the firm. Quite satisfied with the possession of a handsome fortune, they, like wise men, determined to rest content with what they had and to retire to the enjoyment of the pleasures of society. Baron Ferdinand has long ceased to be an Austrian, having for many years past been an Englishman by the process of naturalization. He married Evelina, the daughter of Baron Lionel de Rothschild, but lost her after one short year of wedded life. Her loss was a severe blow to him, for he was most fondly attached to his young wife. Of late years he has figured prominently as one of the leaders of society. His country house at Waddesdon is the scene, during the summer months, of the most brilliant réunions and garden parties. Scarcely a day passes by without the arrival of parties of distinguished visitors, often including royalty and members of the diplomatic body, who are received and entertained in a truly princely style. Balls, fêtes, shooting parties, follow in rapid succession, until the winter season approaches, when Baron Ferdinand returns to his palatial residence in the Rothschild quarter of Mayfair. He now represents the Aylesbury division of Buckinghamshire in Parliament.

Chapter IX.

BARON JAMES DE ROTHSCHILD.

THE PARIS FIRM.

FRANCE for nearly seventy years possessed no permanent form of government; each successive government was of a temporary and provisional character. After the fall of the monarchy attempts of various kinds were made in the way of forming a representative government, and following one upon the other in rapid succession came the Legislative Assembly with an interim government, the Convention with the Reign of Terror, the Directory, the 18th Brumaire with the Three Consuls, Buonaparte and his Consulate, Napoleon I. and the Empire, the first restoration of the Bourbons under Louis XVIII., Napoleon's one hundred days, the second restoration under Charles X., the July dynasty of the Orleans with its immutable ideas, its fall through the revolution of February, the Republic, the Presidency of Louis Napoleon, Napoleon III., Emperor. Such is the list of the many forms of government to which France has been subjected, varying from the most unbridled despotism to the most extreme licentiousness.

In order to realize the condition of France at the beginning of the present century, and to appreciate fully the boldness and sagacity which led Baron James de Rothschild to found his house in Paris, it will be well to give a few particulars regarding the finances of the country at that time. The first budget proclaimed by Napoleon was that of his Consulate, and it amounted to nearly 600 million francs. On the 20th May, 1804, he was elected under the title of Napoleon I. Emperor of the French, the succession to the imperial purple being limited to his descendants and those of Joseph and Louis Buonaparte. With the exception of some sixteen marshals, one hundred members of the Senate, and the judges, Napoleon could dispose at pleasure of all other appointments, so that it is not surprising that with the army at his back he should have been able to get the crown voted to him by some three and a half million citizens. In a few years he made himself master of the European continent, thanks to his skill not only in annihilating armies but in overreaching and deceiving cabinets and ministers, thereby preventing any country from arming itself and taking effective measures to resist his progress. When, however, Spain, with Austria and Russia, and at last Prussia and Germany, combined against him, his star of fortune and destiny began to wane. By arbitrary and violent methods he enlarged the limits of the French Empire, denying and destroying the worldly power of the Pope by declaring the Papal States a portion of France, depriving his brother Louis of Brabant, Zealand, and Guelderland, in order to make the valley of the Rhine the frontier line in that direction; then he annexed Holland to France, and finally, on the 10th December, 1810, declared the necessity of extending the empire to the Baltic, and, accordingly, all the sea-coast north of an arbitrary line drawn from the junction of the Lippe with the Rhine to Travemund became French territory. From the Pyrenees to the Baltic, from Texel to Terracina, the great empire reached, while in Spain, Switzerland, Denmark, and Sicily he had vassals and allies who trembled beneath his sway. In Sweden the succession to the throne had been conferred on a French marshal; Prussia was exhausted; Austria appeared fettered by family ties; only two European Powers withstood and defied the power of France—Russia and England.

However greatly the fame and dominion of the empire had grown abroad, the condition of the country itself was of the worst possible description. The imperial subjects were burdened and oppressed by all sorts of tyrannical impositions, by taxes which steadily grew in amount, and by a budget yielding a revenue considerably exceeded by the expenditure. In 1804, when France became an empire, the country was by the decree of the 23rd February called upon to face a budget in which the expenditure amounted to no less than 700 million francs. This was for a war year. For a peace year 79 millions would have to be deducted, so that 621 millions would still weigh on the country. In addition must be reckoned the Emperor's civil list, which, with the domains left at his disposal, the appanage of his brothers, and the pay of the grand officers of the Crown, amounted to 30 millions. Included in this, however, were 7 millions for the Emperor's household, so that to the 621 millions we have really to add another 23 millions, to which we must still add the expenses of the Departments, 79 millions; the cost of maintaining the roads, 15; the expense of collecting, 80; the secret police, 5; so that the total expenditure for a peace year may be put down at 823 million francs, or about 376 millions more than under the monarchy. Year by year the budget grew, being estimated in 1809 and 1810 at 740 millions, whilst in the following year it was reckoned at 954 millions. The preparations for the campaign against Russia—the most gigantic military expedition of modern times—swallowed up million after million.

"Napoleon had collected the most powerful army the world ever saw; from all parts of the Continent had he summoned his forces for the struggle; every variety of blood, of complexion, of language, of dress and arms, were to be found in its ranks. The auxiliaries from whole provinces were led through kingdoms that respected his arms; the artillery of entire fortresses ploughed across the fields; cattle from a thousand hills were collected for the support of myriads who spread themselves like a plague across the plains of eastern Europe, where blood flowed in streams, and where the earth became blanched with the men's bodies. But this gigantic expedition, although successful, gained no object, since the enemy was vanquished, but the conqueror in vain tried to secure peace. The ancient capital of the Czars in Moscow was in his power, but the capture was profitless to him, owing to the refusal of the enemy to come to peaceful terms, and the barrenness of the neighbourhood. The burning of Moscow in one night began Napoleon's downfall, which the frost of a second completed. Upon all the pomp and material of numerous warriors, upon their cavalry, their cannons, their magazines, and their baggage fell thickly and steadily the snow-flakes of a northern night; the retreat of the armed hordes was cut off, and their destruction as effectually achieved as if it had been on the battle-field. All Napoleon's endeavours to regain his lost power were never able to remedy the effect of that Russian night. The fire of his genius still burned as brightly as ever; in two campaigns his efforts were superhuman; his resources were even more remarkable than before; his courage deserved the reward and prize of victory for which he played—but all was in vain. The weapons remained only a short time longer in his hand; his army was scattered to the winds; his opponents no longer bowed beneath his superior nature, for they discovered that he, like themselves, could be conquered, and they in their turn became bold. Such was the great captain, and such the destiny into which he plunged.

"A mighty genius of the first rank; one of the greatest masters in the art of war, he occupies a place among the generals of the highest class. His genius, however, was not confined to war. In the circumstances of government he showed himself equally sharp—as quick in deciding his procedure in politics as in the field. But with all these qualities he was a conqueror, he was a tyrant.

"In order to appease his thirst for power, in order to satisfy his ambition for empire—an ambition no conquest could still—he trod freedom beneath his feet. He enveloped the world in flames, which the blood of millions was unable to extinguish. Honesty, truth, pity, and sense of duty were cast aside by him, who pursued a single and selfish policy. Enghien's death, Wright's horrible sufferings, Pichegru's mysterious death, Palm's punishment, Toussaint's martyrdom, are all blots on his fame."

Equally characteristic is the opinion of Lord Brougham concerning him:—"He sacrificed to his ambition three milliards in money as the acknowledged cost of the wars of 1802-1814 to France alone, and five-sixths of three million men, who were called out for active service."

Following upon his memorable campaign against Russia and his disastrous retreat came his dethronement and banishment to Elba, whence he issued to try his fortune once more against the whole of Europe. The sequel to this attempt is too well known to need repetition, leading as it did to his final overthrow, and to the restoration of Bourbon rule in France, with a constitutional government, under Louis XVIII.

When the Chambers met for the first time after the restoration, Montesquieu laid before them a report of the condition of the country, describing in very striking language the evils arising from the imperial form of government. Still more gloomy was the picture painted by the Minister of Finance of the State's finances and requirements. The arrears amounted to more than 1,308 millions, which, however, were afterwards reduced to 759. The funded debt amounted to only 93 millions. To provide means to discharge these liabilities, it was decided to sell the domain forests and common lands. The abnormal and provisional budget of 1814, and the normal budget of 1815, estimating the receipts at 618 million francs, and the expenditure at 547 millions, were passed on the 23rd September, 1814; the civil list of 33 millions, and an additional vote of 30 millions for the debts incurred by the Bourbons abroad since their expulsion, were likewise voted.

Then came Napoleon's sensational return, with his brief enjoyment of power, cut short by the efforts of the allied forces. Nearly a million foreign troops entered the French territory, and demanded an indemnity of 100 million francs at the expiration of the one hundred days. The budget for 1816 estimated the ordinary expenditure at 548 millions, and the extraordinary expenditure at 290 millions, in addition to that for the Consolidated Fund of 125,500,000 francs. Taken all in all, the expenditure amounted to 1,069,261,826 francs as given in the law of the 25th March, 1817. The indemnity of a milliard francs claimed by the emigrants, and the war indemnity of 700 millions claimed by the Allied Powers, were enormous items in the State accounts, in addition to the cost of maintaining the foreign army of occupation for five years.

In the following years both the receipts and the expenditure rose and fell. In 1824 the Chambers put the civil list for the King at 25 millions, and that for the Princes at 7 millions. The budget grew steadily under the different ministries until the July revolution. Under Martignac in 1828 the expenditure was estimated at 980 million francs, whilst the receipts reached only 986 millions. During the reign of the Orleans family the State finances, in spite of the enormous receipts, were far from flourishing. The indirect taxes exceeded a total of 12 milliard francs, whilst the yearly expenditure amounted to from 1,000 to 1,200 millions. The chief cause of this lay in the lasting "armed peace." In 1841 a deficit of 1,000 millions was declared. The system followed by Louis Philippe had already brought the country to the verge of a financial crisis. The city of Paris was burdened with a debt, now considerably increased, of 12 millions, and the State budget with a rente of 600,000 francs. The distress among the working classes was fearful; in commercial circles bankruptcy was the order of the day. Under the fraudulent system then generally prevailing persons had carried on business without any capital at their backs, by means of credit, ill-deserved but too readily obtained. The revolution came without any warning to complete the feeling of anxiety and uncertainty prevailing at the time. A provisional government was placed at the head of affairs, and issued decrees one after the other dealing with all subjects, from the abolition of the monarchy down to the assignment of the millions of the civil list to the relief of the working classes. The indebtedness of the State was fearful; the financial disorder unlimited. Even without the revolution a State loan of 600 millions would have been absolutely necessary. There were but two means of saving the newly-created republic—a dictatorship, or in other words, exaction, or credit. If the State had displayed the slightest hesitation in meeting its engagements the word bankruptcy would have been on every lip. Goudchaux, the Finance Minister, resigned; he felt himself unequal to the difficulties of the situation. A man of ability, capable of manfully grappling with and mastering the dangers of the impending crisis, was above all things required. Garnier-Pagès succeeded Goudchaux as Finance Minister. One of his first proceedings, after his accession to office, was to sell the forests belonging to the old civil list. He decreed a voluntary loan, but, as the coffers remained empty, he had recourse to the most pitiable of all financial measures: he laid an additional 45 centimes on the four instalments of the direct taxes, a measure which severely hit the already heavily-burdened peasants and the small landowners. The expenditure amounted to 1,700 million francs, and the State debts, which had increased by nearly a million in seven years, to 5 milliards 170 millions. The additional tax brought in 150 millions, whilst the Bank advanced 230 millions upon the State forests. By these means the State was saved from bankruptcy.

Under the Presidency of the Republic, which ere long was converted into the Empire, the indebtedness of the State continued to increase steadily. The war with Russia required one sacrifice after the other. In April, 1856, the State expenditure, the revenues and the State debts were estimated by the Minister of Finance to be as follows:—

"The regular expenditure amounts to 1,598 million francs. The first portion of this consists of the interest on the debt, which takes 342 millions for the dividends, and the redemption of the consolidated debt; 10½ millions for the interest on the special loan for canals; 33½ millions for the interest on the floating debt, the guarantees, and finally 68 millions dette viagère, together 455 million francs. The supplies are 25 millions for the Emperor; 1½ millions for the Princes and Princesses of the Imperial house; 6½ millions for the Senate; 2½ millions for the Legislative Body, and 3½ millions for the Legion of Honour; making in all 38½ millions. The collection of the taxes costs 165 millions; 4 million francs are set apart for the completion of the Louvre." In a word, taking the population of France at 35 millions, the average contribution per head to the State treasury was about 46 francs for the year 1856.

The fortunes amassed by individuals—bankers and financiers, more particularly—resident in France, or rather in Paris, cannot be described nor estimated. In June, 1848, when the proposed decree for the conversion of the floating debt into a consolidated debt was brought before the National Assembly, a Paris paper, published under the title of "The Organization of Labour," gave the following details respecting the wealth of the leading houses in Paris :"The firms Laffitte Frère and Delamarre are estimated at 10 millions; Baudon at 12; Rougemont and Lafond at 15; Dourand, Delessert, Aquirrevengon and Halphen, each at 20; Hottinger and Pellaprat each at 25; Fould at 30; Hoop at 40; Baron Gressulhe at 100; Rothschild at 600 million francs." The King was put down as worth 800; the Duc d'Aumale and Madame Adelaide each at 70; and the Duc de Montpensier at 20 millions. According to this estimate the combined wealth of the above well-known banking-houses amounted only to 362 millions, a total which Rothschild exceeded by no less than 238 millions. It was by means of this immense capital at their command that the Rothschilds gained that consideration and influence which no other firm has ever yet equalled or approached.

"Involuntarily," wrote the "Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung," "one is forced to ask the question how it was that the house of Rothschild managed to maintain its distinguished position undisturbed throughout the manifold changes of government in France? The explanation is easy," continued the writer: "the house belonged to no political party; the Rothschilds are the friends of the kingdom, of law and of peace, and as such could maintain their preponderating influence equally as well under the heterogeneous ministries of a Decazes, Villèle, Martignac, or Polignac, as under the government of Louis Philippe."

When we remember the disturbed state of Europe in 1812, and how much the Rothschild family had suffered at the hands of Napoleon, we cannot but wonder what could have been the reasons which induced Baron James de Rothschild to determine opening a branch house in the French capital. That he did so in spite of the unpropitious aspect of affairs speaks volumes for both his boldness and foresight. It may have been that he had already made sure of his prospects by having rendered the Emperor some services, for few had more need of financial assistance than Napoleon I., and Baron James, we may presume, was not unwilling to secure himself substantial advantages at the expense of the French nation. This is, of course, all surmise on our part, but, when we recollect that the supplies entrusted by the British Government to Nathan Mayer Rothschild for the army in Spain were conveyed to their destination through France, it does not seem altogether improbable that Baron James must by some means or other have obtained a certain degree of influence with the French Government, or he could never have executed the business with such success. Money is proverbially all-powerful, and in this case certainly did not belie its reputation. A more favourable period, as events proved, could hardly have been chosen for establishing the new firm in Paris. It was started in 1812. In 1815 Napoleon was deposed and business at once poured in upon Baron James de Rothschild. Thanks to the influence and warm recommendations of the Elector of Hesse, Baron James de Rothschild was empowered to receive the milliard of francs war expenses claimed by the Allied Powers when they entered Paris. In the same way the two milliards war indemnity passed through his hands, and we may feel sure that the transaction was most profitable. For some years afterwards we do not find him engaged in any great financial operation; indeed until 1823 his name is altogether lost sight of. In that year, however, he took up the whole of the French loan at the price of 89 fr. 55 cent., and the "Gentleman's Magazine" in chronicling the occurrence testifies to the confidence and influence enjoyed by the firm, by stating that the immediate effect on the French Rentes was that they rose to 90 frs. 25 cent.

In 1824, the Marquis de Villèle, the Minister of Finance at that time, projected the conversion of the whole of the French Five per Cent. debt into a Three per Cent. debt. Those who were so disposed could exchange the old Five per Cent. stock into bonds of the new Three per Cent. stock by accepting the exchange at the rate of 100 francs new stock for every 75 francs of the old. The whole debt amounted to 3,066,783,560 francs, and it was estimated that perhaps only one-third of the stockholders would accept the conversion; consequently, to satisfy the State creditors, no less than 1,055,556,720 francs would have to be paid them in cash. In order to collect this immense sum, the assistance of all the great financiers on the English, Dutch, and French markets was sought. Subscriptions were received in Paris, London, and Amsterdam by the firms of Baring Brothers, J. Laffitte and Co., and N. M. Rothschild and Sons. A committee under the presidency of Alexander Baring, with Baron James de Rothschild and Jacques Laffitte as his colleagues, was then formed to determine the conditions to be made with the Minister, on which they would provide the cash required for the redemption of the old Five per Cent. bonds. Their plan was to sell the new Three per Cent. stock, as soon as created, at the price of eighty. At this price purchasers would receive $3\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. interest on their money, and if the paid off debt could only be replaced by bonds of the Three per Cent. stock purchased at 80, it necessarily followed that the Five per Cent. stock, before the proposed conversion, would be relatively worth 106.66, in order to yield a corresponding rate of interest.

Operations based on this calculation were accordingly made on the three markets. The capital required in Paris for the conversion was estimated at 1,000 millions. The speculators, thinking that the contractors would not put the new Three per Cent. stock into circulation under 80, bought in Amsterdam and Frankfort at 81—$83\frac{1}{3}$, whilst at the same time immense sales of the French Five per Cent. debt at the relative price of 106.67 to 110 were effected. Higher prices than these could not be obtained.

Villèle's project in order to become law required the sanction of the two Chambers. After a very stormy debate, it passed the Chamber of Deputies by a Ministerial majority of 68. In the Chamber of Peers it encountered a vigorous opposition, secretly promoted by the Viscount de Chateaubriand, who harboured a private grudge against Villèle. By a majority of 12 votes the proposal was rejected. The Five per Cents., which the day before were quoted at 106, fell at once to 98, and an extraordinary excitement ruled on the stock markets. Chateaubriand resigned, and the day following at the opening of the market the Five per Cent. Rentes were dealt in at 104; then they receded again to 98, and remained for some time stationary.

The rejection of the Finance Minister's scheme was a severe blow to speculators, who had operated freely in the anticipation of the conversion being accepted. Those who had bought largely for the settlement were compelled to sell out again at a loss. Baring and Laffitte were severely hit; the Rothschilds, however, emerged from the fray uninjured, owing to their having confined their operations to selling simultaneously large amounts of the new Three per Cents. and of the old Five per Cents. As the Three per Cent. debt was not to be created, none of this stock could be delivered, whilst the Five per Cent. stock, which they had sold at 104 or more, could be bought in again at 98.

In 1830 the well-known banker, P. J. Ouvrard, in Paris, obtained trustworthy information, a week before their publication, of the coming decrees of the Polignac Ministry, decrees, as is well known, resulting in the July revolution and the fall of the Bourbon dynasty. No sooner was Ouvrard certain of his information, than he summoned to his confidence several bankers and bill brokers, and then hastened to London. On reaching that capital he at once began to effect such heavy sales of stock at ever falling prices that the Rothschilds, who, being among the first purchasers, were interested in the maintenance of the prices, became quite alarmed, and immediately despatched a courier to Paris to learn the real reason of the immense sales that had taken place. The Paris house, however, were no better informed than the London house, and were unable to give the key to the enigma. Baron James, who a few months previously had contracted for the last Government loan of Four per Cent. Rente at the price of 102 francs 7 cents., at once betook himself, in a state of violent excitement, to Polignac, and requested the Minister to enlighten him as to the real state of affairs. The possibility of the Ministerial decrees being issued had already become a subject of discussion on the Stock Exchange, but no one could speak with any certainty on the matter. When the Baron returned from his interview with the Prime Minister, he made no secret of the fact that the latter had given him his word of honour that the decrees were nothing but an empty scheme which had never been seriously considered, and which would now remain a dream. The next day it became known that they had been signed by Charles X. after mass, and the following day they appeared in print in the columns of the "Moniteur."

The immediate effect of their publication was that the house of Rothschild and its partners in the transactions found themselves saddled with the whole loan of 78,373,750 francs, which fell to a discount of 20 or 30 per cent. For a long time afterwards this stock remained in such bad odour that buyers were difficult to find. The business, however, was far more prejudicial to Rothschild's partners than to Baron James himself, as the bulk of the stock had already been taken off his hands. He was severely reproached at the time for the part he had borne in the business, as it was generally held that he had abandoned his friends and left them helpless; still it must not be forgotten that till the time of the July revolution he had always shared his enormous gains with his partners. That event came quite unawares upon them, and at once changed what had promised to be a most profitable undertaking into a most costly and ruinous one.

Ouvrard had at a stroke won an immense sum, which his broker Amet set down at 2 million francs. As soon as he had carried out his successful combination, he returned from London to Paris and commenced operations. They were all calculated for the fall. As the Rente, even after Casimir Périer joined the Ministry, fell to 52, and in February, 1831, to 48, some slight estimate may be formed of the extraordinary profits Ouvrard must have realized.

It was mainly by the influence of the house of Rothschild that the fall of M. Thiers in 1840 was brought about. Whether right or wrong, Thiers thought he was acting as beseemed a Frenchman, whose only object was to uphold the honour of his country. This consideration, however, never troubled the Rothschilds; for they supported no nationality. They are—although by some the assertion may be opposed—cosmopolitan, or at least European, neither German, French, English, Italian, Turkish, nor Russian, and, as they possess immense influence in diplomatic circles, they help to maintain peace at the expense of all princes. In his opposition to Thiers Rothschild bore himself as king of the Stock Exchange, and Austrian Consul-General. Thiers in the columns of the "Constitutionnel" pointedly asked Rothschild, of what concern was the honour of France to him, seeing that he was a German? Baron James replied, in a letter which he had published in all the papers, that, if he were a German, so must his brother Frenchmen be Germans. However, it was in the interests of Germany that he acted in the matter of the Rhine frontiers, then under discussion. Thiers resigned, and was succeeded by Guizot, whose proceedings were always of a somewhat cosmopolitan, anti-national character, so that it was not altogether inappropriate when his Ministry was nicknamed the Ministère de l'Etranger. It was naturally under the monarchy, where power centred in one person, that the influence possessed by the Rothschilds displayed itself most conspicuously and undeniably.

Few were the public men who did not feel and own that influence. The majority of the deputies, we may say, without fear of contradiction, were more or less under obligations to the firm, and ready to assist in promoting its interests and views. Still, although in diplomatic circles Baron James de Rothschild was a personage of such importance that his opinions could never be altogether disregarded, it was upon the Stock Exchange that his rule was most powerfully felt and universally recognized. Nor did he hesitate to use the sovereignty he possessed to further his purposes, as he could raise or depress prices at his pleasure. His sway was indeed despotic, and none were found bold or rash enough to dispute or oppose his arbitrary edicts, as the gigantic nature of his operations effectually prevented anything like systematic opposition being offered, and induced others to lend him their co-operation by following in his steps. It cannot be denied that the Stock Exchange can boast of intellects which in diplomatic skill and artifice would do credit to a Talleyrand, and it is equally certain that for boldness in conceiving and for vigour in carrying out a plan none could excel Baron James, whose operations were the talk and wonder of Europe. Seeing the facility with which at a stroke fortunes may be won on the Stock Exchange, it is not surprising that speculation should have a strange fascination over the public, nor that the Stock Exchange should become a training school for the development of every kind of trickery and deceit, the centre of genuine business, and of endless swindling.

To live we require the necessary means, and it is the fate and calling of everyone to strive after the acquisition of wealth, and, when he has succeeded, to use the utmost care and thought in the preservation of his gains. There are many ways of attaining this object, since it is possible to acquire riches either by labour, industry, or speculation. Naturally everyone, being more or less anxious to become wealthy, prefers the way which leads most directly and with least trouble towards the goal. The outcome of this innate desire to grow rich speedily and without effort was the invention of games of chance, which have been in vogue from the earliest ages; the dice were as familiar to the Greeks and Romans as they are to us in the nineteenth century. It was the desire for gain which led the people of the Middle Ages to place such faith in the black arts, and in the power of the divining rod. The infatuated and ignorant belief that many had in the boasted powers of the alchymists and astrologers was owing to the latter taking advantage of the cupidity of their dupes, who, in the anticipation of becoming suddenly rich, were ready and willing to place implicit reliance in their mysterious advisers. But the philosopher's stone and all such trash are now discarded, and instead of it we have speculation, stock-jobbing, gambling and swindling; all being different modes of attaining the same object, —the acquisition of wealth with the least possible trouble or exertion.

Real gain is that which arises from industry backed up by capital and credit, the latter of which is proportionate to the industry and capital combined. In many countries credit is the basis of all business, which is facilitated and developed by its means. According to the estimate entertained of the credit and character of the individual, the credit of a State is formed; this in earlier times was so slight that oppressive measures had to be resorted to in urgent cases to procure the necessary funds to meet the State's requirements. For the same purpose recourse was often had to the reduction of the interest on the debt, and to the issue of base money. As years rolled on the evils arising from these practices were recognized, and sounder principles of finance and administration were, by degrees, adopted. Thenceforward the public were induced to confide in the Government, and invest their money in the purchase of the Government stocks, which became at once the basis of a speculation similar to that in private shares. The funded debts of a State, especially of one whose credit has decayed, are, in disturbed times, the most prolific source of that species of gambling for the differences in the quotations, which is known in England as stockjobbing. In every country the Government stocks are used as the means of gambling. The Stock Exchanges of London, Paris, Frankfort and Vienna are crowded with persons who have neither stock to sell, nor money to pay for their purchases, but who yet embark in large speculations for the rise or fall, hoping to pocket, before the settling day, a handsome profit by the difference that takes place between the prices at which they buy and those at which they sell.

The usual mode of conducting speculation on the Stock Exchange is by means of "time-bargains," i.e., bargains which are not settled before a certain day, usually termed the "account," or settling, day. Naturally during the interval between the closing of a bargain and the account day, prices may experience considerable fluctuations, on which speculators greatly rely for the success of their dealings. For instance, a person may sell an amount of stock for the "account," and owing to a fall of prices may be able to buy that amount in again at a considerably lower price, thereby pocketing a handsome profit in the shape of the difference between the two prices. On the other hand it frequently happens that the market disappoints the expectations of speculators, who are consequently unable to settle their transactions by delivering the stock they have sold, or by paying over the cost of their purchases; in such cases the transactions are usually arranged by the defaulters paying the differences between the prices at which the bargains were struck and those ruling on the account day. From this explanation it will be at once seen how speculation is encouraged, since it is possible for persons without capital or stock to embark in speculations for large amounts, and these speculations, if luck attends them, return fabulous and easily earned profits.

No wonder that this sort of business has its fascinations. It is, indeed, neither more nor less than gambling pure and simple, and is so considered by the law. There can be no doubt that this gigantic system of speculation is prejudicial to the public interests, as it seduces business men from their own legitimate business, which they neglect in the hope of gaining larger profits, with greater ease, on the Stock Exchange. Were this system of buying and selling for future delivery confined to the Stock Exchange there would be less reason to complain; but, unfortunately, it is practised upon all our produce markets, where panics are by its means created with far too great a frequency. The public are the greatest sufferers in such cases, as the prices of commodities which they require, and with which they can ill dispense, such as corn, tea, coffee, etc., are often forced up to an extraordinary height by the efforts of unscrupulous and greedy schemers.

The want of principle and the readiness of speculators to attain their ends at all hazards, is shown by the many artifices they employ to effect a reaction on the market. It often happens that the market, contrary to their sanguine expectations, makes a movement which if maintained is sure to bring about their ruin; consequently they strenuously endeavour to remedy the evil by the fabrication and circulation of false news, by the publication of lying statements in the newspapers, and by any other dishonest means which appear likely to produce the desired result. These tricks are bad and objectionable enough, but in more than one instance ruined speculators have as a last resource tried to re-establish their shattered fortunes by forgery and other fraudulent means. In 1803, when the greatest anxiety prevailed in London as to the result of the negotiations then pending between the French Republic and the English Government, the whole city became elated and joyous owing to a statement contained in a letter, posted in a prominent position on the Mansion House, to the effect that: "the negotiations were brought to an amicable conclusion." As this letter purported to be written by Lord Hawkesbury, implicit faith was at first placed in its genuineness, especially as it seemed to enjoy the sanction of the Lord Mayor. The Funds rose at once with a bound. Presently, however, when the matter was quietly considered, grave doubts began to be entertained as to the authenticity of the letter. Many (and among them perhaps the authors) boldly declared it fictitious: a reaction forthwith set in, and was intensified when the forgery was exposed. A similar incident occurred only a year or two ago when a letter pretending to be written by Lord Granville's authority, and stating that the settlement of the bondholders' claims against Chili had been satisfactorily arranged, was placed in a prominent position on the Stock Exchange. It is needless to say that this likewise was a hoax, or rather a forgery. Nor is the pernicious practice of fabricating false news by any means confined to the members of the Stock Exchange; all who operate in the Funds and are interested in bringing about a certain movement in the quotations resort to these objectionable devices. Members of Parliament are not above stooping to such meanness; indeed more than one Stock Exchange scandal has originated in the dishonest practices of honourable members. Few trials created greater sensation in England than those of Mr Walsh, M.P., and Mr Cochrane Johnstone, M.P., at the beginning of the present century. Impelled by their fatal love of speculation Cabinet Ministers and other persons holding high official rank have been known to take advantage of their position and turn to profitable account the information which has reached them through official channels. Nothing shows more clearly the baneful effects attending the mania for speculation than the deplorable fact that ministers have been led by its influence to abuse the confidence placed in them, and subordinate the public interests to their own. Take for instance the case of the Count de Guisne, the French ambassador in London at the early part of the present century. Profiting by intelligence received in virtue of his office, he speculated in the Funds with great success for a time, but afterwards his good fortune deserted him, and he was unable to meet his engagements. As long as he was lucky he was willing to acknowledge the contracts made with his broker, but when his luck changed he disowned all knowledge of the transactions, refused to pay the balance due, and quitted the country. Apart from the evils directly traceable to speculation, the amount of bribery and corruption it engenders cannot be estimated. In order to obtain the earliest information of all that passes in political circles, speculators spare neither trouble nor expense. By means best known to themselves, but which may be expressed by the conventional term "value received," they manage to obtain from subordinate officials and court attendants early and reliable reports of all that it concerns their interests to know. The famous Duke of Marlborough is indeed said to have so far forgotten his station as to have accepted an annuity from the great speculator Medina, who found the outlay extremely remunerative, as it enabled him to have the exclusive privilege of forwarding from the field of battle reports of those great successes which fired the spirit of the nation with enthusiasm and joy. Formerly the advantage of possessing reliable information of any important event, such as the declaration of war, the resignation of a cabinet, the illness of a sovereign, was very considerable, since, owing to the slowness of communication, the truth or falsehood of the reports promulgated by speculators could not be ascertained until they had affected the market and brought about the movement in prices which inevitably filled the pockets of those who were in the secret. Thanks to the invention of the telegraph, these lying rumours are now exposed almost as soon as circulated, but twenty or forty years ago it would have taken days or weeks to ascertain how true or false they were.

BARON JAMES VON ROTHSCHILD.

The year 1847 was a most evil year both for commerce and State finance, especially in England and France. So severe, indeed, were the financial pressure and the scarcity of money in England, that during the month of October bills drawn upon and accepted by first-class firms, with only a week to run, were discounted at the rate of 13 per cent. per annum. The banks in Liverpool and Newcastle, owing to a run of unprofitable business, were forced to suspend payment, thereby causing ruin and distress in every direction. The pressure arose more from want of confidence than from any other cause. Everyone had more or less caught the speculation fever raging for railways and corn, and had become liable for sums far beyond his ability to pay; consequently the value of all railway securities fell rapidly, whilst vast amounts were lost in the corn speculations.

During the following months the prices of the Government stocks rose in a strange fashion, despite the well-known scarcity of money prevailing at the time. Chance and an unlooked-for succession of various causes, rather than the powerful manipulation of the Rothschilds, brought about this unusual phenomenon. Extensive dealings had taken place in the Three per Cent. Rentes, and it was found on settling-day that those securities were greatly over-sold. A large portion which remained uncovered figured in the names of the Rothschilds. Since the latter had endeavoured to force prices to take a certain path, this amount had been considerably augmented, and, according to estimate made, it was thought that the average price would work out about 75 francs 50 cents. From the systematic sales effected by the Rothschilds, it seemed that their principal object was to maintain this quotation, and that their speculations would prove unprofitable were the prices to rise beyond 75.75, which to all appearances was their limit. The great herd of speculators who faithfully followed all the movements of Baron James, whose actions inspired all their operations, were now placed in an awkward position. They had sold very heavily for the account, but when settling-day arrived stock proved exceedingly scarce, and it became an easy matter for the "Bulls" to raise the price to 76 francs 40 cents., as they were assisted in their efforts by the absence of fresh sellers, the scarcity of stock, and the readiness of persons to buy. Shortly afterwards the price rose to 77 francs, apparently quite contrary to the interest of the house of Rothschild and to the desire of all well-wishers of the new project for a State loan of 250 million francs. Then there ensued an unexpected revival of confidence among the public, similar to that which had occurred the year before; the public entered into the speculation, wrested the sceptre of power from the hands of the Rothschilds, and showed them that at times the public is able to set a limit to their rule. In order to counteract the influence brought to bear upon the market, Baron James determined suddenly to unload on it some 450,000 francs Three per Cent. Rente, which he had borrowed from the three great insurance companies, the Compagnie Générale, the Royale, and the Union, against the deposit of 500,000 francs Five per Cent. Rente. Apparently his object was by this sudden delivery for cash to beat down the price to his old limit, but in this calculation he was mistaken, as means were found to relieve the market of all this stock, and so the operation failed. The "Bulls," who had hardly dared to expect the disappearance of so large an amount of stock, took heart of grace, and kept the quotation up almost to 77 francs. Unwittingly they had helped Baron James to win his game. Dealing in the new loan first took place at 76 francs 50, then the price sank 1 franc, or 75 cents., about the price at which Baron James contracted for the loan in November, 1847, namely, 75 francs. Baron James had scored another victory over the whole financial world in Paris. Directly he undertook the loan he issued a circular calling upon all subscribers to pay an immediate instalment of 5 francs upon every 100 allotted to them, failing which their applications would be disregarded. Speculation had been so rife that Baron James may have decided upon this measure from mistrust of the subscribers' ability to fulfil their obligations; or his object may have been to increase the firmness of the new loan on the market.

While Louis Philippe occupied the throne, money was supreme; riches alone ruled in the land which was credited with possessing—thanks to the system of so-called popular representation bestowed upon it—all the blessings and advantages supposed to attend a constitutional monarchy. In the Chamber of Peers the interests and aims of every class had representatives, the second Chamber, elected under a high census, being the reflection of the rich bourgeoisie. Such an Assembly of representatives was, however, as regards the people, a fiction. Moreover, Stock Exchange speculation formed the chief occupation of the rich bourgeoisie, while Louis Philippe and his Prime Minister Thiers led the van in this playing with fortune. The financial situation was for ever growing worse in consequence of the rapid spread of corruption, especially in the practice of buying votes. The demands of those who allowed their votes to be bought kept becoming more and more exorbitant, but, as the means at the command of the corrupting parties did not increase in the same proportion, the court favourites had to make free with the State treasures to supply the deficiencies. Fearful scandals were brought to light, until the feelings and good sense of the nation could suffer the evil no longer. Stronger and stronger waxed the cry of corruption with which the Guizot Ministry was assailed. In spite of all that he had done for them, by degrees even the bourgeoisie began to desert Louis Philippe, and united in the demand for a reform of the electoral system. The whole tone and manners of society were affected by the universal corruption, and to what a depth of vice and degradation the public morality had fallen was shown by the revelations that took place. So far had many persons gone that the Government were forced to disown them and their practices. Like shipwrecked mariners, the Government consulted their own safety by sacrificing their weaker comrades, and prosecuted numbers who had high rank, and were at the same time friends or relations of the King; such persons, for instance, were Teste, formerly in the Ministry, and Cubières, an old Court favourite, both of whom had either made away with the State moneys or had allowed themselves to be bribed; lastly came Praslin, an old friend of the King.

The monopoly of the State loans which the house of Rothschild had in the course of time secured to itself, and which afforded strong evidence of the immense financial power at its command, has, in consequence of the new principles of finance by which the Government has been guided since 1848, come to an end. At one time it would have been thought a piece of madness to oppose or compete with the Rothschilds in their operations, but now, owing to the powerful and active coalitions formed among many of the leading banking and financial houses, the power and influence of the Rothschilds have received a severe check. They are no longer the all-puissant despotic firm they once were; younger and equally energetic rivals have forced them to descend from the platform they once occupied alone, and they now stand on the same footing as other financial houses. Their influence is of course still immense and powerful, but it no longer secures them the precedence they so long held in monied circles. The effect of the new principles of finance upon the privileges and influence of the house of Rothschild was clearly shown in 1855 when the national loan was issued. The Rothschilds were no longer allowed to pocket, by contracting for the whole loan, all the profits attending the issue; they were forced to subscribe on an equal footing with every other citizen for whatever share they wished to obtain. The policy and wisdom of the Government in taking this bold measure cannot be doubted, as it enabled the public to share in the profit attending the issue—a profit which on previous occasions the contractors had exclusively enjoyed. The loan was issued to subscribers at 63 francs 27 cents, but long before the allotments took place it was dealt in on the Exchange at 65 francs 90 cents.

In addition to the Government business, as we may call it, Baron James engaged in many commercial and industrial undertakings. To him France is in a great measure indebted for the construction of most of her principal railroads. He may indeed be called the "Railway King" of France, as Hudson was the "Railway King" of England. To quote the "Augsburger Allgemeine Zeitung" once more:

"When during the last few years the speculative mania turned towards industrial enterprises, and railways became a necessity on the Continent, the Rothschilds took the initiative and placed themselves at the head of the movement. The Versailles Railway on the right bank of the Seine is their creation, and in Austria they gave the first impulse to enterprise of this description by building the magnificent Northern Railway."

The greatest of Baron James's railway undertakings was perhaps the construction of the Northern Railway of France, which was attended by so many scandals and productive of such widespread speculation that some description of it may not be out of place. In order to secure the country all the benefits supposed to result from unlimited competition, a law had been passed by which it was decreed that the construction of railways in France was not to be effected by granting concessions to particular persons, but was to be confided to those companies whose tenders proved most acceptable. In the case of the Northern Railway, these prudent precautions proved unavailing, as Baron James secured beforehand the co-operation of all who might have been his rivals, and, his being the only tender, there was no alternative but to accept it. The capital of the company consisted of 300,000 shares of 500 francs each. Baron James had no sooner got his company fairly started than he inaugurated a wholesale speculation in the said shares. Every trick and artifice known was employed to force them up to a fabulous price; they were given away broadcast to the newspapers, in order that the praises of the latter might be won for the undertaking, or their opposition at least silenced. There was scarcely a person of any importance but received a present of a number of shares, in some cases five, in others fifty, and often more. Ministers, deputies, journalists, everyone, in fact, of any note was bribed to lend his support to the new railway. Naturally the shares soon rose to an enormous premium, and the ignorant and infatuated public, gulled by the reports of the enormous sums already won, and still to be won, hastened to participate in the speculation. The premium on the shares was at one time as much as 348 francs, when Baron James thought it time to realize the profit arising from the operation, and accordingly began to sell out the shares he held. By selling heavily he forced the prices down, ruining the ignorant persons who had purchased the shares at a high premium. He was thus enabled to buy in at a price which left him a handsome profit on the shares he had sold. And so the speculation went on, Baron James, backed up by the immense support he had secured, raising and depressing the market by his manœuvres just as it suited his purpose. His gains were set down by popular estimate at 140 million francs, but that may be an exaggeration. On the 15th June, 1846, the line was opened with great pomp, and amidst universal rejoicings. Amiens on that day presented a grand spectacle, crowded as it was with princes of the royal family, marshals and generals, deputies, peers, members of the bar, and others who had been invited to take part in the opening ceremony. Unhappily the line inaugurated under such brilliant auspices was, a month or two later, the scene of a terrible accident, by which some thirty persons lost their lives, and an equal number were more or less injured.

The great success and immense fortune gained by Baron James could not fail to win for him a large amount of jealousy and envy, which displayed itself in the combinations formed by rival firms, all anxious to deprive him of some portion of the large profits attending his operations. Among the many formidable rivals with whom he had to contend, none perhaps proved himself so capable and dangerous as Emile Péreire, the head of the firm of that name. So bitter was the rivalry between the two that neither lost a chance of damaging or spiting the other; indeed, so far did matters go that Baron James and Péreire allowed their rivalry in business to grow into a personal enmity, which displayed itself on every possible occasion. Neither hesitated stooping to enter into any intrigue or doing any mean trick if he thought he could thereby damage his rival, either in reputation or pocket. As Péreire's means alone would have been insufficient to attain the objects he had in view and compete with the influence and fortune of the Rothschilds, he sought the co-operation of other influential firms, not only in Paris but in other great capitals. So powerful was the coalition thus organized that even the vast influence of the Roth-schilds was ineffectual in the attempt to procure its overthrow. Some idea of the strong opposition with which Baron James had to contend may be formed from the credit and capital possessed by the coalition, which included such well-known and wealthy firms as Barings of London, Hope and Co. of Amsterdam, Stieglitz of St Petersburg, and many others. The rivalry between Rothschild and Péreire was carried on vigorously, and with ever-increasing bitterness and warmth. Rothschild on the one hand was jealous and annoyed by the young upstart Péreire, whilst the latter, conscious of his exceptional energy and abilities, was anxious to force the wealthy and despotic Rothschild to abdicate the lofty position he had gained on the Paris money market. On more than one occasion Baron James exerted himself to the utmost to crush and annihilate his young rival, but Péreire's strong will and financial skill were more than a match for the ability of Rothschild and his millions. In these contests for supremacy it was not always Péreire who had to yield. More than once Baron James found himself out-manœuvred, and compelled to retire from the arena. In 1856, for instance, Péreire, in conjunction with Hottinger Thurneysser in Paris, and Stieglitz in St Petersburg, succeeded, in spite of all the frantic efforts and the immense and varied influence brought into play by Baron James, in gaining a concession for the construction, during a period of eighty-five years, of a network of railways throughout the Russian empire. This enterprise is certainly one of the greatest and most lucrative of the present century.

Having been thus defeated in his endeavours to secure the concession for the Russian railways, Baron James revenged himself by founding the Vienna Credit Bank. The different offers that were laid before the Austrian Ministry of Finance resolved themselves into two groups, at the head of which stood the Rothschilds on the one hand, and Péreire on the other. In the position it held on the European money market each of these two great houses possessed material advantages, which brought out prominently its individual character. The name of Rothschild had about it a sound of historic fame, of well-merited popularity, and of world-wide wealth which carried with it immense weight, whilst, in addition, its interests and business were looked after by the different members of the family residing in all the great capitals of Europe. The house of Péreire, on the other hand, had in its favour the greater energy, the higher administrative ability, and the superior capacity of its chief. Both houses were all powerful on the great European markets, and for the sake of the new institution it was eminently desirable that the rivalry between the two should cease and a fusion of interests take place. This to all appearances was the opinion of the Finance Minister, who wished to give no decision as to the merits of the two proposals until every effort to secure the alliance of the rival firms had been exhausted. There seemed to be some probability of the much-desired union being consummated, but Péreire, in a letter from Paris, declared he would not undertake the establishment of the new bank in conjunction with Rothschild, unless the latter promised to abandon his opposition to the Crédit Mobilier, another of Rothschild's powerful rivals. Baron James positively refused to give the promise, and the negotiations fell through, the ultimate result being that the establishment of the new bank was, as we have said, entrusted to the house of Rothschild.

That Baron James was not successful, in spite of his most careful calculations and circumspection, in all his enterprises, the reader knows. Unforeseen circumstances will crop up at times to mar the best-laid plans, and the Baron, like others, was not exempt from Fortune's freaks. Great as his winnings were, his losses were on a correspondingly large scale whenever his usual luck deserted him; the amounts he lost at a single stroke were indeed so enormous that they can scarcely be credited. One of his heaviest losses was undoubtedly that caused by the frauds of Carpentier, the accountant or cashier of the North of France Railway. The particulars of this gigantic robbery, without a parallel in the history of crime, were published in one of the papers, and were as follows :—

"The mystery surrounding the theft from the Northern Railway is by degrees being cleared up. The directors try to furnish as few details as possible regarding this event, which does poor credit to their prudence and watchfulness. They at first desired to give no publicity at all to it; the Paris press had been won over, but, as the foreign journals would not allow the occurrence to be buried in silence, the Northern Railway was forced to step forward with its explanation, in which the losses were set down at six million francs. This estimate is, however, far from correct; it speaks only of the theft of shares, whilst the thieves also emptied the safes of all the money they contained. It has not been ascertained what is the exact loss the Railway will have to suffer; indeed it is a matter of some difficulty to discover the extent of the frauds, as the thieves have destroyed nearly all the papers which could help to elucidate the precise nature of their proceedings. The amount stolen is estimated to amount to from 30 to 32 millions. The loss will not fall on the Northern Railway alone, as Messrs Rothschild, André, and De Morny will have to bear their share. Carpentier, Grellet, and their accomplices must have been planning the execution of their project for a long time past, for they had already previous to their flight realized large sums, and six months ago purchased a steamer in England for 1,800,000 francs. From papers discovered after their flight it would appear that they have bought a house in New York, which is, perhaps, the reason why they have left England for America. How far back the embezzlements extend is not yet known, although it has been discovered that the fugitives have been selling shares on the money market here for a long time past. In order to be able to produce the proper number of shares when an examination of those left in their care took place, they adopted a very clever artifice. The shares deposited with the administration were kept tied up in packets of 1,000 each, and the thieves with the assistance of some of the subordinate officials, who were all more or less in the swim, abstracted from each of these packets 200 or 300 shares and tied the packets up again. When the examination, which to all appearances was very superficial, took place, the full number of shares was seemingly forthcoming, and the embezzlement remained undetected. In this way the thieves were able to realize a considerable sum before they carried out their grand and final stroke. Carpentier was the first to quit Paris; he had solicited leave of absence for four days from Rothschild, who readily granted the favour. On this occasion Carpentier had a long conversation with Rothschild, with whom it is well known he was a great favourite. Baron James had just done a fine stroke of business and told Carpentier that his winnings amounted to some five millions. 'If,' continued the rich banker, 'my Algerian Railway speculation turns out all right, I hope to add three more millions to my five.' 'Will you put them before or after your five millions?' asked Carpentier; 'will you pocket thirty-five or fifty-three millions? Put them in front, and hand me your five millions, you will still have a nice little sum left for yourself.' Rothschild laughed at the joke, but would not surrender his five millions. 'I cannot give you my five millions, but here, take my chain; it may serve as a friendly souvenir of this day, which has brought me so much pleasure and profit.' The chain was, we need hardly say, of great value, and Carpentier, although he had already provided himself with far greater wealth, did not despise the offer, and sent the chain as a present to his brother before leaving Paris. From the above conversation, which Rothschild communicated to his friends, it will be seen that he and Carpentier were on the most confidential terms. It was Rothschild who had obtained Carpentier his appointment as chief cashier in the Northern Railway Company, and his rage and fury on learning how his protégé had misconducted himself were terrible. He tried every possible means to secure the capture of his ungrateful and dishonest favourite, and when, accompanied by detectives, Monsieur T—— of the Northern Railway started off in pursuit of Carpentier, Rothschild opened an unlimited credit in his agent's favour, saying he was to hesitate at neither expense nor means—that he, Rothschild, would readily give ten millions to get Carpentier in his power. From Paris Carpentier proceeded direct to London, and thence to Liverpool, where the steamer he had purchased was lying. He had her got ready at once and gained the high seas. He there waited for his accomplices to join him. During Carpentier's absence Grellet was placed in charge of the cash. On the day the clerks and workmen of the railway were to be paid, he was not at his post. Information was sent to Rothschild that he had not appeared. Rothschild, who had no suspicions of anything wrong, proceeded to the offices of the Company, and by means of the duplicate keys in his possession opened all the safes, in order to give out the sums required for the payment of the workmen. He opened the small safe, only to find it quite empty. His suspicions were at once aroused, and he ordered the manager to observe strict secrecy, as he would bear all responsibility; he then opened the large safe; that was likewise empty. The loss of shares was not discovered till later. Measures were at once taken to procure the arrest of the thieves, but they had got so good a start that Grellet was able to join Carpentier unmolested. With Grellet and Carpentier, four subordinate officials disappeared; Carpentier likewise took with him his mistress, a Mademoiselle Georgette, who had been living in Paris in a very extravagant style. Carpentier and Grellet are still very young men; the former is fair, looks exceedingly delicate and pale, and appears to be in a consumption. Grellet belongs to a very good family, and has a large private fortune, said to amount to 500,000 francs. The statement that he and Carpentier were driven to their crime by losses on the Stock Exchange and fast living is false; both, on the contrary, led very regular and quiet lives, and, if they lately have been spending money freely, that is only a consequence of their criminal conduct. They were in no way driven to crime; they simply plunged headlong into guilt."

The immense services rendered by Baron James de Rothschild to the State were recognized and rewarded by the Government, who showered upon him titles and decorations of every description. During the reign of Louis XVIII., when the proud aristocracy had its own way in everything, the Baron was not on the most friendly terms with the Government, owing to a slight which he received at their hands. It is said that, as a modest reward for his services, he asked that his wife might be introduced at Court; but, when the haughty Duchesse d'Angoulême was consulted, the favour was refused, as she declared that she was quite scandalized at the suggestion. "It must not be thought of," said she; "you must not forget that the King of France is the most Christian King." However, Baron James punished this narrow-minded prejudice in his own way: during the remainder of the reign he withdrew his support from the King, and quietly declined to aid either financially or by advice a Government swayed by such mean and paltry principles. The revolution of 1830 made amends for the slight he had suffered. He welcomed the new Government, which he supported with all his influence and money, and became on the most intimate and friendly terms with the new Court. He dined regularly every week at the Palais Royal, and the King's sons never failed to be present at the soirées held in the Rue Laffitte. During the reign of Louis Philippe the influence of Baron James was all-powerful; the reign has been called the reign of stock-jobbing and speculation. It was no longer Baron James who had to solicit favours from the aristocracy; it was the aristocracy who sought the patronage and aid of the rich banker. The splendour and luxury of the entertainments given in the Chaussée d'Antin were never equalled by any given by the Court. The banker's house on such occasions was thronged with a crowd of persons distinguished in the diplomatic and financial worlds. To procure an invitation from Baron James was almost more highly thought of and sought for than a presentation at Court. Smarting, perhaps, under the recollection of the snub once given him, Baron James took a delight in humiliating those who now cringed to him. His roughness of manner, and his blunt if not coarse mode of speaking were well known, and many anecdotes of his utter disregard of politeness have been published. The higher the rank of the victim the greater the pleasure Baron James derived from the confusion and pain caused by what he regarded as his blunt and outspoken manners. Sometimes he met his match, and would receive a severe rebuff, but even that only disconcerted him for a moment. Amongst his guests at the Rue Laffitte on one occasion was Prince Paul of Würtemberg, who had honoured him by accepting an invitation for dinner, during which Baron James persisted in disregarding all etiquette and in addressing the Prince in a most annoyingly familiar tone. At first the Prince treated his host's conduct with contemptuous silence, but, as that proved insufficient, he at last rose from the table and left.

A Conservative deputy met Baron James at the Opera, and inquired how he was. "Not so bad." "And the Baroness?" "What concern is that of yours?" replied the Baron, turning his back roughly on the speaker.

Those who suffered most from this objectionable practice of Baron James were artists, journalists, and others, who, being indebted to him for his patronage, hardly felt bold enough to rebuke his unmannerly behaviour. Jadin was painting some frescoes in the dining-room belonging to Baron Salomon de Rothschild, when Baron James entered and caught him accompanying himself in his work by singing and whistling different airs.

"Holloa! you workman with the decoration, come down a bit; I want to speak to you."

Jadin gave no reply, shrugged his shoulders to show his indifference, and continued his singing.

This behaviour naturally created for Baron James many bitter enemies, who lost no opportunity of holding him up to ridicule in the press. No doubt much that was printed to his disadvantage had no better authority than the writer's imagination, but still Baron James's character offered many opportunities of attack to those who wished to irritate and annoy the great banker. There was in Baron James's character a peculiar combination of seemingly opposite and antagonistic qualities. On the one side there was the shrewd man of business, ready to sacrifice thousands, if by so doing he could gain millions; while, on the other, stood his well-known benevolence and charity. True to his keen business instincts, Baron James showed in the most trivial matters an anxiety and a determination always to obtain as cheaply as possible what he bargained for. This niggardly spirit was naturally ridiculed by his calumniators in the press. The story of the gardener Paquet is not unworthy of reproduction here.

By a process little known at that time, but common enough now, Paquet succeeded in obtaining three magnificent peaches in the month of January. All interested in horticulture hastened to inspect such a marvellous proof of his skill, and among the visitors was Baron James. The following conversation then took place between the great gardener and the great millionaire. The story reads so much better in French, that we may be excused for printing it in that language:—

"Fraiment, Monsieur le chartinier," dit-il, "vos bêches sont atmiraples. Gombien en voulez-vous?"

"Quinze cents francs, Monsieur le Baron."

"Bar exemble!"

"C'est tout au juste," dit Paquet. "Je ne voudrais pas vous surfaire."

"Drois bêches, quinze cents vrancs, Mein Gott! Et drois bêches qui beut-être ne falent rien."

"Oh! pour cela, je vous arrête," dit l'horticulteur piqué. "Vous allez avoir immédiatement la preuve du contraire."

He at once plucked one of the peaches, cut it in two, and offered one half to the Baron, whilst he ate the other himself.

"Qu'en dites-vous, Monsieur le Baron? Vous êtes connaisseur; je m'en rapporte à la finesse de votre palais."

"Drès-ponne! Télicieuse!" dit Rothschild croquant la pêche.

"Oui, c'est de la meilleure espèce. Chair ferme, saveur exquise. En plein air, cette espèce-là ne mûrit qu'au commencement de Septembre."

"Foyons, Monsieur le chartinier, ce n'est bas fotre ternier brix?"

"Pardonnez-moi. Quinze cents francs, comme j'ai eu l'honneur de vous le dire."

"Eh," s'écria le juif, "blaisantez-vous? Il y a une bêche te moins!"

"N'importe, c'est toujours quinze cents francs—pour vous, Monsieur le Baron. Ce sont là des fruits de millionaire; je n'en rabattrai pas un centime."

Rothschild finally bought the peaches, when the meaning of the gardener's conduct became clear to him.

The well-known anecdote of Vernet the painter did not end so pleasantly for the Baron. When he called and inquired how much the painter would charge to execute his portrait, he was told—

"For you, Monsieur le Baron, it will be four thousand francs."

"The devil! It will cost you only two or three hasty strokes from your brush. Come, now, that strikes me as being rather dear."

"Ah, you deal in the arts, do you?" exclaimed the artist, with a shrug of his shoulders. "Ah, well, it will be four thousand francs, not a centime less." And, when Rothschild manifested his surprise, the painter continued: "If you add another word it will be three times the sum. Am I to paint it or not?"

Baron James hastened to quit the studio, apparently alarmed at being in company with one who was, he believed, perfectly mad.

"Wait a moment!" cried the artist after him, "I will do your portrait for nothing."

And he kept his word. In his picture called "La Smala" can be seen a hideous-looking Jew, running away with a casket of jewels and money, his face expressive of the most sordid avarice and ill-concealed fright. That portrait is a gross caricature of Baron James de Rothschild.

However illiberal he was in matters of business, Baron James could display bounteous liberality on occasions when his business instincts were not touched. But even his immense and well-known beneficence was misconstrued and attributed to interested motives, owing to the belief that a man could not be so lavish in his gifts who was known to be so close in his every-day conduct. For many years the greatest suspicion and disbelief of the purely disinterested nature of the Baron's charity prevailed among the public, and this opinion was fostered and encouraged by the vile calumnies printed in the press. In 1847, Baron James, foreseeing the distress and want likely to result from the poor harvest of 1846, took energetic measures to provide a remedy for the evil. He bought, in the European and American markets, prodigious quantities of corn, which he afterwards sold at an immense loss in Paris. An enormous bakery was started in the Chapelle Saint-Denis, where the starving poor were able to procure bread at a large reduction. But the most generous plans, the most charitable projects, prove abortive when they emanate from the brain of a man in bad odour with the public. No trust was put in the good nature of the great Jew; the most violent diatribes appeared in the papers every day, telling the public to be on its guard; that his bread was not bread at all; that his flour was not flour. It was bran; it was plaster, mixed with arsenic. Others asserted that Baron James had bought large quantities of damaged flour and that he concealed its bad quality by mixing with it sweet almonds, his calumniators quietly ignoring the fact that sweet almonds are far more costly than the best flour. In addition to the enormous sacrifices made in supplying corn to the distressed population, Baron

James, in 1848, subscribed no less than fifty thousand francs in aid of the wounded and the unemployed workmen. This was certainly a display of the most liberal generosity, seeing that he had himself much to fear from the excesses of the excited populace during the outbreak of the revolution. It must have been an anxious time for him as he learnt of the excesses of the mob, every moment expecting it would be his turn to receive a visit from them. But among those having influence and control over them was Marc Caussidière, who was not unmindful of the charitable munificence of Baron James. By his orders guards were stationed not only round the hotel, but also round the suburban villas of Baron James, whose anxiety was relieved by the grateful thoughtfulness of the citizen. Less than a year after, Baron James proved that he was capable of appreciating the admirable conduct of Caussidière, who, when he reached London, an exile and a beggar, received the following note from Paris:—

"SIR,

"Allow me to place at your disposal the sum of thirty thousand francs. This little capital will enable you to start some business in the hard land of exile. You may return it to me in ten, twenty, or any number of years you please. It is a feeble testimony of my gratitude for the great services you have rendered the country.

"I am, &c. &c.,

"ROTHSCHILD."

Even this display of gratitude was reported to be owing to prudential and selfish motives, for it is asserted the Baron said: "The devil is never conquered; who knows but that he may return?" It is, however, satisfactory to learn that these thirty thousand francs paved the way to Caussidière's fortune, as he started a wine and brandy business, which eventually proved very lucrative.

If all the stories related of him be true, Baron James displayed remarkable skill in being charitable at the expense of others. He was frequently reproached with his disregard of, and want of sympathy with, his co-religionists in misfortune, and it was suggested to him that he might at least give them the benefit of some Stock Exchange operation. The hint was taken: a manœuvre was carried out one fine morning to effect a rise in the market and was followed almost immediately by a fall which enabled the Baron to make a profit of 850,000 francs, which sum he devoted to the construction of the Jewish Home in the Rue Picpus.

On another occasion he granted an interview to Felix S——, a man of considerable talent, who laid before him the plan of a vast undertaking, which as Baron James acknowledged appeared both novel and ingenious as well as possessed of every quality necessary to secure its success. But, although entertaining so favourable an opinion of the scheme, he positively declined to embark any money to float it. He said, however, "Follow me, and the capital will soon be forthcoming." He then made his visitor enter his carriage and drove to the Bourse, where they walked up and down, arm in arm, together. They had scarcely separated ere several capitalists hastened to surround the man honoured with the friendship of the king of finance, and after an explanation they assured him of their readiness to support him both by their influence and their capital.

Heine, in referring to his friend and patron, thus described Baron James de Rothschild: "He was a remarkable personage, whose financial abilities I do not pretend to analyze, but they must have been considerable, if their results are any criterion to go by. He possessed the peculiar gift or instinct of observation, by which he was enabled to discover the capacities of other people in every sphere of life. Many persons have on this account compared him to Louis XIV., and truly, in contrast to his colleagues who surround themselves with a generality of mediocrity, Baron James was always to be seen on the most intimate footing with the notabilities of every rank and station. He always knew who was the best man in any business, even if that business was a mystery to him. Though he probably possessed little knowledge of music, Rossini was his constant companion; Ary Scheffer was his family painter; Caréme was his cook. He certainly understood not a word of Greek, and yet the Hellenist Latrone was the scholar whom he favoured mostly. His physician was the genial Dupuytren, and the most brotherly affection existed between them. At an early date he duly appreciated the worth and ability of Cremieux, whom he found to be a trusty advocate. At the very outset he recognized the political abilities of Louis Philippe, and was always on confidential terms with that great master of the arts of diplomacy."

Baron James de Rothschild died on the 15th November, 1868.

The present head of the firm in Paris is Baron Alphonse de Rothschild, the eldest son of Baron James. He inherits much of his father's financial talent, and is acknowledged by the rest of his relatives as the shrewdest and most able man of business among them. He is the head of the family not only on account of his ability, but also on account of his seniority, as he is the oldest of Mayer Amschel Rothschild's grandsons. For some years before his father's death he took an active part in the conduct of the firm's business, whence we may infer that he is indebted to the careful training he then received for much of the remarkable skill he has since displayed in operations of the greatest magnitude. All grand international loans, i.e., loans issued on behalf of a particular Government in several countries simultaneously,—are invariably submitted first to Baron Alphonse, as he is known to be the best judge of the time and conditions most conducive to the success of such undertakings. The number of loans issued under Baron Alphonse's management is large and embraces almost every nationality in Europe. The good fortune attending these financial operations is proved by the numerous decorations and orders which he has received from the hands of monarchs anxious to recognize the obligations they feel they owe to the head of the Rothschild family. The business of the Paris firm is by far the largest and most extensive of all the Rothschild firms; it embraces not only loan operations, but commercial speculations and undertakings of every description. Its banking business is enormous, and in this respect it differs from its colleagues in London, Frankfort, and Vienna, whose business is more purely mercantile, or limited to bill discounting and Stock Exchange operations. The most responsible undertaking of the Paris firm under Baron Alphonse's management was the payment of the indemnities to Germany at the conclusion of the Franco-German War. This immense operation called into play all the resources and energies of the Rothschild family and its allies. The mere anxiety and mental labour connected with this vast undertaking would have prostrated any man of inferior calibre. For months Baron Alphonse and his clerks worked incessantly day after day, Sundays included, to almost midnight. The strain on the brain and the constitution was fearful; many even now feel the effects of this trying period. Great as was the anxiety connected with this business, Baron Alphonse no doubt considered it nothing in comparison with that which the lawlessness and violence of the Commune inspired. To curry favour with the mob, Baron Alphonse was compelled to serve, as he had done in 1848, as a volunteer on the ramparts. But even that did not render the property of his family secure from the attacks of the petrolists. More than one of the mansions belonging to members of the family were invaded and despoiled by bands of those wretched fanatics. In one instance the house had been besmeared and sprinkled with petroleum with a view to its being set on fire, but the presence of mind displayed by the butler averted this catastrophe. He hinted to the unwelcome visitors that the cellars contained a large stock of the finest wines; the hint was acted upon at once, and ere long the butler had the satisfaction of seeing the whole of the ruffianly crew in a state of intoxication. He then sent to the military for aid, the result being that the petrolists were all carried off to pay the penalty of their wanton deeds. Baron Alphonse, in common with his fellow citizens, found that much greater harm was to be expected from the enemies of order living within the walls of Paris than they had ever reason to dread from the shells of the invading Germans. During the siege, the Rothschilds felt no very serious apprehension, seeing that they had secured the safety of the bulk of their property by transferring it to the care of their relatives in London or elsewhere. To them even the privations of the siege were mitigated, as they were able, thanks to their influence with both the German and French staff, to pass convoys of provisions through the lines. It is well known that the utmost care was taken by the Germans that no injury should be done to Baron Alphonse's château at Ferrières. This château was made the German head-quarters. It was here that Jules Ferry came to arrange the terms of the capitulation with Prince Bismarck and the Prussian generals. The strictest orders were given respecting the preservation of the building. None of the furniture, nor any of the valuable paintings and sculptures were allowed to be displaced or removed. It was even forbidden to shoot any of the game in the park without special permission. This act of favour gave rise to a certain amount of grumbling and heartburning among the German soldiers. Provisions, especially meat, were none too plentiful in the German lines, and it was not considered just to let the troops want, simply to confer a favour on one whom all regarded as an enemy. In their advance to Paris the soldiers had been allowed to seize cattle and sheep, but now, with the prospect of a long siege, they were to suffer hunger when plenty was before their mouths. Nothing could demonstrate more clearly the immense influence commanded by the Rothschilds, than this scrupulous regard shown by the Germans in preventing the spoliation of their property. But, however safe his property outside Paris may have been, it was different with that inside, and Baron Alphonse knew little peace of mind as long as the siege and the Commune lasted. So intense was the anxiety he suffered during this trying period, that his hair, from being jet-black, was turned to grey in a single night. Since the war France has been blessed with peace, which has greatly contributed to the re-establishment of her fallen fortunes. How long this will continue we cannot say, as she seems ordained to suffer from internal troubles at certain intervals.

Chapter X.

ROTHSCHILDIANA.

IN the foregoing pages we have endeavoured to present the reader with a clear insight into the characters of the heads of the different firms by means of a number of anecdotes which are both more effective and more entertaining than mere description. The anecdotes already given we have good reason to consider authentic, but there are many others which are undoubtedly the creation of lively imaginations, and have little foundation in fact. The Rothschilds have so long held a prominent place in public affairs, their sayings and doings have been so closely watched and reported, that it is not surprising to find that innumerable tales have been published about them. A large number of the anecdotes are, as we have stated, quite unreliable, still there are some so highly characteristic, that it is difficult to believe them entirely devoid of truth. This state of things was somewhat embarrassing. We were at first inclined to omit all anecdotes about the authenticity of which we did not feel confident, but, as their perusal is pretty sure to afford some amusement, we have, on second thoughts, deemed it our duty to bring them together in a separate chapter, without pledging ourselves in any way for their truthfulness. With this reservation we submit the following stories to our readers, who can decide whether we were justified or not in our course of procedure.

Baron Anselm von Rothschild on one occasion lost a ring which he prized very highly, not on account of its intrinsic value, but because it had been given him by the Emperor of Austria in recognition of the valuable services rendered by the family to the imperial monarchy. The Baron offered a reward of three hundred and fifty florins a year to the person who should restore the cherished ring. The daughter of a humble publican proved to be the lucky individual. She presented herself with great humility at the residence of the wealthy financier, who recognized the article with demonstrations of the liveliest pleasure, and caused five hundred florins to be paid the girl in advance, though that was something beyond the amount of the annuity. He also gave instructions for a bond to be drawn up to secure the regular payment of the allowance in future. Having received her recompense, the girl ran home to her parents, in order that they might share in her happiness and good fortune. The old people could scarcely believe that their daughter had received so handsome a reward for the discovery of an article of such little value. After some consideration they concluded that, rather than wait for the annual allowance, it would be more advantageous to obtain a lump sum down, as they might thereby be enabled to purchase the house in which they lived. The girl returned to Rothschild, who received her very affably, and, having learnt her object, was pleased to give her the sum of seven thousand florins in ready money in lieu of the promised annuity.

Dr Busch, the biographer of Prince Bismarck, records, in his well-known work "Our Chancellor," an amusing anecdote of Baron Anselm, which deserves reproduction in these pages. He says :— "At dinner, at which were Marshal of the Household Perponcher, and a Herr von Thadden, who was designated as a member of the administration in Rheims, the Chief told several good anecdotes of Baron Rothschild in Frankfort. On one occasion he had spoken in his presence with a corn merchant about a sale of wheat, when the merchant said to Rothschild, that being so rich a man he would never think it necessary to put the highest price on his wheat. 'What rich man do you mean?' replied the old gentleman; 'is my wheat worth less because I am a rich man?' He used to give dinners sometimes which were quite worthy of his great riches. I remember once when the present King was in Frankfort I invited him to dinner. Later in the day Rothschild also asked His Majesty to dine with him, to which His Majesty replied, that he must settle matters with me; for his own part he did not care with which of us he dined. The Baron now came and proposed that I should cede His Majesty to him, and that I should join them at dinner. I refused this, and he had the naïveté to suggest that his dinner might be sent to my house, although he could not eat with us, as he partook of only strictly Jewish fare. This proposal also I begged leave to decline—naturally, though his dinner, doubtless, was better than mine.—Old Metternich, who, by the way, was very kind to me, told me that once when he had been visiting Rothschild, the Baron gave him some luncheon to eat on the way back to Johannisberg. With the luncheon were packed six bottles of Johannisberg wine. When Johannisberg (Metternich's estate) was reached, these bottles were taken out unopened. The Prince then sent for his wine steward and inquired how much that wine cost him a bottle. 'Twelve guldens,' was the answer. 'Well, take these bottles, and the next order you get from Baron Rothschild, send them back to him, but charge him fifteen guldens, for they will then be older.'"

Dining on one occasion with Baron James de Rothschild of Paris, Eugène Delacroix kept his eyes turned upon his host in so marked a manner that when the company rose to leave the dining-room Baron James could not help asking his guest what it was that so attracted his attention. The painter confessed that for some time past he had vainly sought a head to serve as a model for that of a beggar he intended to hold a prominent position in a painting on which he was then engaged, and that, as he gazed at his host's features, the idea suddenly struck him that the very head he so much desired was there before him. With this explanation, he ventured to ask whether the Baron would do him the favour to sit to him as a beggar. Rothschild, being a great admirer of the art in all its forms, and pleased to be considered one of its chief patrons, readily consented to sit in a character probably never before assumed by a millionaire. The next day found him at the painter's studio. Delacroix placed a tunic round his shoulders, put a stout staff in his hand, and made him pose as if he were resting on the steps of an ancient Roman temple. In this attitude he was discovered by one of the artist's favourite pupils, who alone had free access to the studio at all times. Struck by the life-like excellence of the model, the newcomer congratulated his master at having at last found exactly what he wanted. Naturally concluding the model had only just been brought in from some church porch, and never dreaming the character assumed by him was far from his true one, he seized an opportunity when his master's eyes were turned to slip a piece of money into the beggar's hand. Rothschild thanked him with a look, and kept the money. The pupil soon quitted the studio.

In answer to inquiries made, Delacroix stated that the young man possessed great talent but no means; that he had, in fact, to earn his livelihood by giving lessons in painting and drawing. Shortly afterwards the young fellow received a letter stating that charity bears interest, and that the accumulated interest on the amount he had so generously given to one whom he supposed to be a beggar was represented by the sum of 10,000 francs, which were lying at his disposal at the office in the Rue Laffitte.

Amongst the endless number of rich and handsome articles Baron James had diligently collected, his guests seldom failed to be struck with admiration by a magnificent porcelain service, of singular beauty and design, and remarkable for the superb paintings which adorned its exterior. The history attached to the acquisition of this service is as singular as its beauty. One day an old man, feeble, decrepit, and to all appearance on the verge of the grave, solicited an interview with the Baron. At the very outset the old man's careworn looks and destitute condition awoke the latter's lively sympathy, and this sympathy was strengthened on learning that his visitor was a co-religionist. The old man produced from a bag a plate of such exquisite design and finish, that Baron James, with the instinctive envy of a virtuoso, felt he must at any cost become the owner of such an artistic treasure. After stating he was in a most destitute condition, the visitor proceeded to say that want had compelled him to part with many articles which he had regarded as heirlooms. The plate, he declared, belonged to a service which he had reserved to the last, hoping against hope that necessity would never compel him to part with it, but alas! the time had come when the claims of his starving family could be stopped only by relinquishing possession of this, the last resource against famine.

"I come to offer this service to you, M. le Baron, thinking that so beautiful a work of art can find a fitting resting-place only in the midst of your well-known collection. Will you buy it?"

"It is indeed beautiful; what do you ask for it?"

"Look you, sir," said his visitor, "I am now an old man, bowed down with years, and have not long to live. I am poor, but I wish if possible to end the few remaining years of my life as comfortably as I can. Will you, in exchange for this valuable porcelain service, give me an allowance for life of one hundred francs a month? It is a trifle to you, and I am so old!"

The Baron reflected a moment, examined the plate afresh, and at length answered: "Well, be it so; here is the first payment; send me the service, and leave me your name and address, that the money may be sent to you regularly."

The porcelain service was duly delivered. A month later, as the Baron was sitting in his office, a man entered, and claimed payment of the allowance then due. The new-comer was young, stoutly made, of a vigorous constitution, and likely to live for another fifty years.

"But you are not the man to whom I promised the allowance!" said the Baron.

"Excuse me, I am indeed the man."

"But he was at least eighty years of age."

"You are mistaken, I am but thirty."

"But your aged appearance and careworn looks were certainly unmistakable."

"Thanks to your great generosity, my recovery has been rapid and surprising."

The Baron smiled at the remark, and gave orders for the payment of the money, exclaiming as he did so:—

"Ah! you are an excellent comedian, and have taken me in completely."

"You flatter me; I am probably the first who has done so," answered the Jew, politely bowing to the millionaire.

Strange as were the circumstances and terms on which the service was bought, Baron James had little reason to repent of his bargain.

This reference to objects of art reminds us of another anecdote, of which, if we remember rightly, Baron Alphonse was the subject. On one occasion he started out for a walk, and presently found himself in the district immediately behind the Pantheon. As the neighbourhood was quite strange to him, he soon lost himself. No cabs or omnibus were to be seen anywhere, nor did anyone pass of whom he could inquire his way. At first the situation rendered him somewhat nervous, but presently, when he thought of the strange novelty such a predicament was to him, he became reassured, and laughed in anticipation at the amusement the adventure would afford him. He therefore continued to walk on without troubling himself as to his whereabouts. Presently he passed a shop for the sale of second-hand goods, and his quick eye caught sight among the rubbish of an article which struck him as worth inspection. It proved to be an antique barometer of the time of Louis XVI. It bore no trace of its original gilding, although the carving was still in a perfect state of preservation. Being a good judge of such things, and an ardent collector, the Baron determined to buy it. The price asked was ten francs, and the Baron congratulated himself on having secured so great a bargain. On putting his hand into his pocket, he discovered that in his hurry he had forgotten to bring his purse with him. It was a day of accidents.

"Well, it does not matter; I will take the barometer at all events," he said to the shopkeeper. "Send it up to my hôtel; I am Baron Rothschild; you will receive the money when you deliver the barometer."

"I do not know either your name or address, sir, nor do I ever send things out that are not previously paid for."

This was a startling rebuff for Baron Rothschild. It was a perfectly novel experience to meet with anyone ignorant of his great name. Being, however, in a good humour and regarding it as part of the day's adventure, he was only the more amused.

He was about to explain who and what he was, when he happened to notice a porter passing on the opposite side of the road. Beckoning to the man, he asked him: "Have you ever heard of Baron Rothschild?"

"Well, that is a queer question! Heard of Baron Rothschild? Of course I have; but why do you inquire?" said the man, somewhat crossly, as if he suspected his interlocutor was jesting.

"Because madame here has just refused to trust him for ten francs," was the reply.

"Is that really true, Madame Duclos?" said the porter, in great astonishment.

"Yes, to be sure, Monsieur Pierre; one cannot know everybody," answered the shopwoman with a shrug, "but I know you, and if you will become guarantee ——"

At these words the Baron interrupted the woman with such a hearty burst of laughter that it was some minutes before he could recover himself.

"Well, Monsieur Pierre," he said, still laughing, "if you will kindly become surety for me, will you go and call a cab, and then we can take the barometer home."

The porter required no second bidding; he hastened off and soon returned with the cab. They then drove to the Baron's house, where the porter received a handsome reward for his exertions.

Attempts to ruin the Rothschilds as well as to frustrate and wreck the operations undertaken by them have frequently been made by persons jealous of their extraordinary success. It is needless to say that all such attempts have signally failed. At the outset luck has sometimes favoured these bold but reckless opponents, but it has been owing to the sufferance of the Rothschilds, who, conscious of the enormous power at their command, knew they could crush their upstart rivals at any moment they pleased. Such attempts would be more common were it not known that the only chance of rendering them successful would be to operate on as extensive a scale as that habitually adopted by the great financiers. One of the boldest of these would-be rivals was a Mr James H——, who bought and sold enormous amounts of stock in a very brief period, and, so far from imitating the secrecy marking Rothschild's operations, deemed it essential to the success of his scheme that all his dealings should be done as publicly as possible. He was the son of a wealthy country banker, and at the time he commenced speculating on 'Change had £50,000 stock inscribed in his name, though the stock was really his father's. The reputation of owning so large an amount of stock was very useful on 'Change, as it conferred upon him and his transactions an importance which would otherwise have been wanting. After some time had elapsed the stock was transferred back into his father's name. At the outset, and until he had perfectly mastered all the rules and usages of the House, he acted with the greatest prudence and discretion, confining himself to transactions of a very humble nature. Gradually he enlarged his operations, and the "natives," as the members of the House were called, began to look upon the boldness of his dealings with mingled surprise and admiration. Success attending his speculations, he was watched and followed in them by a crowd of persons such as will always hang about a successful man. He became a power on 'Change; bulls and bears alike dreaded him, for he was as independent in his dealings as Rothschild himself.

Consols, at the time of which we are writing, were quoted at about 96. A few months later symptoms of a panic set in, and the unfavourable tendency of the market was aggravated by the fulminations hurled, for reasons best known to himself, by a well-known writer on money matters against the Bank of England. In spite, however, of these adverse circumstances, prices showed a decided unwillingness to fall. Mr H—— studied the state of the market closely, and, being convinced in his own mind that a leader alone was wanted to carry on a successful war against the Rothschilds, determined that he himself would be that leader. He at once began his attack by selling out £200,000 Consols at 96. This operation concluded, he advertised it well, and made known his willingness to sell £1,000,000 more. Purchasers were found for the whole at prices varying from 94 to 90, at which price Consols closed for the day. The next day he resumed his tactics to depress the market, and so successful were they that Consols closed at about 84. As might have been expected, a run on the Bank of England took place, simultaneously with this sudden and unlooked-for fall in the price of Consols. He then repurchased so largely that when a reaction set in and prices recovered, his gains amounted to more than £100,000. But the rivalry of Mr H—— did not long continue to trouble Rothschild. Emboldened by the success of his first effort, he tried to repeat his attack two years later, and even on a larger scale. Rothschild, however, had his eyes about him, and, divining his rival's plans, laid a trap into which that rival fell. The result was that Mr H—— was utterly ruined. He was declared a defaulter and his name stuck up on the black board of the Stock Exchange. Then, and not till then, was it discovered that the £50,000 stock was not his own, as had been supposed, but his father's.

At a charitable sale, held in 1858, at the Hôtel Lambert in Paris, by the Princess Czartariska, in favour of the distressed Poles, an incident took place between Georges Sand and Baron Rothschild. Madame Dudevant (Georges Sand) had a stall on the occasion, and displayed a number of fancy articles for sale. Baron Rothschild happened to pass, and the fair saleswoman addressed him with the usual request to buy something. "What am I to buy?" said the Baron; "you have nothing at all suitable for me. But stay—an idea strikes me. Give me your autograph. Sell me that." Madame Dudevant took a sheet of paper and wrote upon it as follows:—"Received from Baron Rothschild the sum of one thousand francs, for the benefit of the distressed Poles.—Georges Sand." Baron Rothschild read it, thanked her, and, handing her a note for the amount named, went away highly gratified.

It is well known that the life-long ambition of all true Americans is to do Europe before they die, and none can vie with them in the thoroughness with which they do do the sights and places of interest they may happen to visit. Their curiosity is insatiable, and is only equalled by their irresistible determination to satisfy it at all costs. No false modesty deters them from questioning strangers. They will accost the first man they meet, if they think he can remove their doubts or add to their knowledge. The following account, written by an American, confirms our statement, and explains itself:—

"When I arrived in England I set myself to work to accomplish the object of my journey—to see all that I could; and in doing so I attracted much attention. I made many acquaintances, and was told by them that I was the best representative of my nation they had ever seen. In curiosity, and a determination to gratify that feeling I think

I was. I spared no pains to see all the sights and hear all the gossip that came in my way. This characteristic at last brought me into an awkward predicament, which I purpose to describe in the following anecdote. One morning, while I was in London, I started out for a walk. I had heard a great deal about the famous place which the Rothschilds were building, and I sallied forth on this particular morning for the purpose of seeing it. I soon reached it; and through the kindness of the master builder was shown over it. I had finished my inspection, and was standing on the side walk gazing at it with undisguised admiration, when I noticed a gentleman a few feet from me, watching the building. He was a fat, portly old fellow, with a good-humoured face, in spite of his haughty look, and I thought from his appearance he might be the contractor for the work, so I determined to accost him and gain what information I could.

"'Good morning, sir,' I said, approaching him. He bowed politely, but without speaking.

"'I am a stranger here,' I went on; 'I have been looking over this building, and I would like to ask you for some information concerning it.'

"'I shall be happy to oblige you,' said he, politely. He was very kind in telling me much that was of interest. At last I said, abruptly,

"'I suppose you have seen Rothschild, sir?'

"'Which one?' he asked.

"'The old cock,' I replied.

"'I see the old cock every day,' he answered, giving me a strange glance.

"'By George,' I went on, 'I should like to have a look at him! People say he is a gay old chap, and lives high. I wish I had him in my power—I'd not let him get away until he had shelled out a pile of his money.'

"The old gentleman burst out into a laugh.

"'Baron Rothschild had to work for his money, and deserves to enjoy it,' he said, at length, when he had got over his merriment.

"'May be so,' I remarked; 'but I reckon he did a heap of squeezing to get it.'

"The old man's face flushed.

"'I never heard the honesty of the house called in question,' he said, stiffly.

"'Didn't you? Well, to tell you the truth, neither have I. But I wouldn't be surprised if I'm right, after all.' The old man's face grew as black as a thunder-cloud, and he bit his lip without speaking.

"'People tell me,' I continued, not heeding this, for I thought it natural that the old fellow should be annoyed at anything said against his employers, 'people tell me the Rothschilds have made two fortunes. Now, as most people can make only one, I feel somewhat interested to learn the manner in which this was done. Can you tell me, sir?'

"The old man's face brightened instantly, and he replied, smilingly, with more politeness than he had as yet manifested:—

"'Certainly, sir. People do say the house of Rothschilds made one fortune by being careful to mind their own business, and the other by letting that of others alone. Good morning, sir.'

"With an elegant bow he turned and left me staring at him in blank amazement. I began to smell a rat, and I looked for someone of whom to ask the old gentleman's name. He had stopped at the upper end of the building, and was giving some directions to a workman. I saw a handsome man of about thirty standing a short distance off. He, too, was looking at the building. I liked his face and went up to him.

"'Excuse me for troubling you, sir,' I said, 'but I am a stranger in this country, and would like to ask you a question.'

"'I shall be happy to give you any information in my power,' he said, politely.

"'Then can you tell me the name of that old gentleman,' I asked, pointing to my sarcastic acquaintance.

"'Certainly,' he replied. 'That is Baron Rothschild, the head of the house of that name.'

"'Whew!' I exclaimed in astonishment, 'I've got myself into a scrape then.'

"'What is the matter?' asked my friend, curiously.

"I told him what had occurred between the Baron and myself. He laughed heartily, and remarked pleasantly when I had concluded:

"'That was awkward.'

"'He's a crusty old chap,' I said, considerably vexed; 'he's as cross as a bear.'

"'Oh, that's only his way,' replied my companion. 'He is a good, kind-hearted man, but is rather eccentric.'

"'I should say so,' I replied.

"The gentleman asked me a great many questions concerning America, and seemed interested and amused by my answers.

"'Do you know Baron Rothschild?' I inquired, at length.

"'I have met him several times,' was the reply, 'and I have an appointment to wait upon him to-day.'

"'Then I wish you'd say to him,' I went on, 'that I did not know to whom I was talking this morning, or I would not have said so much; and that he need not have been so huffish about it.'

"'I will do so,' said my acquaintance, laughing. 'You must not mind him. He was a little nettled at it, but will be the first to laugh at the adventure when he recovers his good humour. Good morning.'

"With a bow and a pleasant smile he left me. Just then a workman passed by. I stopped him and asked if he could tell me the name of the gentleman who had just left me.

"'That was one of the younger Rothschilds,' he said, 'and——'

"I waited to hear no more, but, pulling my hat down over my eyes, set off at once for my lodgings. I was absolutely afraid to speak to a stranger for a week, for fear he might be a Rothschild."

CHISWICK PRESS:—C. WHITTINGHAM AND CO. TOOKS COURT, CHANCERY LANE.

HG
1552
R8R3
1887a

Reeves, John
The Rothschilds

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

world governance rothschild

The Rothschild Group is the largest private banking group in the world in continuous single family ownership. The Group is today active in five major areas: Investment Management, Banking, Investment Banking, global privatisation advice, and dealing in Gold Bullion. (SOURCE: www.excellence.co.il)

Rothschild Group

Rothschild family

Chairman

Israel Corp. (IC) is one of Israel's major holding companies, playing a pivotal role in privatization and the development of key industries. IC's main activities are focused on chemicals, shipping, oil and energy, advanced technology and communications.
http://www.israelcorp.com/Shareholders
The Ofer Group - 59.88%
Bank Leumi Le Israel - 20%

Leumi Bank

Israel Corporation

Israel

41,7

Israel Aircraft Industries

http://www.iai.co.il
Over the years IAI has applied the skills and experience it has acquired in catering to Israel's security needs, in order to capitalize on opportunities in export markets. As a result, the Company has become a world leader in aircraft conversion and modernization programs, unmanned air vehicles (UAVs), communication programs and defense electronics. Space is Israel's latest area of leadership, with the development of the Ofeq observation satellite, the AMOS communications satellite and the Shavit launcher.

Excellence Investments Limited

E. de Rothschild Invest. services Ltd (Israel)

Jimmy J. Pinto

Since 1882, and for several decades thereafter, the first Baron Edmond de Rothschild, universally known in Israel as the "Father of the Settlement" or the "Well-known Benefactor", pioneered and single-handedly promoted the settlement and development of what became modern Israel.
Since Israel's independence, the second Baron Edmond de Rothschild actively participated in the creation and initial development of a modern economy for the new state, starting some major enterprises such as the Israel Corporation and financing others, either directly or indirectly through Israel General Bank, a local bank largely owned and by the Edmond de Rothschild Group.

Compagnie Financiere E. D. ROTHSCHILD BANQUE

Actuellement, la Banque détient un capital sous gestion d'environ EUR 3 milliards, dont la moitié sont des mandats de gestion discrétionnaire. L'autre moitié est représentée par des mandats de gestion conseil et gestion externe. En outre, la Banque administre un capital de EUR 9 milliards, dont la quasi-totalité est représentée par des fonds d'investissement de promoteurs externes. La Banque Privée Edmond de Rothschild Luxembourg est classée (au Luxembourg) quatrième plus grande banque à l'administration de fonds, avec plus de 350 fonds et sous-fonds. La Banque est membre fondateur de CCLux, fournisseur d'information financière à Luxembourg, et membre fondateur de l'ALFI, l'association des fonds d'investissement à Luxembourg.

controle

Compagnie Financiere SAINT-HONORE

Groupe LCF Rothschild

Banque Privée Edmond de Rothschild Luxembourg

Banque Privée Edmond de Rothschild Genève

Leicom Fund

Settlement Funds

Association of Jewish Refugees
http://www.ajr.org.uk/
Barclays and J P Morgan are to pay compensation for their role in operating with the Vichy and occupational authorities to plunder systematically the bank accounts, safe deposit boxes and other valuables of their Jewish clients both before, and in accordance with, antisemitic laws passed in France during WWII.
The banks have created Settlement Funds totalling US$ 6,362,500, with more than half contributed by Barclays. Separate funds will be established to pay administrative and legal costs. Claims are also admissible in respect of assets held with the predecessors of Barclays and J P Morgan, including Rothschild Freres, Morgan et Cie and some branches of Lloyds Bank. Submission of claims is not dependent on documentary proof. Claims will be valued by converting to US$ the balance as at 1940 and then calculating its equivalent as at 1999 - for Barclays claimants - and as at 2000 for J P Morgan claimants. Following a fairness hearing to be held later this year, potential claimants will have until 30 September 2002 to submit applications. Then, and not earlier, claims will be assessed and awards made. For an application form or further information, telephone 0800 169 8318 (free) or access the Internet at www.barclaysfrenchclaims.org or www.jpmorganfrenchclaims.org

Eric de Rothschild

22,5

9,7

Chairman

Rothschild Bank AG

Subsidiary

Equitas

Rothschild private Trust Holding

Worms

75

orton (1962) noted that the Rothschild wealth was estimated at over $6 billion US in 1850. Not a significant amount in today's dollars; however, consider the potential future value compounded over 147 years!
Taking $6 billion (and assuming no erosion of the wealth base) and compounding that figure at various returns on investment (a conservative range of 4% to 8%) would suggest the following net worth of the Rothschild family enterprise:
To give these figures some perspective consider these benchmarks:
$1.9 trillion US (@ 4%)
$7.8 trillion US (@ 5%)
$31.5 trillion US (@ 6%)
$125,189.1 trillion US (@ 7%)
$491,409.0 trillion US (@ 8%)
A little of $300 billion US buys every ounce of gold in every central bank in the world (see John Kutyn's estimate
U.S. M3 money supply August 1997 was $5.2 trillion
U.S. debt is currently $5.4 trillion.
U.S. GDP (1997; 2nd Q.) is $8.03 trillion.
George Soros' empire is worth an estimated $20 billion.

Siftology Inc

Selis Networks Inc.

The Company has leveraged its patented techniques and know-how in the area of NLP (Natural Language Processing) to develop the RelatedTV product line, an automated enrichment tool for content producers, broadcasters and OEMs.

Cie Financiere Holding Benjamin & Edmond de Rothschild

Edmond de Rothschild Venture Capital Ltd

ROTHSCHILD FUND MANAGEMENT AG

Executive board:
Winfried Kilp, Generaldirektor, VR
Dr. Graziano Lusenti, Generaldirektor, VR
Dr. François Rayroux, VR
www.rothschildbank.com

Worms

Brown

100

JP Morgan Chase & Co.

1,8

12,6

21

3

Deutsche Bank AG

DAIMLER CHRYSLER

Bskyb

news corp

BNP PARIBAS

139, 640shares

Li Ka Shing

Hutchison Whampoa

152,400 shares

fidelity

Panama Canal

1. Company in which shares are held : Royal & Sun Alliance Ins Group
2. Notifiable Interest: Ordinary Shares
A. FMR Corp.
B. Fidelity International Limited (FIL)
3. The notifiable interests also comprise the notifiable interest of: Mr. Edward C. Johnson 3d, Principal shareholder of FMR Corp. and Fidelity International Limited.

Duly authorized under Powers of Attorney dated December 30, 1997, by and on behalf of FMR Corp. and its direct and indirect subsidiaries, and Fidelity International Limited and its direct and indirect subsidiaries.
Schedule A
Security: Royal & Sun Alliance Ins Group

1 - Fidelity International Limited (FIL)
2 - FMR Corp.
3 - Fidelity Investment Services Ltd. (FISL)
4 - Fidelity Pension Management (FPM)

MANAGEMENT COMPANY	NOMINEE/REGISTERED NAME
FMRCO	Chase Nominees Limited
FMRCO	State Street Nominees Limited
76,000 FMRCO	HSBC
FMTC	Brown Brothers Harriman
FISL	Clydesdale Bank (Head Office)
	Nominees Limited
FPM	RBS Trust Bank
FPM	Nortrust Nominees Ltd
FPM	Bank of New York Europe
229,200 FPM	Citibank
FPM	Chase Nominees Ltd
FPM	Northern Trust
215,200 FPM	HSBC
FPM	Deutsche Bank
FPM	Mellon Nominees Ltd
63,422,927 FIL	HSBC Client Hold. Nominee (UK) Ltd
MSS	Nominees Ltd
FIL	RBS Trust Bank
FIL	Nortrust Nominees Ltd
FIL	Bankers Trust
FIL	Citibank
FIL	Bank of New York london
FIL	Northern Trust
FIL	Chase Nominees Ltd
FIL	Chase Manhattan Bank London
402,700 FIL	BNP Paribas
43,800 FIL	Deutsche
421,100 FIL	State Street Nominees Ltd

Total Ordinary Shares 131,138,586
Current ownership percentage: 9.11%
(Source : letter from Fidelity Investments dated 24 September 2002 to Royal & Sun Alliance Insurance Group plc, http://www.nothing-ventured.com/news/regnews.asp?ArticleID=758870

9,11

Rothschild investment trust cp

andrew S. B. Knight

Board

Rothschild Freres

controle

De Beers

Rothschild (European Office) bvba (Antwerpen, Be)

Rothschild (European Office) bvba
ANTWERPEN
Rothschild D
ASSE
Rothschild E-J
NIEUWPOORT
Rothschild Ernst
BRUXELLES
Rothschild Ernst
BRUXELLES
Rothschild J
BRUXELLES
Rothschild Laueva C
BRUXELLES
Rothschild Laueva D
BRUXELLES
Rothschild M
BRUXELLES
Rothschild M
ASSE
Rothschild N
BRUXELLES
Rothschild R
BRUXELLES
Rothschild-Delcroix M
ASSE
Rothschild
ANTWERPEN

Antwerp has some 30 synagogues, all Orthodox. A number of these also serve as house of study for the ultra-Orthodox sects, which are present in the city. Indeed, Antwerp has one of the largest communities of ultra-Orthodox Jews in the Diaspora-it includes Chassidic Jews who follow the traditions of Belz, Ger, Cornlow, Lubavitch, Satmar, and Vishnitz.
Antwerp, with its concentration of Chassidic Jews, is sometimes regarded as the last shtetl in Europe. The Jewish involvement in the diamond trade there is such the lingua franca on the Antwerp diamond exchange is Yiddish.
[s o u r c e : http://www.wjc.org.il/communities)

Rothschild Continuation Holdings AG

21,9

6,2

6,6

62,5

Among the members of the board of the Quantum Fund is one Richard Katz. He is, at the same time, head of the "Rothschild Italia S.p.A." in Milan and is also on the board of the commercial bank "N.M. Rothschild and Sons" in London. Another member of the board is Nils O. Taube. He is a partner in the London investment group "St. James Place Capital" which counts Lord Rothschild among it's main partners. A frequent partner of Soros in several of his speculations --especially in the driving up of the gold quotation-- is Sir James Goldsmith, a relative of the Rothschilds dynasty.

Soros

Quantum Fund

Chairman
Peter Johns
Managing Director
Peter Rose
Trevor Ash
Graham Curds
Stephen Dewsnip
Stephen Dingle

Peter Harwood
William Lane QC
David Moon
David Oxburgh
Hon. Jeremy Soames
Michael Wilson

Evelyn de Rothschild

Chairman

N.M. Rothschild and Sons Ltd
http://www.rothschild.gg

N MRothschild & Sons (C.I.) Limited is wholly owned by Rothschilds Continuation Holdings AG (RCH), incorporated in Switzerland. The N M Rothschild merchant banking group has 40 offices in more than 30 countries and employs more than 2,000 people around the world.

Rothschild GmbH

Rothschild & Cie

Sir Evelyn de Rothschild a été le président de l'economist de 1972 a fin 1989

London Bullion Marketing Association (LBMA)

Gold-based financing of jewellers, using consignment stocks, in third country markets is a speciality of a minority of the international bullion banks, including Bank of Nova Scotia and UBS. The former is particularly active in Dubai, France, Italy, and Spain. UBS has a strong presence in Hong Kong and Saudi Arabia. Local bullion banks are also very active in many markets, though where there has been tight regulation on gold imports (as in Italy), local banks in jewellery manufacturing areas have been slow to challenge the trading position of the international giants and have been content to use their consignment stocks. In the USA, the Republic National Bank of New York and the Fleet National Bank are among the more active, as are NM Rothschild and Midland Bank, in the UK. In France Societe Generale has some interest. Rothschilds is also strong in South East Asia. (source: www.gold.org/Studies)
The London Financial Times in its Thursday, January 30, 1997 edition, revealed the extent of the gold trading taking place daily through the London Bullion Marketing Association (LBMA). The LBMA is run predominantly by the house of N. M. Rothschild.
"Deals involving about 30 million troy ounces, or 930 tonnes, of gold valued at more than $10 billion are cleared every working day in London, the international settlement center for gold bullion." "This is the first authoritative indication of the size of the global gold market, and was revealed yesterday by the London Bullion Market Association. "The volume of gold cleared every day in London represented nearly twice the production from South African mines in a year, Mr. Alan Baker, chairman of the association, pointed out. "The size of the gold market will surprise many observers, but traders insisted the association's statistics were only part of the picture because matched orders are cleared without appearing in the statistics. Mr. Jeffrey Rhodes, of Standard Bank, London, said the 30m ounces should be 'multiplied by three, and possibly five, to give the full scope of the global market'."

AGF Funds Inc.

Global Strategy World Companies Fund

Global Strategy World Equity Fund

St James' Place Capital Plc

http://www.sjpc.co.uk/
Total Gros Asset
£706.9m (GBP)
$1,113.0m (USD)

100

J Rothschild Capital Management

James Place Capital

Lord Rothschild

James Crosby

Anthony Loehnis

James Crosby
Non-Executive DirectorHe was appointed as Chief Executive of HBOS plc on 10 September 2001 following the completion of the merger of Halifax and Bank of Scotland on that date. He was Chief Executive of Halifax from 1999 and is now called St. James's Place UK plc) between 1991 and 1994 and is a Fellow of the Faculty of Actuaries.

Anthony Loehnis
Non-Executive Director, St James' Place Capital Plc
Mr Loehnis was formerly a director of SG Warburg Group plc and was an Executive Director of the Bank of England.

Private investments

Saffron Hill

RIT Capital Partners plc

(At at 31st October '02)
Total Asset	£682m
Ten largest investments (excluding Treasury and Property) as at 31 October 2002
Investment Holdings	£'m
Royal Dutch Petroleum	21.3
Wellington Global Research	21.2
Shinsei Bank	19.3
Pearson International	18.0
Centaur Partners	16.6
Power Measurement	15.8
Getty Images	15.1
The Economist Newspaper	14.6
Venture Production	10.3
Lukoil	9.9

source:
http://www.hemscott.com/equities/company/cd01874.htm

Royal and Sun Alliance Group PLC

J. Rothschild Assurance Group

Lukoil

Royal Dutch Shell

Pearson

Lord Sainsbury

foundator

Preston Candover

foundator

Yad Hanadiv (Rothschild Foundation)

Institute for Jewish Policy Research

President

Waddesdon Manor/ the National Trust organization dedicated to cooperation in research, analysis and policy planning on issues affecting Jewish life worldwide

1 - FUNDING AGENCY NAME: Yad HaNadiv Fund for the Advancement of Landscape and Environmental Values in Israeli Agricultural Regions
ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA: Bar-Ilan University
2 - RPP NAME: Rothschild Fellowship
ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA: The candidate must be a permanent resident of Israel.
3 – fellowships will be awarded to teachers of Judaic Studies http://www.biu.ac.il

Six Continents PLC

Chairman

Ian Prosser

Paul Bradshaw

Nascent group SA

http://www.sixcontinents.com
Six Continents is a leading global hospitality group, with over 3200 hotels across nearly 100 countries and over 2000 restaurants and bars in the UK and Germany.

20

widely diversified portfolio currently valued at about £700 million

Lord Rothschild has been honored by the government of Portugal for his contribution to the country's economic development, by the World Monuments Fund for his leadership with respect to cultural heritage and by the Weizmann Institute of Science on the occasion of the 50th anniversary of the State of Israel. He has received many British honors and, in 1997, was awarded the Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the British Empire for services to arts and heritage.
Lord Rothschild was educated in history at Christ Church, Oxford.

Chairman

International Growth & Value Fund

Lord Rothschild

Hanson

Chairman

Lord Hanson

Chairman

Hanson PLC

Chairman

Lord Hanson

Chairman

Hanson PLC

Chairman

Lord Hanson

Chairman

Hanson PLC

The Federal Reserve is PRIVATELY OWNED by Thomas D. Schauf

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANK IS A PRIVATE COMPANY.

Article 1, Section 8 of the Constitution states that Congress shall have the power to coin (create) money and regulate the value thereof. Today however, the FED, which is a privately owned company, controls and profits by printing money through the Treasury, and regulating its value.

The FED began with approximately 300 people or banks that became owners (stockholders purchasing stock at $100 per share - the stock is not publicly traded) in the Federal Reserve Banking System. They make up an international banking cartel of wealth beyond comparison (Reference 1, 14). The FED banking system collects billions of dollars (Reference 8, 17) in interest annually and distributes the profits to its shareholders. The Congress illegally gave the FED the right to print money (through the Treasury) at no interest to the FED. The FED creates money from nothing, and loans it back to us through banks, and charges interest on our currency. The FED also buys Government debt with money printed on a printing press and charges U.S. taxpayers interest. Many Congressmen and Presidents say this is fraud (Reference 1,2,3,5,17).

Who actually owns the Federal Reserve Central Banks? The ownership of the 12 Central banks, a very well kept secret, has been revealed:

Rothschild Bank of London
Warburg Bank of Hamburg
Rothschild Bank of Berlin
Lehman Brothers of New York
Lazard Brothers of Paris
Kuhn Loeb Bank of New York
Israel Moses Seif Banks of Italy
Goldman, Sachs of New York
Warburg Bank of Amsterdam
Chase Manhattan Bank of New York
(Reference 14, P. 13, Reference 12, P. 152)

These bankers are connected to London Banking Houses which ultimately control the FED. When England lost the Revolutionary War with America (our forefathers were fighting their own government), they planned to control us by controlling our banking system, the printing of our money, and our debt (Reference 4, 22).

The individuals listed below owned banks which in turn owned shares in the FED. The banks listed below have significant control over the New York FED District, which controls the other 11 FED Districts. These banks also are partly foreign owned and control the New York FED District Bank. (Reference 22)

First National Bank of New York
James Stillman National City Bank, New York
Mary W. Harnman
National Bank of Commerce, New York
A.D. Jiullard
Hanover National Bank, New York
Jacob Schiff
Chase National Bank, New York
Thomas F. Ryan
Paul Warburg
William Rockefeller
Levi P. Morton
M.T. Pyne
George F. Baker
Percy Pyne
Mrs. G.F. St. George
J.W. Sterling
Katherine St. George
H.P. Davidson
J.P. Morgan (Equitable Life/Mutual Life)
Edith Brevour T. Baker

(Reference 4 for above, Reference 22 has details, P. 92, 93, 96, 179)

How did it happen? After previous attempts to push the Federal Reserve Act through Congress, a group of bankers funded and staffed Woodrow Wilson's campaign for President. He had committed to sign this act. In 1913, a Senator, Nelson Aldrich, maternal grandfather to the Rockefellers, pushed the Federal Reserve Act through Congress just before Christmas when much of Congress was on vacation (Reference 3, 4, 5). When elected, Wilson passed the FED. Later, Wilson remorsefully replied (referring to the FED), "I have unwittingly ruined my country" (Reference 17, P. 31).

Now the banks financially back sympathetic candidates. Not surprisingly, most of these candidates are elected (Reference 1, P. 208-210, Reference 12, P. 235, Reference 14, P. 36). The bankers employ members of the Congress on weekends (nickname T&T club -out Thursday...-in Tuesday) with lucrative salaries (Reference 1, P. 209). Additionally, the FED started buying up the media in the 1930's and now owns or significantly influences most of it Reference 3, 10, 11, P. 145).

Presidents Lincoln, Jackson, and Kennedy tried to stop this family of bankers by printing U.S. dollars without charging the taxpayers interest (Reference 4). Today, if the government runs a deficit, the FED prints dollars through the U.S. Treasury, buys the debt, and the dollars are circulated into the economy. In 1992, taxpayers paid the FED banking system $286 billion in interest on debt the FED purchased by printing money virtually cost free (Reference 12, P. 265). Forty percent of our personal federal income taxes goes to pay this interest. The FED's books are not open to the public. Congress has yet to audit it.

Congressman Wright Patman was Chairman of the House of Representatives Committee on Banking and Currency for 40 years. For 20 of those years, he introduced legislation to repeal the Federal Reserve Banking Act of 1913.

Congressman Henry Gonzales, Chairman of a banking committee, introduces legislation to repeal the Federal Reserve Banking Act of 1913 nearly every year. It's always defeated, the media remains silent, and the public never learns the truth. The same bankers who own the FED control the media and give huge political contributions to sympathetic members of Congress (Reference 12, P. 155-163, Reference 22, P. 158, 159, 166).

THE FED FEARS THE POPULATION WILL BECOME AWARE OF THIS FRAUD AND DEMAND CHANGE

We, the People, are at fault for being passive and allowing this to continue.

Rep. Louis T. McFadden (R. Pa.) rose from office boy to become cashier and then President of the First National Bank in Canton Ohio. For 12 years he served as Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, making him one of the foremost financial authorities in America. He fought continuously for fiscal integrity and a return to constitutional government (Reference 1). The following are portions of Rep. McFadden's speech, quoted from the Congressional Record, pages 12595-12603:

"THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD, A GOVERNMENT BOARD, HAS CHEATED THE GOVERNMENTOF THE UNITED STATES AND THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES OUT OF ENOUGH MONEY TO PAY THE NATIONAL DEBT.

The depredations and the iniquities of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks acting together have cost this country ENOUGH MONEY TO PAY THE NATIONAL DEBT SEVERAL TIMES OVER."

About the Federal Reserve banks, Rep. McFadden said, "They are private credit monopolies which prey upon the people of the United States for the benefit of themselves and their foreign customers; foreign and domestic speculators and swindlers; the rich and predatory money lenders. This is an era of economic misery and for the reasons that caused that misery, the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks are fully liable."

On the subject of media control he state, "Half a million dollars was spent on one part of the propaganda organized by those same European bankers for the purpose of misleading public opinion in regard to it."

Rep. McFadden continued, "Every effort has been made by the Federal Reserve Board to conceal its power but the truth is the Federal Reserve Board has USURPED THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES. IT CONTROLS EVERYTHING HERE AND IT CONTROLS ALL OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS. IT MAKES AND BREAKS GOVERNMENTS AT WILL.

No man and no body of men is more entrenched in power than the arrogant credit monopoly which operates the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks. These evil-doers have robbed this country of more than enough money to pay the national debt. What the Government has permitted the Federal Reserve Board to steal from the people should now be restored to the people."

"Our people's money to the extent of $1,200,000,000 has within the last few months been shipped abroad to redeem Federal Reserve Notes and to pay other gambling debts of the traitorous Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks. The greater part of our monetary stock has been shipped to foreigners. Why should we promise to pay the debts of foreigners to foreigners? Why should American Farmers and wage earners add millions of foreigners to the number of their dependents? Why should the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve banks be permitted to finance our competitors in all parts of the world?" Rep. McFadden asked.

"The Federal Reserve Act should be repealed and the Federal Reserve banks, having violated their charters, should be liquidated immediately.

FAITHLESS GOVERNMENT OFFICERS WHO HAVE VIOLATED THEIR OATHS SHOULD BE IMPEACHED AND BROUGHT TO TRIAL", Rep. McFadden concluded (Reference 1, contains an entire chapter on Rep. McFadden's speech).

If the media is unbiased, independent and completely thorough, why haven't they discussed the FED? Currently, half the states have at least a grass roots movement in action to abolish the FED, but there's no press coverage. In July, 1968, the House Banking Subcommittee reported that Rockefeller, through Chase Manhattan Bank, controlled 5.9% of the stock in CBS. Furthermore, the bank had gained interlocking directorates with ABC.

In 1974, Congress issued a report stating that the Chase Manhattan Bank's stake in CBS rose to 14.1% and NBC to 4.5% (through RCA, the parent company of NBC). The same report said that the Chase Manhattan Bank held stock in 28 broadcasting firms. After this report, the Chase Manhattan Bank obtained 6.7% of ABC, and today the percentage could be much greater. It only requires 5% ownership to significantly influence the media (Reference 14, P. 56-57). This is only one of 300 wealthy shareholders of the FED. It is believed other FED owners have similar holdings in the media. To control the media, FED bankers call in their loans if the media disagrees with them (Reference 25, P. 134-137).

Rockefeller also controls the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR), the sole purpose of which is to aid in stimulating greater interest in foreign affairs and in a one world government. Nearly every major newscaster belongs to the Council on Foreign Relations. The Council on Foreign Relations controls many major newspapers and magazines. Additionally, major corporations owned by FED shareholders are the source of huge advertising revenues which surely would influence the media (Reference 14, P. 56-59). It can be no wonder why groups such as FED-UP(tm) receive minimal, if any, press attention.

How do taxpayers stop financing those whose purpose it is to destroy us? First, expose their activity, then demand change.

THE SOLUTION:

Currently all we do is exchange FED money (interest attached) for real U.S. money (interest-free) dollar for dollar as Kennedy tried to do. We should not be required to pay interest on our own currency. According to Benjamin Franklin, this was one of the primary reasons we fought the Revolutionary War. Today we are still fighting the same family of bankers (Reference 4, Reference 1, P.

211, 212).

The U.S. Government can buy back the FED at any time for $450 million (per Congressional record). The U.S. Treasury could then collect all the profit on our money instead of the 300 original shareholders of the FED. The $4 trillion of U.S. debt could be exchanged dollar for dollar with U.S. non- interest bearing currency when the debt becomes due. There would be no inflation because there would be no additional currency in circulation. Personal income tax could be cut if we bought back the FED and therefore, the economy would expand. According to the Constitution, Congress is to control the creation of money, keeping the amount of inflation or deflation in check. If Congress isn't doing their job, they should be voted out of office. Unfortunately, voters can't vote the FED or its Chairman out of office.

If the government has a deficit, we could handle it as Lincoln and Kennedy did. Print money and circulate it into the economy, but this time interest-free. Today the FED, through foreign banks, owns much of our debt and therefore controls us. The FED will cease to exist as taxpayers become informed and tell other taxpayers. The news media and Congress will have no choice but to meet the demands of grass roots America. (Reference 1, P. 17, 22)

AMERICA DECEIVED

By law (check the Congressional record), we can buy back the FED for the original investment of the FED's 300 shareholders, which is $450 million (Reference 1, P. 227, Reference 17, P. 36). If each taxpayer paid $25, we could buy back the FED and all the profit would flow into the U.S. Treasury. In other words, by Congress allowing the constitutionally illegal FED to continue, much of your taxes go to the shareholders of the FED and their bankers. Note: The people who enacted the FED started the IRS, within months of the FED's inception. The FED buys U.S. debt with money they printed from nothing, then charges the U.S. taxpayers interest. The government had to create income tax to pay the interest expense to the FED's shareholders, but the income tax was never legally passed (Reference 20 shows details, state-by-state why it was not legally passed). The FED is illegal, per Article 1, Section 8 of the United States Constitution. Not one state legally ratified the 16th Amendment making income tax legal.

Currently, fewer and fewer Americans are being convicted for refusal to pay income taxes. In IRS jury trials, the jury, by law, must decide if the law is just. If taxpayers do not believe the law is just, the jury may declare the accused innocent. Judges are legally bound to inform juries of their right to determine the fairness of a law. Judges often do not disclose this information so they can control the court outcome. Luckily, more and more citizens are becoming informed. If one juror feels the law is unfair, they can find the defendant innocent (Reference 19). In Utah, the IRS quit prosecuting taxpayers because jurors verdict is not guilty. Please tell your friends and sit in the next jury.

If we eliminate the FED and uphold the Constitution, we could balance the budget and cut personal income tax to almost nothing. In Congressional hearings on September 30, 1941, FED Chairman Eccles admitted that the FED creates new money from thin air (printing press), and loans it back to us at interest (Reference 17, P. 93). On June 6, 1960, FED President Mr. Allen admitted essentially the same thing (Reference 22, P. 164). If you or I did this we would go to jail.

It is time to abolish the FED! Tell your friends the truth and win America back. We don't even need to buy back the FED. We only need to print money the way the Constitution requires, not the new proposed international money. We want to keep our sovereignty and print real U.S. money.

Why has Congress allowed the FED to continue? If a Congressperson tries to abolish the FED, the banks fund the Congressperson's opponent in the next election (Reference 17, P. 35). The new Congressperson will obviously support the FED. When Congresspeople retire, political campaign funds are not taxed. Get elected and be a millionaire if you vote right. By the way, the profit of the FED is not taxed either (Reference 1, 9). Once America understands, and takes action, Congresspeople will then gladly abolish the FED. In 1992, Illinois Congressman Crane introduced a bill, co-sponsored by 40 other Congressman, to audit the FED. This is a step in the right direction.

America is a great nation. As "We the People" become informed, the media and Congress will be forced to buy back the FED, balance the budget, significantly cut taxes, and stop allowing bribes to determine voting strategies. I have already heard from politicians who claim they will change their platform to include abolishing the FED if enough people become informed.

IT IS UP TO YOU TO INFORM THE PEOPLE.

The FED hopes you will be passive and not act on this information. We believe in grass roots America - we are waking up America. Ultimately, the battle plan is to inform all Americans and demand change in the media and Congress. True Americans should run for office and throw out the politicians who allow this fraud to continue. Congress may refuse to deal with this issue. That's why each person needs to go to their local county/state government with the proper paperwork and ask them to abolish the FED. With the proper documents, they are legally obligated to do it.

WE NEED LEADERS TO BEGIN THIS ACTION. WILL YOU HELP?

Consider this fact. Most of the given sources in this booklet show how the blood line of family bankers who own the FED funded both sides of all major wars. They created fake colonial money to destroy the Americans during the Revolutionary War and tried to finance both sides in the American Civil War. Abraham Lincoln refused and the South accepted. Many publications show that these bankers financed World War I, World War II, and the Russian Revolutionary War, which helped Napoleon, Lenin, and Hitler come to power. They financed both sides from money created from nothing and profited greatly. These same bankers created a number of American depressions to change the U.S. legislation and seize our wealth. Read the sources for details. This is why our forefathers wrote in the Constitution that only Congress can issue money - not private banks (Reference 18).

More wars create more debt which means more profit to the bankers (Reference 1, 21). These bankers planned three world wars so people would welcome United Nations intervention to govern the world in peace, not war. (Reference 22 gives specific details on World War I and World War II, showing exactly how the bankers were responsible for the beginning and continuation of these wars for their profit).

The banks have publicly announced they will force us to a cashless society by 1997. Furthermore, they plan to create a one world government through the United Nations headed by the FED, Trilaterals, and the Council on Foreign Relations (Reference 3). By the definition of treason, they have committed treason! This means you lose your rights under the Constitution and Bill of Rights. Does this sound far fetched? Twenty-four U.S. Senators (two of them presidential candidates, Harkin & Tsongas) and 80 Representatives have signed a "Declaration of Interdependence." This Declaration, designed to make a one world government, is treason to the oath of office they took. The media remained silent. The FED announced publicly that their first objective was to get nationalism out of the American people's heads because patriotism to a country would not be of value in the future. The media makes us think the U.N. has all the answers, and to "think globally." Congress passed a law stopping certain individuals from being tried for this treason (Reference 6, Reference 1, P. 191-198). Why pass this law if no treason was committed? State Department document 7277 calls for the disarming of America, thus turning our sovereignty over to a one-world government. Again, the media is pushing to eliminate guns. Our forefathers believed that the right to bear arms would prevent a takeover of our government. History shows that before any government took over, they disarmed the citizens. Hitler did it, and before our Revolutionary War, King George told us to disarm - good thing we didn't!

Under the Federal Reserve Bank Act, the bankers control our economy. The FED controls interest rates and the amount of money in the economy. These factors determine either economic prosperity or the lack thereof. Bankers are now pushing for a one world government and a cashless society. Why cashless? No cash means no money for drugs, no theft, and the ability to collect taxes on the underground economy. Anyone who wouldn't support a cashless society must be a drug dealer, thief, or tax evader, right? What a cashless society really means is the banks can now control you. Today you fear the IRS. In a cashless society, if you disagree with the bankers' political goals, you'll find your money gone via computer error. (For additional information on a cashless society, read Reference 13, P. 174; Reference 3; Reference 14, P. 9-12; Reference 15, P. 136; Reference 25, P. 216).

If you could accurately predict future interest rates, inflation and deflation, you would know when to buy or sell stocks and make a bundle of money. The FED has secret meetings (per Congressional Record) to determine future interest rates and the amount of money to be printed. The Securities Exchange Commission (SEC) by law, stops insiders from profiting by privileged information. Congressional records prove that FED bankers routinely hold secret meetings to profit by manipulating the stock market via interest rates and the amount of money they create. FED bankers also profit greatly from economic disasters like the Depression (Reference 22, P. 56). The bankers create inflation, sell their stocks before the market crashes, then buy up stocks at cheaper prices. Bankers admitted this to Congress. This violates the law, yet Congress does not act because these bankers are large political contributors (Reference 17, P. 96-98; Reference 1, P. 162-163; Reference 22, P. 114-170 & P. 136). Thomas Jefferson predicted this scenario if we ever allowed a private bank, like the FED, to create our currency (Reference 1, P. 247).

FED Chairman Burns states "Killing can be made simply by knowing the next few months newspapers ahead of time." Congressman Patman said "The FED officials own more than 100 million dollars (of stocks) while making decisions influencing these stock prices..." (Reference 24, P. 123). History proves that banks profit from bankrupting a nation (Reference 22, P. 56).

Congress consistently defeats balanced budget amendments. In the past 30 years, Congress has raised our taxes 56 times and balanced the budget only once. We need the sound banking system our forefathers wanted us to have. History proves that banking systems like the FED don't work. Major world powers have been destroyed over similar banking systems (Reference 1). If we don't change this system NOW, in five years the only thing our taxes will pay is the interest on the national debt.

Section 7 of the Federal Reserve Act, passed December 23, 1913, states that much of the profit of the FED should flow into the U.S. Treasury. In 1959, new legislation allowed the FED to transfer bonds to commercial banks at no cost to the bank. Now the FED receives less interest income and less profit for the U.S. Treasury because the money is diverted to other banks through an accounting entry (Reference 17, P. 115-130). Congress and the IRS do not have access to the financial records of the FED. Every year Congress introduces legislation to audit the FED, and every year it is defeated. The FED banking system could easily be netting 100s of billions in profit each year. Through "creative accounting" profit can easily be reclassified as expense (Reference 14, P. 20, Reference 17, P. 239). Within the first few years, the shareholders of the FED received their initial investment back with no risk. All the income is tax-free, except for property tax, according to the Federal Reserve Act. When are the profits of the FED going to start flowing into the Treasury so that average Americans are no longer burdened with excessive, unnecessary taxes? Clearly, Congress cannot or will not control the FED. IT IS TIME TO ABOLISH IT!

3 WAYS TO ABOLISH THE FED AND ISSUE MONEY PER THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION, ARTICLE 1, SECTION 8:

* Buy back the FED and have the U.S. Government collect all profits.

* Abolish the FED by printing real U.S. dollars as President Kennedy attempted (Executive Order 11.110, 1963) (Reference 4).

* Request your county/state to use their Constitutional powers to abolish the FED. This is the BEST SOLUTION. Nearly half the states are attempting or considering this action (Reference 5). Congress has had 80 years to follow the Constitution, and has refused to abolish the illegal FED. The state/county effort is working faster than any other method. We need your support to start a local chapter of FED-UP(tm) Inc. and petition your county.

THE WRONG SOLUTION THAT HAS FAILED FOR 80 YEARS:

Congress and the media may want to require the FED to return the required profits into the U.S. Treasury (per the Federal Reserve Act, 1913). The problem is that with "creative accounting" techniques, profit can be easily masked as expense. The FED has expensed items illegally to lower profit (Reference 17).

"We the People" have pushed the following states to pass or introduce legislation calling for an end to the FED: Arizona, Washington, Arkansas, Idaho, Oregon, Indiana, and Texas. We still need your signatures on petitions, even if you live in these states. Many other states are considering such action due to your petitions. These states and a few honest Congresspeople are powerless until all Americans become informed and demand change. Please pass out the petition. Once we demand change, the media will have to report the whole truth and not just push their own agenda. FED-UP(tm) challenges the media to expose the facts on prime time talk shows or news programs.

By abolishing the FED, we would not pay interest on Federal Reserve Notes. Until it is abolished, the FED has a monopoly on profit on our currency and whether our money supply will be increased or decreased, inflation or depression. The banks are capable of controlling business by controlling who can or cannot obtain a loan.

WE'VE DONE OUR PART - NOW IT IS UP TO YOU TO SPREAD THE WORD. Please take the brochure (Cutting taxes $6,000 per family per year) to VFW, Moose/Elk Lodges, Bars, Union Halls, Churches, and Association groups. Make copies of the "single-page" brochure for everyone at work and ask your friends to do the same. Ask small business owners in your community to tell other business owners and spread the brochure and petition through the local Chamber of Commerce. CPAs should be interested in saving their clients taxes. Ask your CPA to mail the brochure and petition out to his/her clients. Upon receiving this petition, many presidents of large corporations made this brochure and petition available to all employees. Once people are informed, we can force a change. People will have more money to spend, the economy will be strong, and we can keep our Constitutional rights, liberties, and freedoms.

Contact your library for the names and addresses of your local and federal Congresspeople. MAIL THEM AN ENVELOPE WITHOUT YOUR NAME AND ADDRESS ATTACHED. In the envelope, say "FED-UP(tm) Inc. Abolish the FED." Also enclose one teabag (Boston Tea Party). Ask your friends to do the same (give them the addresses). Politicians are aware of the "Teabag Protest." If you don't mail it in, they're going to believe that we're not organized or we just don't care. IF YOU DON'T DO IT NO ONE ELSE WILL!

Many Congresspeople want to make this change, but can't without the support of the people.

WHY OUR FOREFATHERS FOUGHT THE FED

"Allow me to control the issue and the nation's money and I care not who makes its laws!" The above quote has long been attributed to the 18th century banker Amshell Rothschild (his blood line controls the FED). For if one unscrupulous group is allowed to print a nation's money - it can eventually use that money to gain control of the press AND the politicians - and thus gain control of making the nation's laws - and finally - control of the nation itself. (Reference 4)

If you will take the time to read the reference material listed which has been researched by Professors of Universities, Congresspeople, etc, you will turn up information that might frighten you. For instance, in 1921 the stockholders of the Federal Reserve financed an organization called the "Council on Foreign Relations" (CFR). Harpers magazine called this the most powerful organization in the United States. Ninety percent of the people in the State Department and key positions in the Executive Branch are members of the CFR. The CFR publishes a magazine called "Foreign Affairs." Read it if you want to know what is going to happen in coming years. The CFR is in favor of a New World Order (Reference 3).

Congressman Patman re-quoted Thomas Jefferson showing that our founding fathers knew this banking principle very well. "I believe that banking institutions are more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies...." "Already they have raised up a money aristocracy that has set the government at defiance. The issuing power (of money)," he said, "should be taken from the banks and restored to the people to whom it properly belongs." The American Revolution was a struggle to wrest control of wealth from the Bank of England and to restore the centers of power to the People where it "properly belongs." The Constitution is specific about the authority of the People, through their elected officials, to control the money, and thus, the affairs of their government. (Reference 5, P. 32).

Ben Franklin said in his autobiography that the inability of the colonists to get the power to issue their own money permanently out of the hands of George III and the international bankers was [one of] the PRIME reason[s] for the Revolutionary War. (Quoted in Reference 4)

Thomas Jefferson stated, "If the American people ever allow private banks to control the issue of currency, first by inflation, then by deflation, the banks and corporations that will grow up around them will deprive the people of all property until their children will wake up homeless on the continent their fathers conquered." (Reference 1, P. 247)

Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh of Minnesota said: "This [Federal Reserve]

Act establishes the most gigantic trust on Earth. When the President [Wilson] signs this bill, the invisible government of the Monetary Power will be legalized... the worst legislative crime of the ages, perpetuated by this banking and currency bill." (Reference 5, P. 33)

Robert H. Hemphill (Credit Manager, Federal Reserve Bank in Atlanta): "We are completely dependent on the commercial banks. Someone has to borrow every dollar we have in circulation, cash, or credit. If the banks create ample synthetic money we are prosperous; if not, we starve. We are absolutely without a permanent money system. When one gets a complete grasp of the picture, the tragic absurdity of our hopeless position is almost incredible, but there it is. It [the banking problem] is the most important subject intelligent persons can investigate and reflect upon. It is so important that our present civilization may collapse unless it becomes widely understood and the defects are remedied very soon." (Reference 1, P. 247)

Napoleon, a sympathizer for the international bankers, turned against them in the last years of his rule. He said: "When a government is dependent upon bankers for money, they and not the leaders of the government control the situation, since the hand that gives is above the hand that takes... Money has no motherland; financiers are without patriotism and without decency; their sole object is gain." (Reference 4)

Congresspeople have referred to Federal Reserve Notes as "FIAT" (no-backing) money. (Reference 1, P. 128, 169)

In 1879 the Supreme Court declared that the U.S. Government can legally issue United States Notes, debt and interest-free, just as Lincoln and Kennedy attempted. (Reference 1, P. 233)

A bank that attempted to repossess property on the basis of default faced Judge Mahoney in a jury trial. Jerome Daly was found innocent. The bank could not foreclose on the property because it created the loan money from thin air, as many banks do. Use this as a precedent the next time any bank tries to foreclose on your house. (Reference 17, P. 82, 83 for court records)

The FED violates Security & Exchange Commission (SEC) rules. (Reference 17, P. 96-98)

California 9th Circuit Court declared FED banks are private, not government. (Reference 17, P. 273)

Mr. Marriner Eccles, who was Chairman of the board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System longer than any other man, testified before the Joint Economic Committee in August 1962. When Chairman Rep. Wright Patman asked whether it was not a fact that the Federal Reserve System has more power than either the Congress or the President, Eccles replied: "In the field of money and credit, yes." (Reference 1, P. 206)

Dr. Hans F. Sennholz, Chairman of the Department of Economics at Grove City (PA) College stated: "The Federal Reserve System facilitates the government's own inflationary financing in "periods of emergency." It makes easy the inflationary financing of budget deficits and the inflationary refunding of government loans. It stabilizes the government bond market through inflationary methods and manipulates this market to the advantage of the government. It does all this by wrecking the purchasing power of the dollar; by subtly stealing from the people of this country what it thus provides for the government, through a process exactly on par with the coin clipping of ancient kings but much less visible." (Reference 1, P. 250, 251)

Source: Banking Act of 1935, Hearings before a Subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, U.S. Senate, 74th Congress, 1st Session, on S.1715, May 1935, pp 871-2. "The Federal Reserve System is in the wrong hands. No Constitutional republic can function when the government's money powers are in the hands of the financial oligarchy such as New York financiers.

A Republican Senator, who preferred to remain unnamed, stated: "Congress is too much motivated by fears and anxieties concerning pressure groups and the "non election." (Reference 1, P. 210)

By controlling Congress, the FED has been able to control the nominating conventions of both political parties. In this way, it has been able to hand-pick the presidential nominees so that no matter which party wins, their nominee for President is under definite obligations to the FED... (Reference 1, P. 210; Reference 22)

In 1975, the Rockefeller Foundation Report discussed the "Interdependence" of the countries of the world on each other. It stated we are one world and America shall become a nation-state under one government. They also say we must reach a zero state population growth. The Rockefeller Foundation stated that they have in excess of 747 million dollars to achieve this with. (Reference 3)

Congressman John R. Rarick states that the Council on Foreign Relations CFR) is dedicated to a one world government. The media remains conspicuously quiet. The CFR wants to convert the U.S. from a sovereign, constitutional republic into a servile member state of a one world dictatorship. On February 17, 1950, CFR member James Warburg (banker, and architect of the Federal Reserve System) stated before a Senate Foreign Relations Committee, "We shall have one world government whether or not you like it, by conquest or consent." Again, the media remained silent. In the April 1974 issue of the CFR journal, "Foreign Affairs", page 558, Richard Gardener states that the new world order "will be built... but an end run around national sovereignty, eroding it piece by piece, will accomplish much more than the old fashioned frontal assault." Congressman McDonald, Heinz and Tower stated that this is a conspiracy. Again, the media remained silent. (Reference 14, P. 17, 18, 32, 33).

THE CFR WANTS TO ABOLISH THE CONSTITUTION. (Reference 14)
WE MUST STOP THEM!!

In a letter to Thomas Jefferson, John Adams wrote: "All the perplexities, confusions, and distresses in America arise, not from defects in the Constitution or confederation, not from want of honor or virtue, as much as from downright ignorance of the nature of coin, credit, and circulation".

British bankers have stated "Those that create and issue money and credit direct the policies of government and hold in their hands the destiny of the people". (Reference 1, P. 200-214)

Adams, Jefferson, and Lincoln believed that banker capitalism was more dangerous to our liberties than standing armies. In a republic, banks would lend money but could not create or manufacture it. (Reference 1, P. 215)

Later, Jefferson used stronger language and denounced the institution as "one of the most deadly hostilities against the principles and form of our Constitution." Some have said that Jefferson did not favor a strong central bank. What he did not favor was the delivery of our monetary system into private hands to be run for private profit. (Reference 1, P. 230)

President James A. Garfield said: "Whoever controls the money in any country is absolute master of industry [legislation] and commerce". (Reference 1, P. 247, Reference 4)

Without the Federal Reserve System, there can be no continuing march towards socialism, and with it there can be no free economy. (Reference 1, P. 251)

By controlling our own money, Thomas Jefferson expected that the government would incur no debt, as had occurred in the European system. (Reference 1, P. 243) European banks are like the FED.

The FED system is the death of our Constitution. (Reference 1, P. 250)

THE PLAN TO REDUCE PERSONAL INCOME TAX BY 75% AND BALANCE THE BUDGET BY ABOLISHING THE FED CAN BE PROVEN BY AMERICAN HISTORY.

THE FACTS:

* England lost the Revolutionary War.

* England nearly destroyed the Colonies by creating fake Colonial money and hyper-inflation.

* Rothschilds who control the Bank of England (Like our FED) said that by controlling the issue of money (printing it) you can control the government.

* The authors of the Constitution understood private banks" control over governments. The Constitution gives only Congress the right to print money.

* From the beginning of the United States to present there have been two ways to issue new currency:

The first way is to have the government print the money, debt and interest- free, and circulate it through the economy for use as a medium of exchange. There is no tax levied to pay interest on the currency in circulation because it is debt and interest-free. This is the system Lincoln used with his "greenbacks", a system Kennedy desired, and Jefferson demanded.

The second method is: The Citizens allow the bank to print $500 billion in currency (cash). The bank pays for printing costs, ink, and paper. The Citizens do not charge the bank any interest for use of the $500 billion in printed currency. The bank uses the $500 billion cash to buy a $500 billion government bond which pays the bankers interest. The bank keeps some of the bonds and sells, for a fee (10%), some of the bonds to the public. The bank can buy back the bonds from the public simply by printing more money. The bankers can create inflation and depressions by manipulating the amount of currency in circulation. The FED operates exactly like this today. It also prints money (through the U.S. Treasury) and uses this printed money to buy loans from other banks. This money has created our inflation. We give the bank cash interest-free, then they charge us interest on our own currency.

Take a look at our history in view of the two banking systems:

BEN FRANKLIN - THE TWO BANKING SYSTEMS

From the autobiography of Ben Franklin as reported by Gertrude Coogan in Money

Creators:

...the inability of the colonists to get the power to issue their own money permanently out of the hands of George III and the international bankers was the PRIME reason for the Revolutionary War. (Reference 4).

Ben Franklin answering a question about the booming economy of the young colonies: "That is simple. In the colonies we issue our own money. It is called Colonial Scrip. We issue it in proper proportions to the demands of trade and industry." (Colonial Scrip had no debt or interest attached.) (Reference 4)

BANK OF AMERICA

International bankers saw that interest-free scrip would keep America free of their influence, so by 1781 banker-backed Alexander Hamilton succeeded in starting the Bank of America. After a few years of "bank money", the prosperity of "Colonial Scrip" was gone. Benjamin Franklin said, "Conditions were so reversed that the era of prosperity had ended and a depression set in to such an extent that the streets of the Colonies were filled with the unemployed!" Bank money was like our FED money. It had debt and interest attached. By 1790 Hamilton and his bankers had created a privately owned central bank and converted the public debt (interest-free) into interest bearing bonds, payable to the bankers. When Hamilton's bank charter expired in 1811, the international bankers started the war of 1812. By 1816, another privately-owned U.S. bank was started with $35 million in assets - only $7 million of that was owned by the government. This bank lasted for 20 years. U.S. history shows that currency with debt and interest attached created a depression. (Reference 4)

ANDREW JACKSON - A GREAT PRESIDENT!

When the 1816 charter expired in 1836, Andrew Jackson vetoed its renewal. It was then that he made two famous statements: "The Bank is trying to kill me - but I will kill it!" Later he said "If the American people only understood the rank injustice of our money and banking system - there would be a revolution before morning..." (Reference 4)

ABRAHAM LINCOLN - ANOTHER GREAT PRESIDENT!

President Lincoln needed money to finance the Civil War, and the international bankers offered him loans at 24-36% interest. Lincoln balked at their demands because he didn't want to plunge the nation into such a huge debt. Lincoln approached Congress about passing a law to authorize the printing of U.S. Treasury Notes. Lincoln said "We gave the people of this Republic the greatest blessing they ever had - their own paper money to pay their debts..." Lincoln printed over 400 million "Greenbacks" (debt and interest-free) and paid the soldiers, U.S. government employees, and bought war supplies. The international bankers didn't like it and wanted Lincoln to borrow the money from them so that the American people would owe tremendous interest on the loan. Lincoln's solution made this seem ridiculous. (Reference 1, P. 46, 47; Reference 4)

Shortly after Lincoln's death, the government revoked the Greenback law which ended Lincoln's debt-free, interest-free money. A new national banking act was enacted and all money became interest bearing again. (Reference 4)

The late Thomas A Edison explained the matter of issuing currency this way: "If our nation can issue a dollar bond (interest bearing) it can issue a dollar bill (interest-free). The element that makes the bond good makes a bill good also. The difference between the bond and the bill is that the bond lets money brokers collect twice the amount of the bond and an additional 20 percent, whereas the currency pays nobody but those who contribute directly in some useful way. It is absurd to say that our country can issue $30 million in bonds and not $30 million in currency. Both are promises to pay: But one promise fattens the usurers (interest collectors) and the other helps the people." (Reference 1, P. 46)

The FED is owned largely by foreign banks that control our economy and Congress through the power of money and the media which they bought with profits generated with profits generated by artificial debt.

If we can convert U.S. dollars that are debt and interest-free to interest bearing currency, we can change it back just as easily. Both the media and the banking system will probably claim that such a change will cause hyper- inflation. The answer however, can be found in history. Lincoln printed debt and interest-free Greenbacks (cash) to finance an entire war. With added production you can add currency without having hyper-inflation. Lincoln proved it. John F. Kennedy - a President with vision! On June 4, 1964, President Kennedy issued Executive Order 11110. This Executive Order called for the issuance of new currency - the United States Note. At the time, $4,292,893 of this currency was put into circulation. This new currency was to be distributed through the U.S. Treasury and not the Federal Reserve System. Furthermore, it was to be issued debt and interest-free. Upon Kennedy's assassination, this currency was withdrawn from circulation, never to be issued again. The media remained silent on how Kennedy would have eliminated the debt and interest payments, and therefore eliminated the FED. Interest-free United States Notes do not result in hyper-inflation. By issuing United States Notes, interest-free, we have less interest expense, and less taxes. With less taxes people spend more and buy more. This result is added production, and therefore, you can add dollars without inflation. Either Rockefeller and his people will spend your tax money into the economy or you get to spend your own money by paying less taxes. The bankers want you to think you'll have mass inflation by changing the system. This is only true if you add dollars to the economy without added production. For example, look what happened in post World War I Germany. They merely printed money without increasing production. The result was hyper-inflation. Another example: In the entire economy, if you have only 10 loaves of bread and only $10, each loaf would sell for $1. If you print an extra $10, now you have $20 and the 10 loaves which would sell for $2 each. This is only true if we don't have added production. By cutting taxes, people will spend more and buy more bread. If we print more money and bake more bread, we have $50 and 50 loaves, so each loaf still sells for $1. As long as you monitor production with increased cash, inflation will not occur. Under the FED system, the price of bread has dramatically increased since 1913. If we cut taxes and YOU spend your money instead of the BANKERS spending it, you will have more bread, cars, and wealth than the bankers.

SOMEONE will spend your money - it might as well be YOU!

A FED-like banking system has destroyed other governments. In five years the only thing taxes will pay is the interest on the debt. Clearly, the FED must be abolished before we're demolished! Already laws are set up to have a dictatorship when we have the economic crisis (Federal Emergency Management Act, or FEMA).

Under the FED system, when a new dollar is issued, we pay taxes to pay for the dollar as the principal (debt) plus interest on the dollar. We pay for each new dollar twice, and who gets most of the money? The bankers, who control this money. Taxpayers should only pay taxes for the paper, ink, and printing costs of new money. Why should we give bankers the right to print money on a printing press, charge them no interest on this money, and then let them exchange their "free" money for a government bond that pays them interest??

England never gave up on owning the United States. They are still silently fighting the same Revolutionary War. The Bank of England, through the Rothschilds, owns and controls the FED (Reference 22). We have been robbed of our wealth, and in five years we will be bankrupt if there is no change. The FED bankers will LEGALLY OWN OUR NATION; OUR HOUSES, OUR CARS, OUR BUSINESSES, just as Thomas Jefferson predicted.

SPECIFIC PLAN: HOW TO GET OUT OF DEBT

U.S. history proves that issuing debt and interest-free currency allows our economy to prosper, as long as Congress controls the amount of money created. You can add printed dollars into the economy as you add production, and there will be no inflation. With today's sophisticated computers, we can easily monitor the printing of money and inflation.

Congress needs to buy back the FED and/or abolish it. Any government debt they own would be automatically eliminated. All remaining debt could be paid as needed with the same type of currency Kennedy issued (debt and interest-free United States Notes). United States Notes are backed by the full faith of the best government in the world - The United States of America. This is no different than the backing of today's Federal Reserve Notes. U.S. citizens collect only a small fraction of the interest income on Federal Bonds and Bills. Foreigners benefit from this interest, but we pay the tax so that they collect interest on our currency. This makes sense to bankers and Congresspeople who receive money from bankers and foreign lobbyists.

As we pay less interest, government spending will decrease and so will taxes. Less taxes mean that people buy more goods and services and our economy expands. An expanded economy means more jobs and higher profits for businesses. More profit means increased state/federal business taxes. Businesses continue to pay taxes while personal taxes decrease. People will have more money to spend, will buy more, and therefore pay increased state sales tax. This allows the states to balance their budgets without raising real estate taxes. As history proves, we will prosper.

For 80 years the FED has destroyed our economy. It will take years to undo this damage. Just as Congress appoints a Postal Service, we will have Congress appoint an agency to monitor inflation as we exchange our retiring government debt for debt and interest-free United States Notes (cash). We need to break up all Central Banks created by the FED and return to the Constitution of the United States. We have to return the power of the citizens' money back to the people.

THERE ARE SEVERAL SIMPLE WAYS TO ABOLISH THE FED:

* Inform all Americans of this report and collect signatures on the petition.

* Demand that Congress and the media support "We the People's" rights to uphold the Constitution and abolish the illegal FED.

* Write to your local newspaper, show them this report and ask them to keep freedom of the press alive, support the Constitution and abolish the FED. Freedom of the press should not be limited to those who own it.

* Write to CNN and other media. Tell them you want to see FED-UP(tm) on their programs.

* Ask your State/County Representatives to use their Constitutional powers to enforce your rights under the Constitution to have the FED abolished. Write to Reference 5 for detailed paperwork to be given to your local government.

* Call in on TV and radio talk shows and discuss why the FED should be abolished.

* Support businesses who distribute the petition and display the sign "FED-UP". If they don't, please ask them to.

* Ask candidates if they plan to introduce legislation to abolish the FED and uphold the Constitution which they are obligated to defend. Make candidates take a stand! Have the politician sign a contract with "We the People" enacting legislation to abolish the FED by a certain date or the politician must resign from office. The Democratic Congress and President promised the people "no FED" before the election. Thirteen months later, they passed the FED.

* Display your bumper sticker to show support and inform people.

* If 5,000 people distribute 2-3 brochures daily, we can inform half a million Americans monthly. Roughly 10% of these half a million people will make copies and inform others. Our goal is to inform 70 million adult Americans. Public opinion will soon be on our side. Once 10% of the population know, the other 90% will follow.

* Pray and ask God to return us to "One nation under God."

It is our recommendation that you research the references listed, support all organizations that re trying to stop this fraud, and help us in our goal to get every American to sign this petition.

REFERENCES:

(1) "The Federal Reserve Bank", by H.S. Kenan, published by The Noontide Press
(2) National Committee to Repeal the Federal Reserve Act, P.O. Box 156, Westmont, IL 60559
(3) "The New World Order,Saving America", P.O. Box 1205, Middleburg, FL 32050-1205
(4) "Bulletin", February 1989 & November 1991 issues, P.O. Box 986, Ft. Collins, CO 80522 (Newsletter; $3 each)
(5) "The Most Secret Science", Betsy Ross Press, P.O. Box 986, Ft. Collins, CO 80522 (Book) States attempt to abolish the FED. $12.00
(6) "Insider Report", P.O. Box 84903, Phoenix, AZ 85071
(7) "Phoenix Journal Express", P.O. Box 986, Tehachap, CA 93581
(8) $16 trillion in government and private debt, much of which the FED printed and collected interest on (Reference 3)
(9) Northpoint Tactical Team, P.O. Box 129, Topton, NC 28781
(10) Christian Defense League, Box 449, Arabi, LA 70023
(11) "Bulletin", June 1992 issue, P.O. Box 986, Ft. Collins, CO 80522 (Newsletter; $3 each)
(12) "Savings and Loan Unethical Bailout" by Rev. Casimir F. Gierut
(13) "Dark Secrets of the New Age" by Texe Marrs
(14) "En Route to Global Occupation" by Gary H. Kah
(15) "One World" by John Amkerberg & John Weldon
(16) "The Spotlight", Liberty Lobby, 300 Independence Ave. S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003 (Newspaper)
(17) "Repeal the Federal Reserve Banks" by Rev. Casimir Frank Gierut
(18) The Constitution of the United States
(19) "Walls in Our Minds" by M.J. Red Beckman, Common Sense Press, P.O. Box 1544, Billings, MT 59103. A must read book - $2.50
(20) "The Law That Never Was" Volume I, Bill Benson & M.J. Red Beckman, P.O. Box 1544, Billings, MT 59103 or write to Bill Benson, P.O. Box 550, South Holland, IL 60473. Proof that the 16th Amendment (income tax) was never properly ratified.
(21) "New World Order: The Ancient Plan of Secret Societies" by William T. Still
(22) "The Secrets of the Federal Reserve" by Mullins
(23) "The Social Security & Pension Conspiracy" by Metz
(24) "The History of the Federal Reserve. How to Replace It or How to Reform It" by Metz - for references 23 & 24 write to Howard Metz, P.O. Box 341, Malverne, LI 11565
(25) "The New World Order" by Pat Robertson. On page 131 he states that we must abolish the FED.
(26) "Operation Vampire Killer 2000", highly recommended book. $6.00 ($8.00 for 2) from ACLA, P.O. Box 8712, Phoenix, AZ 85066 This is a must read book with quotes from well known people. This book proves conspiracy. Your local police needs to read this book so they will protect you - not become United Nations Agents against you. This book will stop the New World Order plan to take over the U.S.A.

"America Betrayed", Center For Action, 652 N. Glenview, Nesa, AZ 85213

For references 1, 12, and 17, contact The National Committee to Repeal the Federal Reserve Act (Reference 2)

MEDIA BLACKS OUT THE FACTS

Here's one terrific example. John Swinton, the former Chief of Staff for the New York Times, was one of New York's best loved newspapermen. Called by his peers "The Dean of his Profession", John was asked in 1953 to give a toast before the New York Press Club, and in so doing, made a monumentally important and revealing statement. He is quoted as follows:

"There is no such thing, at this date of the world's history, in America, as an independent press. You know it and I know it. There is not one of you who dares to write your honest opinions, and if you did, you know beforehand that it would never appear in print. I am paid weekly for keeping my honest opinion out of the paper I am connected with. Others of you are paid similar weekly salaries for similar things, and any of you who would be so foolish as to write honest opinions would be out on the streets looking for another job. If I allowed my honest opinions to appear in one issue of my paper, before twenty-four hours my occupation would be gone. The business of the journalists is to destroy the truth; to lie outright; to pervert; to vilify; to fawn at the feet of mammon, and to sell his country and his race for his daily bread. You know it and I know it, and what folly is this toasting an independent press? We are the tools and vassals of rich men behind the scenes. We are the jumping jacks, they pull the strings and we dance. Our talents, our possibilities, and our lives are all the property of other men. We are intellectual prostitutes."

RICHARD M. COHAN, Senior Producer of CBS political news said: "We are going to impose OUR AGENDA on the coverage by dealing with issues and subjects that WE choose to deal with."

RICHARD SALANT, former President of CBS News stated: "Our job is to give people not what they want, but what WE decide they ought to have."

And what is "their" agenda? What do they believe we, the American people, - THE COMMON HERD, "...ought to have?" Here is the answer:

NORMAN THOMAS - For many years the U.S. Socialist Presidential candidate proclaimed: "The American people will never knowingly adopt Socialism. But under the name of "liberalism" they will adopt every fragment of the socialist program, until one day America will be a Socialist nation, without knowing what happened."

HERMAN DISMORE, foreign editor of the New York Times from 1950 to 1960: "The New York Times is deliberately pitched to the liberal (socialist) point of view."

WALTER CRONKITE: "News reporters are certainly liberal (socialists) and left of center."

BARBARA WALTERS: "The news media in general are liberals (socialists)."

Reference for everything above - Operation Vampire Killer, P.O. Box 8712, Phoenix, AZ 85066

The world, finally including even the balky American public, is "being rapidly educated into overcoming limited patriotism" and accepting "United Nations solutions to common global problems," said Henry Kissinger.

Bilderberg participants expressed satisfaction with progress toward world government on two fronts:

* Establishing a UN tax to not only finance new global programs, but to condition "citizens of the world" to paying tribute.

* Conditioning the public -- again, especially "those stubborn Americans" -- to accept the idea of a UN army that could, by force, impose its will on the internal affairs of any nation.

"Today, Americans would be outraged if UN forces entered Los Angeles to restore order; tomorrow, they will be grateful," Kissinger said (of the 1992 Los Angeles riot).

Kissinger reported on a shocking speech made by UN Secretary General Butrous Ghali to the American Association of Newspaper Publishers at UN headquarters in New York in early May. The publishers' newspapers covered up the story.

The UN Security Council must have a permanent force that can be deployed anywhere in the world, instantly, to "protect the peace" and "ensure human rights" the secretary-general told the newspaper publishers.

UN TO INVADE U.S.

This force must be allowed to intervene "at the local and community levels," the UN leader told the American publishers.

What is "especially gratifying," Kissinger said, "is that the publishers showed no reservations about the prospects of UN forces landing in the United States and imposing the UN's will."

Reference - The Spotlight, June 8, 1992, page 10. Liberty Lobby, 300 Independence Ave. S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003 (Newspaper)

SUMMARY OF QUICK FACTS

* Various dates and proofs that the Bankers created panic to push Congress to pass laws favoring bankers... Reference 22

* President Wilson received $85,000 bribe from bankers... Reference 22, pages 25-26

* How England, through the Bankers, controls our Congress... Reference 22, pages 47-48

* Rockefeller is connected to President Carter... Reference 22, page 171; Reference 25, page 103

* How George Bush is directly connected to the FED bank... Reference 22, page 49

* President Hoover and President Roosevelt were international Bankers... Reference 22, pages 69-71 and pages 157-159

* President Nixon was hired by Rockefeller's law firm to become President... Reference 25, pages 100-101

* FED owner's manual to destroy and control U.S. citizens... Reference 22, pages 55-56

* Proof Bankers claim they control the government... Reference 22, page 59

* Proof the FED knowingly created the Great Depression for their gain... Reference 22, pages 137-170

* FED bankers are directly linked to the New World Order and the United Nations. New World Order was discussed by George Bush, Rockefeller, Adolph Hitler, and Jimmy Carter... Reference 25, pages 5-7

* The Great Seal on back of the FED $1 bill, below pyramid, the NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM means "New World of the Ages" or --->> New World Order... Reference 25, page 35

* How the Banker's tax-exempt organizations fund activities to destroy America's freedom by attacking our Constitution and way of life... Reference 25, pages 138-159; Reference 14 (throughout whole book)

* Senator Barry Goldwater warned of economic powers capable of bypassing or controlling the political powers. Bank induced depression is possible in the future to force political change... Reference 25, 131

* Rockefeller's money was used to seize control of America's teaching and training of students by rewriting history and textbooks. Rockefeller has also funded the National Education Association (NEA)... Reference 14, page 61

* Gary Kah, high-ranking government liaison having first-hand knowledge of the New World Order exposes the truth. Read his book and En Route To Global Occupation...

Reference 14

QUICK FACTS FROM TOM SCHAUF:

First, we must uphold the Constitution. Please call the Hotline (217-854-7504) weekly for new information. When a state considers a Constitutional Convention, concerned Americans call the Hotline and it gives us the names and telephone numbers of the legislators involved. It tells us exactly what to say, and to whom. The Hotline helps us to fight and win!

Secondly, we must change the opinions of the masses with information. The brochure has been a big help, and once 10% of the population agrees to abolish the FED, the rest will follow.

It is obvious the media (radio and newspapers) have lied about the FED and the efforts of FED-UP(tm) to educate people with the truth. This will not stop us - we will persist! Decide for yourself if you want to win America back. If 10,000 patriotic Americans each distribute 1,000 brochures, 10 million Americans will become informed. It would be almost impossible to stop people from talking about abolishing the FED if that many Americans were informed. Another way you can participate is to put a bumper sticker on your car. Over 1,000 people every month will see that bumper sticker about abolishing the FED.

If you think our goal is impossible, remember this; only 3% of Americans supported the Revolutionary War, and we won that war. We can win this war too, but only with your help.

IN CLOSING

For the secret owners of the FED to control the volume of money and become our absolute masters, they had to get the Gold away from our grandparents. This was accomplished in 1933 with the threats of fines and imprisonments by their President Franklin D. Roosevelt with aide Harry Hopkins, who said... "Elect, elect, elect, tax, tax, tax, spend, spend, spend, for the people are too damned stupid to understand". By the way, Roosevelt was an international Banker. See Fool's Gold is Green by Winston Smith.

THE FED IS SLOWLY DESTROYING AMERICA

Our government never had a chance...with political corruption ravaging its Constitution. The real facts don't lie...and neither do government documents...Congressional Record, Congressman Wright Patman, A Primer On Money prepared by the Sub-committee on Domestic Finance, House of Representatives, Committee on Banking and Currency - 88th Congress, 2nd session, August 4th, 1964 and December 23, 1913, page 1464 & 1478.

Congressional Record, Congressman Louis McFadden, June 10, 1932, House of Representatives, pages 12604-12605

Congressional Record, 98th Congress, 1st session, February 3, 1983, Congressman Ron Paul

Congressional Record, Committee on Banking and Currency, House of Representatives, 77th Congress, 1st session, Tuesday, September 30, 1941, pages 1342-1345

THERE ARE MANY MORE CONGRESSIONAL TESTIMONIALS

IS THERE BIAS IN THE MEDIA REGARDING THE FED?

DURING THE TV PRESIDENTIAL DEBATES, CLINTON WAS ASKED SHOULD THERE BE RESTRICTIONS ON THE FED? THE NEXT DAY, MAJOR NEWSPAPERS SAID THEY COVERED THE WHOLE PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE TEXT, BUT MANY NEWSPAPERS ELIMINATED THIS ONE QUESTION. CHECK YOUR LIBRARY!

The Revolutionary War was fought and the Constitution was written to prevent other nations and private banks from issuing (printing) money and controlling our currency.

In 1913, members of Congress committed treason and violated their oath of office to defend the Constitution against all enemies foreign and domestic by voting in the Federal Reserve Bank.

For the New World Order to create a one world government, they must control a central bank, eliminate the Constitution, end Christian values, disarm America, and control the media. The Council on Foreign Relations has openly said they will take us over in favor of a one world government. The American people must be warned or we may lose our freedom forever. If we do not demand our rights and uphold the Constitution, the CFR and bankers will continue their march toward socialism. If we allow them to continue, they will abolish our rights and put an end to our present government. I urge all Americans to distribute the "main" FED-UP brochure ("saving $6000 in taxes per year, per person & balancing the budget) and collect signatures on the petition (see order form in the main brochure). Then all informed Americans can take action and hold their politicians accountable. The bankers control the media, but can not stop patriotic Americans from using copy machines to distribute information and inform America. Once informed, people will demand an explanation why Congress allowed this fraud as the media appeared to be independent and investigative, but remained silent on this important issue.

The ones who scream the loudest to keep the Federal Reserve Bank probably profit the most.

[About the Author:]

Thomas D. Schauf, CPA, is a national speaker to Certified Public Accountants and business leaders. Mr. Schauf's expertise includes banking, the economy, business appraisals, mergers, and acquisitions.

We are looking for leaders in all states to help us abolish the FED. Please write and let us know you're willing to help. The future of America depends on you.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO CONTINUE THE CAUSE ARE APPRECIATED

PLEASE HELP DISTRIBUTE INFORMATION AND COLLECT SIGNATURES ON PETITIONS

Mr. Schauf and other speakers are available to speak at seminars, group meetings, on radio, and on television.
FED-UP(tm) * P.O. Box 834 * Streamwood, IL 60103-0834

(C) 1992 Thomas D. Schauf

PLEASE COPY AND DISTRIBUTE WIDELY WITH NO CHANGES

Acknowledgements:

Our country likes to thank our forefathers for the Constitution.

I wish to thank Mr. Lou Gamboa for his research of the Constitution and our banking system. Lou Gamboa is a national speaker on the subject, and has spoken on numerous radio programs in an effort to educate the public.

I also want to thank Bob Corcoran for his research and encouragement.

I applaud the thousands of patriotic Americans who are spreading the word so we can live in economic prosperity and uphold our Constitutional rights.

ARTICLE 1, SECTION 8 OF THE CONSTITUTION STATES THAT CONGRESS SHALL HAVE THE POWER TO COIN (CREATE) MONEY AND REGULATE THE VALUE THEREOF.

IN 1935 THE SUPREME COURT RULED THAT CONGRESS CANNOT CONSTITUTIONALLY DELEGATE ITS POWER TO ANOTHER GROUP. (Reference 22, P. 168)

Rothschild, a London Banker, wrote a letter saying "It (Central Bank) gives the National Bank almost complete control of national finance. The few who understand the system will either be so interested in its profits, or so dependent on its favours, that there will be no opposition from that class... The great body of the people, mentally incapable of comprehending, will bear its burden without complaint, and perhaps without even suspecting that the system is inimical (contrary) to their interests." [The bankers created the legislation for the FED]

In 1913, before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, Mr. Alexander stated: "But the whole scheme of a Federal Reserve Bank with its commercial-paper basis is an impractical, cumbersome machinery, is simply a cover, to find a way to secure the privilege of issuing money and to evade payment of as much tax upon circulation as possible, and then control the issue and maintain, instead of reduce, interest rates. It is a system that, if inaugurated, will prove to the advantage of the few and the detriment of the people of the United States. It will mean continued shortage of actual money and further extension of credits; for when there is a lack of real money people have to borrow credit to their cost."

The Rise of the House of Rothschild

COUNT EGON CAESAR CORTI

Translated from the German by Brian and Beatrix Lunn

1770-1830

The Pedler on Horseback

Caricature of the House of Rothschild

FOREWORD

Historians, in interpreting the nineteenth century, have laid stress on many and various aspects of the period under study; and descriptions of isolated periods, single episodes, and individuals are scattered amongst hundreds and even thousands of books. On the other hand, certain special features of the period under consideration have been, for various reasons, entirely neglected.

An example of such neglect is the ignoring by historians of the role played by the Rothschild family in the history of the nineteenth century, and the object of this work is to appraise the important influence of this family on the politics of the period, not only in Europe but throughout the world. For, strangely enough, the influence of the Rothschilds is barely mentioned, or at the most casually referred to, in otherwise comprehensive and painstaking historical treatises.

Special literature dealing with the House of Rothschild usually falls into one of two groups, either fulsome paeans of praise commissioned by the House itself, or scurrilous pamphlets inspired by hatred—both equally unpleasant. There are, however, two works of serious value in existence, which are partially compiled from legal documents, but they are of small scope. One is by an employee of the Rothschilds, Christian Wilhelm Berghoeffer, and the other is the impartial work of Dr. Richard Ehrenberg; but these treat only of isolated incidents in the history of the House, and throw no light on its pan-European importance.

The object of the present work, which deals with the period 1770-1830, is to trace the rise of the House of Rothschild from its small beginnings to the great position it attained, culminating in the year of its great crisis.

In the course of my researches I found that references to the name of Rothschild in official documents and in books of memoirs were as common as they are rare in contemporary textbooks. I made a point of collecting all available data until my drawers were literally crammed with letters, deeds, and documents containing the name of Rothschild, and bearing dates of almost every year of the nineteenth century. My next step was to visit the various European capitals which had been the scene of the family activities, in order to enrich my store of references with all the relevant literature. The subject is indeed inexhaustible, but the material I had amassed encouraged me to essay a complete picture.

The subject required the most delicate treatment, but my determination to undertake the work was accompanied by the definite intention of according it complete impartiality, for I was convinced from the beginning that a prejudiced outlook would render the work utterly valueless.

The House of Rothschild, as will be readily understood, did not throw open its archives to my inspection, for it is particularly careful in guarding its more important business secrets. But this was not entirely without its advantage, for it left me completely free from political considerations and uninfluenced by racial, national, and religious predilections or antipathies. I was thus enabled, in accordance with my wish, to begin an independent historical research into the part played by this House in the nineteenth century, which I knew to be far more important than is commonly thought.

The general scheme of this work will be built upon facts alone, in a practical way such as will help us to form our own judgment on individuals and the part they played in world events.

I should like to take this opportunity of expressing my special sense of gratitude toward all those whose advice and assistance have been so valuable to me in my work.

Above all I have to thank Dr. Bittner, Director of the State Archives at Vienna, as well as his exceedingly helpful staff, Professors Gross, Antonius, Reinoehl, Schmidt, Wolkan, and his Chief Clerk, Herr Marek. I should also like to thank Lieutenant-Colonel von Carlshausen, grandnephew of the man who helped the Rothschilds up the first rung of the ladder, and the Director of the Prussian Secret State Archives at Berlin, Geheimrat Klinkenborg. My thanks are also due to Dr. Losch of the Prussian State Library in Berlin, Dr. A. Richel at Frankfort and the staff of the Municipal Museum in that city who, together with the Director of the Portrait Collection in the Vienna National Library, Hofrat Dr. Rottinger and Dr. Wilhelm Beetz, who so kindly assisted me with the illustrations.

The material was collected for over a period of three and a half years, and only after much care has been spent on it do I now offer it to the public. It is submitted in the hope that it will be judged in accordance with its intentions. It is inspired by an intense love of truth, and it relates the story of an unseen but infinitely powerful driving force which permeated the whole of the nineteenth century.

The Author

Vienna, July, 1927.

CONTENTS

CHAPTER I The Origins and the Early Activities of the Frankfort Family Rothschild Page 1

CHAPTER II The Rothschild Family During the Napoleonic Era " 28

CHAPTER III The Great Napoleonic Crisis and Its Exploitation by the House of Roths-child " 109

CHAPTER IV The Brothers Rothschild During the Period of Congresses, 1818-1822 " 187

CHAPTER V The Rothschild Business Throughout the World " 277

CHAPTER VI The House of Rothschild Rides the Storm " 343

NOTES " 409

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTES " 425

BIBLIOGRAPHY " 429

The Rise of the House of Rothschild

CHAPTER I

The Origins and the Early Activities of the Frankfort Family Rothschild FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAIN, seat of the Imperial Elections since the Golden Bull of 1356, acquired a dominating position amongst the great cities of Germany during the second half of the eighteenth century. Formerly the capital of the kingdom of the East Franks, it had become subject to the empire alone as early as 1245, and in spite of many vicissitudes it had maintained its leading position throughout the centuries. It expanded considerably during the last few centuries before the French Revolution and now numbered some 35,000 inhabitants, of whom one-tenth were Jews. By virtue of its natural position, lying so close to the great waterway of the Rhine and to the frontiers of France and Holland, it had become the gateway for the trade of Germany with the western states. Trade with England too constituted an important element in the activities of its inhabitants.

It was natural that members of the Jewish race, with their special gifts for trade and finance, should be particularly attracted to this city. Moreover, towards the end of the Middle Ages the Jews in Frankfort enjoyed a great measure of freedom, and at first no difficulties were placed in the way of their settlement. It was not until the non-Jewish members of the business community at Worms saw that they were suffering from the competition of these enterprising people that the Christian citizens combined in their superior numbers.

Now began a period of harsh oppression for the Jewish inhabitants. In order that they might be removed from the neighborhood of the most important church in the town, they were ordered by a law passed in the year 1462 to leave the houses they had been living in and to settle in a quarter set aside for the purpose—the so-called Jewish City.[1] This, however, consisted only of a single dark alley, about twelve feet broad, and lay, as described by Goethe, between the city wall and a trench. For more than three hundred years this continued to be the sole residence of the Frankfort Jews, whose continuance in the city became more and more unpopular with the other inhabitants. As early as the second decade of the seventeenth century a rising broke out under one Fettmilch, one of the objects of which was to drive the Jews out of Frankfort. This object was indeed achieved through murder and pillage. Although the Jews soon returned to the city, they had to submit to innumerable restrictions and regulations embodied in a special law dealing with the so-called "Status of Jews." They were made subject to a poll-tax, and were compelled, as being a foreign element in the town, to purchase the "protection" of their persons and property. Hence they came to be called "protected Jews." The number of their families was to be limited to five hundred and only twelve marriages a year were allowed, although this number might be increased if a family died out. The Jews were not allowed to acquire land, or to practice farming or handicrafts. They were also forbidden to trade in various commodities, such as fruit, weapons and silk. Moreover, except during fairs, they were forbidden to offer their wares anywhere except outside the Jewish quarter. They were forbidden to leave the space within the ghetto walls by night, or on Sundays or holy days. If a Jew crossed a bridge he had to pay a fee for doing so. They were not allowed to visit public taverns and were excluded from the more attractive walks in the city. The Jews accordingly did not stand high in public esteem. When they appeared in public, they were often greeted with shouts of contempt and stones were sometimes thrown at them. Boerne has stated that any street urchin could say to a passing Jew, "Jew, do your duty," and the Jew then had to step aside and take off his hat. However that may be, the oppressed condition of the Jews and the bent of many of them to usury, combined with the natural hostility of the Christians and their feeling that they were not as sharp in business, created an atmosphere of mutual hatred that can scarcely have been more painful anywhere than in Frankfort.

The progenitors of the House of Rothschild lived under conditions such as those in the ghetto of Frankfort. The earlier ancestors of Meyer Amschel Rothschild, who laid the foundations of the future greatness of the house, existed in the middle of the sixteenth century; we know their names, and their tombs have been preserved in the old Jewish cemetery at Frankfort. Formerly the houses in the Jewish quarter were not numbered, each house being distinguished by a shield of a particular color or by a sign. The house in which the members of the Rothschild family lived bore a small red shield. There is no doubt that it is to this fact that they owe their family name; it is first mentioned in 1585 in the name "Isaak Elchanan[2] at the Red Shield," his father's tombstone simply bearing the name Elchanan. About a century later Naftali Hirz at the Red Shield left the ruinous old building from which the family had derived its name, and occupied the so-called Haus zur Hinterpfann, in which the Rothschilds were now domiciled as protected Jews.

Until the time when Meyer Amschel Rothschild—who was born in the year 1743, six years before Goethe—reached manhood, the family were principally engaged in various kinds of retail trade. At the beginning of the eighteenth century they had become money-changers in a small way. From the occasional records of their tax payments which have been preserved, it would appear that they were not a poor Jewish family, but that they were only reasonably well off.

In any case it is clear that Meyer Amschel came into some small inheritance when, in 1755, in his twelfth year, he lost his father and mother, of whom he was the eldest son; this gave him the incentive to throw himself into the battle of life with that vigor and industry which his parents had implanted in him in his early childhood. In the conditions of those times the struggle was certainly much more severe for a young Jew than for his more fortunate Christian neighbors.

When he was a boy of ten Meyer Amschel had been employed by his father in changing coins of every kind, that is, in exchanging gold and silver for the appropriate amount of copper known as coarse money. In the chaotic conditions prevailing in Germany—divided as the country was into innumerable small principalities, cities and spiritual jurisdictions, all of which had their own currency systems—the business of money-changing offered magnificent opportunities of profit, since everybody was compelled, before undertaking even the shortest journey, to call for the assistance of the exchange merchant. As the boy grew up, an important side interest developed out of this occupation, as he occasionally became possessed of rare and historically valuable coins, which awoke in him the instincts of the coin collector.

After leaving the school at Furth, where he was educated in the Jewish faith, Meyer Amschel entered the firm of Oppenheim at Hanover. While there he happened to make the acquaintance of the Hanoverian General von Estorff, an ardent coin collector, who employed him to obtain many valuable coins for his collection. As the general was connected with the ruling house in Hesse, this acquaintance was to have fruitful results. In his spare time Meyer Amschel now devoted himself more and more to numismatics. He got hold of any papers about the subject that he could, and in course of time became an expert in his subject, although his general education left a very great deal to be desired. At a comparatively early age he returned to his native city of Frankfort, in order to take possession of his inheritance, and having done so, to lay the foundations of a business of Ins own. For this he had received a practical education from his earliest youth, both at home and at Hanover.

About the same time General von Estorff left Hanover for the court of Prince William of Hesse, the grandson of the old Landgrave William VIII, who resided at Hesse; he proceeded to the small town of Hanau, which lies quite close to Frankfort. The prince's father Frederick II of Hesse had married a daughter of King George III of England of the House of Hanover, and the two rulers used their family relationships to consolidate their dynastic and political interests. The sale of soldiers for service under foreign governments, practiced by so many German princes at this time, was an important part of their activities; England, being particularly accustomed to carrying on wars with foreign mercenaries, was an exceedingly good customer.

Unfortunately Frederick II fell out with his wife, his father, and his father-in-law, because he changed over from the Protestant to the Catholic faith. In order to protect his grandson from his father's influence the old landgrave decided that William was to be kept away from Cassel, and allotted the county of Hanau to him. Until he should be able to assume the rulership of that province he was sent to King Frederick V of Denmark, who had married the second daughter of the King of England, and whose daughter was destined to be the future bride of young William.

The relations of the ruling House of Hesse with England and Denmark were to be fraught with the most important consequences for the rise of the House of Rothschild, which was enabled to make use of the close business connection that it succeeded in establishing with the ruling House of Hesse, to get into touch with the courts and the leading statesmen of Denmark and England.

The old Landgrave William VIII died in 1760. Frederick assumed the government at Cassel, and William became crown prince; and as the bridegroom of the Danish princess he became, in accordance with the will of his grandfather, independent ruler of the small county of Hanau with its 50,000 inhabitants, to whose interests he devoted himself with the greatest zeal. William was a thoroughly active person, and was never idle for a moment. He read a great deal, and actually wrote some essays on matters of local historical interest. He also tried his hand, though without any great success, at etching, modeling and carpentering, and he had a very definite flair for collecting.

It would appear that General von Estorff aroused his ruler's interest in coin-collecting; in 1763 William adopted this hobby with great enthusiasm, and it afforded him much pleasure and satisfaction. Estorff spoke to him about Meyer Amschel Rothschild, who had bought coins for him in Hanover in former days, as being a great expert in that line.[3] On the strength of this introduction Rothschild selected some of his finest medals and rarest coins, and went to Hanau to offer them to the young prince. He did not succeed in seeing him personally, but he managed to hand them to someone in the prince's immediate entourage. This offer proved to be the starting-point of a lasting business connection, even though at first it was of a quite loose and impersonal nature.

At that time a large number of foreigners used to visit Frankfort every spring. The town fairs were widely famous, The latest products of the whole world were on view there, and young William of Hanau, who had a talent for business, took a special interest in these fairs and constantly attended them. Meyer Amschel always managed to get advance information about these journeys from the prince's servants, and profited by these occasions to offer William while he was in Frankfort not only rare coins but also precious stones and antiques. Although this was principally done through the prince's retinue, he sometimes managed to conduct these transactions personally, and in any case he managed to establish a regular business relationship. He was fortunate in that the prince did not share the general aversion to Jews, and appreciated anyone who seemed intelligent and good at business, and whom he thought he could use in his own interests.

At that time titles and honors were of far greater practical importance than they are today; unless a person had some kind of prefix or suffix all doors were closed to him, and everyone who did not have a title of nobility by the accident of birth would endeavor to obtain an office, or at any rate an official title, from some one of the innumerable counts or princelings who in that day still enjoyed sovereign rights. Meyer Amschel Rothschild, being a shrewd man with an astonishing knowledge of human nature for his years—he was only twenty-five—concentrated on using his connection with the Prince of Hanau to obtain a court title. He hoped thereby not merely to raise his prestige generally, but more particularly to advance his relations with other princes interested in coins.

In 1769 he wrote a most humble petition[4] to the Prince of Hanau, in which, after referring to various goods delivered to the prince to his Highness's most gracious satisfaction, he begged that he might "most graciously be granted the advantage of being appointed court agent." Meyer Amschel promised always to devote all his energy and property to the prince's service, and he concluded his letter with a perfectly sincere statement that if he received the designation in question he hoped thereby to gain business esteem, and that it would otherwise enable him to make his fortune in the city of Frankfort.

This letter, which was written in a style expressive of extreme humility, was the first of an almost endless series of petitions which the various members of the House of Rothschild were to address in the course of the nineteenth century to those occupying the seats of the mighty. Many of these were favorably considered, and assisted no little in establishing the fortunes of that House. This, the first of the series, was granted, and the nomination was duly carried into effect on September 21, 1769. Henceforth to the name of Rothschild was attached the decorative suffix "Crown Agent to the Principality of Hesse-Hanau."

This more or less corresponded with the present-day practice under which a tradesman may display the royal coat-of-arms with the legend "By special appointment," etc. It was a mere designation carrying no obligation, and although it gave expression to the fact that a business man enjoyed the patronage of a customer in the highest circles, it did not imply any official status whatever. Nevertheless this first success gave much joy to Meyer Amschel, since it not only enabled him to make great profits in his old coin business, but gave his firm a special prestige with the world at large, as even the smallest prince shed a certain glamour upon all who came anywhere near his magic circle; and the Prince of Hanau was grandson of the King of England, husband of the daughter of the King of Denmark, and destined to be the ruler of Hesse-Cassel.

At the age of twenty-five Meyer Amschel was a tall, impressive-looking man of pronounced Hebraic type; his expression, if rather sly, was good-natured. In accordance with the custom of those times he wore a wig, although, as he was a Jew, he was not allowed to have it powdered, and in accordance with the customs of his race he wore a small, pointed black beard. When he took stock of his business and his little property, he could say to himself with justice that he had not merely administered his inheritance intelligently, but substantially increased it. Although he could certainly not be classed amongst the wealthy men of Frankfort, or even amongst the wealthy Jews of that city, he could assuredly be described as well off, and was in a position to think of founding a family.

He had been attracted for some time by the youthful daughter of a tradesman called Wolf Solomon Schnapper, who lived not far from the Rothschilds' house in the Jewish quarter. She was seventeen years old when Meyer Amschel courted her, had been brought up in all the domestic virtues, was simple and modest, and exceedingly industrious, and brought a dowry with her which, though small, was in solid cash. Meyer Amschel's marriage was celebrated on August 29, 1770. After his marriage he would have liked to move from the house zur Hinterpfann, which he rented, into a house of his own, but he could not yet afford to do so. The young couple's first child, a daughter, was born as early as 1771, after which followed three boys in the years 1773, 1774, 1775, who were given the names Amschel, Solomon, and Nathan.

While his wife was fully occupied in bringing up the children and running the house, Meyer Amschel developed his business, in which his invalid brother Kalman was a partner until he died in 1782. Without neglecting his ordinary business of money-changing, he bought several collections of coins from needy aristocratic collectors in the district, and he had an antique coin catalogue of his own printed, which he circulated widely, especially among such princes as were interested in numismatics. He sent such catalogues to Goethe's patron Duke Karl August of Weimar, to Duke Karl Theodore of the Palatinate, and of course always to his own benefactor at Hanau,[5] Prince William.

The prince's mother still kept him away from his father, Landgrave Frederick, who was ruling at Cassel, and who made several unsuccessful attempts to get into touch with his son. William had married Princess Caroline of Denmark six years before Meyer Amschel's marriage; but from the first moment of their union they had realized that they were not suited[6] to one another. Indeed so little physical or spiritual harmony was there between the young couple that their marriage might be regarded as an absolute affliction. It finally led to William's entirely neglecting his wife and living with numerous favorites, who bore him children. The families Haynau, Heimrod, and Hessenstein are the descendants of such unions, it being William's practice to obtain titles for his illegitimate children from the Emperor of Austria, in return for the moneys he lent to him. It is difficult to verify the fantastic figures[7] given as to the total number of his illegitimate children; but there is no doubt they were very numerous.

When he assumed the government of his small territory, William of Hanau was in a position to play the role of absolute ruler, and his highly marked individuality immediately made itself felt. He was insolent even with the nobility, and often observed that he did not like them to take advantage of any marks of familiar "condescension"[8] that he showed them. On the other hand he did not show any pride in dealing with persons who he thought would serve his interests. He was exceedingly suspicious, quick to see a point, and easily made angry, especially if his divine right was questioned.

He held broad views in religious matters, associated much with Freemasons and practiced complete religious tolerance. Under his rule the Jews enjoyed all kinds of liberties; they did not, for instance, have to display in the market signs to distinguish them from Christian tradespeople. Indeed William took pleasure in their marked talent for business, for in this matter he felt himself to be a kindred spirit. Business considerations governed him even when he was specifically considering the welfare of his soldiers. He would concern himself with the smallest details of their equipment; would pass the new recruits, and would give precise instructions as to the length of the pigtail to be worn. He was particularly fond of parades, and tortured his men with drill and button-polishing. One reason he was particularly anxious that his troops should look smart was that he could make a great deal of money by following the example of his father and grandfather in selling his men to England. His father Landgrave Frederick had in this way gradually transferred to England 12,000 Hessians, and amassed an enormous fortune in the process. In the same way William sold to England in 1776 the small Hanau regiment, which he had just formed. The conditions of such "subsidy-contracts" were exceedingly oppressive to the customer, as he had to pay substantial compensation for any man who was killed or wounded. The crown prince also increased his property considerably by this means. After deducting all expenses he realized a net profit of about 3,500,000 marks from this business, and there being no distinction between the public and the private purse of a prince, this money was at his absolute personal disposal.

In spite of his princely origin, such were the business instincts of this talented young man that this financial success simply whetted his appetite for amassing greater riches. Had William not been destined to succeed to the throne of Hesse, he would have been an outstandingly successful man of business. As it was he found such outlet as he could for his commercial instincts within the sphere of his princely dignity. Father and son continued to accumulate large capital sums, and they refrained from bringing over to the Continent substantial proportions of the subsidy moneys, which they invested in England itself. The management of these funds was entrusted to the Amsterdam financial house Van der Notten. England did not always pay in cash, but often in bills of exchange that had to be discounted. For this purpose the prince and his officials had to employ suitable middlemen in large commercial centers like Frankfort; although the middlemen had to get their profit out of the business they could not be dispensed with in view of the restricted means of transport and communication at that time. Purchases and sales had to be carefully regulated to prevent the market from being suddenly flooded with bills, the rate of exchange being consequently depressed.

This work fell to the various crown agents and factors; of these the Jew Veidel David was the principal one attached to the landgrave at Cassel, Rothschild being employed only by the crown prince at Hanau, and only in exchange business and to a limited extent in conjunction with several others. His personal relation with the prince was at first exceedingly slender, for, however enlightened he might be, a ruling prince did not easily associate with a Jew, and only long years of useful service, acting upon a temperament such as William's, could break down such natural obstacles. In the first instance men of business had to deal with the crown prince's officials ; to get on good terms with them was a primary essential for anybody who wanted to do business with the prince.

One of the most influential members of the crown prince's civil service was an official at the treasury called Carl Frederick Buderus.[9] He was the son of a Hanau schoolmaster, and had shown a special aptitude for the duties of a careful and accurate treasury clerk. His father had been writing- and music-master to the children of the crown prince's mistress Frau von Ritter-Lindenthal, ancestress of the Haynaus, and this had given him the opportunity of bringing to the crown prince's attention a plan of his son's for increasing the milk profits from one of the prince's dairies by the simple expedient of forbidding the practice, adopted by the office concerned, of omitting fractions of a heller in the accounts. Young Buderus showed that this would increase the revenue by 120 thalers. This discovery appealed so strongly to the avaricious prince, who counted every half-penny, that he entrusted Buderus with the accounts of his private purse, in addition to his normal duties.

Buderus henceforth displayed the greatest zeal in looking after the financial interests of the crown prince. He is generally credited with having been responsible for the introduction of the Salt Tax when the problem of providing for the prince's innumerable natural children became pressing. The resulting increase in the cost of this important article of diet was heavily felt, especially by the poorest inhabitants of Hesse-Cassel. There being no distinction between the public treasury and the private purse we can readily imagine how great this man's influence as. Moreover, the officials of that period were always personally interested on a percentage basis in the financial dealings which they carried through in their official capacity. By arrangement with amenable crown agents with whom they had to deal they could, without any suggestion of bribery, or of acting against the influence of their master, easily so arrange matters that their personal interests would be better served by a clever agent than by one who was less adaptable.

Meyer Amschel brought to his work a certain natural flair for psychology, and he always endeavored to create personal links wherever he possibly could. He naturally made a special point of being on good terms with the Hanau Treasury officials, and especially with Buderus. They, however, had not as yet sufficient confidence in the financial resources of the Frankfort Jew Rothschild to entrust to him anything except the smaller transactions.

Through the death of Landgrave Frederick, the crown prince suddenly succeeded to the throne of Hesse-Cassel, and to the most extensive property of any German prince of that period. On October 31, 1785, his father Frederick II had suddenly had a stroke during his midday meal and had fallen off his chair, dying a few minutes later. This news came as a complete surprise to the crown prince, as his father had latterly scarcely ever been ill. William of Hanau accordingly succeeded to the throne of Hesse-Cassel as Landgrave William IX. On reading his father's will he learned with pleasure that the country was free of debt, and that he had come into an enormous property. The subsidies received for the sale of mercenaries had been most profitably invested, and estimates the value of the inheritance varied between twenty[10] and sixty[11] million thalers—unparalleled sums for those times.

The new landgrave united his private property at Hanau with his inherited posssessions, and now found himself disposing of an amount of money which conferred far greater power on him than his new dignity. He moved his residence from Hanau, which was close to Frankfort, to Cassel, which lay much farther north, with the result that Meyer Amschel Rothschild's relations with the Hessian court at first suffered from the greater distance which separated him from his patron. But the Jewish tradesman was determined not to lose such a useful connection without a struggle. In order to remind the new landgrave of his existence he visited Cassel again in 1787, bringing with him a remarkably beautiful collection of coins, medals, and jeweled gold chains, and offered these wares to the landgrave at exceptionally low prices. The prince at once appreciated the real value of the articles, and eagerly did business with Meyer Amschel, who took advantage of the opportunity to submit the humble request that he should not be forgotten if any future bills of exchange required discounting, or the prince wanted to purchase English coins.

Rothschild had deliberately made a loss on these small deals in order to secure the chance of much more profitable business in the future, and his valuable articles were readily purchased from him because they were cheap, promises being freely made with regard to the future. But two years passed without his services being asked for. He stood by enviously, seeing other agents getting bills to discount, and being asked to pay interest only after six or eight months, or else to pay over the money in instalments, an arrangement equivalent to allowing the firms concerned substantial free credits. Rothschild had closely followed the business dealings of these firms, and had thought out a very useful way of transacting such matters if he should be entrusted with them.

He decided to pay another call at Cassel. During the summer of 1789 he wrote a letter to the landgrave[12] in which he referred to the services that he had rendered during a long course of years as Hesse-Hanau crown agent, and asked to be considered in connection with the bills-of-exchange business on a credit basis. In order to put himself on a level with his rivals he promised always to do business at a price at least as high as that offered by any banker in Gassel.

The petition—which shows that Rothschild already had control of considerable sums of money—was submitted to the landgrave by Buderus, but William decided that he must first obtain further information about Rothschild's business. His inquiries all produced satisfactory results; Meyer Amschel was described as being punctual in his payments, and as being an energetic and honorable man, who therefore deserved to be granted credit, even if precise figures regarding the extent of his possessions could not be obtained. Nevertheless, Rothschild received only a comparatively small credit transaction to carry out, whilst simultaneously a transaction thirty times as great was entrusted to Veidel David; but, though modest, it was a beginning. Buderus, whose position in the meantime had been steadily increasing in importance, often had occassion to travel between Cassel and Frankfort on business matters. We have evidence of the fact that as early as 1790 he had business dealings with Rothschild's father-in-law Wolf Solomon Schnapper, and it was Schnapper who brought him and Meyer Amschel together.

Rothschild would often get advance information of Buderus's journeys to Frankfort so that he could go and see him when he came. The Hessian official heard from other sources in Frankfort of the clever Jew's rising reputation, and of how he always met his obligations punctually. Buderus was also gradually influenced by Rothschild's own persuasive powers. As early as November, 1790, Buderus's accounts contain an entry regarding a "draft of 2,000 Laubtaler to the order of the crown agent Meyer Amschel Rothschild."[13]

Rothschild now urged Buderus, if occasion should arise, to recommend him to the landgrave for substantial dealings also. In 1794 an opportunity for this occurred. The capital sums invested by Hesse in England had grown to a very considerable amount, and the landgrave gave instructions that a portion of them should be brought over to Cassel. In addition to the Christian banking firm of Simon Moritz von Bethmann, which had been established in Frankfort for centuries, and four other firms, Buderus put forward the name of the crown agent Rothschild as suitable for carrying through this transaction. The landgrave, however, attached far too much importance to his old connection with Bethmann, at that time the outstanding banking firm in Germany, and with the other old established firms, and on this occasion too Rothschild was left out. But it did not occur again. In the end Buderus's efforts were successful in overcoming the landgrave's aversion, and henceforward Rothschild also was employed to an increasing extent in discounting bills and in other business.

His dealings with the court at Cassel soon became very active, and as Meyer Amschel carried through the matters entrusted to him, not merely conscientiously but with a shrewd eye to gain, the profits which he derived from them increased considerably. It was necessary for the young household that business should be brisk, for in 1788 another son, Carl Meyer, was born, and in 1792 a fifth son Jacob, called James, and Meyer Amschel's marriage had also been blessed with five daughters. There was the large family of twelve persons to feed; however, Meyer Amschel's flourishing business was not merely adequate to support his family, but there was a considerable and constantly increasing surplus available for increasing his business capital. In 1785, as an outward and visible sign of his increasing prosperity, he bought a handsome residence, the house known as zum grunen Schild, while he transferred to a relative the house zur Hinterpfann in which he had lived hitherto, and which he had partially purchased since being nominated crown agend.

The house into which the Rothschild family now moved is still standing almost as it was then; it is the right half of a building comprising two quite small family dwellings, typical of the straitened circumstances of the Jewish quarter. Only the three left windows of the house front belonged to the Rothschilds, and above the first door was a small, scarcely noticeable five-sided convex green shield.[14] The right half of the building, known as the house zur Arche, belonged to the Jewish family Schiffe, who kept a second-hand shop in it; over the door was a small carved ship representing the boat of Columbus.[15]

As the door of the Rothschild house was opened, an ancient bell was set ringing, sending its warning notes right through the house. Every step one took revealed the painful congestion in which the Jews of that period were compelled to exist, the only quarters where they were allowed to live being comprised within the small and narrow Jews' street. Everything in the house was very narrow, and each particle of space was turned to account. A creaking wooden staircase, underneath which cupboards had been built in, led to the upper floor, and to the little "green room" of Gudula, the mistress of the house, so called because the modest furniture in it was upholstered in green. In a glass case on the table was the withered bridal wreath of Meyer Amschel's wife. Let into the left wall was a small secret cupboard, concealed by a mirror hanging in front of it. In this matter, too, space was carefully utilized, there being cupboards built into the wall wherever possible, such as are now coming into use again.

On the ground floor was the parents' small bedroom, while the numerous children had to share one other little room. A narrow passage led to a kind of roof terrace—a tiny roof garden with a few plants. As the Jews were not allowed in the public gardens this roof garden furnished a modest substitute, and served as the family recreation ground. As it is laid down that the Feast of the Tabernacle must be celebrated in the open air, and there was no other place available, the little roof garden was used for this purpose.

Behind the house, and overlooking the narrow court-yard, was a room about nine feet square, which was actually the first banking house of the Rothschilds. Its most important article of furniture was a large iron chest with an enormous padlock. However, the lock was so contrived that the chest could not be opened on the side where the lock was, but only by lifting the lid from the back. In this room, too, there were secret shelves cleverly concealed in the walls. The kitchen of the house was very modest, the room being about twelve feet long and only about five feet broad; a tiny hearth, which could accommodate only one cooking pot, a chest, and a bench were about all that it contained. There was one fixture that constituted a great luxury for those times, a primitive pump which conveyed drinking water direct to the kitchen.

Such was the scene of the early activities of Meyer Amschel and his sons, whose energy and enterprise laid the foundations for the future development of their House. Berghoeffer's researches indicate that the annual income of the House of Rothschild, before the war period of the 1790's, may be estimated at between 2,000 and 3,000 gulden.[16] We are better able to realize what this meant when we consider that the expenditure of Goethe's family, who were people of position, was about 2,400 gulden a year. On such an income it was possible to live quite comfortably at Frankfort at that time, although the political disturbances which were developing soon began to produce their effect. Events profoundly affecting the course of all future history had taken place. The repercussions of the French Revolution were felt throughout Europe. There was no one, whether prince of peasant, who did not directly or indirectly feel its The principle of equality which it proclaimed aroused emotions of hope or dismay throughout the world, according to the social position of each individual, On the standards of the revolutionary armies was inscribed their determination to extend the benefits of their achievements throughout the world, and those who had seized the reins of power were soon to aim at world dominion. This fact constituted a special menace to the German princes whose territories bordered on France. The refugees of the French nobility flooded Germany, and many of them arrived at the Cassel court.

Landgrave William had occasion to hear many of the terrible stories told by the emigrants who had lost their nearest relatives under the guillotine, and had been forced to go abroad as homeless refugees reduced to absolute poverty. The impression gained from the sufferers themselves, the news regarding the threatened execution of the king and his consort, and the reports of the cruel treatment meted out to all who enjoyed princely or noble privileges caused him to tremble for his crown, as all the princes of Europe were trembling. He was also concerned about his enormous wealth, a special source of danger at such a time; and he therefore did not require much pressing to join the great coalition of princes against revolutionary France.

At the head of this coalition was Francis of Austria, who was shortly to be elected emperor, and who had been the first to ally himself with Prussia against France. Landgrave William attached particular importance to his relations with the man who was shortly to be emperor, and in a letter[17] to the "Most Excellent, Most Puissant King and highly honored cousin" he hastened to promise his military help as a proof of his "most special devotion to your high wishes." Francis of Austria expressed his gratitude and observed that this should serve as an example to others, especially as "not only every territorial prince and government of whatever kind they may be, but also every private person possessed of any property, or who has been blessed by God with any possessions or rights acquired by inheritance or otherwise must realize with ever growing conviction . . . that the war is a universal war declared upon all states, all forms of government, and even upon all forms of private property, and any orderly regulation of human society, as is clearly proved by the chaotic condition and internal desolation of France and her raging determination to spread similar conditions throughout the world."[18]

But the union of princes had much underrated the offensive of revolutionary France. Under the handicap of bad leadership and lack of unity the Allies were unable to prevail against the revolutionary armies, inspired by the ideals of liberty and nationalism. Prussia and Hesse were forced to retire; and the French General de Custine actually succeeded in crossing the Rhine in 1792 and reaching Frankfort, with the result that William retired in a panic to Cassel, greatly concerned about his crown treasures. With rage and indignation he read the French manifesto to the Hessian soldiers which urged them to forsake the "tyrant and tiger who sold their blood in order to fill his chest." The landgrave finally succeeded in driving the small French force out of Frankfort. This cost him a considerable sum of money but his loss was made good by a new subsidy contract under which he delivered 8,000 Hessian soldiers to England, which had joined the Coalition against France. Meyer Amschel Rothschild and his rivals were kept fully occupied in discounting the bills received from England in connection with this transaction.

When, in 1795, Prussia withdrew from the war against the French Republic, the Landgrave of Hesse followed her example. His ambition now was to have the comparatively modest title of landgrave changed, and to attain electoral rank. In the meantime he had been created a field-marshal of Prussia, and in 1796, when Napoleon's star was in the ascendant, relations between the two countries were particularly cordial. In spite, however, of the secession of Prussia and Hesse, England and Austria continued to carry on the war of the coalition with varying success. Whilst Bonaparte was victorious in Italy, the Archduke Karl gained a series of successes in the south of Germany. Frankfort had to suffer again from the vicissitudes of war; on July 13, 1796, it was actually bombarded by the French with the result that some of the houses in the Jewish quarter—156 buildings including the synagogue, most of which were inferior wooden structures—were set on fire.

The Rothschild house, which was one of the best-constructed buildings in the street, suffered only slight damage. In view of the time required to rebuild these houses a departure had to be made from the ghetto precinct, and the Jews had to be allowed to reside and trade outside the strictly defined boundary. The Rothschilds were among those who took advantage of this favorable opportunity, and transferred their merchandise business —they were dealing increasingly in war requirements such as cloth, foodstuffs, and wine—to the Schnur Gasse which lay near the center of the town, renting accommodation at a leather dealer's.

The military developments of the first coalition war, in which Meyer Amschel's princely customer at Cassel was actively engaged with varying fortunes, entailed considerably increased activity on the part of the various crown agents in the landgrave's service. Although the war had caused not a little damage to Frankfort[19] it had brought the town certain indirect advantages. The Frankfort Bourse benefited by the decline of the Amsterdam Bourse, which had hitherto held a dominating position, and which almost completely collapsed when the French conquered Holland in 1795. The result was that much more business came the way of the Frankfort bankers, and Meyer Amschel Rothschild's financial and trading business, which was closely associated with war requirements, increased by leaps and bounds.

The war profits realized at that time formed the real foundation of the enormous fortune that was later built up by the House of Rothschild. It was of course impossible any longer completely to conceal such large profits. Until 1794 the family property had for twenty years been assessed at the constant figure of only 2,000 gulden, and they had paid taxes in accordance with this "assessment," amounting to about thirteen gulden annually. Suddenly in the year 1795 this amount was doubled, and in the year after that Rothschild was included amongst those whose property was worth 15,000 gulden or more, that being the highest figure adopted for assessment purposes.

Meanwhile the three eldest sons had grown up, and after the age of twenty were associated with their father in the business to an increasing extent. Like their two eldest sisters they were placed in responsible positions and rendered active assistance to their father. A large family, which to so many people is a cause of worry and anxiety, was in this case a positive blessing as there was abundance of work for everybody. It made it unnecessary for Meyer Amschel to take strangers into his business and let them into the various secret and subtle moves of the game. Since the number of available children increased in proportion as the business expanded, it was possible to keep all the confidential positions in the family. The strong traditional community and family sense of the Jews, reenforced by persecution from outside, compelling them to unite in their own defense, did wonders. The two eldest sons had been zealously engaged in the business from boyhood, and their father wisely encouraged them by letting them share personally in the business, apart from the general family interest in its prosperity.

When the eldest daughter married, in 1795, the son-in-law Moses Worms was not employed in the business, but when the eldest son Amschel Meyer married in 1796, the daughter-in-law Eva Hanau was given a post.

In spite of the growing number of available members of the family, Meyer Amschel found it necessary also to engage bookkeepers with a knowledge of languages, as the Rothschild family at that time were all quite uneducated, speaking and writing only a bad kind of Frankfort Yiddish German, apart from Hebrew; and in view of their expanding connections with persons in the highest circles they had to pay particular attention to matters of epistolary style. As the only person he could find capable of carrying out this work, was a Christian girl, Rothschild did not hesitate to take her into the business.

It was at this period that Meyer Amschel entered into a highly elaborate deed of partnership with his two eldest sons, which provided that profits and losses should be divided between the three partners according to a definite scheme.

The growing demands upon the treasury arising out of the war served to develop the relations with the Landgrave of Hesse. After the separate Peace of Basel William of Hesse adopted the attitude of an impartial observer of the warlike activities in Europe, and occupied himself principally in the profitable administration of his extensive possessions. He was no stranger to the authentic delights of avarice. Great though his wealth was, his appetite for increasing it remained keen. He showed the greatest ingenuity in effecting savings of every kind, and spent all his spare time thinking out schemes for the profitable investment of the large cash resources which were accumulating in his treasury.

The ruling landgrave gradually became a banker to the whole world, advancing his money not only to princes and nobles, but also to small shopkeepers and Jews, and even to artizans, where he could get good interest. The amounts lent ranged from hundreds of thousands to a few thalers, according to the financial repute of his customers. Cobblers and tailors paid the same rate of interest for small advances as princes for heavy ones. The debts were all accurately registered in account books, making up an enormous number of volumes. If a banker wanted to borrow from him he had to deposit government securities with the landgrave. Thus his enormous fortune consisted of cash, jewels, art treasures and coins, as well as acknowledgments of sums lent and debenture certificates deposited as security.

The withdrawal in 1795 of Prussia and Hesse from the war against France had resulted in the temporary estrangement of the Austrian Emperor Francis; but he and the landgrave soon reestablished cordial relations, for each of them had need of the other. William desired support in the acquisition of territory, and in his efforts to attain the dignity of elector, while the emperor was sadly in lack of funds owing to the long war with France. The landgrave therefore asked the emperor's support in his aims; the emperor wrote on September 8, 1797,[20] to say that he appreciated the efforts which his cousin was making on his behalf, and was grateful to learn that the landgrave was sympathetic to his need for a loan. "I also believe," he wrote, "as it is my duty to do, in your sentiments of loyalty to me and to my house, of which I have received special proof in the matter of the loan that is being negotiated by Herr Kornrumpf. I flatter myself that your Highness will carry this through to my complete satisfaction. Your Highness may rest assured that for my part I sincerely wish to be of service to you also."

The details of such transactions were generally negotiated by Jewish agents, and although Meyer Amschel was not employed on this occasion, he was soon to serve as the middleman between the landgrave and the emperor.

This was made possible by the fact that Rothschild's wealth had increased rapidly during the last years of the war. Towards the end of the eighteenth century it cannot have been far short of a million gulden. The transfer of bills of exchange, cash payments, and the consignments of merchandise from England, the principal supply of the Frankfurter Platz, which in its turn, supplied the whole of Germany, made it necessary to appoint a representative on the other side of the Channel. As it was essential that any such representative should be a trustworthy person, the obvious thing was to appoint one of the live sons.

The two eldest, Amschel[21] and Solomon, who, in 1798, were twenty-five and twenty-four years old respectively, were thoroughly initiated into the Frankfort business. The third son, Nathan, a highly gifted young man of twenty-one, intensely industrious and with a very independent spirit, felt that his elder brothers did not give him sufficient scope. In spite of his youth, he too benefited by the wise arrangements of his father, and had his own personal share in the business and in the family property.

As the continental states, owing to war and revolution, produced much less, but consumed a great deal more than in normal times, English commercial travelers swarmed over the Continent of Europe and in 1798, one of them called at the Rothschilds' house of business, and was received by Nathan. English commercial travelers of that period were exceedingly conscious of the commercial and political supremacy of their country, and they were wont to adopt an arrogant manner, as they felt that the Continent was dependent upon their goods. The Englishman's manner annoyed Nathan Rothschild; and he met his arrogance with brusqueness, whereupon the foreigner took his departure.

This incident was the immediate cause that decided Nathan to propose to his father that he should go to England himself, in order to become a merchant there on his own account and also to represent the firm of Rothschild generally. His father and brothers did not show any opposition to the enterprising young man and supported his decision in every way. Nathan took as-much ready money with him as was practicable and the rest he had sent on after him; the capital which he brought with him to England amounted altogether to, a sum of about twenty thousand pounds or a quarter of a million gulden. About a fifth of this sum was his own money; the rest belonged to the business. The action of his father and brothers showed great confidence in this young man who did not even know the language of the country he was about to enter as a complete stranger. Their confidence was to be justified, for Nathan was destined to become the outstanding figure in the Roths-childd business.

This first branch establishment of the House of Rothschild resulted from the family relationships and the requirements of the trade with England, without any preconceived plan, and without the remotest idea of the importance of this step for the future of the business.

The Napoleonic epoch, which followed upon the French Revolution, was to be the occasion for the foundation of a second branch in Paris and for the first collaboration between the brothers Rothschild in Frankfort, London, and Paris.

CHAPTER II

The Rothschild Family During the Napoleonic Era

THE turn of the century coincided with an important part of the wars against the French Republic, arising out of the revolution. The Peace of Luneville, concluded in 1801, had set the seal on the brilliant Bonaparte's territorial victories, thereby giving France the leadership on land, while, however, England's preeminence at sea was confirmed. Although Bonaparte had overcome all his other enemies, he was bound to admit that sea-girt England had maintained its position. The Treaty of Amiens, which followed upon that of Luneville, merely marked a transition stage, and was bound to lead to a resumption of the struggle, until one of the two great opponents should lie bleeding on the ground.

This struggle was the predominant feature of the next fifteen years, and converted almost the whole of the mainland of Europe into a theater of war. The result was that innumerable substantial firms, banks, and private persons lost their property, while on the other hand persons possessing industry, energy, and resource, with a flair for turning opportunity to account, were enabled to gain riches and power.

At any rate within their own caste, the Rothschild family had at that time achieved a position in which their future was bound to be profoundly affected by political developments. As early as 1800 their father Meyer Amschel had been the tenth richest Jew in Frankfort; the only question was as to the attitude that the head of the business house and his sons would take in the stormy times that were to follow.

Numerous competitors were richer than they, or as rich, had better and older connections, and some had been received into the Christian Church and no longer suffered from the stigma of Judaism. The Rothschilds, on the other hand, had the advantage of a chief who was industrious, energetic, and reliable, and a man of intelligence. He had to help him four hard-working sons who were developing into first-rate business men under the guidance of their father. One of these, Solomon, had just married Caroline Stern, herself the prosperous daughter of a Frankfort tradesman, and had thus been enabled to found a home of his own. The third son Nathan was living in the camp of Napoleon's great enemy England. In hat country with its sea-power and its world-wide commerce, his undertakings were far better protected against Napoleonic interference than those of his father and brothers on the Continent. He was able to form a much more dispassionate judgment of the great events which followed so rapidly upon one another during those years, and was in a better position to turn them to account, Moreover, Nathan was the most enterprising of the five sons, of which fact his decision to go to England was itself an indication.

The commercial activities of the House of Rothschild in Frankfort itself were not limited to one branch of business. It took any chance of earning a profit, whether as commission or forwarding agents, or in the trade of wine and textiles, which had recently been declared free, and in silk and muslin, not to mention coins and antiquities. The wine business in particular expanded greatly; and Meyer Amschel did not fail to use every opportunity for extending his connections with princes and potentates even beyond the sphere of the Duke of Hesse. One of the most important connections established at Frankfort was that with the princely House of Thurn and Taxis, the head of which, Prince Karl Anselm, held the important position of hereditary postmaster in the Holy Roman Empire.

This family was of Milanese extraction; in Italy it was known as della Torre, in France as de la Tour. It had invented the idea of a post, and had introduced a postal system in the Tyrol, toward the end of the fifteenth century. In 1516 it was commissioned by the Emperor Maximilian I to inaugurate a mounted postal service between Vienna and Brussels. Even at that early date the dignified rank of postmaster general was conferred upon one of its members.

That was the starting point of the impressive development of the Thurn and Taxis postal system, which came to embrace the whole of Central Europe. The head offices of the system were at Frankfort, but the family were not satisfied with the normal development of their undertaking. They turned the information obtainable from the letters entrusted to their charge to profit.

The end of the eighteenth and the beginning of the nineteenth centuries saw the development of the practice of opening letters, noting the contents and then sending them on to their destinations. In order to retain the postal monopoly, the House of Thurn and Taxis offered to place the emperor in possession of the information derived from the so-called secret manipulation of letters. If, therefore, one were on good terms with the House one could easily and swiftly obtain news, and also dispatch it.

In the course of time Meyer Amschel had come to realize that it is of the greatest importance to the banker and merchant to have early and accurate information of important events, especially in time of war. As his native town was the headquarters of the postal and information service, he had had the foresight to get into touch with the House of Thurn and Taxis, and had transacted various financial matters to their great satisfaction. It was on this fact that he relied when he appealed to the fountainhead of the Imperial Postal Service at Frankfort, his Imperial Majesty himself.

In a petition to his Majesty that he and his sons should be granted the title of crown agent, Meyer Amschel brought forward precisely those matters from which he had derived the greatest profit, namely, his financial and commercial transactions in the war against France, and the services which he had rendered to the House of Thurn and Taxis. He had been honest and punctual in his business dealings, as those witnesses would testify who indorsed his petition.

The Roman-German Emperor, whose power at this time was practically limited to the granting of honors, did actually consent to grant Meyer Amschel the title of imperial crown agent by a patent dated January 29, 1800. Not only was this a passport to him throughout the whole of the Roman Empire in Germany; it also carried the right to bear arms, and liberated him from several of the taxes and obligations laid upon the Jews of that period, The patent and the title were signed and granted by Francis II, simply as Roman-German Emperor, and had nothing to do with Austria or Austrian Government departments. It was not until much later that the brothers Rothschild entered into actual relations with Austria and her statesmen. Even as late as 1795, when the Landgrave of Hesse lent the Emperor Francis a million gulden, and in 1798 when he lent him an additional half-million, other bankers conducted the transaction, the Rothschilds having nothing whatever to do with it.

The dispensations enumerated in the imperial patent were more or less paper ones, since most of the smaller or greater territorial princes, of whom there was such a plenitude in Germany in 1800, applied their own laws and regulations. This, however, was a minor consideration with Meyer Amschel; the important point was that the new title "imperial crown agent" sounded much better than Hessian Landgraviate, and was likely to attract a number of other titles. Prince von Ysenburg and the German Order of St. John both conferred upon him court titles in recognition of loans of money from the principality, negotiated by Meyer Amschel. In 1804 Rothschild requested the Prince of Thurn and Taxis to bestow a similar favor upon one of his sons, in view of the fact that he himself bore the title of imperial crown agent.

It was characteristic that when asking the emperor for a title he should mention the services rendered to the House of Taxis, and that when he applied for a favor to that house he should have based his claim on the fact that his services had been recognized by the emperor. Such promotions were necessarily of service to him, too, in his relations with his old patron the Landgrave of Hesse, who in spite of everything was still inclined to be suspicious.

William of Hesse was in every way a most important person to Meyer Amschel, for he was colossally rich, richer than the emperor himself, and—a much more important point in those days than now—he was close at hand. Moreover, he had family ties with England., where Nathan was living, and with chronically penurious Denmark, by lending money to which the firm of Riippell and Harnier, as well as that of Bethmann, had made great profits.

Meyer Amschel advised the landgrave to participate in this loan by buying stock. He did purchase a small amount, Rothschild being commissioned to carry through the transaction. This was done to the landgrave's satisfaction; but Meyer Amschel required a considerable sum of ready money in order to take advantage of a favorable opportunity for purchasing goods and bills of exchange. Knowing that the landgrave, whose investments in England as well as in Germany brought in very good returns, had spare cash available, he asked, and obtained from him on two occasions—in November, 1801, and July, 1802—160,000 thalers and 200,000 gulden as a guaranteed loan, the securities being Danish and Frankfort debentures.

Although the security offered was exceptionally good,

William of Hesse was persuaded to lend the money only after pressure had been brought to bear, and on the special recommendation of his principal financial administrator Buderus. The transaction certainly marked a distinct advance in Rothschild's confidential relations with the landgrave.

The second amount was wanted, not merely for Meyer Amschel himself, but also to assist his two eldest sons, who were already beginning to acquire the titles of court appointments wherever they could. As early as 1801 they were appointed official agents for making war payments on behalf of the State of Hesse.

Meyer Amschel had been enviously observing Ruppell and Harnier's financial transactions with Denmark. It was his ambition to do similar business with Denmark, with landgraviate moneys, on his own account, independently of any other firm. He still lacked any large capital sum, such as others had available, but he was accurately informed by Buderus of the large amount of ready money in the possession of the ruler of Hesse, which was seeking investment. He was determined to put his competitors out of the field by offering the prince better terms. The Frankfort firms were accustomed to wait until orders came to them, but he meant to get in and negotiate personally. He had put through the secured loans at Cassel personally; and he decided to go there again in order to secure the cooperation of William's counselors with Buderus at their head, so that they might make the landgrave disinclined to negotiate direct with Denmark. An important point was that Denmark was not to know where the money came from, because William did not with to be regarded as wealthy in his family circle, as he was afraid that some of them might ask for special favors, For this reason it was decided that a go-between who had relations with Buderus, and through him with Rothschild too, and who lived in Hamburg, which was conveniently near to Denmark, and far enough away from Hesse to allay suspicion, should be the first person to make approaches to that country. This was a Jewish banker called Lawaetz.

Moreover, on Rothschild's own suggestion, and contrary to the usual practice, the loan was to run over a long period. Notice for repayment was not to be given for ten years or more, and after that period payment could be demanded only in quite small instalments, over a period of twenty or thirty years. They did actually succeed in securing William of Hesse's consent to granting such a loan; and no sooner were the conditions agreed than Lawaetz showed his hand to the extent of making the interest payable to Meyer Amschel Rothschild at Frankfort.

"The lender," the Hamburg banker wrote to Denmark, "is an exceedingly rich capitalist, and exceptionally friendly to the Danish Court. It is possible that even greater sums and better conditions may be obtainable from him."[1] It is true that Lawaetz did not know Rothschild personally at this time.

The successful conclusion in September, 1803, of this, the first loan which he had carried through privately, not only brought Meyer Amschel financial profit, but also resulted in his obtaining the title of crown agent to the Court of Hesse. His rivals had been highly displeased to hear of this loan, and kept making representations of a nature calculated to damage Rothschild, to the landgrave. Ruppell and Harnier were particularly assiduous. They drew attention to the fact that the last Danish loan had been issued in the form of debentures, in the name of Rothschild; and in order to rouse Danish national vanity they stressed the idea that this suggested that "it was not the national credit of Denmark but merely the Jewish name of Rothschild that had got these obligations accepted in Hesse."[2]

Rothschild's fight with his rivals involved the officials entrusted with the financial administration of the land-graviate in the struggle. Buderus became increasingly a partizan of Rothschild, whereas Lennep of the War Office took the side of Riippell and Harnier. Rothschild and Buderus, however, had the upper hand for the time being, and by 1806 no less than seven landgraviate loans were issued. The profit realized from this transaction served to key up still further the hatred and enmity of the rival firms and of Lennep, and led to awkward developments.

Rothschild had shown the greatest energy in these undertakings. He did not even spare himself the journey to Hamburg, an exceedingly difficult one at that time, in order to get into personal touch with the banker, Lawaetz, and to see that the Danish business was carried on as energetically as possible.

A letter[3] from the Hamburg banker to Buderus contains the following statement: "The Crown Agent Rothschild is coming to see me tomorrow in order to settle up our remaining accounts, and he intends to return the day after. It has been a pleasure to me to make the acquaintance of this man, and I shall be glad to be able to do him any service in future."

The intrigues of the rivals, however, did not wholly fail of their effect upon William of Hesse. His attitude continued to be suspicious, and he several times refused to have anything to do with other business propositions suggested by Rothschild, agreeing to them only as the result of much pleading and persuasion. Besides the Danish loans, loans were issued for Hesse-Darmstadt and the Order of St. John, these also being subscribed by landgraviate funds through the intermediary of Rothschild. The sums involved were already considerable, running into hundreds of thousands.

The larger they were, the better pleased was Meyer Amschel, because his percentage profit rose in proportion, while the risk was borne, not by him but by the landgrave, whose favorite occupation had always been the careful administration and development of his property. The sums invested in England called for particular attention. Since the Peace of Basel, relations between Hesse and England had been rather strained, although they were not likely to become critical, as the landgrave had cleverly succeeded in enlisting the interests of responsible people on his side. He had lent the Prince of Wales, afterwards King George IV, about £200,000 in two instalments. The dukes of York and Clarence were guarantors of this loan, but they also borrowed money from the landgrave. In addition to this, William of Hesse had put out £640,000 at interest in London in various ways, a fact which was to prove exceedingly useful to him.

The example of their patron was a lesson to the House of Rothschild, and they soon learned to copy his wise practice of lending money by preference to persons in the highest position. Even though William of Hesse remained neutral in the second War of the Coalition, he secretly wished success to the enemies of Prance for he eagerly hoped for the resumption of his profitable subsidy contracts with England.

The Peace of Luneville, which extended France's boundaries to the Rhine, also conferred on William the dignity of elector, which he had so much desired, and which was duly proclaimed in 1803; but the meteoric rise of Bonaparte and revolutionary France's position in the world seemed to him to be unnatural and menacing. His friendship with Prussia was rather shattered, because that state had succeeded in annexing considerable territory, but had left the Hessian prince in the cold.

The peace between France and England did not last long. As early as May, 1803, the Island Kingdom again declared war upon the usurper in Paris. It was not long before William of Hesse was forced to take an attitude toward the new world situation. In October, 1803, the French, having invaded English Hanover, tried to get money from the elector in exchange for Hanoverian territory. His fear of offending England caused him to refuse this offer, and thus the elector first gave offense to the Corsican.

Ge had no true idea at the time how dangerous the Corsican might be. The quiet times for Frankfort and Hesse were now at an end. Stirred up by Napoleon's powerful genius Europe passed from one crisis to another, and in such circumstances it was exceedingly difficult for William of Hesse to administer his enormous property with foresight and wisdom. He felt the need more and more of Meyer Amschel's advice, so that Rothschild's journeys to Cassel became more and more frequent. His eldest son had for some months been residing permanently in that town.

The preference shown to the Frankfort family aroused the envy and hatred of the Cassel Jews against this outsider. They complained that not merely did he steal their best business, but he was not even subject to the night-rate and poll-tax which other Jews had to pay. Meyer Amschel did his utmost to evade such payments as far as possible, but in the end he was forced to pay some of these taxes.

In August, 1803, he found it necessary to apply to the elector for a letter of protection in Cassel for himself and his sons, so that, although resident in Frankfort, he should enjoy the same rights as the protected Jews of Cassel. This would certainly entail obligations as well. His request was granted on payment of 400 reichsthaler, but the document was not completed, possibly in accordance with Meyer Amschel's own wishes, for he would then have been liable to pay taxes in Cassel also.

The Cassel Jews, however, soon got wind of this maneuver, and in the end Meyer Amschel was required to state in whose name he wished the letter of protection made out, whereupon he wrote the following letter to the elector:[4]

Most gracious Elector, most excellent Prince and Lord!

Your Excellency has most graciously deigned to grant that in return for the payment of 100 florins I should be exempt from night-rate, and that on the payment of 400 florins one of my sons or I should be admitted to protection.

I am now required to state in whose name the letter of protection should be made out, and this is causing me great difficulty, since the son for whom I had intended taking it out has been settled for some time with another of my sons in London, and is engaged in doing business with him there.

I have therefore decided to take out the protection for myself, if I may be most graciously permitted to pay an annual amount similar to that paid by other Jews not residing in the town ... as I only do business here, and could do most of it quite as well from another place; as I have now held the office of Crown Agent for over forty years, your Electoral Highness having even in my youth shown me such gracious condescension, so I hope now, too, to receive your most gracious consent, and remain with deepest respect, your Electoral Highness

My most gracious Prince and Lord's most obedient servant,
MEYER AMSCHEL ROTHSCHILD.
Cassel, 21st April 1805.

This personal request, sent in by Meyer Rothschild in rather inferior German, provoked a certain amount of amusement at the electoral court. Meyer Amschel was informed that his request could not be granted unless he moved to Cassel with all his property; and that naturally he was not prepared to do. In the end the letter of protection was made out in the name of Amschel Meyer Rothschild, his eldest son.

Although Meyer Amschel had to fight for his position in Cassel, his prestige at Frankfort rose, on account of his connection with the Hessian ruler, which was now becoming generally known. This was made manifest in various ways. When shops were put up to auction in the electoral courtyard, to which Jews, even resident Jews, were not admitted, an exception was made in favor of Meyer Amschel. One of the shops was definitely excluded from the auction and reserved for Rothschild. It is possible that ready money was a factor, as well as his prestige in this matter.

This period saw the conclusion of the two last, and by far the most substantial Danish loans, of 700,000 and 600,000 thalers. In these transactions too, Lawaetz played a part of some importance. In spite of very friendly business relations, he was still somewhat reserved in his attitude toward the Rothschild family. Whilst in talking to his friends he often declared that he had found[5] "Herr Rothschild always to be exceedingly prompt and businesslike and worthy of the most complete confidence," yet he felt that where such large amounts were at stake, one ought to be very cautious, even in dealing with Rothschild. The atmosphere then was full of suspicion, all the more so because the political barometer in Europe pointed to stormy times, and the capitalists were exceedingly uneasy as to the possible fate of their wealth.

Bonaparte had already cast aside his mask and was boldly grasping at the imperial purple; toward the end of the summer of 1804 the whole of France was echoing with the shout "Vive l'Empereur!" The prestige of the German imperial system was suffering a corresponding decline, an obvious symptom of which was the proclamation on August 10, 1804, of Francis II as Emperor of Austria.

Moreover, September, 1804, already saw Napoleon touring the newly won Rhine provinces. He appeared in full splendor and magnificence at Aix-la-Chapelle and Mainz as if he were indeed the successor of Charles the Great. It was on this occasion that, with the assistance of the Mainz Electoral High Chancellor, Dalberg, he laid the foundations of that union of German princes which was to be known as the Confederation of the Rhine.

Napoleon was already adopting the role of their protector, and invited William of Hesse, too, to Mainz, an invitation which was exceedingly suggestive of a command to come and do homage. The elector pleaded a sudden attack, of gout. Napoleon replied coldly; he was still polite, but he swore that William should pay for having failed immediately to adhere to the confederation which was being formed under Napoleon's protection. The French ambassador at Cassel had uttered the menacing words, when he heard that the prince was not going to Mainz, "On n'oublie pas, on n'oublie rien!"[6]

The Elector of Hesse was left feeling rather uncomfortable, and he secretly threw out cautious feelers toward England and Austria—Austria was already showing a marked inclination to side against France. The occasion of the Emperor Francis' assuming the imperial title connected with his Austrian hereditary territories, afforded him an opportunity of expressing his most sincere and devoted good wishes to the "most excellent, puissant, and invincible Roman Emperor and most gracious Lord[7] for the continuous welfare of the sacred person of his Imperial Majesty and for the ever-increasing glory of the all-highest Imperial House."

His pen was jogged by the need he felt for powerful support, and incidentally the letter was to serve the purpose of reminding the emperor of a request which the writer had made on November 22, 1804, and which so far had not been granted. The elector's first favorite, the apothecary's daughter Ritter, whom the emperor had raised to the rank of Frau von Lindenthal, and who was ancestress of the Haynaus, was now out of favor, since she had preferred a young subaltern to the aged landgrave. For over a year her place had been occupied by Caroline von Schlotheim, the beautiful daughter of a Russian officer whom the emperor had been asked to create Countess von Hessenstein.

In May, 1805, Austria finally joined the coalition against Napoleon. Napoleon gave up his idea of landing in the British Isles, and concentrated on Austria. This resulted in great shortage of money, for the Austrian Treasury had heavy burdens to bear from former wars; coin was scarce and paper money much depreciated. It was herefore decided that the interest on loans should not, as had hitherto been the practice, be payable in hard cash in all the principal exchanges in Europe, but should be payable in paper in Vienna only. This was hard for the elector personally, as he had advanced a million and a half gulden to the Emperor Francis; and he at once begged that an exception might be made in his favor since "ill-disposed persons had suggested to him that the Austrian state was going to go bankrupt, as far as all external debts were concerned."[8]

The imperial ambassador Baron von Wessenberg, naturally wishing to turn the general situation to account, sent this request forward under cover of a private dispatch of his own in which he wrote: "Since avarice is the elector's great weakness, it might be possible, should you wish to do so, to obtain a still greater loan from him if you agreed that interest in future should be payable in cash. He would be more likely to fall in with such a suggestion if his Imperial Majesty would grant Frau von Schlotheim the title of Countess of Hessenstein, without payment. The granting of this request would particularly delight the elector."[9]

In the second particular his wishes were granted, but it was not possible to make an exception in the matter of the interest charges. However, both Vienna and London endeavored to secure the elector's accession to the confederation, and he replied to these overtures with demands for subsidies. Yet he was hard put to it to find investments for all the money that he had at his disposal, and as late as December 2, 1805, he had lent ten million thalers to Prussia. He had hoped that the Austro-Russo-English war against Napoleon would end in victory; but Austerlitz put a speedy end to such hopes.

During the war, England sent financial assistance to Austria in the shape of a monthly payment of a third of a million pounds in cash, which was sent to Austria by the most difficult and circuitous routes. The Rothschild method of transferring large sums of money was as yet unknown, and the only method in use was the dangerous one of sending actual bullion by road. A consignment of money was actually on the way when Austerlitz was being fought, and, in fear of a defeat, orders were issued from imperial headquarters instructing this consignment to be diverted in a wide circuit through Galicia and the Carpathians.

The war complications in which Europe was involved forced almost all states, whether they wished to or not, to take sides. The Elector of Hesse characteristically wished to attach himself to that party out of which he could make the greatest profit. As Prussia was now also being drawn into conflict with Napoleon, she attempted to draw the elector in on her side. On the other hand, the French Court gave him to understand that substantial advantages would be gained by the electorate if he kept himself completely free from Prussian influence. This suggestion was unpleasantly underlined by the gathering of bodies of French troops in the neighborhood of Hesse.

The elector bargained with everybody and secured from Paris accessions of territory and the incorporation of the town of Frankfort within his domains. The only awkward point was that Napoleon demanded that the British ambassador, through whom the subsidy arrangements were carried on, should be sent home; and when the elector delayed about doing this, Napoleon expressed his displeasure in no uncertain language, until the elector gave way, and sent the ambassador away.

Annoyed at France's threatening attitude the Hessian ruler again endeavored to attach himself to Prussia. Then, on July 12, 1806, the document regarding the Confederation of the Rhine was published, through which Napoleon, with the assistance of Prince Theodor von Dalberg, Electoral High Chancellor, won sixteen German states by promising them separation from the German Empire.

As a counterblast to this, Prussia attempted to bring ahout a union of the princes of Northern Germany, and to gain the support of the Elector of Hesse by offering him the prospect of an accession of territory and the dignity of kingship which he so much desired. These moves were followed by threats and promises on the side of France. The attitude of the elector remained undefined. He now thought it best to preserve the appearance of neutrality until the actual outbreak of war, and then simply to join the side which was winning, although a signed, if not ratified, treaty with Prussia was in existence.

He had, however, not reckoned sufficiently with the forceful personality of Napoleon. It was impossible to conduct a nebulous diplomacy with such a man. He had long been tired of the vacillating attitude of Hesse. A state of war was declared in early October, 1806. On the 14th of that month, Prussia was decisively beaten through Napoleon's lightning advance at Jena and Auerstedt. Napoleon now scorned Hessian "neutrality." He ordered that Cassel and Hesse should be occupied, and that unless the elector and the crown prince left they should be made prisoners of war as Prussian field-marshals. "You will," commanded Napoleon, "seal up all treasuries and stores and appoint General Lagrange as governor of the country. You will raise taxes and pronounce judgments in my name. Secrecy and speed will be the means through which you will insure complete success. My object is to remove the House of Hcsse-Cassel from rulership and to strike it out of the list of powers."[10]

At Frankfort, Meyer Amschel Rothschild had been watching the precipitate development of events with terror; and his son Amschel, at Cassel, as well as he himself at Frankfort, took all possible measures to prevent themselves and the elector from suffering too great financial loss. Business had just been going so exceedingly well. The firm of Bethmann, which had felt that it was being driven into the background, and had just been making strenuous efforts to get a share in the elector's loan business with Denmark, was forced to withdraw from the contest, on account of the political conditions and the resulting shortage of money, and thereby left the way open to Rothschild, who still had resources available.

In the meantime Lawaetz in Hamburg had definitely decided in Rothschild's favor. On July 2, 1806, he wrote himself to Buderus[11] to say that he would stand by their good friend Rothschild as far as he could, saying: "I hope that in the end people will realize that he is a good fellow who deserves to be respected; the envious may say what they like against him."

In spite of all that Rothschild had hitherto done in the service of the elector, he had not won his confidence to the extent of being called in in a matter which had become pressing on account of the developing military situation; for although the elector continued to hope that the notices naively posted on the roads leading to Hesse, bearing the words "Pays Neutre" would be respected, he was sufficiently concerned for the safety of his treasures to send away and conceal his more valuable possessions. But it was no light task to deal with the extensive banking accounts of the electoral loan office, and with his vast accumulations of treasure, and after several months the work was still far from complete.

There being no distinction between the treasury and the prince's private purse, it was necessary to get out of the way, not only his own valuables, but also the cabinet, war and chancery cash records, for a period covering several decades; for so the books of his financial administration were called, in order to make it impossible to examine into the state of his affairs. There were large volumes of these records, representing vast sums; in the war chest alone there was over twenty-one million thalers, sixteen millions of which were out on loan in various places, and bringing in interest to the tune of many thousands of thalers. All this had to be concealed as far as possible, and this business was done by trusty officials, under the guidance of Buderus. But there is nothing to show that any of the Rothschilds were employed in the long-continued work of transport and concealment.

Time was pressing; some of the things were sent to Denmark; but it was impossible to get everything out of the country, and to have done so would have attracted too much attention. So the elector, who gave the closest personal attention to the plans for insuring the safety of his possessions, decided that the most precious articles should be buried within the walls of three of his castles. Under the stairs of the castle of Wilhelmshohe were hidden twenty-four chests, containing silver and mortgage documents to the value of one and a half million gulden, amongst which were certain Rothschild debentures, while twenty-four chests with cash vouchers and certain valuable volumes from the library were concealed in the walls under the roof. A similar number of chests were concealed in the picturesque castle of Lowenburg, built in the Wilhelmshohe park, while further treasures were conveyed in forty-seven chests to the Sababurg, situated in a remote forest.

The elector had originally intended to send the last consignment down the Weser to England, but he and the shipowner disagreed over a matter of fifty thalers and so they were not sent away. It was impossible to carry through such measures in secrecy, as too many persons were involved in the transaction; and long before the French invaded the country, there was general alarm throughout the district, because the elector was said to be hiding all his treasures.

Meanwhile Napoleon's commands were being carried out. French troops, coming from Frankfort, were already encamped on the night of October 31 on the heights surrounding Cassel. The elector gazed anxiously from the windows of his castle at the enemy's camp-fires, and sent adjutant after adjutant to Mortier, the French marshal. In due course the French envoy was announced, and brought an ultimatum from Napoleon, significantly addressed: "To the Elector of Hesse-Cassel, Field-Marshal in the service of Prussia."

In short, biting sentences William's double game was exposed, and the occupation of the country and the disarmament of its inhabitants was proclaimed. The elector immediately decided to throw in his lot with Napoleon and to join the Confederation of the Rhine. But it was too late; Marshal Mortier would no longer listen to the elector's messengers. The elector realized that there was nothing for him but flight.

In the few hours before the French entered the country he would have to move as many of his remaining possessions as he could, and make the more urgent dispositions regarding outstanding accounts. William gave Buderus power of attorney to receive the interest payments due from the Emperor Francis in Vienna; and Buderus transferred this power of attorney to Rothschild, who proceeded to collect these payments for the elector, through a business friend in Vienna, the banker Frank.

Besides this, Buderus that night brought two chests containing securities and statements of accounts to the house of the Austrian ambassador at Cassel, Baron von Wessenberg, and begged him to take charge of them. In addition, a member of the elector's bodyguard roused the ambassador in the middle of the night[12] to give him five envelops containing one and a half million thalers in valid bills of exchange and coupons, as well as the elector's compromising correspondence with Prussia and England. He also gave him a casket of jewels, requesting that the ambassador deal with these things as he would for a friend.

Baron von Wessenberg felt extremely uncomfortable; his position as ambassador of a neutral power was being seriously compromised, but he was fortunately able to entrust the money to a chamberlain of his acquaintance, who was traveling to Hanover that night. The letters, however, were of such a compromising nature that he burned them in terror. He had dealt with everything excepting the jewels, when the trumpets and marching songs of the French invading troops were heard in the morning. A few minutes earlier the elector had left the town with his son in a traveling coach and six. After having been held up by French troops at one gate, he escaped by another, and drove without stopping through Hameln and Altona, to Rendsburg in Schleswig.

Having entered Cassel, Marshal Mortier immediately began to carry out all Napoleon's instructions, and also commandeered all the electoral moneys and possessions, even including the stables and the court furniture. He took over the electoral rooms in the castle for his own personal use, and the electoral flunkeys as his personal servants. He did not molest the elector's consort, and Wessenberg succeeded in sending her the jewels, which she sewed into her garments and those of her servants.

Buderus felt that things might get rather warm for him, and he left Cassel disguised as an apprentice, with a knapsack on his back, to follow his master into exile.[13] His despairing family stayed behind.

While these events were taking place, neither Meyer Amschel Rothschild nor either of his sons seems to have been at Cassel.[14] They had long realized that the attitude of the French toward the elector was critical, and that their relations with him might get them into trouble. Frankfort, too, had been occupied by the French, and the headquarters of the firm, their house and their whole property, were at the mercy of the enemy.

In his heart Meyer Amschel remained loyal to the elector, and saw that the position arising out of the French invasion and the flight of the elector was one in which he could still be of great service to him. He presumably came quite rightly to the conclusion, that it was in the elector's own interest that he should stay away at this critical period, so that he might, if possible, carry on the elector's business behind the backs of the French. In following his natural inclinations, and not compromising himself in the eyes of the French, and in keeping out of the way of these dangerous companions as far as possible, he was also following the course of the greatest practical utility.

Even if Meyer Amschel or one of his sons had actually been in Cassel, the moneys entrusted to Baron von Wessenberg would not have been placed in their keeping. They were, as yet, far from enjoying such a degree of confidence; indeed, the ambassador actually stated in his report to Vienna at the time that the elector had sent the things to him "because of lack of confidence in his business agents."

The French immediately instituted investigations to discover where the elector had hidden his wealth. Napoleon had received news at Berlin of the occurrences at Cassel. At four o'clock on the morning of November 5, 1806, he sent the following orders to Lagrange: "Have all the artillery, ordnance stores, furniture, statues and other articles in the palace of the court brought to Mainz. Proclaim that this prince may no longer rule. I shall not continue to suffer a hostile prince on my boundaries, especially one who is practically a Prussian, not to say an Englishman, and who sells his subjects. You must completely disarm the inhabitants, and authorize an intendant to seize the prince's revenue. In general you may treat the country mercifully, but if there is any sign of insurrection anywhere, you must make a terrible example. ... Let yourself be guided by the principle that I wish to see the House of Hesse, whose existence on the Rhine cannot be reconciled with the safety of France, permanently removed from power."[15]

Such were Napoleon's feelings toward the elector. The latter sent messenger after messenger, and letter upon letter to Napoleon, but the emperor refused to answer. On the 1st of November, 1806, William of Hesse arrived at his destination, the castle at Gottorp, near Schleswig, belonging to his brother, who had also married a Danish princess. A whole crowd of exile princelings from small German states was gathered there. They had all been suddenly wrenched from a comfortable and careless existence, and were suffering acutely, especially from financial distress.

"We are in the greatest misery here," wrote Buderus to London,[16] on November 17, 1806. "Please help us to get some money soon, because we do not know what we shall do otherwise, as we are not getting a farthing from Cassel. God, how things have changed!" Meanwhile the French occupied Hamburg and advanced unpleasantly close to the elector's place of refuge. He became exceedingly nervous and excited, and feared that he might yet fall into the hands of the French, with all the belongings that he had rescued; his possessions were all packed in chests, ready for further transport. He once got into such a state of panic that he wanted to send Buderus straight off into the blue with as many valuables and securities as possible, leaving it to him to make such provision as he could for their safe custody. However, the outlook became less menacing; the French did yet come to Schleswig for the time being, and the elector gradually recovered his composure.

Meanwhile Lagrange was ruthlessly executing Napoleon's severe commands at Cassel. Even Wessenberg, suspected of concealing electoral treasure, was placed temporarily under arrest. Gradually all the treasures that had been concealed in the castle, including the gold and silver plate, the antiques, the whole collection of coins and medals to which Rothschild had contributed so many valuable specimens, and also the innumerable chests containing deeds and securities, were discovered. The elector might well regret that for the sake of fifty thalers, he had failed to have the silver carried down the river. All his splendid silver was sent to Mainz to be melted down.

Dazzled by the vast extent of the riches that were being brought to light, Lagrange was moved to take steps to feather his own nest. Although his imperial master well knew that the elector was rich, he could hardly expect his wealth to be as extensive as actually proved to be the case.

Lagrange reported to Napoleon that the property discovered was only worth eleven million thalers, which of course was not remotely in accordance with the facts; and in return for a douceur of 260,000 francs in cash, he returned to the Hessian officials forty-two of the chests, including almost all those that contained securities and title-deeds. Running great dangers, a brave electoral captain brought the chests into safety, and conveyed nineteen of them to Frankfort, where they were stored, not with Meyer Amschel Rothschild, but in the warehouse of Preye and Jordis, in whose extensive vaults they could be concealed without attracting attention.

For an additional 800,000 livres* paid to himself and the intendant, the dishonest governor promised to return other papers too, and not to'carry out any further investigation. Thereby countless chests Were released, which were distributed amongst various trusted persons, for safekeeping. Four of these chests, containing papers of the Privy Council, found their way to Meyer Amschel Rothschild's house with the green shield in the Jewish quarter, during the Spring Fair of 1807. This was the only part played by the House of Rothschild in the actual saving of the electoral treasures.

* One livre equaled one franc; four francs were the equivalent of one thaler.

Meyer Amschel Rothschild hid these chests, having left one of them for a time with his son-in-law Moses Worms, in the cellar of his house. In case of emergency he could have recourse to a separate cellar behind the house and under the courtyard, the approach to this cellar from the house cellar being very easy to conceal. The courtyard cellar, too, was connected by a secret passage with the neighboring house. The persecution of the Frankfort Jews in earlier times, had led to many such secret refuges being constructed. In this case it was therefore reasonable to assume that if the house were searched by foreigners like the French, the cellar under the courtyard would not be discovered at all, and that even if it were discovered there was a good chance of getting its contents into the next house.

In the meantime political changes had occurred which put and end to the political independence of Frankfort. Karl von Dalberg, who had collaborated with Talleyrand in the creation of the Confederation of the Rhine, was nominated Primate of the Confederation on June 12, 1806, and by a decree of Napoleon was granted the city of Frankfort and the surrounding territory as his residence.

This was a fact of much importance, both to the elector and to his devoted servants the Rothschild family, for Dalberg was particularly well-disposed to the elector and to his administrator Buderus, on account of his business dealings with them in earlier times; and, although he was an archbishop and a strict Catholic, he was known to be tolerant in his religious views. The incorporation of Frankfort in the Confederation of the Rhine put an end to its constitution as a state of the empire; and the Jews, who had hitherto been subjected to oppression by the hostile patrician families who had controlled the senate, now hoped for the abolition of all those restrictions, prohibitions and special laws under which they had suffered for centuries.

Under the new regime life in the great commercial city took on an entirely different complexion. It had to be ordered in accordance with the wishes, or rather the commands, of the French. This was especially the case when Napoleon, in order to deal a deadly blow at the arch enemy England, declared the continental blockade whereby all commerce and communication by letter or otherwise with England was prohibited. As that country was practically the only emporium for such indispensable colonial produce as coffee, sugar, and tobacco. the prices of these articles rose enormously, and a clever merchant could make large profits through timely purchases or by smuggling goods through Holland and the harbors of North Germany.

In spite of the control exercised by France over the trade of Frankfort, Meyer Amschel and his son contrived, with the assistance of Nathan in England, to make a good deal of money in this way. There were certainly risks attached to this form of commerce, for under Article 5 of the continental blockade, all goods of English origin were declared lawful prize. With the passage of time this kind of business became more restricted, for as Napoleon's power increased he was able to make the control more effective.

Meyer Amschel well knew that in spite of his flight and the loss of property which he had suffered at the hands of the French, the elector was still in possession of very considerable resources. There was, moreover, always the possibility of a sudden change in Napoleon's fantastic career, and such an event would immediately alter the whole situation. He therefore adhered to his policy of ingratiating himself to the best of his ability with Napoleon's nominee, the new lord of Frankfort, whil he continued faithfully to serve the elector in secret. For his purpose it was necessary that he should remain in constant communication with him.

On the 15th of December, 1806, Meyer Amschel sent an account[17] to Schleswig of his earlier sales of London bills of exchange, and reported that the other bills which he held were unsalable at the moment. Although the "servile script" was full of protestations of groveling humility, and was composed in the illiterate style and full of the spelling mistakes of the old Meyer Amschel, it revealed a certain pride, for Father Rothschild made considerable play with the good relations which he had established with Dalberg.

Rothschild reported with pride that he had influenced Dalberg in favor of the elector, and had induced the new lord of Frankfort to intercede with the Emperor and Empress of France on the elector's behalf. He begged to state, however, that Dalberg advised that the elector should not stand so much upon his rights, but should adopt towards Napoleon the attitude of a "humble petitioner." Meyer Amschel concluded by assuring the elector of his unswerving loyalty and devotion, and declared that he hoped, through his influence with Dalberg, substantially to reduce the war contribution of one million, three hundred thousand thalers imposed by Napoleon upon the elector personally. He also asserted that Dalberg had commended him to all the French marshals and ministers.

Although this letter of Meyer Amschel's was written in a boastful vein, and although he exaggerated his influence, as in point of fact he did not succeed in getting the levy reduced (incidentally, the elector got the levy transferred to the estates of the realm of Hesse), yet the report contained an element of truth. It was certainly most remarkable that the Archbishop and Lord of the Confederation of the Rhine, who ruled over sixteen German princes, and stood so high in Napoleon's favor, should have shown so much good-will to the Jew Meyer Amschel Rothschild of Frankfort, who, although now a rich man, had no claim to move in high and influential circles. There appear to have been financial reasons for this relationship, and it no doubt originated in loans granted by Rothschild.

When the elector had come to feel reasonably secure in his new place of refuge in Schleswig, he devoted himself again to his favorite hobby, and tried to set in order his chaotic possessions. Buderus had control of this work at every point. He had left Schleswig some time before and returned to Hanau, where he was occupied in calling in debts due to the elector, before they could accrue to the French. There was, for instance, the claim on Prince von Zeil-Wurzach, which was in great danger of being lost. Buderus, however, succeeded in saving this item, and in his report he referred with emphasis to the assistance granted by Rothschild, mentioning his name repeatedly.

"I owe it entirely to the efforts of the Crown Agent Rothschild," he wrote to his master on March 8, 1807, "that I am still not entirely without hope; and he has undertaken to arrange an interview between myself and the Wurzach chancellor in a place which he will select." [18]

The eldest son of the princely debtor attended this conference himself, and it resulted in the repayment to Buderus of the outstanding amount, which Buderus ascribed to the fact that Rothschild had used his influence to such good effect with the advisers and officials of the prince. He added, as especially illustrating Rothschild's trustworthiness, that the French in Cassel had offered to pay Rothschild twenty to twenty-five per cent of the amount at issue, if he would assist in diverting this debt of nine thousand gulden in accordance with Napoleon's orders.

"Your Electoral Highness," the letter continued, "may certainly deign most graciously to realize, the labor involved in saving this amount in the most dangerous circumstances." Besides Buderus, Lennep at Cassel, Lawaetz at Hamburg, and the war commissioners, paymasters and crown agents such as Meyer Amschel and his sons were looking after the financial interests of the elector. "Frankfort is the center point of all my business," Buderus, who directed all the operations, wrote to the elector.[19]

To an ever-increasing degree Buderus was entrusting the elector's business to the Rothschild family; indeed he was now employing them almost exclusively. They looked fter the correspondence with Cassel, with the elector, and with Lawaetz at Hamburg, pseudonyms being employed for the more important persons and transactions. Thus the elector was known as "the principal" or "Herr von Goldstein." The stocks in England were known as "stockfish";[20] Rothschild himself was called "Arnoldi" in these letters. Meyer Amschel was often sent to the elector by Buderus to convey accounts or other information. These seven-day journeys in bad coaches over rough roads, with the constant risk of falling into the hands of the enemy, with the letters with which he had been entrusted, came to be felt as exceedingly burdensome by Meyer Amschel in the course of time. He was not more than sixty-four years old but his health had latterly suffered from the extraordinary demands made upon the chief of the extensive business house. Henceforward he generally left these jouneys s to the north to his son Kallmann (or Carl), as his two eldest sons, Amschel and Solomon, were fully occupied at the head office in Frankfort. These journeys had now to be very frequently undertaken, because Napoleon had entered upon a definite offensive against the elector's property; and this called for counter-measures of all kinds, from the elector's loyal adherents. In accordance with Napoleon's instructions, the French attempted, as they had already done in the case of Prince von Zeil-Wurzach, to divert the moneys lent by the elector in his own country to the French Treasury, by offering substantial discounts on the amount due.

It is true that Lagrange had valued these amounts at only four million thalers, the equivalent of sixteen million francs, but actually they amounted to about sixteen million thalers. One can therefore readily imagine the dismay which the action of the French occasioned the elector. A large number of princes belonging to the Confederation of the Rhine, who owed him money, took advantage of the opportunity of settling their debts at a reduction. On Rothschild's advice, the elector implored the Emperor Francis at Vienna on no account to pay to the French either the capital sum or the interest due in respect of the million and a half gulden which he had borrowed from the elector.

All the efforts to cause Napoleon to change his attitude failed; and meanwhile the situation at Gottorp had become impossible. The elector had arranged for his favorite mistress Schlotheim to join him, and his host's wife, who was a sister of the elector's consort, was afraid of causing pain to the latter if she associated with the Schlotheim. Also the collapse of a rising in Hesse deprived him of a last hope.

"Fools!" exclaimed Lagrange in a proclamation to the Hessians on the 18th of February, 1807. "Count no longer upon your prince; he and his house have ceased to rule. Whoever resists will be shot."

William in the meantime had migrated to Rendsburg, and later to Schloss Itzehoe. In moving language he wrote to the King of Prussia and to the Emperor of Austria.

To the former he wrote: "I have now been living here for four months, groaning under the weight of intolerable grief, and filled, with deep concern for the many bitter experiences through which your Majesty is passing, and which . . . affect me even more than my own misfortunes. I have had to watch the land of my fathers suffering an arbitrary rule, and my private property being squandered, and to see my loyal subjects suffering and being gradually reduced to beggary, if they are not speedily succored. It is indeed hard, your Royal Majesty, to have to endure such experiences, and doubly hard when one is conscious that one has always acted in a manner which one could justify before God and men." [21] His letter to the Emperor of Austria was written in exactly the same vein.[22] In the opening sentence the epithet "most invincible" was on this occasion, in view of the battle of Austerlitz, not added to those of "most excellent" and "most powerful." He begged in the strongest terms, for the emperor's help and support. These letters were written after the elector's efforts to conciliate Napoleon had merely resulted in the Emperor of France showing his personal contempt and aversion more clearly than ever. William of Hesse's attitude continued to be completely unreliable and vacillating as far as everybody was concerned. At the same time that he was overwhelming Napoleon with supplications, he was negotiating with England for landing on the coast for combined action against the French. But in England, his overtures to Napoleon were known. He was no longer trusted, and the electoral funds invested in that country were sequestrated, so that although he received the interest, he had no power to dispose of the capital. All these things had not helped to improve the elector's temper. Prince Wittgenstein, who frequently had occation to visit him in exile on behalf of the Prussian govermnent, wrote: "Personal association with him is indescribably unpleasant; the greatest patience is required in order to put up with his endless complaints and sudden outbursts." [23]

Buderus and Meyer Amschel Rothschild were soon to suffer in the same way. Rothschild had latterly been collecting and accounting for the interest on the English and Danish loans due to the elector. As this had not been settled by the elector personally, he complained of the arrangement. He again became suspicious, and suddenly required that Buderus should not allow this money to pass through Rothschild's hands, but that it should be paid direct into the reserve treasury at Itzehoe, an arrangement which was more difficult to carry out. This was galling, both for Buderus and for Meyer Amschel Rothschild, who was just endeavoring through Dalberg's good offices to buy back the elector's coin collection, containing so many gold and silver specimens of priceless value, which had been carried off to Paris. The following events did not improve the elector's temper.

By offering the tsar the prospect of sharing the work dominion with himself, Napoleon had in the Treaty of Tilsit reaped the fruits of his campaign against Prussia. The result was that Hesse was allotted to the newly created kingdom of Westphalia, and Napoleon's brother Jerome pitched his tent in William's residence at Cassel. The exiled elector was filled with rage and indignation, and his tendency to behave unjustly to those about him became more marked. When Buderus was again staying with his master at Itzehoe, and spoke of Rothschild and the services that he had rendered, the elector indicated that he noted the special favor shown to Rothschild with surprise, as after all, he was a Jew of very obscure antecedents, and expressed his concern to find Buderus employing him, as he had lately been doing, to the exclusion of almost everybody else, in the most important financial transactions. Buderus declared himself strongly in reply. He pointed out how promptly Rothschild had always paid, especially in the case of the moneys from London, and emphasized the skill with which Rothschild had succeeded in concealing from the French his English dealings on behalf of the elector. He related how French officials in Frankfort had recently been instructed to carry out investigations at Meyer Amschel Rothschild's, in order to ascertain whether he did not collect English moneys for the elector; and how Meyer Amschel had immediately produced his books, an inspection of which had revealed absolutely nothing of this matter.[24] This fact proved that even then Meyer Amschel was keeping two sets of books, one of which was suitable for inspection by the various authorities and tax collectors. the other containing the record of the more secret and profitable transactions. Buderus pointed out that Bethmann, in view of his standing as a Frankfort patrician, and as the head of a firm that was centuries old, could not so suitably be employed in transactions which in the difficult political conditions of the time could not bear the light of day. He added that Bethmann's financial resources had given out in connection with the Danish loan in 1806, and that Rothschild far surpassed him in determination and energy. He also suggested that Rothschild had given greater proof of loyalty, for they had hardly heard anything of Bethmann since the elector had gone into exile, whereas Meyer Amschel was constantly concerning himself with the elector's interests, and also, when necessary, coming personally to Schleswig, or sending one of his sons.

Buderus's representations succeeded finally in allaying this bout of suspicion against the Rothschild family, with whom he had now established very close personal relations. Through the efforts of the administrator of the elector's estates, all the other bankers were gradually forced into the background, Rothschild taking their place.[25] From this time onwards he enjoyed the elector's confidence as far as such a thing was possible, and we find Meyer Amschel becoming, not only William's principal banker, but also his confidential adviser in various difficult matters.

As his health no longer permitted him to do full justice to the strenuous requirements of the elector's service, he placed one of his sons at the elector's disposal when necessary. Up to this time the elector had turned down the various proposals regarding the collection of interest and the investment of capital that Nathan had made to him from London. As late as June, 1807, he actually instructcd his charge d'affaires in London to vouchsafe no reply whatever if Nathan should venture again to inquire as to the elector's financial affairs.[26] In this matter too, he was slowly and completely to change his attitude, without any disadvantage to himself. Everybody who possibly could was borrowing money from the elector, for the German sovereigns, and not least, the King of Prussia, were suffering from extreme shortage of money after Napoleon's victorious march through their country, owing to the heavy war expenses and the subsidies which he imposed.

Prince Wittgenstein repeatedly urged the King of Prussia to be very cordial to the elector, and as soon as it should be practicable to invite him to live in Berlin because it might then perhaps be possible to persuade him to grant a loan. The invitation was actually sent, but the king had then himself been obliged to flee from his capital, and was suffering the most grievous misfortunes, so that Berlin was out of the question. Meanwhile Denmark had also been forced by Napoleon to give up her neutrality. The French invaded the dukedoms and the Danish royal house found the presence of the elector, who was such a thorn in Napoleon's side, most embarrassing.

In these circumstances, the refugee was in constant danger of being discovered and taken prisoner. Jerome was ruling in Hesse, and it was of little use to the elector that Lagrange's double-dealing was brought to light, and the general dismissed. In spite of an invitation from the Prince of Wales, William did not wish to go to England, since that would have meant a final breach with the powerful usurper, for the elector continued to cherish an unreasonable hope of Napoleon's forgiveness. There was still Austria. In his last letter[27] the Emperor Francis had expressed his "most heartfelt sympathy in these sad circumstances," with the hope that he might be of assistance to him. The elector accordingly asked for asylum in Austrian territory, and decided to continue his flight to Bohemia, stopping first at Carlsbad.

He did not part with his treasures, but took with him all the valuables and papers which had been saved, including a chest full of deeds which Meyer Amschel had proposed to bring on afterwards from Hamburg. The travelers were carefully disguised on their journey. In one place where there were French troops they nearly lost their most valuable belongings, as the wheels of the carriage in which they were packed broke in the marketplace, and they were forced to transfer them to another vehicle. Fortunately nobody guessed what the bales contained; the journey proceeded without further mishap; and on July 28, 1808, the elector arrived at Carlsbad, where he awaited the emperor's decision as to his final place of abode.

Meanwhile Meyer Amschel and his son were carrying on their business at Frankfort and developing the trading as well as the purely financial side of it. All the members of the family were actively engaged in it, and Rothschild's unmarried daughter sat at the cash desk, assisted by the wives of Solomon and Amschel. Meanwhile the fifth son, Jacob, generally called James, had reached the age of sixteen, and like his elder brothers had begun to take an active part in the business. This had made it possible for the eldest son Amschel also to leave Frankfort fairly often, in order, like Carl, who was the firm's "traveler," to visit the elector in Bohemia.

Buderus in the meantime had arranged that the elector's cash income, which it was really his duty to administer, should be collected by Rothschild and remain in his hands at four per cent interest. Thus, during the summer of 1808[28] he received 223,800 gulden against bills at four per cent—a very respectable sum at a time when ready money was so scarce, and the elector was reluctant to leave it all with him. However he found in due course that Rothschild accounted with extreme accuracy for every penny of it.

In accordance with the wishes of Emperor Francis, the elector moved to Prague toward the end of August, 1808. That monarch knew well what he was doing in welcoming the elector to his territories. Austria was chronically in need of money; nevertheless plans were being made to avenge her defeat. Count Stadion especially was the prime mover in the idea of waging a new war against the insolent Emperor of the French.

Financial affairs in Austria were in a state of chaos, as revealed by the Vienna Bourse of the period. A confidential friend of Emperor Francis had sent him a report on the subject in which he did not mince his words. "I feel it my duty to observe," he wrote,[29] "that the Bourse at the present time seems more like a jumble sale than an Imperial Bourse. The dregs and scourings of the population invade it, and decent business men, capable of handling such matters, are pushed into the background and shouted down, so that reasonable discussion becomes impossible. Closer investigation will reveal the fact that many of these people are paid by stock-jobbers, systematically to create disorder at the Bourse." The collapse in the value of the paper currency, the violent fluctuations in all quotations, the fear of war and the general unrest all contributed to this state of affairs. It was in vain for Emperor Francis to "resolve that measures must be taken to prevent the Bourse from degenerating into a rowdy collection of persons of no position who sacrifice all considerations to the basest greed for profit." [30] The fundamental cause of these conditions remained unaltered.

The Austrian state hoped for some financial assistance from the elector at Prague. He was living a retired life at the Palace Liechtenstein, and Vienna set itself to discover the state of the elector's purse. All kinds of Gonfidential persons and secret agents of the police, some of them disguised under titles of nobility and wearing officers' uniforms, were sent to Prague. One of them reported[31] that the Elector of Hesse had large sums at his disposal, and was in communication with "particuliers" through middlemen, regarding the purchase of state obligations. He stated that it was not at all unlikely that a loan to the imperial court could be obtained under favorable conditions, and suggested that it might be worth while to make inquiries on this matter through confidential bankers and exchange merchants. Immediately on receipt of this report, the emperor with quite unwonted promptitude instructed the chancellor of the exchequer Count O'Donnell to let him have his opinion as speedily as possible on this report received "from a trustworthy source." [32]

We now for the first time find the name of Rothschild mentioned in connection with the Austrian court. Count O'Donnell reported that there was no doubt that the elector had rescued considerable sums and also had large amounts to his credit in England, and that it was therefore worth attempting to induce him to subscribe to a loan, either in "solid gold" or in "reliable bills of exchange on places abroad." The count emphasized that "in order to achieve this object the best method would probably be to approach the middlemen to whom the elector entrusts his financial affairs, and this can best be done through a reliable exchange office in Vienna or Prague."

O'Donnell recommended that such middlemen should receive one, two, or three per cent commission, this being in any case customary in such proceedings, and they would then have an interest in stimulating the elector to carry through the transaction. "The papers of the Credits Commission reveal," the count's report continued, "that the persons who appeared on behalf of the elector, then landgrave, in connection with the negotiation of the loan of one million, two hundred thousand gulden in 1796 were the Frankfort firm Ruppell and Harnier, and Privy Councilor Buderus. At that time the interest on these loans . . . was collected by the local firm Frank and Company, on behalf of the Jewish firm at Frankfort of Meyer Amschel Rothschild, who were authorized to collect them by a power of attorney executed by Privy Councilor Buderus, and it appears to me abundantly evident that this privy councilor is the principal person who should be moved, through some advantage, to smooth our path." :!:i

It was decided to put up to the intermediaries two proposals: either that they should obtain a five per cent loan on mortgage security, or that they should persuade the elector to invest a considerable sum, at least one or two million, in the lottery loan. Hereupon the following resolution was issued by his Imperial Majesty: "In view of the indubitable necessity for providing if possible for the collection in hard cash of an adequate supply of money I approve of an attempt being made to obtain a cash loan from the Elector of Hesse. . . . The important thing is to make use of a reliable and intelligent mediator who may be relied upon to carry through the negotiations cautiously and skilfully, so as to achieve the desired end on the most favorable terms possible."[34]

In accordance with these instructions Buderus and Rothschild were confidentially approached as mediators, and they promised that they would do their best, but they emphasized the fact that the ultimate decision lay solely with the elector. They at once duly informed the elector of the wishes of Austria, but he showed a reluctance to meet them, and then war broke out and the negotiations were postponed.

During the period which followed the elector, regarding whose avarice and enormous wealth the most varied stories were spread at Prague, was closely watched by secret police specially sent from Vienna. He took an active interest in current affairs, and closely followed the powerful movement which was developing in Germany, particularly in Prussia, its aim being to shake off the foreign yoke. This movement could not as yet come into the open, but in Konigsberg, where the king and the government of Prussia were residing, the "Tugendbund" was formed, a league which ostensibly pursued moral-scientific aims, but the ultimate object of which was deliverance of Germany.

The principal protector of the league was the minister Baron von Stein; and William of Hesse held an important position in it. Its membership was so wide that it also included Jews, and the Rothschilds appear to have become members. At any rate they acted as go-betweens for the elector's correspondence on this matter, and made payments in favor of the Tugendbund.

Through an intercepted letter from Stein which mentioned the elector,[35] Napoleon learned of the desire for a war of revenge, and of the plans for a rising in Hesse. Stein had to flee, and Napoleon's distrust of the elector and of his servants was very much increased. The emperor saw clearly that the elector was implicated, that is, was financing it. Further intercepted letters confirmed this view.[36] As a result several business men mentioned in them by the elector were arrested; it was desired through them to obtain further information regarding the apparently inexhaustible resources of the elector. Amongst these men of business Buderus was prominent, and it was particularly desired to ascertain his precise connection with the bankers. One of these was Meyer Amschel Rothschild, whose relations with Buderus had long been no secret to the French officials. The Frankfort banker was accordingly cited to appear before the Chancery of the Urban and District of Frankfort on August 13, 1808; but he could not obey his summons since he was confined to his bed.

He had fallen seriously ill in June, 1808, had been operated on by a professor from Mainz, and, fearing that his days were numbered, he had made his will. He therefore sent his son Solomon to appear in his place, telling him not to let himself be drawn, and to make only such statements as were not likely to furnish the French with any clue, or else to provide false clues. Solomon carried out his mission with great skill. The French were but little enlightened by the cross-examination, and in the end they dismissed the young Jew with the order that he should immediately hand over to the court any letter from Budcrus to the firm of Rothschild.[37]

Buderus and Lennep were themselves arrested in September, 1808, and minutely examined for several days at Mainz, this being only natural in view of the fact that these men, who were the elector's tools, were in the power of the French at Frankfort, whereas their chief was living in Prague, out of Napoleon's reach.

Napoleon's mistrust of William was fully justified, for in October, 1808, the elector was carrying on negotiations at Prague for promoting insurrections throughout the whole of the northwest of Germany, with the view that they should spread to the south as well. This matter was certainly carried on with great secrecy; even the Austrian secret police agents knew only in a general way that something was in the wind. It is amusing to note the naive manner in which they arrived at the conclusions contained in their reports.

"The Elector of Hesse," says one of these reports, "has forty-one natural sons, all of whom he has decently provided for, but as the fall of the elector has disappointed their hopes of a brilliant career, they are endeavoring to reinstate their father. As the defeat of Prussia has deprived them of all chance of achieving their object by force, they have had recourse to a secret association which is intended to extend its activities throughout the whole of Germany under the protection of the English Masonic Lodge at Hanover. This league will take a suitable opportunity to reveal itself in a public conspiracy in order to attain its final object. . . . The probability of another war has aroused fresh expectations of making proselytes. in small confidential circles something is occasionally said about the possibility of putting an end to the miseries of the country by putting Napoleon and his brothers out of the way." [38]

Vienna, however, was not merely interested in the elector's high politics. Further information was also desired as to his financial advisers, particularly as to Rothschild, mentioned by O'Donnell. Urgent instructions were therefore sent to the chief of police of the city of Prague to obtain as accurate information as possible regarding that man's activities. The chief of police reported:[39]

Amsel Mayer Rotschild, living under the registered number 184 in the third main district, is agent for war payments to the Elector of Hesse, and in that capacity he has achieved mention, together with his brother, Moses Mayer Rotschild, in the electoral almanac for the year 1806. The father of these two men appears in the almanac as a war paymaster. According to information supplied by Major von Thummel, Amsel Mayer Rotschild, has come here from Frankfort, where he has been living hitherto, in order to look after the elector's financial affairs, which were formerly entrusted to Ballabom, who seems to have shown a certain lack of diligence. Be that as it may, we may assume that Amsel Mayer Rotschild renders the elector important services in other matters too, and it is not entirely improbable that this Jew is at the head of an important propaganda system in favor of the elector, whose branches extend throughout the former Hessian territories.

I have reasons for this opinion. These suppositions are based on the following fact: whenever I enter the elector's quarters, I always find Rotschild there, and generally in the company of Army Councilor Schminke and War Secretary Knatz, and they go into their own rooms, and Rotschild generally has papers with him. We may assume that their aims are in no sense hostile to Austria, since the elector is exceedingly anxious to recover the possession of his electorate, so that it is scarcely open to question that the organizations and associations, whose guiding spirit Rotschild probably is, are entirely concerned with the popular reactions and the other measures to be adopted, if Austria should have the good fortune to make any progress against France and Germany. Owing to his extensive business connections it is probable that he can ascertain this more easily than anybody else, and can also conceal his machinations under the cloak of business.

This report was more or less in accordance with the facts; for Rothschild was the connecting link between Buderus, who lived in Hesse and could never come to fragile, and the elector. Rothschild was also constantly busy with the elector's financial affairs, and these were of a particularly wide scope at the beginning of 1809, since with the passage of time the accumulations of money in England, by way of interest and otherwise, had grown so large that their supervision required particular care. Buderus proposed that his master should acquire British securities at three per cent,[40] and suggested that Meyer Amschel should he commissioned to effect the purchase of them. Rothschild had naturally made this proposal to Buderus in the first instance, and Buderus had duly put it forward as his own suggestion.

The close relations between Buderus and Rothschild had at that time actually been embodied in a written agreement between them which virtually made the electoral official a secret partner in the firm of Rothschild, This highly important document runs as follows:

"The following confidential agreement has today been concluded between the Privy War Councilor Buderus von Carlshausen, and the business house of Meyer Amschel Rotschild at Frankfort: Whereas Buderus has handed over to the banking firm of Meyer Amschel Rothschild the capital sum of 20,000 gulden, 24 florins, and has promised to advise that firm in all business matters to the best of his ability and to advance its interests as far as he may find practicable, the firm of Meyer Amschel Rothschild promises to render Buderus a true account of the profits made in respect of the above-mentioned capital sum of 20,000 gulden, and to allow him access to all books at any time so that he may satisfy himself with regard to this provision." [41]

The agreement contained a provision for its termination on either side by giving six months' notice. Buderus now had a personal interest in securing for Meyer Amschel Rothschild a monopoly in the conduct of the elector's business. What he had done had been in the best interests of all concerned. His experience of a period of years had proved to him the reliability and the skill of the House of Rothschild; he harbored no prejudices against the Jews; and he was firmly convinced that the elector, his master, was bound to gain by placing his financial affairs in the hands of one firm, especially of such an able firm as the House of Rothschild.

The Rothschilds on the other hand needed the support of a man who could gain for them the confidence of the suspicious and avaricious elector, who was an exceedingly difficult person to handle. They had achieved this object through Buderus, but they wanted to secure the relationship for the future, and therefore gave him a personal interest in the continued prosperity of the business. Finally Buderus himself profited by this arrangement as he fully deserved to do after the persevering and self-sacrificing efforts that he had made; and he could never hope that he would be regarded in accordance with his deserts by the rapacious elector. Moreover, he was far too scrupulous and honorable spontaneously to appropriate money in the course of his administration of the elector's property; but he had a very large family, and by becoming a secret partner in the firm of Rothschild he was enabled to meet its requirements.

Buderus's efforts with his master were successful. The elector acted upon Rothschild's recommendations regarding British stocks, and he then actually ordered that £150,000 of the stocks should be purchased on his account, which in fact exceeded the amount that Buderus had suggested. The investment itself was entrusted to Rothschild.

Up to this time the financial transactions in England had been the most reliable as far as interest payments were concerned; but the payments in respect of interest due from members of the English royal house came in at most irregular intervals and were often outstanding for very long periods. The elector, however, did not agitate to get these payments in, for he regarded the money laid out in this direction less as an investment than as a means of putting the members of the ruling house under an obligation to himself.

The brothers Rothschild noted this practice of the elector with important personages; they had practical evidence, from the experience of their princely client, of the fact that transactions involving temporary loss may ultimately result in very good business. The debtors' uneasy feeling on failing to make payments at the date when they fell due sometimes led them to try to make amends in other ways, through furnishing valuable information or through political services, and such favors often produced cash results far exceeding the amount actually owing.

At this time the bond between the House of Rothschild and the elector had become a very close one; and this was not due to Buderus only, but also to their loyalty; although this quality resulted to their advantage, they incurred the risks that loyalty involved. The only really unpleasant circumstance in this connection was the fact that the frivolous heir to the elector, who was always in need of money, exploited the situation and at every possible opportunity borrowed from his father's faithful Jewish servant. In any case that could not be a very serious matter, as Rothschild was morally certain to get his money back, the prince being the heir to the enormous fortune which his father had amassed. These large financial transactions did not put an end to the dealings in small antiques between the elector and Rothschild, which had been the starting-point of their business relations. However, there was a difference: their roles were reversed; the elector now sold to Rothschild vases, jewels and antique boxes, etc. more often than he bought them. These dealings constituted a peculiar bond of sympathy between the elector and his Jewish crown agent, and the elector enjoyed showing his talent in this field, as far as was consistent with his high birth. Meanwhile the relations between Austria and France had become more acute. The Emperor Napoleon had returned from Spain, and a new war between Napoleon and the Emperor Francis was imminent. The elector offered the emperor a legion of four thousand men, this offer being coupled with a touching appeal that the emperor should secure his reinstatement in the rulership of his territories.[42] The offer was thankfully accepted. On April 9, 1809, the Austrians crossed the Inn; thereupon Napoleon ceased to be a factor in the treatment accorded to the elector at Prague. The elector was granted the honors due to a sovereign, and society was commanded to call on his favorite at Prague, who until then had been very much slighted. They wanted to "get on the right side of him" In order to get as much money and as many troops from him as possible. The elector, however, put only one half of the promised forces in the field. That cost him 600,000 gulden; and it was Rothschild who saw to the collection and distribution of this sum.

This work was full of danger for the Rothschilds as they were at the mercy of the French in Frankfort. In spite of the great scarcity of money at the time it was Rothschild who from his own resources advanced to the elector the cash amount of several hundred thousand gulden required on short loan. The elector already saw himself in possession of his states. "I come," he wrote somewhat prematurely in a proclamation of April, 1809, "to loose your bonds; Austria's exalted monarch protects me and protects you. Let us hail the brave Austrians; they are our true friends, and it is in their midst and with their assistance that I come to you."

It was with eloquence rather than with cash that he called upon his Hessians to rise. When one of the local leaders wanted to seize Cassel and take King Jerome prisoner, he applied to the elector in the first instance for financial support. All that he received, however, was a piece of paper, representing an order for 30,000 thalers, "payable only in the event of the rising being successful." When the attempt failed, the elector laid the blame, "upon the premature and unprepared nature of the attack."

The immediate result of the attempt was that the elector's servants in Hessian territory were subjected to more stringent regulations. Notwithstanding that Buderus and Rothschild were on such exceedingly good terms with the Primate of the Confederation at Frankfort, the fact that King Jerome's position in Westphalia had been seriously threatened caused the police at Cassel to watch the movements of Buderus and Rothschild with renewed assiduity, as they suspected them, not unjustly, of having financed the rising.

This favorable opportunity was exploited by jealous rivals at Cassel, who supplied the police and their notorious chief, Savagner, with information. Moreover, Baron Bacher, the accredited Westphalian ambassador to Dalberg at Frankfort, was a bitter enemy of Rothschild, and felt particular displeasure at the favor shown by Dalberg to the Jew, since he had long been convinced that Rothschild was in the elector's confidence in all the activities undertaken against the French. Savagner, who thought that a prosecution of the rich Jew might accrue to the benefit of his own pocket, concentrated all his efforts on inducing King Jerome of Westphalia to authorize the issue of a warrant against Meyer Amschel Rothschild on the ground that he had been a channel through whom the elector's money had passed to the rebels.
In this dangerous situation Rothschild appealed to Dalberg to intervene on his behalf; Dalberg did what he could, and it was only with great difficulty that the French police in Cassel managed to obtain the warrant.
A Certain Levy, the son-in-law of a rival of Rothschild, informed Savagner as to the lines on which Rothschild should be examined regarding his business dealings with the elector.
On May 9, 1809, Buderus was again arrested at Hanau, submitted to searching cross-examinations, and was let out onsubstantial bail only after an interval of several days. On May 10 Savagner set out for Frankfort with the warrant which he had at last succeeded in obtaining, but which authorized only a domiciliary search and a close examination of all members of the House of Rothschild.

They had been warned in good time; the prevailing sentiment amongst the local inhabitants, both at Cassel and at Frankfort, was one of solidarity against the foreign invader. It was only rarely that this feeling was subordinated to commercial rivalry. Meyer Amschel was also given a hint by Dalberg. He was particularly concerned about the elector's four chests containing account books which were under his care; they were in his house cellar, and he did not even know what they contained. As the cellar would naturally be searched, he would have to do his host to rescue the elector's property as speedily as possible in the general excitement arising out of the sudden menace.

Old Meyer Amschel and his wife, Solomon and James, and the wives of the two eldest sons were at home. Amschel, the eldest son, was staying with the elector at Prague, and Carl was traveling on other business. Those members of the family who were at home now tried to get the compromising chests through the connecting passage to the yard cellar at the back, but they found that the passage was too narrow for the chests. These were therefore emptied, and their contents placed in other cases, together with some coupons representing unrealized obligations due to the firm itself. The family then set about the work of hiding the compromising account books and the secret records of the elector's intimate affairs, as well as certain embarrassing correspondence.

When the Westphalian commissioner of police arrived on the 10th of May, 1809, furnished with his exceedingly limited warrant for summoning the Rothschild family and searching their house at Frankfort, the most important documents had already been well concealed, and the individual members of the family had arranged between themselves what they would say when they were examined, so that they would not get involved in contradictory statements.

Dalberg, the sovereign at Frankfort, had been watching the activities directed from Cassel with a certain resentment; they constituted an infringement of his sovereign rights, and they affected a valued financier to whom he would soon want to apply again for a personal loan; on the other hand he felt that it would be exceedingly unwise for him to oppose the wishes of King Jerome's great brother. At the same time, for financial reasons it was only with reluctance that the King of Westphalia himself had consented to the issue of the warrant. It was therefore a foregone conclusion that the Rothschild family would not suffer any serious harm. Dalberg also gave orders that one of his own police officials should accompany Savagner. The two commissioners accordingly betook themselves to Rothschild's business house in the Jewish quarter where the whole family were expecting them.

Old Meyer Amschel, who on this occasion too was unwell, was placed under arrest in his own room, while Solomon and James were placed under arrest in the office below, under the guard of police constables. In the meantime all cupboards containing papers and business correspondence were sealed, and a systematic search of the whole house was instituted. Simultaneously the home of Solomon, who also lived in the town, was submitted to a similar search. Thanks to the advance warnings and to the well-concealed duplicate books, not much incriminating matter was discovered.

The next step was to investigate the individual members of the family. Meyer Amschel had to answer the questions drafted by the Jew Levy on the instructions of his rival, the banker Simon, at Cassel—questions affecting the details of Rothschild's financial dealings with the elector. In many cases he replied that he had no recollection of the matters referred to, pointing out that he had suffered a severe illness and undergone an operation in 1808; he stated that this had had serious after-effects, and more particularly, that it had affected his memory. By this method of evasion he succeeded in avoiding making statements which the commissioner of police could have used as incriminating material.

In these circumstances recourse had to be had to an examination of the other members of the family, including Meyer Amschel's wife. The old mother replied[43] that she knew nothing at all, as she only concerned herself with the house, never went out from one year's end to another, and had nothing whatever to do with the business. The two sons made the statements which they had previously arranged with their father, and in general said as little as possible.

The examination of such books as were discovered yielded very slight result, as the incriminating documents had been removed. Meyer Amschel cleverly used an opportunity which proffered itself, of lending Savagner three hundred thalers, and this helped considerably to expedite the conclusion of the official investigation. In any case, Savagner's authority was of a limited kind, and Dalberg's commissioner, who was himself a Jew, was well-disposed toward Rothschild, and used his influence to bring the examination to an end. As sufficient material had been collected to show that the action which had been taken was justified and necessary in the circumstances, the authorities at Cassel, too, were satisfied. Fortunately for the accused, Rothschild's enemy, Ambassador Bacher, was not in Frankfort at this time; so that the whole painful business passed off well for the family of Rothschild.

French reports[44] on the matter reveal that the French officials found the Rothschild family to be "exceedingly wise and cunning," and to have managed to secure friends in all quarters. The only positive result of the inquiry was to establish the fact that Amschel Rothschild was staying at Prague and was directing the financial speculations of the Elector of Hesse; and that the firm of Rothschild had made small payments to individual leaders of the insurrection. The only circumstance noted which was regarded as of graver import was that the brothers Rothschild had regularly paid considerable sums to the elector's consort, who was staying at Gotha, and to her business manager Kunkel, who also acted as an agent of the elector in promoting the revolution of Hesse against France.

These facts in themselves furnished sufficient material for dealing ruthlessly with the family—if that had been seriously desired; but the Rothschilds benefited by the inhibitions of the rulers of Frankfort and Cassel, who at heart were pleased to have remained faithful to the elector, although they had maintained practical relations with the new French powers. Everything had resulted happily, and the Rothschilds could breathe freely, but it had been a warning to act with even greater precaution in the future. The most important thing was to get the chests belonging to the elector out of the house at once, for in the course of another search the yard cellar might perhaps be discovered. The chests were therefore sent successively through the mediation of a Jewish friend to a business acquaintance of the Rothschilds at Darmstadt - a certain Abraham Mayer—and they stayed with him until the elector returned to his country.

While these events were taking place at Frankfort, Napoleon's campaign against Austria was proceeding. Swift as lightning, Napoleon's genius was thrusting down the Danube to Vienna. He sustained a reverse at Aspern, but on July 6 he made good this defeat by the decisive victory at Wagram.

The elector at Prague had been anxiously watching the changing vicissitudes of the campaign. He had hoped that his tormentor would be speedily beaten and he now saw him coming ever closer to his place of refuge at Prague. When Napoleon was at the gates of Vienna, the elector was seized with terror. He would have to flee again, and in great concern he took counsel with his advisers, and with Amschel Rothschild, who was staying with him, and who was no less terrified than his electoral master, as to whether they should not take refuge in the fortress of Olmutz. At any rate the more valuable articles were sent on there. Seven chests containing securities, and one containing jewelry were actually sent off.

Then came Wagram; Napoleon advanced to Mahren, and Olmutz was seriously threatened. The boxes had to come back, and the elector set out for Berlin, as the king had already offered to shelter him there. But the king now rather regretted having made this offer; Napoleon was too powerful and might resent the elector's being granted asylum in Berlin. The king therefore wrote on January 29, 1810, to put him off, on the ground of "managements delicats" obtaining between himself and Napoleon at the time. Meanwhile peace was signed at Schonbrunn, no mention whatever of the elector being made in the treaty. Napoleon returned to Paris, whereupon William decided to remain at Prague.

The unsuccessful campaign of 1809 had resulted in the retirement of Count Stadion, the Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs, and this brilliant man and bitter opponent of Napoleon withdrew for some years into private life. On October 8, 1809, he was succeeded by Prince Clemens Metternich, who was to play such a decisive role in the destinies of Europe during the following half-century.

Metternich had only just entered upon his duties when he received a letter from the Elector of Hesse, requesting the minister to support him, and "to restore to his orphaned subjects their native prince, whose presence they so ardently desired." He had great hopes that Metternich would use his influence with the emperor, and he was bitterly disappointed when he learned that he had not even been mentioned during the peace negotiations.

He wrote a bitter letter of complaint to Stadion:[45] "So many worthless people, relying on French protection, are enabled to sin against me with impunity, and nobody now feels that he has any duties toward me; everybody does as he pleases and is actuated by base and selfish motives. I have thus lost more than two-thirds of a fortune that was never very large. That is hard, but harder than everything else is my present condition."

It was highly typical of the elector to suggest that he was badly off; in spite of his losses he was still actually one of the wealthiest princes of his time; but if there were spoils to be divided, he did not want to be left out in the cold on the ground that he was rich enough already. The money motive was always the principal one with the elector, and in this matter he had a perfect understanding with his crown agent Rothschild. Rothschild always advised the elector to ask concessions at every possible oppurtunity—as, for instance, that claims on him in respect of the troops should be waived, etc.—and the elector got more and more accustomed to following Rothschild's advice, and scarcely took any important financial step without consulting him.

A sum of £150,000 had been invested as recently as December 18, 1809, in three per cent British Consols from interest received on behalf of the "poor" elector. The business in connection with this transaction naturally entailed voluminous correspondence, for the conveyance of which between Frankfort and Prague Meyer Amschel made himself personally responsible. He traveled in a private post-chaise which contained a secret drawer. The French were anxious to intercept if possible the correspondence between the elector and his Frankfort agents; once they did actually succeed in seizing a letter destined for England which clearly revealed the fact that the Rothschilds were responsible for the management of the elector's funds in that country.[46]

In the meantime an important change had taken place in general European politics. The new personality directing Austria's foreign affairs had brought about a complete reversal of the policy followed previously. Nothing could be achieved against Napoleon by the use of force, and therefore Metternich tried other means.

Napoleon's marriage with Josephine was childless. His union with an imperial princess would increase his prestige and might produce the heir he so much desired. The hitherto hostile states were thus reconciled by the prospect of a marriage, and in January, 1810, the imperial house of Austria gave Napoleon to understand that if he asked for the hand of Marie Louise, the eighteen-year-old daughter of the emperor, he would not be refused. The contract of marriage was signed as early as the 7th of February.

One of the first to be informed of this complete change in the situation was the Elector of Hesse. He immediately wrote again to Metternich to the following effect: "I am writing to your Excellency trusting to enlist your sympathy for my most cherished desires. The marriage which is to unite the two greatest monarchies causes me to hope that I may regain the Emperor Napoleon's goodwill, if our emperor . . . will but intercede in my favor. One word from him to the plenipotentiary of France will secure my happiness, and will at any rate establish me as ruler of one of the liberated states in Germany, even if I cannot regain my own Penates. . . . Surely that monarch will not be able to resist the intervention of his exalted father-in-law, and of an adored wife on behalf of a prince who has never yet understood how he has incurred his displeasure."[47]

The elector also repeatedly pressed Count Stadion to use his influence with the Austrian ruler in William's behalf. The minister had great difficulty in dissuading him from traveling to Vienna.

Although in these letters the elector gave such a woeful account of his condition, he was faring exceedingly well at Prague. He had bought a palace on the Kleinseite where he held court, and he maintained a household of thirty-six persons. He had also acquired the magnificent castle and grounds of Bubenetsch, which was finely furnished throughout, but with due regard to economy. The firm of Rothschild carried through the business matters connected with these purchases. The actual state of the elector's affairs was well known at Vienna. The financial affairs of the court and of the public departments were getting steadily worse, and the new friendship with France had done but little to lighten the burdens of debt incurred under the recent peace treaty. In the negotiations between France and Austria the Austrian Treasury official Nikolaus Barbier had been so vehement in his advocacy of Austria's interests that the French plenipotentiary on one occasion actually protested against his being present. This clever financial expert had played a considerable part in all the various loan operations which Austria had had to carry out during these wars.

At that time the imperial state had no business relations with the Rothschild banking firm. There were four more or less official discount houses at Vienna, through which the Austrian government arranged its loans and other monetary business. They were the banking firms, Geymuller and Company, Arnstein and Eskeles and Company, Graf Fries and Company, and Steiner and Company. The Austrian government also dealt with the banking firm of Parish at Hamburg in 1809, in matters relating to remittances and realizations—such were the technical terms used at the time—of English subsidy moneys.

The condition of the Austrian state finances was lamentable. The value of her bank notes had fallen steadily during the wars, and the amount of paper money in circulation had risen to the enormous figure of over a thousand million gulden; it was already necessary to pay five hundred paper gulden for one hundred gulden in coin of the realm, this amount soon rising to twelve hundred gulden. In June, 1810, the difficulties had become so acute that an attempt was made to raise a loan of from two to three million gulden on the contents of the Privy Purse, which were deposited in the Vienna Treasury, this loan to be carried out by the four discount firms mentioned above, on the security of mortgage deeds. The banker Eskeles made a journey to Paris and Holland in order to raise this money.

It was also suggested that the state lottery monopoly should he mortgaged, hut the four banking firms had not great resources themselves, and were not particularly successful in their attempts to raise credits. Eskeles was forced to report from Frankfort that he had no hope of success, "either in raising money or in mortgaging the state lottery."

In these depressing circumstances Vienna remembered the wealthy Elector of Hesse whom it had been treating so shabbily, and it was suggested that he might be persuaded through Rothschild to grant a loan to Austria. Barbier was entrusted with this mission, and discussed it personally with the elector, and also informed Rothschild of the matter. The elector replied evasively. He said that he must first discuss it with his advisers; and Buderus had pointed out to his master that so much money was already on loan with private persons that it was not desirable to make further investments.

Rothschild also advised against producing capital sums of the amount required by the Austrian court, although he felt "that it was not desirable to give the emperor a rebuff. The elector and Rothschild hit upon the idea of suggesting to the emperor that the elector should transfer to him all his individual outstanding claims, and that it should he the monarch's own business to bring the debtors to book. He suggested that the emperor might have more influence and power to effect this, and that he might be able to neutralize any opposition of the French to collecting the debts. The advantage for him would be that he would then have only one single debtor, the Emperor of Austria.

The elector accordingly wrote to Barbier[48] that he would be happier than he could say if his Royal and Imperial Majesty would take over the debts due to him, mentioned in the accompanying schedule. He stated that he was not in a position to grant a loan in any other way than that suggested, as eighteen months earlier he had purchased Austrian government stock of the value of over a million gulden, and funds in England had been sequestrated. If he recovered from his financial difficulties he would be delighted to be of service to his Majesty.

He enclosed a list of thirty-three different clients who owed him sums in varying amounts, ranging from 784,-848 reichsthalers down to 6,951 reichsthalers. Apart from several princely houses, the names of privy councilors and counselors of embassies figured in these lists, as well as ministers such as Hardenberg, who owed the elector 140,000 thalers. The total value of all the claims amounted to the sum of 5,832,532 reichsthalers.

This proposal, however, came to nothing. The scheme put forward by Rothschild, and approved by the elector, had been too subtle and complicated, and on the instructions of Emperor Francis a reply was sent to the elector[49] declining the offer, on the ground that the collection of the money would be a process too difficult and uncertain, and not consonant with the dignity of the Austrian state. It was also pointed out that the moneys had been attached by the French government, and that to accept a transfer of these obligations would therefore compromise Austria.

Although the proposal was rejected, it had the important result that for the first time a high Austrian Treasury official negotiated with a member of the Rothschild family.

In the meantime important political changes had taken place at Frankfort. Dalberg's Confederation of the Rhine had exchanged Hanau and Fulda for Regensburg, and the title of Grand Duke of Frankfort was conferred on the overlord. Dalberg's promotion furnished an opportunity to Meyer Amschel, who was in his favor, of proving his gratitude to Buderus for his good offices in the past, by services other than financial.

Buderus had been continually molested by the French police, and Rothschild decided to put an end to this by persuading Dalberg to recognize the electoral official as a deputy of the estates of the Grand Duchy of Frankfort on the occasion of the handing over of Hanau, and also to appoint him director of the finance committee of the diet. He hoped that when Buderus held this official position he would be left in peace.

Dalberg acceded to Rothschild's request. He steered his course very cleverly between the former powers who were now in exile and the new masters at Frankfort. It was very necessary that he should do so, for he could not uproot himself from the city of his birth. All his possessions were there, and the city was the principal commercial and financial center of the Continent. The Austrian ambassador Baron von Hugel reported enthusiastically regarding the increasing prosperity of Frankfort, which had conserved its wealth through all the difficulties of the war period, and had actually grown richer.

"Luxury," he wrote,[50] "has increased incredibly. Cash is turned over much more rapidly. Hospitals, libraries, museums, etc. are provided on the most generous scale; trade and industry flourish, and everyone is full of enterprise."

Hugel emphasized the fact that the city already gave the impression of being one of the pleasantest and most important towns of Germany. "The grand duke," he continued, "takes an active interest in everything. Since I have been here, I have not seen a beggar or been asked for alms. The roses in the gardens are never touched, and in spite of all difficulties the industry of the tradespeople and bankers is exemplary. In fact their difficulties seem to act as an incentive to further efforts. During the last twenty years there has been no bankruptcy of any note. The volume of goods passing through the city is inconceivably great. Plutocratic standards obtain at Frankfort, and persons are judged by the magnificence of their establishments or by the appearances that they manage to keep up."

Hugel pointed out that Frankfort was a focus for trade between northern and southern Germany, and the gateway to France and Austria; and that no less than eight hundred of its citizens had admitted to possessing unencumbered cash to the sum of 50,000 gulden or more, while some hundreds enjoyed annual incomes of this amount and upwards.

Although this description may have been painted rather rosily, it was, in essentials, in accordance with the facts. There were many people at Frankfort who had grown rich, and the rapidity of the rise of the House of Rothschild to wealth and influence had been particularly marked. In view of the progress of his business, Meyer Amschel now decided to define more clearly its internal constitution; and more particularly to regulate his sons' share with greater accuracy than had been done within the framework of the existing concern.

On September 27, 1810, a new deed of partnership was accordingly drawn up between the father and his sons.[51] The main principle of this contract was that Meyer Amschel gave all his sons a substantial share in the business in order to stimulate their industry. They became, not merely indirectly, but directly interested in its continued prosperity. To mark the change the name of the firm was altered to "Meyer Amschel Rothschild and Sons," and Rothschild conveyed this information to all his business friends in a printed letter, in which he emphasized the fact that he was now associating his three sons with him in the direction of the business, which had been established for forty years.

The contract assessed the capital value of the business at a total of 800,000 gulden, 370,000 gulden being allotted to the father, 185,000 gulden each to the sons Amschel and Solomon, and 30,000 each to Carl and James, who had not yet conic of age. These shares were allotted to them as their absolute property, and it is noteworthy that Jacob (James) Rothschild, who was barely eighteen years old, was allotted shares to the capital value of 30,000 gulden, as duly earned through the "conscientious carrying out of the business entrusted to him by the old concern."

For the purpose of dividing profit or loss, the business was divided into fifty shares; a multiple of five, having the convenience of facilitating the future division of the business equally between the five brothers, while the smaller fractions made it possible in the meantime to allot shares with due regard to the varying ages and capacities of the five sons. When the time came to divide up the inheritance, each son could acquire an equal fifth share.

On perusing the document, one is struck by the fact that Nathan, who was living in England, is not mentioned in the partnership deed and seems to have been left entirely to his own resources, although he was in close business association with the parent concern, and on the best terms with his family. Under the contract, twenty-four of the fifty shares were for the next ten years to belong to the father, twelve each to Amschel and Solomon, and one each to Carl and James. In point of fact, however, Meyer Amschel was holding the twelve-fiftieths destined for Nathan; but for the sake of public opinion, on account of the French domination, the connection with Nathan, who was living in England, had to be kept secret. We may assume that there was a secret subsidiary agreement with Nathan, accurately defining his relation to the company. Each partner of adult age was authorized to sign on behalf of the firm. The deed recited that "with the help of the Almighty, Meyer Amschel Rothschild has, through the industry which he has shown from his youth upwards, through his commercial capacity (i. e., business instinct) and through a tireless activity continued to an advanced age, alone laid the foundations of the present flourishing state of the business, and thereby provided for the worldly happiness of his children." It was therefore laid down that the decision in all transactions should remain with him, as being the head of the business. Moreover, he expressly retained for himself alone the right to withdraw money from the capital of the business as he might think fit, whereas the other partners could take out only their annual profits and what was necessary for their households.

It was also laid down that no daughters or children-in-law should have any right to see the company's books. Finally there were provisions against "vexatious litigation," and any partner who set the law in motion was made liable to a penalty for doing so. Before he could appear before the judge he was required to deposit this amount. This article was cleverly designed to lessen the possibilities of disputes between the five brothers; and although they might perhaps have rendered it invalid at law, they fully appreciated its wisdom, and all five solemnly agreed to abide by it.

The deed of partnership gives some insight into the varied nature of the business of the House of Rothschild, and the vicissitudes to which it was liable. As "bad and unrealizable" mortgages, debentures, and outstanding debts of all kinds are mentioned, it is clear that in its numerous undertakings the House of Rothschild sometimes suffered losses and made mistakes. These certainly always brought indirect advantages, as Meyer Amschel continually emphasized to his sons that mistakes have an educational value, and one must never lose courage.

Meyer Amschel was careful to nurse the old connections which the elector had facilitated for him through his relations in high quarters, and to exploit them for the benefit of his house. Whereas previously he had acted as the middleman between the electoral lender and Denmark, he offered as early as December, 1810,[52] a loan of 400,000 thalers to Count Schimmelmann, the Danish finance minister, which loan was to be advanced, not by the elector, but by Meyer Amschel Rothschild and his sons. It was another step towards his gradual financial emancipation from the elector, although, having now arrived at the point of doing business on his own account, he continued to apply in his own interests the business principles so well proved by William of Hesse.

Rothschild carefully watched the general political situation. Though by reason of his personality and origin, and his ignorance of language, he could not possess those qualities which are normally required in a diplomat, he had a sagacious understanding of human nature, entirely free of any preconceived ideas or prejudices. This was of particular advantage in a world which, at the time, was politically topsy-turvy. One really had to be a consummate diplomatist in order to carry on one's business without causing offense, either to the French or to the powers which they were oppressing.

As long as Napoleon's star was in the ascendant, the Rothschilds acted as if they were well disposed to France and her ruler; they lent money both to the French and to the native authorities, delivered flour to friend and foe alike, and hoped to be left entirely unmolested by Napoleon. They felt, as we know today, more secure than they really were. They were running great risks, for instance, in their commerce, or rather illicit trade, in merchandise with England.

It was not till some time after the proclamation of the continental blockade that Napoleon realized that it inflicted hardship not only upon England but upon France, as France thereby lost her best customer, and the cost of living in that country rose much higher. He accordingly issued various decrees modifying the strict provisions of the continental blockade, so as to permit of a kind of official smuggling under departmental supervision, and also to allow the import of colonial goods on the payment of a very heavy duty approximating fifty per cent of their value. In spite of these alleviations, smuggling was carried on on a large scale, and its direction was naturally concentrated in the commercial city of Frankfort. Napoleon had sent his own spies there, and on receiving their reports he decided to take more active measures against Frankfort.

Buderus had just decided to give to the young crown agent, Carl Rothschild, who was about to attempt to bring to Prague the property which the elector had left in Schleswig, the final account for the year 1807, which the elector required. The official stated[53] that he was not inclined to venture on the journey himself, because he was too closely watched, and feared a further arrest, and the possible confiscation of all his property.

His letter also contained news that would be welcome to his avaricious master. "After long arguments, and as the result of great efforts," he stated, "I have persuaded the crown agent, Rothschild, in effecting the third investment of £150,000 sterling, to charge one-quarter per cent less commission, so that he will deliver the stock for 73 3/4, involving a saving of £4,521. . . . The younger son of Crown Agent Rothschild will bring over the document relating to the first purchase of stock, as soon as means can be found for sending it safely."

But this could not be carried out so easily; Napoleon's anger because Frankfort did not respect his blockade regulations against England led to more stringent regulations, and Buderus was forced to change his plans completely. "The crown agent, Kallmann Rothschild," he wrote on November 2, 1810,[54] "should proceed to Prague at once, as several French regiments with artillery have come into the town, as well as a host of customs officials. All the gates have been occupied, and nobody is allowed to pass out without being closely inspected; all warehouses have been sealed, and an extensive search for English and colonial goods has been instituted, severe penalties being indicted when such goods have been discovered.

"The extent of the general confusion and distress which this has caused beggars descriptions. I myself have taken every conceivable precaution, and I feel justified in stating my absolute conviction that the sons of Crown Agent Rothschild deserve the highest praise for the tireless industry and zeal which they have shown in their devotion to your Electoral Highness. Fresh proclamations have been issued, promising a reward of fifteen per cent for information regarding the investment of your Electoral Highness's funds, and the number of spies and traitors under every guise is so great that it is impossible now to trust anyone. From this mild account of conditions here you may graciously be pleased to infer that it would be as impracticable for me to leave as it was formerly to transport the effects in custody at Gottorp. I shall arrange for Crown Agent Kallmann Rothschild to start as soon as it is possible to get a package out of Frankfort."

On instructions from Paris, a general domiciliary search for concealed English-manufactured goods had been ordered at Frankfort. The city which had just been described in such glowing colors by Hugel was now in a panic. Naturally the business House of Rothschild was also affected by this measure. A list was drawn up of two hundred and thirty-four tradesmen who had to pay the heavy duties prescribed for the colonial wares which were discovered.

Meyer Amschel Rothschild was the sixty-eighth name in this list,[55] and was made liable for a payment of 19,348 francs, which was certainly not a very large amount compared with the sums payable by other tradesmen. Hebenstreit, for instance, paid nearly a million francs, and Bethmann 363,000 francs. Altogether the French collected a total of nine and a quarter millions on the colonial stores discovered at Frankfort. Half the amount payable by Rothschild was for indigo. In view of Meyer Amschel's relations with the grand ducal government and his cleverness at concealment, we may assume that his actual stores of colonial goods were much greater, and that through his connections he substantially reduced the amount which he ought to have paid. Nevertheless this sudden incursion, personally ordered by Napoleon, had distinctly alarmed him.

Meanwhile the elector at Prague had received Buderus's letters, and sent the following reply to his trusty official:[56] "It is a special satisfaction to me that you have induced the firm of Rothschild, in view of the prospect of the further investment of £150,000, to reduce their commission by one-quarter per cent.

"In view of further representations made by the crown agent Rothschild, and having regard to the favorable price, I have decided to increase this investment by a further £100,000 . . . but on the understanding that I shall pay this amount in instalments, and that I am not to be worried about it in any way. At the same time you are to see that the document regarding the first investment reaches me as soon as possible, and that I receive the others shortly afterwards. I note with pleasure that the House of Rothschild has shown its traditional devotion to me even in the present catastrophe at Frankfort. You will kindly convey to them my satisfaction and gratitude."

Meanwhile the Emperor of France had just experienced one of the happiest hours of his life. On March 20, 1811, Marie Louise had presented him with the son and heir he so much desired. The baptism of the French heir, who had been created King of Rome while still in his cradle, was an occasion of unexampled splendor and magnificence. From all their domains, princely personages swarmed to the festivities, to take advantage of the opportunity of expressing their allegiance to the mighty monarch.

The Grand Duke Dalberg, in Frankfort, also desired to go to Paris to do obeisance, but there was a formidable obstacle in the way of his doing so. The journey was very expensive, and Dalberg could not visit Paris except with a retinue such as befitted his rank. But he had no retinue, and in the first instance he turned for assistance to the association of Frankfort merchants, requesting them to lend him eighty thousand gulden for the journey to Paris.

The merchants, who disliked the Napoleonic regime, and could not agree as to the proportions in which the money should be subscribed, declined the request. Dalberg had not applied to Rothschild in the first instance, because he thought the amount was too heavy for a single individual to advance. Meyer Amschel learned of the grand duke's wish, and voluntarily offered to advance him the sum at five per cent. Dalberg could now proceed to Paris.

While Rothschild had always enjoyed Dalberg's favor, this clever action gained for him the full confidence of the grand duke, as is indeed specifically stated in a later French police report regarding the Rothschild family:[57] "Through meeting him in this matter he was so successful in gaining the grand duke's confidence, and secured himself so thoroughly in his good graces, that henceforth the grand duke scarcely ever refused him any request."

He asked for instance for a passport for young James, who was then nineteen years old, and who was sent through Antwerp to Paris, straight into the lion's mouth. His presence was necessary there in connection with certain illicit business that Nathan was carrying out from England, which will be described in more detail later. For the present it will suffice to state that James actually arrived in Paris on the 24th of March, 1811, took up his quarters at 5 rue Napoleon without being hindered, and duly reported himself to the police.

At this time the Rothschild family were kept very much on the move. Apart from their own business, all the members of the family who were capable of traveling were constantly on the road, in order to transact personally the important business of the elector at various places. This is most clearly revealed in the correspondence between Buderus and the elector.

"Young Rothschild," he wrote from Hanau to his master on April 7, 1811,[58] "is actually on his way to London to fetch the certificates of title regarding your investment of capital. He can take the packet of letters with him. His father will gladly make an effort to get the things away from Gottorp . . . and is already making inquiries on this matter. On my advice Crown Agent Rothschild has called in the capital payment due at Copenhagen, and has received 159,600 gulden. Will your Electoral Highness graciously permit me to convey to Crown Agent Rothschild your Highness's satisfaction regarding his manifold activities on your behalf? I am informed by Crown Agent Rothschild that the Prague police have discovered the secret drawers in his carriage. I have therefore thought it advisable not to send my account for last month with the other documents, on this occasion, as it cannot be concealed under the clothes as letters can."

The elector rewarded such news with expressions of genuine satisfaction, and agreed that Rothschild should be acquainted with his satisfaction with him. He was, however, still concerned about the money which he had invested in English stock, in respect to which he had not yet received any document of title. "I feel a real longing, which I think is justified," he replied to Buderus,[59] "to see the documents regarding the investments. ... I had not been informed that the police here had discovered the secret hiding-place in the carriage. In any case there is no reason to expect anything untoward from that quarter."

Buderus was unceasing in his efforts to exalt the Rothschild family in the opinion of the elector, and to represent all other business houses as unreliable or less accommodating. This was shown in the case of a transaction of earlier origin. The elector had transferred to Meyer Amschel Rothschild and two other Jewish bankers from Cassel an amount of a million Dutch gulden due to him in Holland. In accomplishing this various technical difficulties arose which delayed the payment of the sum in Holland, while the transferees of the debt had already paid out the greater part of the sum involved. Before making further payments, they naturally asked the elector for a guarantee.

In righteous indignation Buderus reported this to his master:[60] "The worst of this business is that it was not entrusted to one single business firm. . . . The agents Stuben Hesse Goldschmidt and the heirs of Michel Simon are most ill-disposed toward your Electoral Highness. Levy, Simon's son-in-law, who manages the business, has gone to such extremes that, as I know for certain, he caused the recent arrest of myself and Rothschild, and furnished the police commissary with the questions on which we were cross-examined with extreme severity."

Buderus how proposed that the Cassel Jews should be made to retire from the business, and that the matter should be entrusted to Meyer Amschel Rothschild alone. The elector concurred in this proposal, and replied as follows:[61]

"I have read with great interest the reports regarding the Dutch loan of a million gulden. . . . You are quite right in holding that it is essential to keep the Cassel Jews out of this business (although I have always regarded Goldschmidt as an honorable man). ... I fear that these Jews will not trust the Frankfort agent (Rothschild) and will imagine that there are heavy profits at issue, and demand high compensation for retiring."

In the end the elector left the whole matter to Buderus, and he accordingly put it all in Rothschild's hands.

In general, however, the elector was again in an exceedingly bad mood, first, because Rothschild had still not succeeded in bringing his property from Holstein to Prague, and secondly, because he had received a report from Buderus regarding an electoral loan which had been made to a family called Plettenberg through the intermediary of Prince Wittgenstein, the recovery of which seemed highly doubtful. He was also annoyed by a suggestion made by Buderus that he should again take part in Frankfort loans, of which he had had such an unfortunate experience. It was in a highly nervous condition that he awaited the documents regarding his investment in English stocks, which had not yet come to hand. This mood found expression in an exceedingly angry letter, in which the elector notified the cessation of payments to Rothschild in respect to the English stocks, thereby causing a positive panic in the Rothschild-Buderus firm.

In the course of this letter he said:[62] "After all, my trunks and chests in Holstein contain something more than clothes; there are Hessian debentures, and accounts of various kinds, and a chest containing silver. I will arrange to have them brought to me here direct, for I am weary of giving instructions in this matter to the House of Rothschild year after year.

"I shall dispatch the draft letter to Prince von Wittgenstein, regarding the Plettenberg loan affair, but do not expect that it will have much result. The whole business is a network of intrigue, and I am absolutely determined to sacrifice everything rather than involve myself further with that prince. He has behaved in a shockingly irresponsible way toward me.

"I am not inclined to take part in the Frankfort subscription loan. I am sick of all loans, and I really prefer to have my money lying idle."

Nothing had yet arrived from London, a fact which particularly exasperated the elector. "I am exceedingly worried about this matter," he wrote, "and am most eagerly waiting to hear what you have to say. In the meantime you are to cease making any further payments with respect to these stocks, neither are you to invest in them any further English interest payments. I am still waiting in vain for the documents regarding the capital which I have invested; and in spite of all the confidence which I have in Rothschild, I cannot tolerate this delay any longer. Neither has the registration of the older stocks been effected yet. Lorentz is constantly and emphatically reminding you of this matter. You must see that he is kept fully informed of all my financial affairs in England, and especially of the investments effected through Rothschild, in order that he may keep an eye on them as it is his duty to do, as my charge d'affaires. You are to see to this without delay."

The elector's fears had been increased by letters from Lorentz, his plenipotentiary in London, who was offended because he had not been taken into the confidence of Buderus and Rothschild in the business which they were transacting for the elector in England. He had suggested to his master that England might conclude an unfavorable peace, which would cause a heavy fall in British stocks, and therefore advised the sale of the securities which had only just been purchased.

Buderus replied to his master in a very injured tone,[63] stating that in accordance with instructions he had stopped payments to Rothschild with respect to the new purchases of stock. He enclosed Rothschild's explanation, which set out the enormous difficulties in the way of undertaking journeys to and from England and safely conveying documents and letters in a time of war and blockade.

Buderus strongly indorsed the remarks of his Frankfort partner.[64] "In my opinion," he wrote, "his judgment is sound and his request is justified. ... I have not yet informed War Councilor Lorentz of the investments made by Crown Agent Rothschild. It is not desirable that such information should be too widely known." He added that if the elector's instructions in this matter were not countermanded he would forthwith carry them out. . . . "The bank of Riippell and Harnier," he continued, "is, not to put too fine a point upon it, filled with absolute rage against your Electoral Highness. Although they owe their fortune entirely to your Highness, they behave like madmen, instead of keeping quiet as they ought, and doing their duty by their customers, whom they serve for profit."

In a second letter Buderus wrote: "Rothschild is unjustly accused of having, from motives of secret advantage, delayed the Dutch business, which is probably to the great detriment of your Highness's interest; for it is Rothschild alone who has collected such sums as have reached your Electoral Highness, while the other bankers have made no effort whatever in the matter." [65]

Meanwhile one of the younger Rothschild brothers (probably Carl) arrived at Prague with a detailed report from Buderus, in which that official strongly urged his master not to jeopardize the business of the English investments, which was proceeding so well. Young Rothschild employed all his powers of eloquence to persuade the elector to revoke his veto regarding further payments. He thought that he had gained his object, and wrote to Buderus from Prague, stating that the elector had graciously agreed to continue to invest in British stocks the interest received in England. Buderus thereupon immediately resumed his payments to Rothschild on the elector's account, until he received an instruction from his master, dated December 9, 1811, which did not confirm Rothschild's premature conclusion. Thereupon Buderus made a further effort to impress upon his master that it was in his highest interest finally to cancel the veto on further payments, since otherwise the Rothschild banking firm would be faced with a severe crisis.

"It is my duty," he wrote,[66] "to bear witness to the fact that the Rothschild bankers have not failed to make every possible effort to obtain the certificates of the investments, and your Electoral Highness can have no conception how difficult it is to send important documents between here and London. If your Highness will consider the dangers that would arise if such a document were to fall into the wrong hands you will surely realize that all precautions which human ingenuity can devise must be taken in order to reduce to a minimum the chances of such an occurrence.

"The withholding of further payments to the Rothschild bankers has not increased their efforts to obtain the documents, as these efforts could not be increased. Directly after his return from Prague, the young crown agent Rothschild traveled to the seacoast in order to seek an opportunity for bringing over these documents. He did not feel secure in a Dutch village where he was staying, and went across to Dunkirk, where he has to furnish daily to the police department a satisfactory reason for his living there. According to his last letter, he expects the documents to arrive at any moment and he will then hasten here without any loss of time.

"The power of attorney sent to the bankers Van Notten, under date October 28, 1810, authorizing the transfer of the old stock (under another pseudonym) has been recovered. After leaving Amsterdam, the ship was driven back to the coast, and my letter was delivered in a Dutch village, where a reliable acquaintance of the banker Rothschild has kept it until now. The young crown agent Rothschild has now taken advantage of a favorable opportunity to forward it, and has received an assurance that it has safely reached the other side of the Channel."

Finally, young Rothschild, who had traveled to London, succeeded in smuggling over to the Continent a certificate for £189,500 sterling, and this was immediately forwarded to the elector. William now again consented to the interest on his capital being used for effecting further investments, after noting with satisfaction that the House of Rothschild, which had been highly nervous about retaining this business, had reduced its terms, and declared that it was now willing to deliver the stock for 70 per cent commission. The elector expressed his pleasure in conveying this information to Buderus, and concluded his letter by saying:[67] "I do not fail to realize the difficulties involved in communicating with London, and am therefore exceedingly happy to be in possession of the certificates for £189,500 sterling."

The elector also expressed the wish that one of the brothers Rothschild should reside permanently at Prague, but this Buderus had to refuse. The operations of the family were already so extensive that, with the best will in the world, it was impossible to accede to this request. Buderus wrote to his master:

"Flattering though the suggestion is that one of the Rothschild sons should be allowed to reside permanently in the neighborhood of your Electoral Highness, it is no less impossible than flattering. Their father is old and sick. His eldest son, Amschel Meyer, and his second son, Solomon, who is also delicate, are indispensable to him in his extensive operations. The third son, Carl, is almost continually engaged in traveling in the service of your Electoral Highness, while the fourth son, Nathan, is very usefully established in London, and the youngest, James, spends his time between London and Paris. They have declared to me that they will spare no effort to carry out your Highness's commands."

The continental blockade was naturally the chief cause of the great difficulties in the way of communications with England. This question had indeed become the crucial problem in general European politics. At Erfurt the opinion had obtained for a time in 1808 that Napoleon and Alexander of Russia would be able to share the dominion of Europe between them. The Emperor of France had particularly in view that he might finally be enabled to subdue England with the assistance of Russia.

For this purpose it was essential that Russia should unconditionally adopt the continental blockade; but the tsar never contemplated sacrificing all his trade with England for the sake of Napoleon. On the contrary, he facilitated the import of goods by sea, and goods of English origin could now easily find their way to other continental states via Russia. Thus the effectiveness of Napoleon's measures was endangered, and as early as the summer of 1811 it was obvious to the whole of Europe that a complete breach between the two most powerful continental states was inevitable, and that war was now only a question of time.

The Napoleonic police consequently applied a much more rigid censorship to all correspondence and secret agreements in territories subject to French rule. Anything addressed tb the ruling family of Hesse was subjected to a particularly close scrutiny. A letter dated Frankfort, November 1, 1811,[68] which carelessly mentioned Meyer Amschel's name in two places, and was addressed to the elector's brother, Landgrave Karl, fell into the hands of the French. In one passage the unknown writer acknowledged the receipt of a letter from the landgrave, through the good offices of Meyer Amschel, while another passage read as follows:[69]

"I deliberately read to Rothschild, in his sons' presence, the passage in which your Highness speaks of them so kindly and graciously. They were all delighted."

It was clear from the context that the letter referred to the Tugendbund of which the landgrave was a member, and it was a question of payments which Rothschild had to make on the landgrave's behalf. This letter was immediately forwarded from Hamburg, where it had been intercepted, to General Savary, the commissioner of police at Paris, who instructed Baron Bacher, the French ambassador at Frankfort, to furnish any light he could as to the implication of the letter and the parts played by the persons mentioned in it.

Baron Bacher suggested[70] that they should not proceed against the family Rothschild by domiciliary search and arrest as in 1809, but should act with greater cunning. The House of Rothschild and the other agents of the elector should be lulled into a complete sense of security; their letters should be skilfully opened, copied, and then forwarded. In this way Bacher hoped in a very short lime to familiarize himself with their network of intrigue in all its complicated ramifications.

The chief commissioner of police also asked for a report from his commissioner at Mainz, and the letter informed him[71] that the House of Rothschild had formerly been exceedingly active in the trade of colonial goods and English manufactures. But since they had been subjected to a domiciliary search and had had their English goods sequestrated, they had occupied themselves principally with banking business, and commerce in goods confined to the Continent. The Mainz commissioner added that the head of the House was not friendly toward France, although he pretended that he was sincerely attached to that country.

Bacher's advice was taken. The brothers Rothschild were most carefully watched by agents of the French Imperial State Police, both in Frankfort and in France, where they were amongst those who carried on illicit trade with England subject to departmental authorizations; at the same time they were on the best of terms with Dalberg's Frankfort police, although this force was also subject to Napoleon. Dalberg's police commissioner, von Itzstein, who although a Jew, was director of the police of the grand duchy, was a particular patron of Meyer Amschel and of all the Frankfort Jews.

Meyer Amschel Rothschild had long cherished the idea of exploiting Dalberg's friendly feelings for the Jews in the interests of the fellow members of his faith who had formerly been so oppressed, and incidentally of his own family. It is true that a new "status" proclaimed by Dalberg had somewhat improved their condition, but it involved no essential change. For example, the number of Jewish families tolerated remained at five hundred. "Five hundred, only five," indignantly wrote a certain Israel Jakobsohn. "Why not more, and why not less?"[72]

Dalberg, seeing that he could exploit this situation and do a good business deal, allowed Meyer Amschel and his partner Gumprecht to persuade him to commute the annual amount of 22,000 gulden payable by the Jews, into a lump sum, and to grant them the rights of citizenship in Frankfort, thereby making them the political equals of the Christians. At the same time, the Jews were granted their own governing body, known as the "Governing Body of the Israelite Religious Community." Police Director von Itzstein was nominated president, while the other members of the committee were chosen from amongst the most prominent Jews in the town.

In the course of his efforts Meyer Amschel let Dalberg infer that the Jews were prepared to make financial sacrifices, and in the end Dalberg demanded that they should commute the annual payment of 22,000 gulden by a single payment of twenty times that amount. This was a substantial amount of money, but one that the Frankfort Jews could produce, especially as Meyer Amschel alone advanced 100,000 gulden, or almost a quarter of the total sum. He also managed to arrange that only 150,000 of the 440,000 gulden should immediately be paid in cash, and that for the balance twenty-four bearer debentures would be accepted. Jewish circles awaited with considerable suspense, the conclusion of these arrangements, which were so important for their future. If the proposal went through, Meyer Amschel wanted to be the first to bring the good news to the fellow members of his faith.

As he was constantly being begged for information by members of the Jewish community, he requested a recorder of the province, who was friendly to him, to let him have the earliest possible information: "I should be most pleased," he wrote to him in his peculiar German,[73] "if I could be the first messenger of the good news, as soon as it has been signed by his Royal Highness, our most excellent Lord and great Duke, in our favor and that I can inform my nation of their great joy, will you graciously inform me of it through the post, I confess I abuse your goodness and grace, but I do not doubt that your Highness and your honored family have to await great heavenly rewards and will receive much happiness and blessing . . . because in truth our whole Jewry, if they have the happiness to obtain equal rights, will gladly pay with great pleasure all dues that the citizens have to pay."

After some time the matter was put through, and aroused as much enthusiasm amongst the Jews as indignation in the senate and amongst the patrician families, who were hostile to them. It was at once suggested everywhere that Dalberg had received money personally, in addition to the sum publicly mentioned. In this connection pointed remarks were made about the fact that Meyer Amschel and his sons had been appointed official bankers to the grand duchy and that Meyer Amschel had been made a member of the Electoral College of Frankfort. A member of the Austrian Secret Police actually claimed that he knew the amount of the sum, namely 33,000 karolins, which Dalberg had received for his good offices.[74]

The Jewish community certainly had every reason to be grateful to the aged and infirm Meyer Amschel, who had never completely recovered since his operation, and yet still had the energy to apply all his influence and money to secure this improvement in their status. The debentures, to the value of 290,000 gulden, were immediately brought into circulation. One of them, of the value of fifty thousand, was acquired by Dalberg's finance minister, Count Christian von Benzel-Sternau; eight debentures of ten thousand gulden each were taken over by Herr von Bethmann, while the greater part of the amount paid by the Jews in cash went direct to Paris as a payment on account of the electoral domains in Fulda and Hanau, which had been seized by the French, and which Dalberg had repurchased on taking over these two principalities.

The grand duke immediately sold the domains again to private persons for earnest money of three and one-half million francs, payable by instalments, a transaction which, when concluded, would yield 190,000 francs more than France had received for the domains.

When the bargain was concluded Dalberg declared, with somewhat premature joy, "A transaction concluded in so masterly a manner deserves a reward," and rewarded the ministers who had been principally employed in the transaction, and their wives, with presents of 40,000 francs each. In the letter regarding this matter[75] he stated:

"Since I am determined to gain nothing by this business except the welfare of the state, there are still 70,000 francs available out of the 190,000 realized. Of this amount I give 10,000 francs to Privy Councilor von Itzstein as a reward for services rendered in converting into cash the debts of the Jews to the state. I give 10,000 francs to the House of Rothschild for their excellent cooperation. I shall leave the remaining 50,000 francs with the House of Rothschild, as a part payment of what I owe them." [76]

The senate of the city of Frankfort, and the exiles who had formerly been in power, observed these events with concern and ill-will, and were firmly determined, if matters should take a different turn, to do everything possible to undo what had been done. Meyer Amschel's conduct had made him by no means popular with the former authorities of the city; but for the time being they had to look on in impotence, and allow him and his protector Dalberg to have their way.

It was with the greatest suspense that they watched the course of general European politics. The points at issue between Napoleon and Russia had already almost resulted in war. Napoleon collected the Grande Armee, the greatest host that Europe had ever seen, in order to subdue the last independent monarch on the Continent. At Dresden he gathered his dependent princes about him at a great court ceremony, and his imperial father-in-law Francis of Austria was also present on that occasion. The elector in Prague had again begged Francis to avail himself of the favorable opportunity for pleading his cause with the Emperor of France. Emperor Francis was used to such appeals, and paid no further attention to the letter. While the great drama of the Russian campaign was being enacted, the elector remained at Prague, and awaited the outcome of events in a state extreme anxiety.

Napoleon's army was advancing steadily toward the heart of the Russian Empire, although it was certainly suffering enormous losses. Out of an army of four hundred thousand men, scarcely one hundred thousand entered Moscow. But all that Europe saw was the victorious advance. Owing to the prevailing conditions it was weeks, even months, before further news reached Frankfort. The merchants of that time could not adjust their affairs to events as speedily as scientific discoveries have now enabled them to do.

Meyer Amschel Rothschild's attitude was entirely determined by his sense of the overwhelming power of the Corsican, who was now at Moscow, when the reopening of his old wound quite unexpectedly brought him back to his sick-bed. He did not live to see Napoleon's complete failure in Russia, to be followed a year later by his defeat in Germany, which was followed by the return to his Hessian domains of Rothschild's lord and master the elector.

On September 16, 1812, a high Jewish Feast Day, the so-called "long day" which is set apart for the pardoning of the penitent sinner, Meyer Amschel had been fasting, in accordance with his strict religious principles, and spent many hours standing in the synagogue, sunk in prayer. The same evening he felt severe pains in the region of his wound. He was immediately put to bed, but his condition grew worse. He had violent attacks of fever, and he felt that death was approaching. Thereupon he determined, while he still had the strength in him, to order his affairs, and to make a new will adapted to the most recent developments, to take the place of the earlier will which he had made.

In doing so he was giving effect to an agreement which he had made with all his children, and in accordance with which he sold to his five sons all his shares in the business, his securities and other possessions, as well as his large stocks of wine, for the sum of 190,000 gulden, which of course was far below their real value. His sons were henceforth to be the exclusive owners of the business, and it was clear, although not definitely stated, that after their father's death any inequality in their shares ceased, and each of the five sons henceforth possessed ten-fiftieths, that is, a fifth share, in the business.

The will completely excluded the daughters and their husbands and heirs from the business, and even from all knowledge of it. Meyer Amschel applied the purchase price of 190,000 gulden as follows: he granted his wife Gutle a life interest in 70,000 gulden; the remainder he divided amongst his five daughters. This arrangement served a double object. First, it made it unnecessary on his death to declare to the officials the enormous value, for those times, of the business that was divided between the five sons, and to put the capital bequeathed at the modest figure of 190,000 gulden. Secondly, the business was secured absolutely to the five sons, safe from the possibility of any interference from the sisters and their relations.

The will concluded[77] by enjoining unity, love and friendship upon the children, and any undutiful child that showed an intention of rebelling was threatened with the penalty of inheriting no more than the legal minimum, which was only to be reckoned on the basis of the 190,000 gulden, from which would have to be deducted anything that the child in question had received during his life.

When Meyer Amschel drew up his last will there cannot have been more than two of his five sons, namely Amschel and Carl, at Frankfort, for Solomon was living in Paris, and James, who was maintaining communication between Solomon and Nathan in England, was living at Gravelines on the Channel coast in the Department Pas-de-Calais. These facts, proved as they are by French police records, and the records of vises issued, are fatal to the well-known legend, according to which Meyer Amschel gathered his five sons about his deathbed and divided Europe amongst them. Moreover, his illness had come on quite suddenly and developed so rapidly that the idea of recalling the sons who were abroad could never have been considered.

When Meyer Amschel had thus done everything that lay in his power to secure the future prosperity of his House—which, it is true, he considered in terms only of financial gain—and by clear and simple provision to maintain unity and peace amongst his numerous family, he could look death calmly in the face. Two days after he had completed his will, on the evening of September 19, 1812, his old complaint took a marked turn for the worse. The alpha and omega of medical practice of the time was to let blood, a procedure which simply served to weaken old people who were very ill, instead of giving them relief. At a quarter past eight on the evening of the same day, Meyer Amschel Rothschild, the tireless, cunning, simple, and religious Jew, and founder of the banking firm M. A. Rothschild and Sons, was no longer to be counted amongst the living.

In his last hours he was fully aware that he was leaving a fine inheritance to his sons, but he certainly could not have guessed that he had laid the foundation of a world power which during the first half of the nineteenth century was to exercise an unparalleled influence throughout Europe, and was to maintain this influence almost unimpaired throughout the changing conditions of the second half of the century.

CHAPTER III

The Great Napoleonic Crisis and Its Exploitation by the House of Rothschild

SINCE the French Revolution, the Continent of Europe had been continuously suffering from the turmoil of war, while large territories were subjected to the horrors of the actual battles between the opposing armies. On the other hand, sea-girt England, although she exerted a powerful political influence upon the continental groups, was able to devote her principal attention, practically undisturbed, to the development of her commerce and the prosperity of her citizens.

Through his financial reforms which had assisted the capitalistic development of the state, the younger Pitt had brought order into Britain's internal affairs and thereby made it possible for England, out of her growing wealth, to advance very considerable sums of money to her allies, who were waging war on the Continent with the wealth and the blood of their citizens. Towards the close of the eighteenth century England was indisputably the most important commercial power in Europe, and the House of Rothschild had made an exceedingly clever move in arranging that one of its sons, and the most talented one at that, should take up his residence in that kingdom.

Nathan had first settled in Manchester, the center for the manufacture of all kinds of cloth, as he had long had business connections with that city. In view of the numerous armies that had to be clothed, the cloth trade offered opportunities of making exceptional profits. The sum of money he brought with him—£20,000, which constituted a very respectable capital sum in those days—gave the stranger an assured position from the start, although he could not speak a word of English. Nathan, therefore, came to Manchester, not as a small tradesman, but as a fairly important representative of an established commercial firm on the Continent, with money at his command.

He entered upon his commercial activities with all the enthusiasm of youth, at the same time showing a business acumen remarkable in one so young. He first carefully studied his environment, and his neighbor's methods of making money, and ascertained that profits were made on the purchase of the raw materials necessary for the manufacture of cloth and on the issue of these materials for dyeing purposes, as well as on the sale of the finished article, each of these activities in England being the province of a separate merchant.

Nathan determined to secured for himself the profit at each stage in the process.[1] He bought the raw materials on his own account, had them dyed, and then gave them out to undergo the further processes of manufacture, and finally himself handed them over to the trade. Nathan did not confine himself exclusively to cloth. He bought everywhere, and anything that he thought was good and cheap. Thus he bought all kinds of fancy goods, as well as colonial produce such as indigo, wine, sugar, and coffee. He was not troubled about finding a market, as the parent firm at home required all these things.

The capital which he brought with him was soon doubled and trebled, while his father and brothers derived the greatest benefit from Nathan's presence in England. He enjoyed the life in that country, which struck him as extraordinarily free and unfettered, compared with the oppressive conditions in Frankfort.

As his business grew, Nathan naturally began to establish contact with the capital, which is the heart of Great Britain, and in which all the financial interests of an extensive empire are concentrated. Determined to settle in England for good, he left Manchester in 1804 for London, where he would be in closer touch with those political developments which were producing such profound effect upon commercial life. He realized at once that the fact that he was a foreigner was a great handicap in business, and therefore, as early as the summer of the year 1806, he applied for naturalization as a British subject. His wish was readily granted, as the applicant had resided for six years in the country, and even if he had not yet attained a very prominent position in the business world, he was already honored and respected. Favored by the keen demand for goods on the Continent, Nathan carried on his business in London with great success, until the year 1806. His intimate experience of English life and character, and his sympathy with the spirit of resistance to Napoleon's plans of world domination which inspired the whole country, soon caused him to adhere completely to English modes of thought. But he avoided publicly identifying himself with any political cause which might have damaged his family Frankfort, and all his actions were guided first and foremost by business considerations.

Nathan was now twenty-nine years old, and was contemplating marriage. He had made the acquaintance of the daughter of a rich Jewish family. Her father, who had emigrated from Amsterdam, had several small business dealings with Nathan, but their relations had not been sufficiently intimate to enable him to form an accurate estimate regarding the suitor's financial position and general business qualities. The fact that Nathan was living abroad made investigations of this nature more difficult. Nathan, however, with skill and directness, managed to set his future father-in-law's doubts at rest, while the information which the latter obtained from Frankfort confirmed the fact that the Rothschild family were prosperous and respected. Nathan gained his object, and through his marriage was enabled to increase his own fortune by the amount of his wife's substantial dowry; his position was also strengthened by the influence of a father-in-law who was a wealthy and respected merchant in the City of London.

Moreover, his wife's sister Judith Cohen shortly afterwards married the rich and well-known Moses Montefiore, who was thus brought into close association with Nathan, and whose energy, foresight, and sound business sense in regard to all the vicissitudes of the continental wars, which so intimately affected financial operations, Nathan had constant occasion to admire.

Nathan had as yet nothing to do with the elector's investments in England, although his father at Frankfort was endeavoring to get him this business, and had repeatedly urged him to cultivate relations with the elector's plenipotentiary in London. The intimations of the elector's wishes, hitherto received by Count Lorentz, had not been favorable to such an arrangement, but this in no way discouraged Meyer Amschel at Frankfort, or Nathan in London, from continuing their efforts. As has already been stated, the elector soon changed his opinion, and we are now entering upon the period of the investment of large sums in English stocks, as recommended by Nathan. In view of his intimate relations with Meyer Amschel, the elector could not continue to object to the employment of his son Nathan in transacting the business in London.

Another factor in Nathan's favor was the difficulty of getting possession of the documents certifying the purchases of stock, this being not so difficult for Nathan to arrange, in view of his numerous Jewish and non-Jewish connections. Thus Nathan came to be interested in the enormous financial operations of the elector, and as considerable periods of time could be made to intervene between the purchase and the payment of the securities, he sometimes had temporary control of very substantial sums of money, which he could employ in safe, short-term transactions, such as, for instance, the purchase of bullion, which was constantly rising in value at that time. It was not known in England how Nathan came to have such sums of money temporarily at his disposal, for the purchases of English stocks on the elector's account were officially made in the name of Rothschild, and apparently for the benefit of that firm, as the elector's funds in England had already been sequestered once.

The credit of the House of Rothschild and of Nathan certainly gained greatly from these enormous purchases, and he came to be entrusted with transactions which, even if he could not immediately meet his obligations in cash, he did not like to lose, as they offered good prospects for the future. Nathan was particularly skilful at exploiting the abnormal conditions of the period, conditions such as always give those with a gift for speculation an opportunity of enriching themselves, while those who stand by passively are reduced to poverty. Through his continental blockade, Napoleon had revolutionized the whole commercial outlook of England; then, recognizing that his measures had a boomerang effect, he modified them, and actually negotiated with the smugglers, whom the English government encouraged with prizes for breaking through the Napoleonic blockade. The decree of June 15, 1810, practically officially regularized this illicit trade. Certain goods that were required in France, and then gold and silver, were allowed to be brought to France in limited quantities, French products being sent to England in exchange. In order to prevent the smuggling of undesirable articles, there was a special railed-off enclosure at Gravelines for the officially recognized smuggling, the captains of smuggling vessels being required to remain exclusively within this enclosure, and to load and unload their goods under police control.

Nathan took advantage of this officially sanctioned commerce between England and hostile France, to do business on an extensive scale, both on his own account and on account of the parent firm at Frankfort. But it soon became apparent that it was essential to have an absolutely reliable man at Paris too, to deal with this business. Nathan had written to Frankfort to this effect, and old Meyer Amschel had decided to profit by his good relations with Dalberg's French regime at Frankfort to obtain a Paris passport vise from the French officials for one of his sons, to whom alone he was prepared to entrust so important a position, and also to obtain a letter of recommendation for him to one of the higher French Treasury officials.

A particularly favorable opportunity for this occurred when Dalberg set out for Paris in March, 1811, with the money advanced by Rothschild. It is certainly no mere coincidence that, according to the French police records,[2] James, who was then nineteen years old, started to Paris via Antwerp, and took up his residence in a private house there. It is particularly worthy of note that Count Mollien, Napoleon's finance minister at the time, had been informed of young Rothschild's arrival, and knew of his intention to receive and forward large sums of ready money that were expected from England.

"A Frankforter," the minister wrote to Napoleon on March 26, 1811, "who is now staying in Paris with a Frankfort passport, and goes by the name of Rothschild, is principally occupied in bringing British ready money from the English coast to Dunkirk, and has in this way brought over 100,000 guineas in one month. He is in touch with bankers of the highest standing at Paris, such as the firms of Mallet, of Charles Davillier, and Hottinguer, who give him bills on London in exchange for the cash. He states that he has just received letters from London dated the 20th of this month, according to which the English intend, in order to check the export of gold and silver coins, to raise the value of the crown from five to five and a half shillings, and the value of the guinea from twenty-one to thirty shillings. . . . Such operations would be on a par with the practices of the Austrians or the Russians. I sincerely hope that the Frankforter Rothschild is well informed of these matters, and that ministers in London will be sufficiently foolish to act in this way."[3]

This letter reveals much; it shows that while James Rothschild may have been in Paris before the 24th of March, 1811, without the permission of the police, as soon as he officially arrived, that is, as soon as he reported to the Paris police, he must have had an interview with the minister or with one of the officials of the treasury, this being no doubt due to Dalberg's introduction. Although in sending the guineas to Frankfort Nathan was generally acting in accordance with quite definite plans that suited the British government, James, in order to gain the support of the French departments for these operations, pretended to the ministry at Paris that the English authorities viewed the export of cash with extreme displeasure, and did everything possible to prevent it. He succeeded only too well in hoodwinking Mollien, and through him, Napoleon.

"The French government," says Marion,[4] "viewed with satisfaction the arrival of English guineas at the Channel ports, because they regarded this both as a proof and as a cause of the progressive decay of England." It is true that in his memoirs Mollien afterward tried to suggest that he did not share this view, and that Napoleon derived it from others, but the letter quoted above clearly shows that the finance minister also believed Rothschild. Nathan wanted just at this time to send exceptionally large sums of ready money to France, having the secret intention that these should ultimately be destined for Wellington's armies, who were fighting the French in Spain. That general had suffered great financial embarrassment since the beginning of the English campaign in Portugal and Spain. It was not only that the blockade made it difficult to transport large sums by sea, but the devastating storms in the Bay of Biscay were a serious menace to the cumbrous sailing ships of those times. Such consignments were therefore liable to grave risks, and the insurance charges were exceedingly heavy.

As early as 1809 Wellington had had occasion to write to his government in the following terms: "We are terribly in need of funds. . . . The army pay is two months in arrears. I feel that the Ministry in England is utterly indifferent to our operations here.[5] ... It would be much better for the Governments," he added some time later,[6] "entirely to give up our operations in Portugal and Spain if the country cannot afford to continue them."

This state of affairs continued for two years, and Wellington had to have recourse to highly dubious bankers and money-lenders in Malta, Sicily, and Spain, from whom he had to borrow money at the most usurious rates, giving them bills of exchange which had to be cashed by the British Treasury at great loss. The measures taken by the treasury for satisfying the requirements of Wellington's army were always quite inadequate; finally the British commander wrote indignantly to London[7] that if matters continued thus, his army would have to leave the Peninsula, which would relieve France of important military commitments on the Continent, and expose England to the danger of having a hostile force landed on the island itself. Then his exalted monarch and his subjects would experience in their own country something of the horrors of war, from which they had hitherto had the good fortune to be spared.

A year later things were not much better, and on being reproached for having too casually drawn bills on the English government, Wellington replied with some heat, writing that he was sorry to have to state that sick and wounded British officers at Salamanca had been forced to sell their clothes in order to keep body and soul together.[8]

Such were the conditions under which the British army was fighting in Spain, when an energetic movement in its support was started in London, which at first was directed by Nathan Rothschild on his own account. He had acquired very cheaply a large proportion of the bills issued by Wellington, and proceeded to cash them at the British Treasury. The cash which he thus received—generally in the form of guineas—he sent across the Channel to France, where it was received by one of his brothers, generally by James, but in 1812 sometimes by Carl or Solomon, and then paid in to various Paris banking firms. The brothers obtained from the Paris bankers bills on Spanish, Sicilian, or Maltese bankers, and they contrived, through their business connections, to get these papers to Wellington, who duly received the cash from the bankers. Thus the cash sent from London actually only had to make the short journey from London to Paris, and thence through the intricate network of business firms, who were mostly Jewish, it finally reached the English commander in Spain, through the heart of the enemy's country.

As time passed, however, the supply of cash and precious metal began to be scarce, even in England. Nathan, who had concentrated his attention principally upon business in specie and bills of exchange since the blockade had made ordinary commerce so difficult, closely watched[4] for favorable opportunities of acquiring any consignments of specie that might be available. When the East India Company once offered a considerable mount of bullion for sale, Nathan Rothschild was one of the first customers in the field; and he was able, through having recently received large sums of money for investment from the elector, and through mobilizing his whole credit, which stood very high, to acquire the whole of this stock of gold for himself.[9]

At that time, John Charles Herries was commissary-in-chief, an office that had been created in order to supply both the British army at home and the troops fighting on the Continent with the necessary funds. He was not able alone to meet the demands made upon him. A sailing ship carrying money had again been held up somewhere for weeks, and another consignment which had arrived safely at Lisbon encountered extraordinary difficulties in its further transportation. The British government, and especially Herries, were in the greatest distress.

They then heard of Nathan Rothschild's purchase of gold from the East India Company, and the almost unknown man who had acquired it was sent for by the treasury. Nathan sold the gold to the government at a heavy profit, and, at the same time requested that he should be commissioned to convey the money through France to Wellington in Spain, as he had already been doing to a limited extent at his own expense, asking that he should now do it on a large scale on account of the British government.

Very substantial sums of money indeed were involved, which were sent across the Channel from England to France, as is shown by a letter from James in Paris to Nathan in London, dated April 6, 1812, which was intercepted by the Paris police. Nathan had at that time sent 27,300 English guineas and 2,002 Portuguese gold ounces in six separate instalments through six different firms, to James at Gravelines. James acknowledged the receipt of these amounts, and of bills on the firms of Hottinguer, Davillier, Morel and Faber, to the amount of £65,798. He added that he was glad that it had been possible to send him this money without affecting the rate of exchange, and urged his brother to let him have any commercial news at the earliest possible moment. Both brothers naturally watched the rate of exchange very closely, ceased buying bills when it rose, and acquired them when it fell.[10]

All these transactions were carried through in agreement with the chief French department, and Finance Minister Mollien. He was flattering himself that England was in great difficulties, that the rate of exchange was against her, and was constantly getting worse through the drainage of gold, while the Bank of France was consolidating its position, and France's currency stood highest in the world. Meanwhile gold pieces were trickling through in complete security, under the eyes and indeed under the protection of the French government, across France itself, into the pockets of France's arch-enemy, Wellington.

But though Mollien was deceived, the activities of the Jewish emigrants from Frankfort were being watched with great suspicion in other quarters. Letters from a local merchant to one of the Rothschilds at Dunkirk, which were intercepted by the French police, revealed the nature of their activities. A police official sent a detailed report on the matter[11] to Marshal Davoust, who was (hen military governor of Hamburg. After carefully examining the letters he fully appreciated the nature of the Rothschild transactions in France. As the marshal considered the matter to be exceedingly grave, he decided to report on it direct to Emperor Napoleon. He pointed out incidentally[12] that "the arguments in favor of withdrawing money from England, under which the plotters concealed their maneuvers, lose their force when one considers that the English do everything possible to facilitate its export."

The emperor took note of the report, but did not pay any further attention to it. He no doubt said to himself that Davoust was a splendid soldier, but that this did not imply an understanding of financial matters, in which Mollien's opinion must be more reliable. The chief commissioner of police, however, continued to concern himself with the Rothschild family, of whose relations with Hesse he had long known, and he determined to get to the bottom of their activities (couler a fond). He forwarded Davoust's report to Police Prefect Desmarets, instructing him to furnish accurate dates regarding the family, and at the same time wrote in similar terms to Gravelines.

This was in February, 1812, when Carl and James were both in Paris. Desmarets had them watched, and asked the French commissioner of police at Mainz to report regarding the political sympathies of the House of Rothschild, its commercial relations abroad, and its speculative transactions, as well as the extent, if any, to which it was involved in contraband trade.

The police commissioner at Mainz sent a detailed report in reply, in which he emphasized the confidential relations between the Rothschild House at Frankfort and Dalberg, stating that these were so intimate that Dalberg refused practically no favor that a Rothschild asked of him. He added that Dalberg's entourage had certainly given the Rothschild family previous warning of the domiciliary search which was conducted in 1809, and concluded with the words:[13] "As regards Rothschild's political leanings, they are far from being all that they should be. He does not like us French at all, although he pretends to be devoted to the French government."

At the same time the report from Gravelines came in, which confirmed the constant presence, amounting practically to the "etablissement" of a Rothschild at Dunkirk, and referred to his brother and partner in London.[14] The prefect of police, Count Real, pointed out that the mere fact that Rothschild was a foreigner was sufficient reason for not allowing him to stay on the coast.

"How could this man be anything but suspect?" he continued indignantly. "What could have been in his Majesty's mind when he permitted the smugglers to trade? Surely it must have been with the intention that this trade should benefit French industry, an object which will not be achieved if London firms can maintain correspondents, not to mention branch offices, in Paris. What are we to think of this Rothschild's sojourn on our coast? A man who has established his brother in London, with whom he actually has common interests?" Real therefore recommended that Rothschild should immediately be asked to leave the coast.

The Paris prefect of police reported the result of all these inquiries to the chief commissioner, and at the same time proposed that the Rothschild who was living in Paris mould be arrested. But the protection of the French finance minister prevented this. Indeed, how could the government suddenly allow persons to be arrested whom it needed for carrying out its own business operations, and from whom the French Treasury accepted reports and advice, while it also entrusted them with commissions? The brothers Rothschild had cleverly made their position absolutely secure before they ventured to Paris into the lions' den, and in spite of all the suspicions of the military and the police, they remained entirely unmolested.

Nevertheless, the position was certainly not without its dangers. Sentiment in high quarters might suddenly change, in which case a Napoleon would have made short work of the brothers Rothschild. A further incident occurred to alarm the French police, and it caused General Savary to institute a further investigation.

A letter which was being forwarded to James Rothschild by a business firm at a special charge independently of the post-bag, which was controlled by the Boulogne police, was intercepted in the course of its journey. The inferece was drawn that the brothers Rothschild frequently attempted to evade the censorship, but the writer of the letter, and the responsible police commissioner of the department asserted that the letter had merely been sent by special messenger after the regular post, as it was urgent. The matter was not further pursued, but the police commissioner for Pas-de-Calais was severely reprimanded, his chief giving him to understand that the luxury of his household and his general extravagance were highly suspicious circumstances.

The business of the two brothers Rothschild a cheval the warring powers of England and France was so important that it was absolutely essential for the brothers to be continuously on the spot, and even after the death of their father on September 19, 1812, only one of the two brothers who were in France at the time, namely Solomon, returned to Frankfort, whilst James remained in France and was constantly oscillating between Paris and the coast.

James had won the esteem of the Paris business world, through the enormous transactions which he always carried through punctually and accurately. It was at once noted whether he was buying bills or not, and the exchange was immediately affected when there was a rumor that he was going to buy. He set great store by his personal reputation; when a business man once slandered him to one of Nathan's employees, accusing him of an action unworthy of a man of integrity, he never mentioned the matter to the person concerned, since, as he wrote to Nathan, he considered it far beneath his dignity to discuss such a matter.[15]

Great events were now brewing on the Continent; Napoleon had not been able to keep up the myth for long regarding his victorious march to Moscow. The historic burning of that city robbed him of his only resources. Winter was already approaching when Napoleon was forced to decide upon retreat, which meant that the remnants of his army would have to traverse hundreds of miles through ice and snow, pursued by the enemy across country most of which had been laid desolate.

The crossing of the Beresina completed the disintegration of the Grande Armee, and on December 3, two days before Napoleon left it in order to return as quickly as possible to Paris, the famous twenty-ninth bulletin was issued, which, while generally admitting the destruction of the army, laconically reported that the emperor's health had never been better. The whole world received this news with great emotion, and new hopes sprang up in the European states which were under French dominion. But it was not possible to estimate what the future consequences of the catastrophe would be,.

The reports from Russia made a particularly profound impression at Frankfort. The unexpected news was so disconcerting that at first there was a tendency to regard it all as highly exaggerated—the newspapers had been allowed to report only what the French censorship passed. But soon stray survivors arrived, who told of the inconceivable hardships suffered by the army.

Frankfort was particularly interested in the complete collapse of Napoleon's schemes on the practical side. It is true, contents of the secret report of the paymaster general of the Grande Armee were still unknown. He had set out for the campaign with fifty-five cartloads of cash, drawn by four horses apiece, and seventy-eight clerks. He had been able to rescue only one cartload, containing two millions in gold, which he hoped to get safely to Konigsberg, but he was not even prepared to guarantee that.

"My staff," he reported,[16] "no longer exists; they have all perished from cold and hunger. Some of them whose hands and feet have been frozen have been left at Vilna. All the account books have been taken by the enemy. Nobody thinks of anything except saving his own skin, and it is quite impossible to stem the panic. . . ."

Amschel Rothschild, the eldest son, and now head of the Frankfort firm, was just engaged in building a new banking house in the Bornheimerstrasse at Frankfort. He was enormously excited by the news of Napoleon's collapse; in view of the firm's extensive operations, which, ranging from Spain to Denmark and from Prague to London, already embraced the half of Europe, such sudden changes affecting the distribution of power on the Continent of Europe were bound to have most far-reaching consequences. It is true that his firm had friends in both camps, but it was important that, if either of the political structures collapsed, or showed serious signs of instability, the center of gravity of the firm's business should be rapidly shifted to the victorious side.

However, things had not yet reached this point. Through his enormous energy, Napoleon succeeded in rapidly improvising a new army, with which he meant to turn the tide of events. Frankfort continued to be occupied by the French, and Rothschild had to go very warily.

It is true that everywhere in Germany people smelled freedom in the air. In the public streets of Hesse the cry was heard, "Long live the elector, long live Russia!" Napoleon's so-called allies in the Russian campaign fell away, one after the other. Prussia allied herself with Russia and declared war on France, and Napoleon felt exceedingly uncertain even about the attitude of Austria. In April Napoleon was again campaigning in Saxony, and in the operations of the year 1813 he won one or two brilliant victories, but could not drive his enemies completely out of the field.

The bond between these became closer as time went on. England again offered Prussia and Russia her all-powerful financial support. In the Treaty of Reichenbach of June 14, 1813, she offered Prussia £666,666 as a subsidy, if that kingdom would put eighty thousand men in the field. Russia received twice the amount for twice the amount of men. On August 10, after Metternich's world-famous interview with Napoleon, Austria's attitude was also decided. The minister, who had completely changed his policy, left the Emperor of France, whom he had once made the son-in-law of his emperor, in the lurch, and Austria joined the coalition against Napoleon.

The Elector of Hesse also watched the course of events with satisfaction from his exile at Prague. He again requested the Emperor of Austria to reinstate him as speedily as possible in his dominions. He felt that the end of his sufferings and persecutions was at hand.[17] He who had so often begged the emperor and Marie Louise to intercede with Napoleon on his behalf, now spoke of himself as the German prince who had remained true to the cause, and as the protagonist of the German nation (Verfechter des teutschen Reichs) ; he certainly did not forget to remind the emperor of the undertaking that he was to be "guaranteed against any loss." He was, however, glad to contribute temporarily to the common war-chest and to send troops to reinforce the allies. Buderus was instructed, in spite of the general shortage of money, to obtain the sums necessary for this purpose. He applied to the House of Rothschild, and received one hundred thousand thalers, which enabled the elector to make several payments to the allies.

The unity of front which had thus been established led to some success in the further course of the campaign. In spite of her constant financial embarrassments, Austria played an important military part in the war. England also came to her assistance, and under the Treaty Alliance of Teplitz of October 3, 1813, she contracted to pay after October of that year, a million pounds in monthly instalments, in return for which Austria undertook to place 150,000 men in the field.

The day of Leipzig, October 18, 1813, was the final turning-point in Napoleon's career. The great general was forced to yield to the powerful coalition. At one blow the whole of Germany was liberated up to the Rhine, the Confederation of the Rhine fell to pieces, the King of Westphalia fled, and Dalberg voluntarily resigned his grand ducal dignity at Frankfort. The exiled princes now returned to their states, and on November 11, the Elector of Hesse also left Prague and reached Cassel soon afterwards, where the populace received him with acclamations.

These events were propitious to the business policy of the House of Rothschild. The prince to whose riches they owed their prosperity, and with whom they stood on such a unique footing, thanks to the assistance of Buderus, had now been reinstated. He immediately set about making good his financial losses, and reestablishing his position amongst the princes of Germany. This naturally reacted favorably upon his court banker.

In other respects the position at Frankfort left much to be desired; the fall of Dalberg did not mean merely the loss of a personal patron; the Jews lost the man who had sold them rights which had placed them on an equality with other citizens. The final payment was not yet due, and there was the risk that the senate, which consisted of members of the old patrician families, would on getting into power again revoke all the concessions that had been so dearly bought. The old municipal constitution was reestablished, but without regularizing the legal position of the Jews; and it was a bad sign that the redemption of the debentures which were falling due under the contract for the purchase of their freedom was refused.[18]

There was only one way of dealing with the situation: the House of Rothschild would have to prove itself so useful through its financial services, to the most important powers of the victorious coalition, that the victors would call the citizens of Frankfort to order if they should really proceed to act with hostility against the Jews.

While the first principle of the House of Rothschild was to amass wealth, the liberation of the race from oppressive restrictions contributed indirectly to this end, since it would facilitate intercourse with the rest of the world, and thereby increase the possibility of financial gain, which in turn would serve to increase its power. At this critical time the most important services were rendered to the Frankfort firm, not by its new chief, but by his incomparably more talented brother Nathan, in England, whose flair for finance amounted to positive genius. He now enjoyed the elector's full confidence. When in 1812 the Prince Regent of England seemed to be inclined to repay £100,000, Nathan was instructed to receive this amount, and to invest it in consols. This transaction brought him into immediate touch with the private finances of the royal family.

As Great Britain was the financier of the powers which were fighting on the Continent, and was also maintaining armies of her own abroad, enormous demands were made on the British Treasury in 1813. The officials were not equal to the task of raising the money or of sending it to the Continent. It had already been necessary for a naturalized foreigner to demonstrate that there were other ways of raising and sending money than for Englishmen abroad to draw bills on England. That method had a very bad effect on the English rate of exchange, which at the end of 1813 had already fallen by one-third. Herries, who was charged with the sole responsibility for sending money to the Continent, again called in Nathan Rothschild to his assistance. While his principal problem was to supply the enormous sums that England had to provide under the subsidy contracts that she had just concluded, it was even more urgent and more important for the final overthrow of Napoleon to afford every possible support to Wellington, who was still pressing for money, but who was now free to advance into French territory, as Napoleon had transferred his best troops and generals to Germany.

Herries invited Nathan, whose name was still almost always wrongly spelled by the British Treasury, to a conference regarding the measures to be taken. The English official was completely convinced by the clarity and logic of the scheme for sending money which Nathan submitted, and requested him to draw up a memorandum for the chancellor of the exchequer, explaining the methods to be adopted for rendering prompt financial assistance to the Duke of Wellington. The technical problem was now somewhat different, since Wellington attached most importance to being supplied with French currency.

In the interests of England, as well as of his own pocket, Nathan had hitherto worked almost consistently against Napoleon; but he had done it as inconspicuously as possible for fear of compromising his brothers on the Continent. Even now that Napoleon was retreating, and was soon to be fighting within the former frontiers of France itself, he still kept well in the background, although he adopted the anti-Napoleonic cause with all the more enthusiasm, since the Russian disaster and the defeat at Leipzig seemed to imply the end of Napoleon's power. Lord Liverpool, first lord of the treasury and prime minister, and Vansittart, chancellor of the exchequer, approved the scheme submitted by Herries, and in a secret letter entrusted its execution to Nathan's experience and discretion.

Nathan Rothschild thereupon proceeded personally to Holland and collected, in close cooperation with his brothers, the French metal currency with which the Continent was flooded, but which, owing to the blockade, was naturally unobtainable in England.[19] James also acquired French cash on the spot in Paris, and managed to smuggle it across to his brothers in Holland. The sums thus collected were then shipped from the Dutch coast to Wellington's headquarters, this transaction becoming easier as his troops advanced from the west coast of France. In this way, a constant stream of gold and silver in current French coin flowed to the British army, which was thus enabled to pay in French money, whilst the allies, advancing from the east, were deprived of any such cash resources.

In the interests of the brothers Rothschild the secret was exceedingly well kept; Herries had every reason to be satisfied with his, and his country's relations with the foreign Jew, and did not grudge him the enormous profits which he was making. In later years Nathan himself stated that this was the best business he had ever done.[20]

Meanwhile the victorious allies had advanced beyond Frankfort, and had established their general headquarters in that city. The Emperor Alexander of Russia, the King of Prussia, and the Emperor Francis met in the ancient city where the Holy Roman Emperors were crowned. Metternich came with them, rejoicing in the triumph of his policy. The outward signs of the great change in the political situation were therefore particularly apparent at Frankfort, the home of the Rothschilds.

It is not surprising that the family regulated their future conduct accordingly. As yet they had had no relations with Austrian statesmen, but the brothers Rothschild now proceeded to sound members of the imperial entourage with a view to getting an opening. Accompanying Metternich was a previous acquaintance of theirs, Barbier, vice-president of the Austrian Treasury, who was responsible for the financial arrangements of the Austrian army. It was with him that the unsuccessful negotiations regarding the electoral loan had been carried on. Amschel accordingly called on him, and attempted although at first with little success to secure his interest and that of his powerful master Count von Metternich.

The name of Metternich was now on everybody's lips. The success of his policy had enormously strengthened the minister's position. It was a fair assumption that in the future he would exercise a very decisive influence in all matters affecting Austria, even in financial matters, although they did not come strictly within his province. In spite of his other outstanding qualities, Metternich had not a sound economic sense, either in public matters or in his private affairs. He spent money rather thoughtlessly and extravagantly on his private account, and his natural inclination was to make finance secondary to foreign policy, rather than the reverse.[21]

The Emperor Francis had repeatedly come to the rescue of his minister with personal loans, and had waived their repayment later.[22] Metternich had also frequently had recourse to various bankers, including such Frankfort bankers as Bethmann and the brothers Miihlen. As far as can be ascertained, he had had neither official nor personal relations with the Rothschild family before the year 1813.

Metternich was conscious of his own uncertainty in financial matters, and therefore relied largely on the advice of his indispensable secretary and counselor, the brilliant publicist Frederick von Gentz. This man had got to know the count intimately during the years 1802-1803, while he was still in the Prussian civil service and Metternich, who recognized his distinguished literary talent, was ambassador at Dresden; and it was Metternich who induced him to transfer to the Austrian civil service.

Gentz was even worse than Metternich at managing his private affairs, and unlike the count, was completely unscrupulous in getting money from anybody he could, from his own or from foreign states, from persons who desired orders or titles, and wherever opportunity offered. In spite of this, and of the fact that he often managed to earn considerable sums of money with his pen, he was in a constant state of financial embarrassment owing to his extravagant manner of life, and was repeatedly on the verge of complete ruin. This, however, did not prevent him from being always on the most intimate terms with all the great men of his day, with poets and statesmen, with princes and the higher nobility, as well as with Jewish bankers and merchants.

Humboldt knew him well, and Goethe was interested in him too. Humboldt wrote to Goethe on one occasion:[23] "You have perhaps heard that a few weeks ago poor Gentz went completely bankrupt. It is weakness, and not extravagance that has brought him to this pass." Later events were to give the lie to this statement of Humboldt's; it would scarcely have been possible for anyone to dissipate money more thoughtlessly and extravagantly than Gentz.

In spite of these personal characteristics, Gentz had a bent for political economy, and had taken a very good course in that subject in England, where he stayed for some time. While studying in that country he had made the personal acquaintance of Herries, who translated several of his writings into English, and maintained a correspondence with him. He also told him of the firm of Rothschild. Gentz did not stay with Metternich at general headquarters, but he corresponded with him constantly on financial matters.

The Austrian state was again urgently in need of funds for continuing hostilities, as it had been decided to carry the war into the enemy's country across the Rhine. The immediate problem was to convert into cash the remaining instalments of the subsidies from England. This had been done hitherto by the four Viennese banking firms, but the government was not very satisfied with their services, and Gentz, for personal reasons apparently, was not on good terms with them. He therefore wrote to Metternich to say that as far as he was aware, the four Viennese firms had no exclusive right to conduct the financial affairs of the state, and recommended the Frankfort banker von Herz. But he too proved to be very disappointing; he succeeded in making several hundred thousand for himself, but got rid of the bills at absurdly low rates, thereby also damaging English credit. The problem as to who should carry through these transactions still remained to be solved.

A letter from Count Ugarte to Metternich indicated how much they were exercised as to the best means of getting the English money over.[24] Ugarte observed that in the past the English government had generally sent the subsidies in cash, and in gold and silver bars, while only a small portion of them had been realized through "mercantile" channels. Now, however, that the precious metals were scarce in England too, this was difficult to arrange.

"We have to reckon," he wrote, "that on the average at least a third of the subsidies will be lost on the rate of exchange, and this is another reason for trying to get the amount of the subsidies increased to as high a figure as possible, since, if for example six millions are sent over, we shall only be able to realize four millions at the outside." This remark of one of the highest Austrian government officials clearly reveals how governments were taken advantage of in such transactions, and what huge profits were derived in the course of remitting these sums from England to the Continent.

Now there were several cogent reasons for the employment of Frankfort firms. They naturally did what they could to bring influence to bear in this direction, on Metternich and his advisers, and Ambassador Baron von Hugel pleaded the cause of the Frankfort bankers. He had already on a previous occasion written to Count Stadion to say that of all the cities in Germany, Frankfort ought to be specially considered in connection with the financial measures of the imperial court. He said that there was no commercial center in Europe that would collaborate as readily as Frankfort in efforts to improve Austria's credit.

To crown all, Metternich simultaneously received a dispatch from the ambassador in London, Baron von Wessenberg, stating that the four Vienna firms had hopelessly mismanaged the realization of the English bills of exchange.[25] They had made the mistake of instructing no less than four firms on the same day and in the same market, to obtain bills on Paris and Amsterdam, so that their joint action naturally forced up the rate of exchange.

The imperial treasury had thereby incurred a loss of thousands of pounds, which would have been avoided if the business had been carried through by a single firm which would not have feared the competition of its rivals. In accordance with a memorandum of Metternich's, the Emperor Francis issued a letter[26] in which he strongly enjoined the persons concerned to expedite the realization of the English subsidies as far as this could be done without incurring substantial loss. He also commanded that careful investigations were to be made as to the most advantageous method of procedure, adding that since he understood from a trustworthy source that the four firms had not handled the matter in a practical way, and the business could be carried through much more profitably from Frankfort, no further contracts should be made with those firms unless it could be shown that that was the best and most certain method of achieving the desired object.

Ugarte had requested the four banking firms to send in a written reply to the statement contained in Wessenberg's report, since he himself was inclined to support them, as they charged a commission of only one-quarter per cent; and he instructed Barbier at Frankfort to report as to whether the bills could really have been cashed at a much higher figure in that city. At this point Metternich intervened, also urging that Frankfort should be considered. Thereupon Ugarte summoned a secret commission at Vienna, and this commission naturally pronounced in favor of the four well-established local banking firms, whose credit stood high and who could be controlled more effectively, as they were on the spot.[27]

Meanwhile imperial headquarters had been shifted to Freiburg in Switzerland, where Gentz joined Metternich. In view of the conflict of opinion the emperor Francis dealt with the matter by instructing Ugarte to do nothing for the present.[28] But as in the early months of 1814 the allied armies advanced into France from all directions and the statesmen of the allied powers were busily engaged alternately in fighting and negotiating with Napoleon, it was all that they could do to raise the money necessary for the further conduct of the war.

The firm of Rothschild at Frankfort made every effort to get into touch with the Austrian government which was so sadly in need of funds, and they knew through Nathan that it received large sums from England. Nathan did all he could to achieve this object, and had already secured the support of Herries. At the beginning of 1814 Amschel Rothschild at Frankfort succeeded in obtaining the order to issue the pay of the imperial officers who were passing through or stationed in Frankfort, the accounts to be settled by the Austrian paymasters. That was at any rate a start.

Meantime the shortage of money at army headquarters in Freiburg had become acute. The army needed as much as two million gulden a month, so that further English subsidies, which the English government had agreed to under the Treaty of Chaumont, were exceedingly welcome. Austria was to receive £1,666,666 2/3 or a monthly payment of £138,888 2/3. In point of fact there was never occasion to pay out this sum, for the allies soon gained a decisive victory over Napoleon, and entered Paris on March 31; whereupon, after Napoleon's abdication, the first Peace of Paris was signed.

The elector immediately sent his sincerest congratulations to the emperor as the liberator of Europe, as usual accompanying this expression of feeling with a request that he should be compensated for his losses.[29] The elector had been a profitable example to the Rothschild family. He was always importuning the authorities to protect his interests, but he did so in rather an aggressive manner, whereas the Rothschild brothers, though no less persevering, always contrived so to frame their requests that they seemed to be concerned only for the interests of the state or the person with whom the decision lay.

Austria had already received the English payments due to her for the first three months of the year. The instalments for April and May were still due, as well as two payments for the return of the army, a total of £555,-555 1/3, the remittance of which amount had to be arranged. The firm of Rothschild put in for this business, and in order to support it, Herries had proposed to Vienna that Austria should arrange for the money to be sent through Frankfort. In agreement with Nathan Rothschild, the Englishman, who regarded Frankfort as the most important financial center in Germany, had appointed his own plenipotentiary in that city, a certain Chevalier von Limburger, who was to conduct any negotiations regarding subsidies. He was a German Jew, and the proprietor of an important tobacco factory in Leipzig, but he enjoyed the confidence of the English commissary-general Herries.

Meanwhile the Rothschild brothers had been ceaselessly urging Barbier, who was still staying at Frankfort, to avail himself of the services of their firm for the financial affairs of the Austrian imperial government. They now decided, with the assistance of Herries and Limburger, on launching a final attack. On July 28, 1814,[30] two of the Rothschilds called on Barbier on behalf of the firm in general, and informed him that they had received instructions from the Chevalier von Limburger, the plenipotentiary of the English commissary-general, to ask whether Herries's proposals regarding the settlement of the balance due to Austria of the English subsidies for 1814 had been accepted at Vienna or not. At the same time the brothers Rothschild handed him a letter in which they offered their services in that connection. The letter was:[31]

Your Excellency:

In accordance with the permission graciously granted to us, we have the honor to offer your Highness our most obedient service and most humbly beg your Excellency to honor us with your high confidence, and to commission us to realize your claims on London. As our brother is himself established in London, we can easily make use of bills on that city, and enjoy many advantages which enable us always to obtain the best price. Your Excellency has had occasion to observe that we have acquired large sums from London and Vienna, with the intention of ourselves profiting by such exceptional circumstances. If your Excellency will lend a favorable ear to our petition we shall undertake most faithfully to serve your interests and to prove the high value that we attach to your Excellency's gracious goodwill, and, in return for our efforts and our services we shall be absolutely satisfied with the customary trade commission. . . . Comforting ourselves that you will favorably accede to our request, we beg to remain with all due respect,

Your Excellency's most obedient servants,
MEYER AMSCHEL ROTHSCHILD AND SONS.

Not long afterwards they wrote again, more succinctly: "We beg most submissively to inform your Excellency that today we are paying at the rate of 132 to the pound (on July 28 it would only have been 127) and that we are appropriating £200,000 for this purpose, and beg your confirmation of our action."[32]
Barbier forwarded the two communications to Ugarte at Vienna, and felt it his duty to add that in his opinion the offer should not be accepted, as Viennese firms and Austrian subjects were entitled to be considered. He suggested, however, that the proposals of Herries and Limburger should be considered, even if the Rothschilds' were not.[33] Barbier did not know at the time that the motive behind their proposals, although hitherto they had only recommended Frankfort in general and had not specifically mentioned the firm of Rothschild, was to secure that the whole business should be taken over by the House of Rothschild.

He was soon to be enlightened on this point; Carl Rothschild left him no peace. On August 5 he had another interview with Barbier, and gave it as his opinion that the English rate of exchange was then very favorable. He stated that he had received a communication from Limburger on the previous day and, in accordance therewith, he desired to make a definite and advantageous offer in writing regarding the realization of the further subsidies due to Austria.

Barbier reported this offer to Vienna, adding that he had taken no steps to conclude the arrangement, and ended by saying: "The House of Rothschild now does more business in English paper than all other firms put together, and this may be largely due to the fact that one member of the firm is established in London and another in Paris, and that the firm has to carry through several substantial remittances of money on account of the English government itself."[34]

The fundamental idea at the back of Herries's mind, a plan that Nathan had inspired, was that in view of the English government's unfortunate experience of the methods of middlemen, it should itself control the realization of the subsidies, and thereby prevent the frustration of its efforts for improving the English rate of exchange. Whilst Nathan supported Herries in these efforts, he profited by the occasion to get his firm established with the continental powers, and to induce Herries to entrust him with the remittance of the English subsidies to the three greatest powers, mindful that the connections thereby resulting would enable the firm in the course of time to secure other important business with the financial administrations of those powers. In this way he hoped gradually to secure for his firm a privileged position as state bankers to the four principal powers that were engaged in defeating Napoleon. A letter from the firm of Rothschild to Barbier, dated Frankfort, August 8, 1814,[35] while making constant refences to Herries and Limburger, already entered into details concerning the remittance of the remaining £500,-000, this serving as an introduction to the following proposal, which concluded the letter: "If your Excellency should be prepared to regard this unofficial proposal as acceptable, we would not fail to inform Herr von Limburger of your views, after which we may be in a position most dutifully to submit a formal offer."

Whereas Barbier and the treasury official Schwinner, who was on his staff, had hitherto dealt only with such firms as Bethmann, Metzler, Wertheimber, etc., the firm of Rothschild had now entered the field with the determination to drive all rivals out of it. The offer was duly sent in and forwarded to Vienna by Barbier. At the same time he observed to Rothschild that it was too vague to be accepted, and that this was not an ordinary banking transaction subject to the usual business risks, but was based on the proposal of the English commissary-general, and was therefore of an official nature.

Rothschild replied that Limburger was shortly coming to Paris, and that he had therefore not been able to frame his proposals more definitely. The Austrian Treasury would not have to pay any commission in respect to such transactions, although in all similar business which his firm had had to carry through for the English government, it had received a commission of two per cent. All he wanted was an opportunity to demonstrate his zeal on behalf of the imperial court.

Rothschild proceeded to enter into details as to the method by which he proposed to carry through the transaction, as he was hereby able incidentally to relate that the firm of Rothschild had already carried through similar business on an enormous scale for Russia and Prussia. At that time England had to pay ten million thalers to Russia and five million to Prussia. She agreed that this payment should not be immediately effected by bills of exchange, but should be made in monthly instalments of a million thalers.

It was further indicated that if the two states required the money at an earlier date, bankers could temporarily advance the amount. Knowing of this term in the contract, Nathan had told his brothers at Frankfort immediately to advance money to Prussia and Russia. These advances were actually made, so that at his interview with Barbier, Rothschild was able proudly to inform him that his firm had advanced to the Russian court four million gulden in cash and that his elder brother Solomon had gone to Berlin to carry through this important business.

A few days later Rothschild further informed Barbier,[36] with the object of impressing him, that his firm had received payments of the value of 750,000 francs in English crowns, and that this amount could also be applied to a settlement of the subsidies.

In the meantime, Count Ugarte's reply to Barbier's communications of July 28 and August 1, in which Barbier had first informed him of Rothschild's offers, was received. "As your Excellency . . . quite rightly observes," wrote the count, "it will be more profitable and safe for Austria in realizing the English subsidies to use native firms that enjoy the protection of her government, than to have recourse to foreign firms, over which her government has no control, and in which one cannot have the confidence . . . necessary for such extensive operations, as one would have no control over their activities, and they would not be able to offer security for the very considerable sums entrusted to them." Ugarte also expressed the view that in any case it would appear more advantageous to discount the English bills at Vienna, as the pound in that city was dealt in at nine gulden, three kreutzers, whereas, according to the latest report, it was only worth nine gulden at Frankfort. "There can therefore be no question," he continued, "of accepting the firm of Rothschild's offer to take over twenty thousand pounds sterling at the price they have suggested, of 8.48 gulden." [37]

The Rothschild proposal was therefore declined for the time being. Ugarte had failed to be convinced, and even Barbier had not been won over by the Brothers Rothschild. However, they did not lie down under this refusal. As they knew that the English government was working through Commissary-General Herries, on whom Nathan was bringing all his influence to bear, to get these financial transactions entrusted to them, they never thought of relaxing their efforts in that direction.

Limburger had just arrived at Frankfort with new instructions from England, and Amschel thereupon wrote personally to Barbier:

Most honored sir, gracious vice-president!
We have the honor most dutifully to inform your Excellency, in accordance with instructions, that the Chevalier von Limburg has arrived here with the purpose of negotiating with the three ministers or comishairs (sic) of the high powers, regarding the outstanding subsidy, we repeat our request for your high commands, and are with great respect and devotion
Your Excellency's most obedient servants
MEYER AMSCHEL ROTHSCHILD & SONS.
Frankfort, August 22, 1814.[38]

The uneducated style of this letter, written by a member of the second generation of the family, since it had risen into prominence, contrasted strongly with other communications from the firm, which were only signed by one of the chiefs. Such communications indeed, in contrast with the practice of most bankers of that time, were always models of style and calligraphy, and therefore very easily read and understood—a fact which made a good impression on the government departments, who appreciated them as being above the usual standard. When, however, a Rothschild unexpectedly took the pen into his own hands, his style and spelling immediately revealed the low standard of education obtaining in their father's house. This did not, however, prove to be the slightest obstacle to the development of their commercial gifts. It merely provoked understanding smiles from the diplomats and highly placed persons with whom they had to deal.

As Austria was not inclined to accept the Rothschild offers, greater pressure had to be brought to bear by England, and it was decided accordingly to send Limburger to Vienna.[39] The statement that Carl Rothschild had made to Barbier, regarding his firm's financial dealings with Prussia and Russia, was in accordance with the facts. Herries had gone to Paris to carry through the subsidy negotiations with the representatives of the powers personally, and to convert them to Nathan's system under which the subsidy payments would not be effected by drawing bills on London at considerable loss to both parties, but through payments quietly carried through by the brothers Rothschild on the Continent.

In Paris, James Rothschild, who was most familiar in that city, had placed himself at the disposal of the commissary-general, and he was in turn introduced by Herries to the representatives of the victorious powers who were staying there. As a negotiator was required for the discussions at Berlin, Solomon was instructed to travel from Frankfort to the Prussian capital, and carry on the detailed negotiations there. In this way the five brothers played cleverly into each other's hands, and just as their father had contemplated, gave one another complementary support in all undertakings.

France had undertaken, under a convention dated May 28, 1814, to pay the allied powers twenty-five million francs as a lump sum, representing contributions that had not been levied and stores that had been left behind. Austria's share of this money was eight and two-thirds million francs. France deposited as securities for this amount, papers known as bons royaux, and the firm of Rothschild immediately applied for the business of cashing these in Paris at a commission of one-half per cent.

Rothschild again called on Barbier, and attempted to secure this business for his firm, as far as Austria was concerned, too. He was careful to mention that he had already been entrusted with a similar transaction by Russia, and that 250,000 new Dutch Rand ducats which were destined for Russia had already been deposited with his firm.

He brought a written application in support of his suggestion, and submitted to Barbier letters from the most important business firms in Paris,[40] from which it appeared that monetary conditions were so easy that the bonds could be negotiated at a very desirable rate at that time.

"If you should be graciously pleased," the letter ran, "to take advantage of these favorable circumstances, and to entrust us with the discounting of the bons royaux belonging to the royal and imperial government, you shall have no cause to complain of the industry and care with which our brother who is living in Paris will carry through this business. We would always duly pay over to your Excellency exactly what we received for the securities, subject to the customary commission of one-half per cent, with which we should be fully satisfied."

Without replying to the brothers Rothschild, Barbier submitted this letter, with some relevant observations of his own, to Ugarte, adding that certain other firms, including Bethmann, had also applied for the business.[41]

The Rothschilds were endeavoring at the same time to secure a third piece of business which was just then offered. An agreement had been arrived at between the Prussian finance minister and the Austrian Governor-General of Belgium, under which a sum of 9,500,000 francs was to be paid by the Belgian Treasury to the three eastern powers in equal proportions, on account of the expenses of occupation. Knowing of this arrangement, one of the brothers dropped the remark casually, in the presence of Barbier, that the firm of Rothschild had recently sent eighty thousand gold napoleons to Brussels, and would shortly have to transmit to that city further large sums of money on England's account.[42]

Barbier recollected the fact that Austria was to receive this payment in Belgium, and in view of what he had just heard, he thought it would be well for the firm of Rothschild to deal with this matter and asked whether they would undertake the business. Rothschild immediately pledged himself to pay out any amount which he received in Brussels in francs, in thalers or good bills of exchange at Frankfort, after deducting one-half per cent commission.

Barbier was entirely dependent on Vienna in such matters; he had first to report to Count Ugarte, and wait for his decision. At that time, quite an interval had to elapse before a reply could be received to a letter, and government departments were also exceedingly slow in dealing with correspondence. The brothers Rothschild submitted a detailed plan to Barbier, regarding the remittance of the money from Brussels on July 29, concluding with the words:[43] "We shall request your Excellency one-half per cent commission for our expenses and trouble, beyond which you will not have to bear any further expense whatever. If, on the arrival of the money here, we can secure more favorable terms for your Excellency, we shall certainly not fail to furnish you with such proofs of our disinterestedness."

The use of the word "disinterested" is not entirely to be sneered at. Often, especially when as in this instance they desired to gain a new customer, the firm of Rothschild was wont to emphasize that it was particularly concerned with the interests of the other party to the transaction, and business was often undertaken at a quite modest profit, sometimes even at a loss, with a view to securing much more important business at a future date, whereby any such loss would be made good. It was exactly the same principle that old Rothschild had applied in his dealings with the Elector of Hesse, when at the beginning of their connection he sold him coins and antiques far under their real value. This principle had paid, for by 1814 the Rothschilds were doing business that ran into millions.

Barbier faithfully transmitted to Vienna all the offers that were made to him, and received Ugarte's reply a month later.[44] This was not favorable to the foreign Jews, and showed a preference for relying on native bankers. He could not, however, entirely ignore Barbier's suggestion regarding the transfer of the money from Brussels. He therefore wrote to say that he considered Rothschild's offer to be generally acceptable, but limited the amount which they were to handle to about one-half of the total; and in order to avoid all risk he instructed Barbier to arrange with the firm of Rothschild that the receipt for payment at the treasury in Brussels should not be handed to them until the sum had been paid in cash or in good Augsburg bills, or appropriate security had been furnished.

Barbier hastened to arrange an interview with the firm of Rothschild, and with the firm of Gontard, who were collaborating with them, but he could not persuade them to agree to carry through the business on such terms. In spite of their desire to enter into relations with Austria, they wanted at least to have the advantage of being able to dispose of such a large sum for a short space of time, during which they could have employed it very profitably within the scope of their numerous activities. They were also somewhat offended at such a demonstration of lack of faith.

"The heads of these firms observed to me on this point," wrote Barbier to Ugarte, "that these conditions were not at all customary in such transactions, and might indeed be prejudicial to their credit; that certainly no other firm would accept such conditions, and that in a business in which they were charging only an exceedingly modest commission, they could not make advances in cash . . . especially at a time when they had so many other opportunities of employing their funds much more profitably. Rothschild further remarked that much greater sums were entrusted to him by the English government, and that other governments also did not fail to accord him similar confidence, while several millions of gulden that belonged to the Elector of Hesse-Cassel and were invested in government loans in London, Vienna, etc. were simply inscribed in his name."

Barbier admitted the general justice of the Rothschilds' contention, but said he could not take bills that had not been accepted or indorsed by a substantial firm as in that case he would have no security except the property of the drawer, "although," as he wrote, "the firm of Rothschild, as well as that of Gontard, are known to have very solid resources, and, together with several other firms in the 'second class' as regards their resources . . . enjoy a very good reputation and a no less extensive credit."

Bethmann, with whom Barbier next negotiated, stated that he would be doing the business at a loss, and that he must ask for a higher commission. On Barbier pointing out that Rothschild had only asked for one-half per cent, and that Bethmann must therefore realize that it would be difficult to get a higher commission approved, Bethmann replied that Rothschild could carry through the business much more easily than he could, because he had to make considerable payments to the English troops in the Netherlands, on account of the English government, Limburger also, to whom Barbier applied, refused to handle the business, since his authority extended only to the payment to the three allied courts of the English subsidy still outstanding. At the same time he remarked that in accordance with the instructions which he had received, he was leaving the subsidy business to the direction and personal supervision of the firm of Rothschild, since these transactions required the cooperation of an active banker with very good connections; and that that firm had actually to make considerable payments for the English troops and would therefore be able more easily than any other to deal with the remittances in question.

In spite of this new offensive in favor of the House of Rothschild, the business was entrusted to Bethmann, on the ground that the property of that house was "well known to be so great as to require no other security than a duly binding contract or a debenture." This was a triumph of Bethmann over Rothschild, and it was due to the fact that the importance and financial greatness of the firm of Rothschild, which at that time was still of very recent date, was not appreciated at Vienna, and even Barbier had more faith in the old Christian firm of Bethmann than in the upstart Jewish firm.

Nathan was annoyed at this failure, but was all the more obstinately determined to gain his object. However, before this could happen, Ugarte would have to make way for a new man at Vienna, Count Stadion, and Barbier would have to be won over, which was not accomplished until 1815, in Paris. For the moment, the assiduous attempts of the firm of Rothschild to obtain big business with Austria had failed, and it had to content itself with the modest duties of handling the Austrian war-commissariat account at Frankfort, which indeed served to maintain its connection with the financial departments of the Austrian government.

From the foregoing description of the nature of the business transactions of the Rothschild family, it is evident that they were mainly concerned with overcoming the tremendous difficulties to which international monetary dealings were subject, owing to the political conditions of those days and the backward state of communications.

Baron von Hugel's elaborate report[45] as to the way in which a sum of 8,353 gulden and 74 kreutzers could most safely and cheaply be sent from Frankfort to Vienna, makes strange reading today. At first he wanted to entrust the amount to a non-commissioned officer who was leaving for the imperial city with a consignment of official documents; but on reflection he thought it was too dangerous to entrust such a large sum to a soldier, as one could never tell what chance accidents might befall him on the way, and endanger the property confided to him.

After such pondering Hugel finally had recourse to the Rothschilds, and asked them whether they could not issue a bill on Vienna for the amount. The firm replied that they were prepared to issue such a document, and to make it a bill payable at sight, but that they would have to charge a commission of one per cent, a sum of 83.30 gulden, which sum was certainly less than the cost of sending the remittance by post-chaise. Such special circumstances yielded opportunities of profit which the Rothschild family most skilfully exploited by establishing a kind of clearing-house between the three brothers in London, Paris, and Frankfort; and this system was soon extended to Vienna.

Nathan was the father of this idea. Although the third son, he was more and more tending to become the directing brain of the firm. His association with Herries, who relied upon him to an increasing extent, although concealed from the public became increasingly intimate and more profitable both politically and financially. The services rendered by Nathan, not only covered an extensive field, but were also most varied in their nature. After the fall of Napoleon, to which Nathan's financial measures in support of the Allies and of Wellington had contributed not a little, his business expanded in a quite unprecedented manner. Thereupon he immediately availed himself of every opportunity of rendering services to the Bourbons, who had returned to France with the support of the Allies, thus smoothing the path for his brother James in Paris.

The exiled Bourbon heir, who was later King Louis XVIII, had been living at Hartwell in Buckinghamshire since 1807. When the Allies invaded France in 1814, he appealed to his divine right to the throne, and decided to go to Paris immediately after the fall of Napoleon. However, he lacked the money necessary to undertake the journey and make his appearance in France with the magnificence proper to a king. The king applied to the English Treasury, requesting it to advance the necessary capital. As French currency and bills on Paris were required, the application was sent to Herries to deal with, and he called in Nathan.

Nathan was delighted to have such an early opportunity of proving himself useful to Louis XVIII, and with the assistance of his brother James in Paris he acquired bills payable in that city, to the value of 200,000 English pounds.[46] He placed them speedily at the disposal of the new king, and thus made it possible for him to land at Calais on April 26, 1814, and to enter Paris on May 3.

Although to Herries's considerable satisfaction, Nathan carefully preserved the close veil of secrecy covering his activities, and let Herries get most of the credit, whilst he contented himself with the commercial profit and the fact that the transactions served to introduce him to other governments, on this occasion Nathan was careful to see that the newly established monarch learned of his share in the transaction. For this seemed to him to be of great importance for the future position of the firm of Rothschild in France.

The development of this branch business was to be entrusted to James, who had already made himself at home in Paris, and who was widely traveled, although he was only twenty-two years old at the time. His appearance, it is true, was not exactly prepossessing. He looked very Jewish; he had red hair and deep-set eyes, and a good complexion, but he had a wide mouth, a prominent hooked nose, and pursed-up lips. During his earlier years in Paris, he showed an almost servile politeness to everyone. He had obviously acquired the habit at Frankfort, where the status of the Jews was very low, but as he grew more successful and his position improved he gradually lost it. Moreover, James was an exceedingly acute, honorable, and clever banker, whose talents can be rated only a little below those of his brother Nathan. Above all, he had a fair share of the other's abundant energy.

In the life of feverish activity which developed in Paris after the conquest of that city, when officers, diplomats, bankers, and business men flocked to it from all sides, James was absolutely in his element. He was seen everywhere, in government offices as well as on the Bourse and in diplomatic circles,[47] and made great efforts to establish himself in society. He actively supported Herries and his brother Nathan in their efforts to cash the English subsidies without depressing the rate of exchange, and Nathan was able to show in a report to the English Treasury that hundreds of thousands were saved by the new method.[48]

Under the Paris Treaty of May 10, 1814, the French government had undertaken to meet certain obligations incurred by responsible officials, either in France itself or in the conquered territories. To collect these amounts the creditors found it necessary to employ middlemen. James was appointed as the agent of numerous banks and organizations that had claims of this nature, and he was also engaged in the interests of the Elector of Hesse and other minor German princes.

His personal mode of life was exceedingly modest. He lived above a small courtyard, although his business dealings had not only won him the respect of commercial circles but had also brought him substantial profit. He had already decided ultimately to settle in Paris, just as Nathan had taken up permanent residence in England. He was, however, not in such a hurry as his brother to get naturalized, partly because he wanted to watch the course of developments in France after the stormy time of the revolution and the Napoleonic period; and since France could not at that time place any obstacles in the way of a subject of the victorious powers, he wanted to register his own firm in Paris. If occasion should arise the powers were always ready to exert diplomatic pressure in favor of their subjects. James did in fact register his business without getting naturalized, his name appearing in the Paris trade almanac for 1814 as resident in the rue de Pelletier.

Whilst the House of Rothschild was getting well established in Western Europe through the activities of the two brothers, in its native town it had to fight for recognition, owing to the aversion of the citizens to the Jews. The growing wealth of the Rothschild family at the expense of Christian firms was viewed with displeasure at Frankfort. Buderus had completely succeeded in eliminating their rivals. The firm of Van Notten at Amsterdam had put up a fight longest, but that firm, also. failed to survive Buderus's systematic propaganda with the elector.

In a letter dated May 13, 1814, Buderus had written to the electoral plenipotentiary Lorentz, at London, expressing his dislike of that firm in the following words:[49] "The worthy bankers Van Notten must be small-minded people. On one occasion, when I was very hard-pressed because I was waiting for assistance from England, I drew £35,000 on them. They showed the most extraordinary anxiety about the repayment of this sum. I hope they are now easy in their minds. The Rothschild bankers at Frankfort, on the other hand, have advanced over half a million, and have rendered services of every kind in a cheerful spirit." Buderus did not fail to express similar views to the elector, so that the rivals of the brothers Rothschild had the ground completely cut from under their feet as far as the Hessian prince was concerned.

The Frankfort Jews had nothing to fear from Austria and Prussia. When Grand Duke Dalberg left Frankfort, the firm of Rothschild was a creditor of his for considerable sums, including the following items: 22,900 gulden for supplying flour to France; 71,181 gulden advanced in connection with the transactions affecting the Fulda property; and 50,000 gulden advanced to Dalberg On account of the Jewish tax commutation payment, which was not yet due.[50] Baron von Hugel, who after the occupation of Frankfort took part in its civil administration, charged all these claims to the city budget, on Amschel's application, to the great indignation of the senate. The city finances were in a state of confusion, but the claims of the House of Rothschild seem to have been satisfied.

The inhabitants of Frankfort particularly grudged the Jews the equal political rights, which they had obtained, it was held, by methods of indirect bribery. The threatened attitude of their native town caused the brothers Rothschild to be seriously concerned about the future of the parent company on which their power was founded. They decided to make every effort to prevent the Jews of Frankfort from losing any of those rights which they had bought during Dalberg's regime.

The new constitution of Frankfort, and therefore the decision regarding the future status of the Jews, was one of the questions to be settled by the Vienna Congress, which was to meet on October 1, 1814. The choice of Vienna was not very acceptable to the Rothschilds, for Austria was the state which had hitherto so obstinately refused to enter into close business relations with them, and her statesmen, such as Ugarte, still did not really trust the upstart Jewish firm at Frankfort. Moreover, the Rothschilds well knew the strict police control to which foreign Jews were subjected at Vienna, and how greatly all Jews were restricted in their freedom to do business in Austria. As they were determined, however, to secure the desired business connections with the Austrian state, they were not tempted to make the realization of their plan more difficult through possible conflicts with the police authorities at Vienna.

Such considerations caused the House of Rothschild to refrain from sending a member of the family there. The Frankfort Israelites sent old Bornes, Jacob Baruch, and J. J. Gumprecht, as their representatives. They were closely watched by the Viennese police; indeed their expulsion was ordered and sanctioned by the emperor himself; but Metternich intervened, and prevented this from being carried out. Metternich's intervention was probably due to the fact that he had known Baruch when he was ambassador at Frankfort. There is no proof that Rothschild had any particular influence with the minister at that time.

The Jewish representatives at Vienna adopted the method of giving presents; thus they offered Humboldt three magnificent emerald rings, or four thousand ducats. —presents which he refused, whereas Gentz gladly allowed himself to be bribed. The brothers Rothschild had of course contributed to these funds; but they still kept quite in the background.

The general discussions of the proud assemblage of princes and diplomats at Vienna took their course, and sometimes went through critical phases. At one time, indeed, it seemed as though two main groups of powers would form, the differences between which threatened war. This seemed to Napoleon, who was fully informed at Elba of all developments, to be a suitable moment for putting into execution his plans of returning and regaining the throne.

On March 1, he landed on French soil with a handful of faithful adherents. Three weeks later the magic of his name had reinstated him in the palace of the Tuileries in Paris. Louis XVIII and his court had fled from the capital. Napoleon hoped, not only that the Congress of Vienna would collapse, but that some of the powers represented there would adopt his cause. Actually nothing of the kind occurred. While negotiations at Vienna had hitherto hung fire, it was now clear to everybody that delay was dangerous and that quick action was essential. The powers unanimously turned against the disturber of the peace, and determined on concerted action.

The other matters were settled hastily; and half-measures were sanctioned, such as the constitution of the German Confederation. This formed thirty-nine communities into a confederation of states, each one of which was to remain independent, while having a common governing body, with Austria presiding over the Federal Diet, whose seat was to be Frankfort-on-the-Main. It was in Metternich's interest to keep Germany disunited. Controversial matters such as the Jewish problem were to be discussed later by the Federal Diet, while in the meantime existing arrangements were to remain unaltered in the individual states. Metternich informed the plenipotentiaries of the Israelite communities in Germany of this decision,[51] assuring them that the Federal Diet would respect the welfare of the Israelites and that he himself would urge that full rights of citizenship be conferred on the Jews. This was good news, and the delegates hastened to send a copy of Metternich's statement to the House of Rothschild, anxiously waiting tidings at Frankfort. However, the time had not yet come to raise this question. It was far more important to overthrow Napoleon, who was again collecting his military resources in France. On March 25, 1815, the four principal powers had renewed their alliance. Each of them undertook to provide one hundred and fifty thousand men, except England, which undertook to send subsidies instead of the full amount of troops.

Napoleon was to be finally destroyed by a joint effort. It was therefore again necessary to arrange to transfer the subsidy payments from England to the various continental powers, and substantial sums would have to be paid to Prussia and Austria. Prussia particularly was again in great financial embarrassment, and unless this were immediately relieved, her future military action would suffer. Herries and Nathan now redoubled their feverish activities. Toward the end of April, Nathan sent in one instalment the sum of £200,000 to the Prussian government. It was conveyed by Solomon, who traveled to Berlin for this purpose. When this amount proved inadequate, Solomon without previously consulting Nathan, granted a further advance of £150,000 on the security of the English subsidy, at a rate which was certainly very profitable to himself.

Herries retrospectively sanctioned this operation. Not only did he make no objection, but he also allowed England to assume the considerable loss on exchange which Solomon's high rate of profit had meant for the Prussian government.[52] His profit was not Solomon's only gain on this transaction; in return for his ready willingness to advance such a heavy sum on his own responsibility, the Prussian government conferred on him the title of commercial adviser, a distinction that raised him above the majority of his rivals.

Meanwhile in Austria a change had taken place in the direction of the government's finances. Count Ugarte had retired, his place being taken by Count Stadion, the gifted and eminent statesman who was such a bitter opponent of Napoleon. Having hitherto been engaged exclusively in diplomatic matters, he had not as yet made himself familiar with finance. He therefore entered upon his new office with some misgivings. Grillparzer, who thought so highly of Stadion that he described him as having more character[53] than any other person he had ever met, noted in his diary [54] that Stadion had himself admitted to possessing very little knowledge of finance.[55] In spite of his greatness in other directions, a finance minister such as this would naturally seem an easy mark for clever bankers and financiers who were out to get business. In view of the change of atmosphere at Vienna and the added prospect of new English subsidies, the brothers Rothschild immediately made themselves felt again, both indirectly through Herries and Limburger, and by direct applications to the Austrian government.

However, Stadion as yet knew little about them, and as Nathan's heavy transactions were still purposely kept in the background, he had no information about these either, so that his whole knowledge regarding the origin and business of the House of Rothschild was exceedingly vague. He suddenly noticed that Meyer Amschel and Sons described themselves as "I. and R. Crown Agents" in a letter, and signed themselves as such. Stadion inquired at the Foreign Office about this from Metternich - who had been advanced to the rank of prince after the battle of Leipzig—stating that he could not understand their signing in this way, since the treasury had no knowledge as to when and in what connection the Rothschilds had acquired this title from the Austrian court. In view of the inferences that might be drawn from its use, he felt it his duty to ask Metternich for further information on the matter.[56]

The following reply to this note was received: "With reference to your inquiry . . . regarding the title of imperial-royal crown agents assumed by the Frankfort business firm of Rothschild, the secretary of state has the honor to inform you that there is no record in his department of that title having been granted to the said firm, and that he has no information whatever on the matter." [57]

The fact was that the Rothschilds had not signed as imperial-royal, as Stadion thought, but as imperial crown agents, as they were entitled to do in accordance with the decree of January 29, 1800, issued by Emperor Francis in his then capacity of Roman-German Emperor.[58] In any case the incident showed the extent to which the Rothschild family were distrusted in Austria.

In Frankfort, also, they met with every kind of opposition. In order to hinder them in the development of their constantly increasing business, an attempt was made to force the two brothers who were living at Frankfort into the army, in view of the special efforts being made to raise men to resist the return of Napoleon. They turned anxiously to Nathan for help, and he determined to use this opportunity of intervention for addressing a homily to Austria, as he realized that very definite pressure would have to be brought to bear from England, if Austria were at last to be roped in as a customer. The House of Rothschild had already established a virtual monopoly in carrying out the subsidy arrangements of the Island Kingdom.

Nathan went to Herries and acquainted him with the situation; and Herries induced the Foreign Office to make representations to Herr von Neumann, Austrian counselor of embassy in London, in accordance with which Neumann commended the House of Rothschild to Baron von Hugel, the Austrian plenipotentiary at Frankfort. His letter ran as follows:[59]

Sir:

The English Government has requested me most particularly to commend to your Excellency's consideration the House of Rothschild at Frankfort, which carries out the transfer of our subsidies. This firm is represented by several brothers, one of whom is established here, and is employed by the British government in connection with all their principal financial operations on the Continent. By reason of the confidence which he enjoys, and the extensive nature of his operations, both he and his brothers have incurred the envy of the Frankfort bankers to such an extent that an attempt has been made to torment [tourmenter] them by forcing them to do military service. As the English government appears to be most anxious that this firm should not be annoyed in any way, and as this appears to be a matter that directly concerns our service, I felt that I ought not to fail to transmit this request. I therefore ask your Excellency to grant that firm every help and protection that lies in your power.

Baron von Hugel immediately forwarded this letter to Vienna, where it was submitted to Metternich and Stadion, and it did not fail of its effect. No further opposition was offered to the Rothschild brothers' undertaking the transfer of the subsidies; and in general the interstate financial transactions were all carried through more easily, since Stadion allowed his officials abroad much greater scope than had Ugarte. The new finance minister was inclined to leave more to their personal initiative and judgment, as he realized that they being on the spot were in a better position to know what conditions were, and as the cumbrous methods of communication made it impracticable to correspond on matters requiring an immediate decision.

At this time Hemes himself visited Frankfort, where his commissioner, Limburger, was negotiating with the treasury commissioner Schwinner in regard to the amounts to be paid to Austria, which Stadion would have liked to receive in coin or bullion. Herries emphatically demanded that in this matter the House of Rothschild should be granted as free a hand as possible, Napoleon's return had suddenly upset their plans and made new measures necessary, and the commissary-general and Nathan were kept exceedingly busy. In the campaign against the bold adventurer the most important thing was to raise cash and especially French currency. As they could not obtain French coins anywhere, Herries on Nathan's advice had gold louis minted, in order to supply the armies.

In the middle of June, Napoleon resumed the campaign. France was supporting him only half-heartedly, for after all these wars everyone was longing for peace, and was willing even to put up with foreign invasion. Now, however, the French were faced again with a demand for new sacrifices and blood and treasure, and with a struggle against superior forces. For a short time the fortune of war seemed again to smile upon Napoleon, but as early as June 18, 1815, the Emperor of France met his fate at Waterloo. He was completely and decisively beaten—abdication, captivity, and banishment to St. Helena were the result.

On the resumption of hostilities in France, Herries and Nathan had returned to London, and were anxiously awaiting news of the result of the conflict. Nathan and his brothers had always made a particular point of letting one another have news as speedily as possible, either directly or through their business friends, of any important event that might influence their business, or be a determining factor in new undertakings. Nathan had promised prizes for the most speedy supply of news to boats sailing between England and the Continent. He also instructed his agents throughout the world to give him the earliest possible report regarding the outcome of the expected conflict. Such measures were of particular importance at that time, because none of the modern methods of conveying news had been invented—the stage post, that is a series of messengers, being the usual way of obtaining it quickly.

Nathan's arrangements worked perfectly for the battle of Waterloo. One of his agents, whose name was Rothworth, waited at Ostend for news of the result. He succeeded in obtaining the first newspaper account of the successful issue of the battle, and with a copy of the Dutch Gazette fresh from the printers, he caught a boat just sailing for London. He entered the British capital very early in the morning of June 20, and immediately reported to Nathan, who conveyed the news of victory to Herries, and through him to the British government.

The government were at first skeptical, as they had not received any direct information, and Wellington's envoy Major Henry Percy did not arrive with the field-marshal's report until the 21st of June.[60] The members of the British government were tremendously impressed by Nathan's advance knowledge of such an important event; and when this became generally known, the public, who were just beginning to learn of the extent to which Nathan was employed by the English Treasury, began to invent all manner of legends regarding the method by which Nathan had acquired this knowledge and the manner in which he had exploited it.

Some said that he had a private service of carrier-pigeons; others that he had been personally present at the battle of Waterloo and had ridden to the coast at top speed. In order to make the story more romantic, he was said to have found heavy storms raging when he reached the Channel and to have crossed at the risk of his life. Nathan was also alleged to have exploited the news on the stock exchange, thus at one stroke creating the enormous fortunes of the Rothschilds.

Nathan naturally applied the early information that he had obtained to his own profit in his business dealings; but the substantial part of the fortune of the Rothschilds had been amassed through the profits realized in the financial transactions which have already been described; the successful issue of the battle of Waterloo merely served to increase it, and to open up wider fields for profitable business in the future. This was all the more so as England had been victorious and Nathan had transferred the center of gravity of the Rothschild business to her side.

In spite of the fortunate issue of the campaign, which had lasted barely six days, England continued to pay the subsidies to the continental powers. The House of Rothschild was, for instance, instructed by the English Treasury—that is, by Hemes and Nathan—to pay Austria £277,777 on demand, for the months of August and September, this amount not to be subject to any discount, so that Austria should receive it in full.[61] The commission due to the brothers Rothschild was paid by England herself. The payments were continued up to and including December.

Stadion had expressed the wish that as much coin as possible be sent. This made the transfer more difficult and produced a fall in the exchange; it was due to the continuing distrust, which even Schwinner, Austria's representative at Frankfort, was not able to dissipate. The English alone emphatically countered this attitude, and the resulting correspondence clearly shows how highly the wealth and position of the young firm of Rothschild were already rated in England, or at any rate in the authoritative circles of Commissary-General Herries, as compared to their standing in Austria.

"The . . . exchange value [of the pound]," wrote Schwinner to the Austrian embassy in London in November, 1815, "was constantly rising during the early part of November; after the 9th it weakened because Rothschild, having reason to believe that Austria would insist on receiving her considerable payments in cash, refrained from purchasing bills offered by foreigners. This circumstance would appear to justify the view of the English commissioner Baron von Limburger, in which Commissary-General Herr von Herries, who was here a few months ago, concurred, that the more the House of Rothschild were granted a free hand . . . the more certainly would the exchange value of English bills be maintained.

"In this connection the firm of Rothschild have offered bills with respect to the November and December instalments . . . similar to those that have already been accepted and fully cashed in previous payments to the extent of several millions. Nevertheless, in spite of the fact that the generally recognized standing of the firm of Rothschild should be sufficient guarantee for these instruments, I felt that I must adhere to those rules which must always be strictly observed, lest unexpected difficulties should be met in cashing bills of exchange. I considered that this condition was met when Baron von Limburger gave a written undertaking on behalf of the English government that that government would in any case indemnify the imperial and royal treasury if any loss whatever were suffered in realizing the bills accepted by Rothschild."[62]

Schwinner had on a previous occasion expressed his misgivings to Limburger regarding his responsibility for any loss "resulting from the lack of solidity of the firm of Rothschild." Limburger had on that occasion replied to him in the following terms:

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your valued communication of even date. I cannot possibly give the slightest credence to the rumors which you have communicated to me, and which I regard as malicious slanders deserving of severe punishment. In order, however, completely to set your mind at rest I have to repeat to you on behalf of my government the verbal statement made to you by the commissary-in-chief, Mr. Herries, that even if the accepted bills are not met, the Imperial and Royal Austrian government shall in no wise suffer loss, but that they will be indemnified if there should unexpectedly be any loss in cashing the said bills. I have to point out first that in the case of the considerable amounts which you have already received in such bills, no such occasion has occurred and secondly, that the House of Rothschild is itself too rich and too powerful not immediately to make good any such loss without requiring the intervention of my government." [63]

Schwinner transmitted the whole of this correspondence to Vienna, where it was brought to the attention of Metternich and Stadion. As they were both hearing such completely satisfactory accounts of the firm of Rothschild from all quarters, and more particularly were learning of the enormous credit which that firm enjoyed, confidence was completely established at Vienna. From now onwards the firm of Rothschild was most extensively employed by Austria, even in business which had nothing whatever to do with the English subsidy.

Thus Nathan had succeeded, while remaining behind the scenes himself, in establishing his brothers on the Continent in the confidence of the Austrian Treasury. This was to be the starting-point of an even more intimate association with governing circles in the imperial state, which was to develop within the next few years.

While the position of the Rothschild family abroad became more and more important and their wealth attained prodigious dimensions by reason of the great interstate financial transactions which were entrusted to them, they had to fight in their native town of Frankfort to secure the equal political rights of the Jews which had been granted during the period of French dominion. In spite of the decisions of the Congress of Vienna and in spite of Metternich and Hardenberg, this equality was threatened by a hostile senate. Now, however, emboldened by the position which they had won with the great powers, the brothers Rothschild felt in a position to make more definite efforts on behalf of their fellows.

The newly created Federal Diet which met at Frankfort had an important voice in this matter, and the Rothschilds determined to gain the responsible representatives of the powers for their cause. From the first, they had a true friend in the representative of the Elector of Hesse, who had already reestablished everything in his own territory, including the soldiers' pigtails, just as it was before, and who was again at loggerheads with his estates regarding financial matters and the question of the separation of the state treasury from the prince's privy purse.

On October 17, 1816, he had nominated, as his envoy to the German Federal Diet, the administrator of his financial affairs, the old supporter of the Rothschild family, Buderus von Carlshausen—who in the meantime had advanced to the dignity of privy councilor and president of the Chamber. Von Carlshausen had recently been in Paris, on business in connection with his master's claims for compensation, and had specially commended the elector's interests to James. He was now to serve as a kind of liaison officer between the elector and the House of Rothschild, as indeed he had always been. Only positions were now somewhat changed; hitherto it had been the Rothschilds who had asked favors; now it was the elector and Buderus who tried to maintain a close connection. The brothers Rothschild certainly did not forget what they owed them, and endeavored as far as possible to meet all their wishes. But the elector's business had fallen very much into the background since the family had got accustomed to transacting business running into millions with the states of Europe.

In any case, the first important relationship of the Rothschild family had worked out to the benefit of all concerned. The elector had had his scattered resources most ably shepherded during the confusions of the Napoleonic war; Buderus had been made an exceedingly wealthy man; and the extensive operations of the Rothschilds themselves had been made possible through the moneys originally entrusted to them by the elector. They naturally urged Carlshausen to make strong representations in favor of Jewish interests at the Federal Diet. Solomon and Carl Rothschild next turned to the Prussian chancellor Prince Hardenberg and transmitted to him a copy of the letter that Metternich had sent to the Jewish representatives at the Vienna Congress, adding the following covering letter: [64]

In humble confidence we beg to submit to your Highness the enclosed document which is of such fateful import for the destinies of the Israelite community.
After all that your Highness has done for our community in recent years we cannot but hope that your Highness will not withdraw your powerful support at this decisive moment. That, and that alone, can secure a tolerable existence to the Frankfort Jews. Everything depends upon the Commission nominated by the Federal Diet proceeding according to just and reasonable principles in dealing with this matter; and any influence exerted by your Highness in that direction cannot but have the most satisfactory result. We therefore beg to submit our most humble and relevent request that you will most graciously convey to the royal Prussian Ambassador at Frankfort, as speedily as possible, those general instructions which are indicated in the enclosed letter. This is the only means of salvation left to us.

This letter was necessary because there were definite signs that the senate was not likely to pay much attention to the decisions of the Congress of Vienna. This fact had financial consequences; for some of the debentures issued by the Jewish community in connection with their liberation had not yet been met. The Jews did not wish to pay the money until it was certain that the rights which they were thus purchasing would be secured to them. The firm Meyer Amschel Rothschild and Sons wrote in similar terms to Hardenberg and Metternich, saying that they had been informed that all the duly acquired rights of each class of the inhabitants at Frankfort would be maintained, and that there was therefore no further obstacle to the debentures being redeemed.

"As none of the principal magistrates at Frankfort," the letter continued, "have as yet taken any action in this matter, and the holders of these debentures are pressing more and more for their payment, we humbly request you to take the necessary steps, so that these obligations may be paid without further delay.

"We venture to hope that our most humble request will be graciously granted, since the necessary money has long been available, and it will be paid as soon as the necessary action in this matter has been taken." [65]

Before this money was paid, the Rothschilds wanted to receive an assurance from the city of Frankfort that it would not attempt to dispute the agreement with Dalberg of December 28, 1811, regarding the equal rights of the Jews. Both the persons appealed to agreed; and Hardenberg wrote to Metternich that he considered the request to be right and just, that the city of Frankfort could not legally raise any objection, and that it would be advisable for the two courts jointly and emphatically to enjoin Frankfort to recognize the agreement as binding and to fulfil it.[66]

Count Buol-Schauenstein, Austria's plenipotentiary, and therefore president of the Federal Diet, was, in contrast to his superior Metternich, no friend of the Jews, and had reported his views to Metternich at Vienna. He held that Grand Duke Dalberg had sold the rights of citizenship to a crowd of Jewish families for a song.

"Trade," wrote the ambassador from Frankfort, "is still the only means of livelihood which the Jews adopt. This nation, which never amalgamates with any other, but always hangs together to pursue its own ends, will soon overshadow Christian firms; and with their terribly rapid increase of population they will soon spread over the whole city, so that a Jewish trading city will gradually arise beside our venerable cathedral."[67]

Buol's attitude was bound eventually to result in a conflict of opinion with Metternich, but for the time being no decision was made in the Jewish question, and the question of the status at Frankfort remained in the balance.

Paris offered opportunities of important new business, and all the members of the Rothschild family were kept fully occupied exploiting them as far as possible. The victorious powers inflicted a heavy war indemnity on France, appointing four commissioners of the principal powers to settle the precise terms and receive the money. They met at Paris under the presidency of the Austrian, Baron von Barbier. The amount of the indemnity was fixed at seven hundred million francs, to be paid within five years in fifteen instalments of 46,666,-666 francs, commencing on December 1, 1815.

At once the difficulty arose of arranging for these payments to be transmitted to the powers. James, perceiving the great possibilities of profit that the situation offered, advised his brothers and urged them to do everything possible to get the order for remitting this French tribute.

The brothers had to meet heavy competition. Austria still employed her four banking firms, which were represented in Paris; while Baring and other big firms in England endeavored, in connection with the Paris banking firm of Ouvrard, to get the business. All the firms were eager to exploit the opportunity to the utmost, and all the financial and banking world was considering the methods by which the great indemnity could be settled.

Barbier received a proposal from the Baring-Ouvrard Company which was unacceptable because, as Barbier reported,[68] "the bankers insist on enormous advantages being assured to them, without guaranteeing our principal objects, namely, complete security and advances before instalments fall due." Austria intended, among other things, to divert large sums to Colmar for various purposes, mainly of a military nature. The four Viennese firms had very poor connections in Germany, and it was not practicable to make use of them.

The question therefore was whether the Messageries —the overland postal services—could be entrusted with this task, or whether recourse should be had to bankers as an intermediary. Barbier felt anxious about the first method, the roads being exceedingly unsafe so soon after the confusion of the war. This was indicated by the fact that the postal company refused to accept liability for "les vols a main armee," after a mail-bag had been rifled on another journey.

Barbier reported as follows to Stadion:[69] "I am informed that the Frankfort bankers Rothschild and Gontard have undertaken entirely at their own risk to transfer certain sums of money required for the Wurttemberg regiments that are remaining in France, and that they have been granted a commission of one and a half per cent for their services. This amounts to exactly double the transport costs demanded by the Messageries. I have also heard that they have demanded one and a quarter per cent for sending money to the Russian regiments. I suggested to them that they should remit our money at their own risk for a commission of one per cent, to cover all expenses; but they definitely stated that the expense and the danger were too great for this commission to cover them. I had therefore no alternative, after lengthy negotiations with them, except either to grant the collimission they asked or to adopt the cheaper but somewhat unsafe method of sending the money by the Messageries." The Messageries were certainly cheaper, but an accident to a single remittance might make this manner of transport exceedingly expensive. Barbier therefore closed with the firms of Rothschild and Gontard, and on January 6, 1816, they dispatched the final letter regarding the transfer of the first amount of 2,200,000 francs to Colmar.

"Allow us," they wrote,[70] "to add the assurance that we shall apply our united efforts to carrying out this to your complete satisfaction. . . . We could not offer a lower commission because we cannot yet accurately estimate the expenses involved. We shall, however, make it our duty to reduce this commission in the case of future remittances if circumstances permit. We venture to trust that your Excellency will be disposed to let us know when future payments have to be made, in order that we may be able to quote you the cheapest terms."

Accepting responsibility for all risks of carriage, the two firms undertook the transfer of these moneys from Paris to Colmar for a commission of one and a quarter per cent on the payments made. This was not so serious for them as it might appear, since they did not really transfer any money at all, but through their extensive connections acquired the equivalent sum at the place of payment itself. Thus without incurring any risk, they were able to book the high commission as pure profit.

After this system had been in force for some time, the general commanding at Colmar, Baron Frimont, who regarded the commission as excessive, intervened, and attempted to get the money over by military couriers. However, after trying to do this for two months, he admitted himself beaten, and himself requested[71] that these remittances and the issue of officers' pay should again be carried out by the firms of Rothschild and Gontard, "as has already been found to be the most reliable method in connection with military payments at Frankfort."

They did not confine themselves to this business. Soon payments running into millions[72] were carried through by Rothschild and Gontard on account of the French indemnity to Vienna, the most important part of which was entrusted to Eskeles and Geymuller. Nevertheless, the Austrian government continued to give considerable orders to the four Austrian firms; and in their competition with them, Rothschild and Gontard had to make exceptional efforts to be allotted even a small proportion of the French indemnity to Hamburg. Competition was exceedingly keen.

At last the brothers Rothschild succeeded in winning over Barbier, Austria's financial representative in Paris, whose attitude toward them had hitherto been neutral. As time went on he became an ardent supporter of the Rothschild family and of the Frankfort bankers who were working in conjunction with them. This is revealed by the correspondence which passed between him and Count Stadion, who dealt with the matter in a thoroughly businesslike and impartial manner.

Stadion recognized the conscientious services rendered by the Rothschilds in remitting the subsidies; and Nathan saw that the minister was fully informed from England of the part which they had played. With Napoleon a captive at St. Helena, the period of subsidy payments was completely at an end, so it was no longer necessary to keep this business a strict secret. Nor did Nathan consider it desirable to do so, since their credit and reputation would gain if it were widely known that those enormous sums had been handled by the House of Rothschild.

We must bear in mind that during the period between October, 1811, and October, 1816, no less than £42,500,000[73] had passed through Herries's hands. Almost half of this had been forwarded to the various continental recipients through the intermediary of Nathan and his brothers. In Herries's memoirs, published by his son, are extracts from a memorandum[74] prepared for competent authorities, which speaks of Rothschild in the highest terms. Of course in praising Rothschild, Herries was indirectly taking credit for himself, since he after all was responsible, and would have had to bear the blame for any mistakes.

Herries wrote that it was possibly solely due to the banking firm of Mr. Rothschild and his brothers that he had been enabled to carry through the exchange operations so successfully. He said that the greatest gratitude was owing to these gentlemen, who had devoted themselves entirely to the public service, and that the reward which they would receive would have been fairly and honorably won.

Herries certainly emphasized[75] the fact that he had always kept Nathan strictly under his control, had never allowed him to take any steps without his express consent, and had had him almost constantly with him in his room; but he also stated in a private letter to the chancellor of the exchequer that he owed it to Mr. Rothschild not to miss this opportunity of bearing witness to the skill and energy with which he had carried out this service, quite unobtrusively and in such a manner that the rate of exchange had not been unfavorably affected. Even if we regard Herries's testimony as biased, there can be no doubt that Nathan rendered magnificent financial services, from which, it is true, he personally reaped substantial profits.

The Austrian finance minister Count Stadion was just about to undertake the task of putting his country's finances thoroughly in order, reducing the amount of paper money in circulation, and as far as possible reducing Austria's public debt. He required a large amount of ready money for these purposes. This he had the prospect of obtaining through the Austrian share of the French indemnity, but as the payments were distributed in instalments over a period of years, and as he required money urgently, he decided that he would try to obtain an advance on the amount due.

He therefore wrote from Milan[76] to Barbier in Paris: "If your Excellency should receive any offers of an advance on the security of the contributions due in the next few years, I am of opinion that they should be considered, for they would assure us the advantage of obtaining a certain sum for the treasury at an early date."

Barbier replied to his minister as follows:

As such an offer could be expected to be made only by a very substantial banking company, I contrived to introduce the subject in the course of conversation with the firm of Rothschild. But it awakened no response. Yet a short time ago young Rothschild stated to me that it might now perhaps be possible to arrange the settlement of the Austrian share of the indemnity for the four last years at one stroke, saying that if I had the necessary authority to undertake such an operation it might be possible to enter into negotiations. I asked him to put his suggestion in writing; but he replied that he was unable to do so until a commissioner had been definitely instructed by Austria to enter into such negotiations.
This is as far as matters have gone at present; and I am led to infer that the proposal is at present merely a tentative suggestion on the part of Rothschild, who would try to find partners for the scheme if our court would express an opinion in favor of it. . . . Rothschild spoke of the enormous discount of forty per cent.

Barbier emphasized the fact that the entrepreneurs were speculating on an enormous profit and that Rothschild was paving the way thereto by mentioning this heavy discount. Barbier estimated the loss involved through such advance payments at "only" about twenty percent. He stated that it would require special considerations to make it desirable to incur a loss exceeding twenty percent.
It is true that the demands put forward by the Rothschilds were extremely high, and the benefit to be derived from such a transaction was positively enormous. But the very offer, implying as it did that the brothers Rothschild and their business friends were in a position immediately to supply cash to the tune of countless millions of francs, shows how strong the financial position of the Rothschilds had now become. There was nobody else in the field in financial transactions on this scale, and the Rothschilds meant to turn their privileged position to account.

Austria's urgent need of money, and the hope of getting better terms for the advances from the brothers Rothschild inspired Stadion to a clever move. He would put the family, who, handicapped by their origin, were making every effort to improve their social position, under a special obligation. After the conclusion of the subsidy transactions, the Rothschilds had repeatedly appealed to Baron von Handel and to Schwinner at Frankfort to recommend to the emperor recognition of their services; and Schwinner had forwarded this request to Count Stadion, the minister of finance. Stadion gladly availed himself of the opportunity thus offered.

Of the subsidies amounting to approximately £1,800,000 (15,000,000 gulden)[77] which were made available in the year 1815, the four Viennese discount houses first discounted an amount of about 2,750,000 gulden, for which the Austrian government paid a commission of one percent. The money, however, was not forthcoming as speedily as had been hoped, and the Austrian government was compelled to ask the four banking firms for advances on the payments. On these they had to pay interest at the rate of six percent. They were therefore exceedingly pleased when the English government consented to make the moneys payable in large amounts and even to pay several months' instalments in advance through the firm of Rothschild. Thus Austria no longer had to pay any commission, and thereby saved one percent in that respect, as well as saving six percent on any advances.

In the finance minister's report to Emperor Francis the following passage occurred:[78]

> Count Stadion flatters himself that his Majesty will approve of the manner in which this business was carried through. In this connection he feels it to be his duty to recommend that the services of the Frankfort banking firm Meyer Amschel Rothschild and Sons should be recognized, since the efforts of that firm contributed in a special degree to securing the prompt payment of the English subsidy moneys, and in the present circumstances it may be necessary to have further recourse to the good offices of that firm. . . . The firm has very large resources and enjoys an even larger credit. It can carry through transactions that appear vast to a private person on the Continent, because the British government employs it in the most extensive operations and therefore supports it with the necessary funds.

An examination of the subsidy transactions reveals the fact that the House of Rothschild alone paid out 12,203,822.43 florins with respect to £1,442,000. The report of the former high commissioner, who was in charge of the subsidy payments at Frankfort at the time, shows that Rothschild always paid most punctually, and that on various occasions, such as in changing foreign coin and bills, he showed the greatest desire to help without taking any undue advantage.

After the subsidy transactions had been carried through, the head of the firm expressed a wish that the services which he rendered might be publicly recognized by your Majesty. High Commissioner Schwinner was asked for his opinion as to the form which such recognition should take. He discussed the matter with the director of the Gratz police, Gohausen, who was then at Frankfort. . . . Gohausen suggested that the head of the house should be granted the honorary title of imperial and royal councilor, a like title having been granted for similar reasons to the brothers Kaula, in Hanau and Stuttgart, and to other Israelites. The grant of a title of nobility, on the other hand, would excite the envy of Christian banking firms and would create a particular sensation at the present time, as the rights of citizenship of the Jewish community at Frankfort are the subject of negotiations.

High Commissioner Schwinner does not recommend that the title of I. and R. councilor be granted, as it is customary to confer this distinction upon eminent public servants. He favors the granting of an imperial title of nobility, believing the apprehensions of the director of police to be unfounded. Since then Rothschild has repeatedly asked for some recognition as an encouragement both to himself and to others.

Count Stadion begs to state by way of recapitulation: The services rendered by Rothschild are not of a kind that may be suitably rewarded by conferring an order; but the civilian medal would hardly come up to his expectations. In view of his own wealth, a reward in money or money's worth would be even less appropriate. And such in any case would have to bear some relation to the high dignity of the donor and would therefore have to be very considerable. In the opinion of Count Stadion orders are more suitable as a reward for officials, but as Rothschild has already many officials under his direction, an order is not likely to impress him. Count Stadion therefore requests that as a public mark of your Majesty's satisfaction with the services rendered by the Frankfort firm Meyer Amschel Rothschild and Sons, your Majesty will graciously confer on the two brothers of this firm resident here, the German hereditary title of nobility, free of all dues, and will authorize him, Count Stadion, to convey to the firm in a special letter your Majesty's satisfaction.

This report was sent to Privy Councilor Barton von Lederer. He was the right-hand man of Count Zichy, the secretary of state and lord of the privy seal, and had accompanied the emperor when he fled from Napoleon in 1809. On that occasion he had won his confidence and affection. When the reorganization of Austria was undertaken after the Congress of Vienna, Count Zichy was placed at the head of the central office for dealing with all matters affecting the reorganization; and it became his duty to consider the suggestions that were made from various quarters and to express his opinion upon them. Although Stadion was so enthusiastic about the services rendered by the Rothschilds, Lederer remained comparatively unmoved. He regarded them simply as a calculating family of money-makers who were only concerned with their own interests, and he accordingly sent in a detailed report in which he argued against granting them a title of nobility. At the beginning of his statement Lederer gave a short synopsis[79] of the movements of the pound sterling before and after the battle of Waterloo, based upon the payments actually made by the Rothschilds.

In the year 1814, it was as follows: the pound sterling was worth on the average .....8 fl 11 1/8 x
In 1815, before the battle of Waterloo. .7 " 42 3/5 "
In 1815 after the battle of Waterloo.. .8 " 50 3/4 "
Taking the whole year 1815.....8 " 23 1/2 "
Taking the two years 1814 and 1815... .8 " 21 3/4 "

Lederer's memorandum continues:

I now pass to the question of rewarding the two brothers Rothschild, raised by the minister of finance in his report. In this connection two questions have to be considered: 1. In this business, have they conferred a benefit on the Austrian Treasury, and wherein does this benefit lie? 2. How can this benefit be suitably recognized?
As to the first, it was not until June, 1815, that the firm of Rothschild was employed as the business agent of the English government, in connection with the realization of the subsidies. It looked after the payments for that government, for which service it no doubt received a liberal commission, its duty being to maintain the rate of exchange between England and the Continent in favor of England and to improve it. The firm of Rothschild never had any right to ask Austria for a commission on the payments which it was effecting on behalf of the English government. In acting wisely in this matter, it deserved the compliments of the English government, whose intentions it was carrying out. The rate of exchange at which funds were transmitted before and after the battle of Waterloo indicates how far its success was due to fortunate circumstances and how far to its efforts. In effecting the payments accurately and punctually, the firm of Rothschild was but doing its duty. Even the fact brought forward by Schwinner, that they made the payments to the governor-general at Frankfort and to his military departments—payments for which the Austrian Treasury was responsible—out of the subsidy moneys, without charging any special commission for these transactions, cannot in my opinion be counted very much to its credit. It was paid a commission on the whole amount by England, and it cannot have been any more trouble to the firm to divide the payments among the various departments than to pay the whole amount into the central treasury at Frankfort. In any case I cannot conceive of a business firm doing business except in its own interest. The business man undertakes transactions in order to make a profit, and he should not pretend to having conferred an obligation where he has not done so.

Count Stadion thinks it desirable to secure the good-will of a firm of such extensive credit with a view to the future. I must confess that I cannot see how this is to be obtained by conferring any distinction whatever on the House of Rothschild. They will carry through transactions for the Austrian financial administration again in the future. If they see the chance of making a profit, they will ask us for business; but if they do not, they will decline to do business for us, even if the chiefs of the firm have been honored by your Majesty.

The balance-sheet is the first and most powerful factor in determining the business man's attitude. However, since the firm of Rothschild has carried through such considerable financial transactions for the Austrian Treasury, whereby the payment of commission was saved, I consider that it would be proper and consonant with your Majesty's dignity to give both brothers Rothschild a proof of your favor.

In this connection I cannot agree with the suggestion that a hereditary title should be conferred. Such titles should be the reward of service only. In this case there is the special consideration that the brothers Rothschild are Israelites. It is true that there have been cases in which your Majesty has decided to raise Israelites to the ranks of Austrian nobility, e.g., Baron Arnsteiner and Ritter von Eskeles.

On the other hand the claims of the Frankfort Jews to full rights of citizenship are now the subject of discussion, and although I would not venture to express an opinion as to whether honors should be conferred upon Jewish business men when the result of the negotiations in the diet is pending, I suggest that if your Majesty is inclined to act upon Count Stadion's proposal, the views of the minister for foreign affairs should first be ascertained. Personally I consider that the most suitable thing would be that your Majesty should make a gift to each of the two brothers Rothschild of a gold snuff-box bearing your Majesty's monogram in diamonds. Count Stadion might be consulted as to the monetary value of such a gift.

Count Zichy, to whom this memorandum was submitted for his observations, sent it on to the emperor with the comment that he considered Baron von Lederer's argument to be sound but that he could not immediately agree that the proposal should be rejected. He suggested that since Prince Metternich was best informed as to the conditions of the Israelites in Frankfort, and in view of the fact that the firm of Rothschild had really rendered services to the imperial treasury, Prince Metternich should be asked to express an opinion.[80]

Emperor Francis accordingly officially requested Metternich to express his opinion regarding Stadion's proposal, asking whether the existing circumstances of the Jews at Frankfort did not make it politically undesirable to distinguish a Jewish business firm in that way.[81]

The matter was therefore to be decided by Metternich, the man who, as has been stated, was well-disposed to the Frankfort Jews, and who had concurred in Stadion's making the proposal. Metternich reported verbally to Emperor Francis in favor of ennobling the Rothschild family.

Mindful of the important financial and political considerations on which Stadion's proposal was based, and which were further emphasized by Metternich, the emperor agreed, although he felt that the minor nobility would view the ennoblement of foreign Jews with very mixed feelings. The patent conferring the title of nobility on Amschel and Solomon, in recognition of their services in realizing the English subsidies, was issued from Schonbrunn on September 25, 1816.[82]

Meanwhile, it had been pointed out to Stadion that the two other brothers, Carl and James, whose services were also required for the operations that were being planned, might feel slighted, and a few days later Stadion recommended that these two brothers should also be ennobled. Emperor Francis issued an order in council to this effect, dated October 21, 1816.[83]

No sooner had the document been signed than Ugarte had the fact recorded in the official Vienna papers. Stadion expressly thanked the chancellor for doing so; a fact indicating the importance which he attached to the whole matter. At the same time he informed Ugarte that he had asked both the brothers Rothschild to submit a design for a coat-of-arms, and to state whether they wished to adopt a prefix of nobility.[84]

Stadion had informed Ugarte of the reasons for conferring a title of nobility, as set out in his report to the emperor, and added: "I do not consider, however, that the patent should enter into any details as to the services rendered, but that there should be merely a general statement to the effect that since the two brothers Meyer Amschel [sic] Rothschild and Solomon Meyer Rothschild have carried through a loan most meticulously and punctually—the English subsidy transactions during the year 1815—and have also shown an exceptional readiness to render services outside their actual duties, his Majesty has been most graciously moved, etc., etc."

In accordance with Stadion's request, the brothers Rothschild submitted a design for a coat-of-arms. This was enclosed with a letter written by Solomon Rothschild's own hand,[85] explaining the design, and reading as follows: "First quarter, or, an eagle sable surcharged in dexter by a field gules (having reference to the Imperial and Royal Austrian Coat-of-Arms) ; second quarter, gules, a leopard passant proper (a reference to the English Royal Coat-of-Arms) ; third quarter, a lion rampant (with reference to the Hessian Electoral Coat) ; fourth quarter, azure, an arm bearing five arrows (a symbol of the unity of the five brothers).

"In the center of the coat a shield gules. Right-hand supporter, a greyhound, a symbol of loyalty; left supporter, a stork, a symbol of piety and content. The crest is a coronet surmounted by the Lion of Hesse."

In submitting the design the Rothschilds asked that a separate patent of nobility should be prepared for each of the four brothers, as they lived in different countries. The design was duly sent to the Heralds' College (there was such an institution in Austria at the time) with a request for their observations. The college replied that they saw no objections to preparing four patents, but that it was "necessary to proceed with the greatest caution, particularly in the case of members of the Jewish nation for various reasons, and more especially because they are not familiar with the prerogatives of nobility." They added that although the usual fees were being remitted, they considered that the Rothschilds should pay 150 gulden for the special grant and that they could hardly resent this charge in view of the great distinction that was being conferred upon them.

"As for the coat-of-arms," the report continued,[86] "they ask for a coronet, a center shield, supporters, the Leopard of England, and the Lion of Hesse. According to the rules of heraldry, the gentry are entitled only to a helmet; their suggestion is entirely inadmissible since otherwise there would be nothing to distinguish the higher ranks, as coronets, supporters and center shields are proper only to the nobility. Moreover, no government will grant the emblems of other governments, as nobility is conferred for services to one's prince and one's country, but not for services to other countries. The lion is a symbol of courage only, which does not apply to the petitioners."

A design such as the Heralds' College considered suitable was attached to the report. The seven-pointed coronet, to which the petitioners were not entitled, and which was no doubt intended to express their wish for the title of Baron, had disappeared, together with the heraldic animals supporting the shield, and the lions of Hesse and England. Only the half-eagle and the arm with the arrows remained; but the hand was grasping, not five but four arrows, this being in accordance with the curious fact that Nathan, the brother who behind the scenes had had most to do with the English subsidies, was not yet recognized in any way.

The recommendations of the Heralds' College were accepted in every detail, and the design submitted by them duly became for some years the coat-of-arms of the Rothschild family, as laid down in the patent dated March 25, 1817. Although the ennoblement only carried a modest "von," the new rank was of no little importance. We must remember that at that period the higher nobility were dominant in almost all the states of Europe. They occupied all the highest positions in the state and were in a most favored position financially as compared with other citizens. For a Jewish family who had to fight hard for their position in their native city, the Rothschilds' imperial patent was a particularly rare distinction, and involved an important step forward in their fight for social recognition. As soon as the nobility had recovered somewhat from their annoyance, it became much easier for the brothers Rothschild to make their way socially.

The event was naturally very helpful to the relations of the House of Rothschild with Austrian statesmen. They did not take over the business of paying the whole of the huge French indemnity in advance instalments, but partial payments were made through them. They also transferred the moneys to Colmar as well as larger amounts sent to Mainz for the purpose of building fortresses.

Austria was owed three hundred thousand Dutch ducats by Russia for advances made to Russian troops during the Napoleonic wars and accordingly drew bills on the Frankfort firm of Rothschild, which were due in December, 1817, and January, 1818. In reply to Barbier's inquiry, James Rothschild wrote a considerate letter[87] saying that he could not accept the bills because the order from the Russian finance minister had not yet been received.

"If, however," he wrote, "it is your Excellency's wish that these bills be accepted by me ... I am gladly prepared to do so if your Excellency will be so kind as to give me an assurance that the bills in question are in order and that I will receive the report of the Imperial Russian Ministry of Finance."

The brothers Rothschild further offered,[88] in conjunction with Gontard, to provide three hundred thousand ducats, at five percent interest and one percent commission, a few months before the due date. "We flatter ourselves," they stated, "that your Excellency will appreciate the reasonableness of our proposals, and we venture to assure your Excellency that our principal desire has been to give further proof to the I. and R. Court of our constant zeal in their interests. Moreover, we are prepared to modify our proposals if an alteration in the rate of exchange in your favor should make this possible at the time when your Excellency has occasion to accept them."

Barbier supported the Rothschild proposal, attacking the four Vienna firms and observing that in his opinion the Rothschilds worked better and more cheaply.[89] But plans had now been changed at Vienna, where the bills were wanted to be paid only when they fell due, and inquiries had been made of the four Vienna firms as well as of Rothschild and Gontard regarding the simple transmission of the ducats to Vienna.[90]

The brothers Rothschild named their conditions and went on to say:[91] "If the treasury should later desire to receive in advance the above-mentioned amount of three hundred thousand ducats, we shall always be ready . . . to provide it. If, however, we should make such an advance your Excellency will find it not unreasonable to grant us a commission of one percent in addition to the interest rate of five percent per annum. We flatter ourselves that your Excellency will regard our various proposals as just, and venture to believe that we have made every possible effort in our power to furnish further proofs of how greatly we desire to continue to be honored with the treasury's confidence."

The letters show how cleverly the Rothschilds contrived to clothe their proposals in polite phrases and how they were always concerned to present their case as if their one desire was to make themselves useful, while the other party would derive all the profit and advantage.

While endeavoring to secure the custom of Austria, the brothers did not neglect the other states. Similar advances on account of the French contribution appear to have been suggested to Prussia and Russia, and in February, 1817, a loan of several millions was made to Prussia in the name of Rothschild. The Elector of Hesse, it is true, had a large share in this.[92] The brothers Rothschild still carried out really big transactions in conjunction with their patron or with other firms, but the time was soon to come when the five brothers would act alone, and one great firm after another would fall before them.

They were now again concerned to secure their position in Frankfort. The Jewish community had sent a request for assistance to Baron von Humboldt, the Frussian minister who was at that time acting on the diet; and Rothschild had appealed to the young German legal luminary and statesman Sylvester Jordan to use his influence with Count Buol at Frankfort, who had known Jordan since his earliest youth.

"The banker Rothschild,"[93] Jordan accordingly wrote to Buol, "one of the richest bankers in Europe, who has nothing to worry about except that he is a Jew, has most emphatically implored me to commend to your Excellency the interests of the Jews in general and of his House in particular. Hardenberg has already sent instructions in his matter to Humboldt. The senate of Frankfort is determined to confine them to the Jewish quarter, which is naturally distasteful to a banker who is worth millions."

In the middle of December, 1816, a printed memorandum with no less than thirteen enclosures, regarding the Jewish rights of citizenship, was sent to the diet, amongst the signatories being Amschel and Jonas Rothschild, as well as Jacob Baruch and old Bernes.

Meanwhile the brothers Rothschild were working assiduously abroad to extend their influence within the countries where they were living. In Austria their persistence had met with the greatest measure of success, and accordingly they redoubled their efforts in that country to secure new honors and titles. It did not take them long to realize that friendly social relations were of the greatest use to them in their business in each country; but it was just in this matter that they often met with great difficulties in London and Paris.

It was exceedingly hard for poorly educated German emigrant Jews to get into the higher social circles, even though they were rich. James had so far been most successful; at the excellent dinners which he gave he was already entertaining diplomats such as the Austrian ambassador Baron Vincent, and once even a prince of the blood royal, Paul von Wurttemberg. But he also met with numerous rebuffs.

Nathan and James hit upon the idea of asking Austria to grant them the dignity and office of honorary consul. On receiving such a nomination they would more or less belong to the diplomatic corps, whereupon many doors hitherto closed must necessarily be open to them as persons of official standing. Moreover, the title of consul of a great European power such as Austria was at that time, would be bound to raise their prestige and their credit in the business world. They wrote to Amschel at Frankfort asking him to obtain the title for them in Vienna; and he immediately wrote to Metternich: [94]

MOST EXCELLENT PRINCE, MOST GRACIOUS PRINCE AND LORD!

We have had the good fortune on various occasions to experience the proofs of your Highness's most gracious good-will, and we are therefore emboldened most respectfully to make the following proposal. Our brothers, the chiefs of the branches in Paris and London respectively, Jacob M. von Rothschild and Nathan M. Rothschild, honored through the distinction recently received by our family and their gracious elevation into the ranks of the nobility, are inspired by the most zealous desire to be able to devote their energies to the service of the I. and R. Austrian Government. They would feel they had found a means of satisfying these natural desires if one of them were nominated I. and R. Austrian Consul, a position which is at present vacant both in Paris and in London.

This position depends upon the nomination of your Princely Highness, and we therefore most submissively venture to request that your Highness may be pleased to accede to our humble wish. The I. and R. Government can find no more loyal, zealous, and indefatigable servants than our brothers; and we flatter ourselves that the connections which we have established with the governments of France and England would make it easy for us, both in a general way and in individual cases, to be useful to the I. and R. trade with those countries. We should be happy to be placed in a position to do so in this honorable manner, and to receive this further distinction.

Amschel wrote to Stadion at the same time[95] stating that it was not the desire for further honors that caused him to ask that his brothers should be nominated as consuls, but his sincere desire to prove himself of ever-increasing usefulness to the I. and R. Austrian Government. He was certain that the relations which both brothers had established with the governments of the countries where they were living would aid them in being of use to the I. and R. Austrian subjects, especially in commercial matters, and that the granting of their submissive request would enable his whole House to apply all their energies in the most varied ways to the service of Austria's commerce.

Carl Rothschild also appealed to Count Zichy,[96] whom he knew through business dealings, informing him that the Austrian ambassador in London, Prince Esterhazy, had written to Mettcrnich in support of Nathan's nomination and requested the same favor of him. Zichy forwarded Rothschild's letter to Metternich, with the remark[97] that although the matter did not come within his province he ventured to observe that this firm already appeared to have rendered important services to the Austrian treasury, and would through its riches and influence, especially in England, be able also in the future to give pecuniary aid to Austria.

It was to be a long time before these requests were granted. The Austrian state machine worked slowly, and several objections and difficulties cropped up, which could be overcome only by years of work. It was only through their close association with Metternich and Gentz, whom the brothers Rothschild cultivated in the ensuing period of congresses, that they were enabled to smooth the way, so that three years later there was no further obstacle to the desired nomination. Before they could achieve their object, however, they had a long row to hoe.

But the brothers Rothschild worked assiduously toward any goal which they had set themselves to achieve, notwithstanding all the difficulties that arose and the years during which their patience was tried. In the end they got what they wanted. Their unremitting efforts and their persistence in urging their cause, undismayed by any rebuffs, secured for them the unique career that had been destined for their family.

CHAPTER IV

The Brothers Rothschild During the Period of Congresses, 1818-l822

THE great fortune of the Rothschilds had been made; it was now a question not only of preserving it but of developing it and of employing it as remuneratively as possible. The convulsions through which all the states of Europe had passed, and the enormous military efforts made during the preceding quarter of a century, had produced general confusion in their finances, which could be straightened out only by hard work in peace conditions. Every state had been spending money lavishly for a long time, and the resulting shortage of money was very acute. The poverty-struck states had to acquire the cash necessary for their recovery from those who had succeeded in profiting by war conditions to accumulate riches as contractors or through financial operations. Foremost among these was the House of Rothschild, and it gladly lent money to princes and states, as the repayment of such loans through their subjects was secured. Thus it advanced moneys to numerous small princely families, especially to those of the neighborhood, while its relations with the Elector of Hesse remained outwardly unchanged.

Although he was the third son, Nathan incontestably look the leadership among the five brothers. His long and fortunate connection with the English government had taught him both the advantage of concentrating on really big financial operations, and the comparative safety of carrying through such operations with powerful states. For the concern of these for their public credit and their prestige made them regard it as essential to carry out their obligations punctually. Nathan was not in the least inclined to rest upon his laurels, or to limit himself to the preservation and enjoyment of the family's great fortune. His aim was to increase the power of his House; and he held the view that in order to win a victory, ducats, like soldiers, had to be concentrated in mass suddenly and unexpectedly upon a wisely selected point.[1] This was the dominant note in the policy of his House during the following period.

In order to apply this policy it was necessary, now that his firm enjoyed the high regard of the business community, that he should secure his position in society as well. The Austrian patent of nobility had given him a good start in this direction; but his native city and the senate of Frankfort continued to adopt an unfriendly attitude toward the Jews, including the Rothschild family. Amschel at Frankfort, who had been placed in charge of the campaign against the senate, used every opportunity for exerting external pressure upon the authorities of the city, especially through Prussia and Austria. At the beginning of the year 1818 a favorable opportunity occurred for again enlisting the support of the Prussian Chancellor Prince Hardenberg, who was well disposed toward the Jews.

The state finances of Prussia were, like those of Austria, in great confusion. The deficit was large, and it seemed not improbable that the pay of civil servants and of the army would have to be suspended. The treasury lived, from hand to mouth, and the king himself was being dunned by small tradesmen. In these circumstances, Barandon, the London representative of the Prussian Mercantile Marine, had recommended that a loan should be raised in England, and that for this purpose recourse should be had to Nathan Rothschild. Hardenberg readily agreed, and asked Amschel at Frankfort, whom he knew personally, to use his influence in favor of securing this loan. Amschel consented, and used this opportunity of again appealing to the chancellor on behalf of the members of his faith at Frankfort.

"At the present time," he wrote,[2] "when his Excellency the Minister and Envoy to the Diet, Count von Buol, is with your Excellency, I beg to renew my most humble representations regarding the fate of the members of my faith here, who are awaiting in great suspense the decision of the diet. We place our greatest hopes in the honored Prussian government, and cherish the most sincere wish that the principles recognized by it will be applied, convinced that your Highness knows too well how to appreciate the cultural progress made by our community during the last forty years to allow the way to their further development and improvement to be barred, or them to be limited in this respect."

Hardenberg was quite willing to accede to this request, since in doing so he would be acting in accordance with his own personal convictions. He had, however, a difficult task with his king, who was not well disposed to the Jews. The monarch told him the measures he could apply if action were taken by the magistracy of Frankfort, but at the same time expressed the desire that the wishes of the magistracy should be met as far as possible. "In any case," the resolution concluded, "I do not wish Prussia to support the Jews in the diet."[3]

On this Hardenberg angrily commented: "First ad acta. We have at any rate the decisions of the Congress of Vienna to go upon."[4]

However, the king came off his high horse, for Hardenberg had made him realize that the Prussian state would need the brothers Rothschild for a loan, and that it would not be good policy for Prussia to alienate them by an attitude unfriendly to the Jews in the Diet of Frankfort.

The majority of the diet were in any case in sympathy with the desires of the senate at Frankfort, and the rights which the Jews had acquired in 1811 seemed therefore to be in peril. Only the powerful influence of Metternich and Hardenberg had so far restrained it from taking a definite decision hostile to the Jews.

Amschel regarded the head of the House of Bethmann, which was being more and more overshadowed by the Rothschilds, as a natural enemy of the Jews; but Bethmann refused to admit that this was so. "If Herr James," he wrote at the time to David Parish, "will but visit me at Frankfort, he will soon realize that I am not influenced by any nonsense about Christians and that I have no prejudice against a reputable Jew. I have often attempted in vain to disabuse Amschel of the stupid illusion that I am opposed to the demands of the Jewish community at Frankfort in so far as they are reasonable. The fact that I am suspected by my fellow Christians of taking the Jewish side should convince him, if nothing else will, that he has no ground for his attitude."[5]

Amschel Meyer certainly was greatly interested in keeping on good terms with Prussia and Austria. Prussia's acute financial distress seemed to provide a further excellent opportunity of earning a large amount of money, and he did all he could, in close collaboration with his brother Nathan in London, to induce Prussia to come to the Rothschilds for refuge.

That kingdom had very good reason to look around for money, for in 1817 the state was carrying a burden of twenty millions of floating debt, interest being charged on part of this amount at the extravagant rate of twenty percent per annum, the payments being met by further borrowings each year.[6] Apart from this, the annual budget showed a deficit of several million thalers. Prince Hardenberg, by the king's command, accordingly instructed the Director of the Prussian Treasury to negotiate a loan. The director, Christian von Rother, was a highly competent official and Hardenberg's right-hand man in financial matters, and he had come into special prominence in raising money during the wars of liberation.

"It is essential," wrote the prince to Rother,[7] "that we should obtain money for various purposes. The maintenance of the state urgently calls for it. I am eagerly waiting to hear from you. Act with decision and courage."

Rother first tried Berlin firms, but they attempted to exploit the difficulties of the situation, and, as he reported to the king, the conditions which they proposed were "exorbitant and humiliating." In Holland he had no success either; but he fared better at Frankfort. As Prussian commissioner of finance he had already come into contact with the House of Rothschild in Paris, and he now succeeded in getting on exceedingly good terms with Amschel Meyer.

Amschel referred him to his brother Nathan in London, as the most likely person to make the loan a success. Hitherto, Barandon had conducted the negotiations in England, but he was not liked by the House of Rothschild. Rother, on the other hand, the brothers had known in Paris, and they regarded him as a more pleasant person to deal with. Indeed they preferred him in every way, and were exceedingly gratified when he came; to London and Barandon was left out in the cold.

They were now dealing only with two friends of their House, Rother and the Prussian ambassador in London, William von Humboldt, the brother of the great explorer Alexander. He himself was not only a diplomat, but also a distinguished scholar and philosopher. Humboldt understood little of money matters, and he left his private estate to be managed by Rothschild, whereas Rother was regarded as a financial genius in his own country. Humboldt was certainly a complete believer in Nathan Rothschild's indisputably superior talent for finance. He reported in this sense to Berlin, using words which are especially remarkable coming from such a man.

"If the loan is to succeed here," his report ran, "this can be managed in my opinion only through Rothschild.

. . . Rothschild is now easily the most enterprising business man in this country. . . . He is a man upon whom one can rely, and with whom the government here does considerable business. He is also, as far as I know, just, exceedingly honest, and intelligent. But I must add that if business is given to him to carry out, it will be necessary to fall in with his ideas. For he has acquired the independent habit of mind developed by riches and a fairly long sojourn in this country, and he is now engaged in such a constant number of financial transactions that it will not greatly affect him if one of them fails to come his way. He wants to take over the whole loan himself; on this point he is likely to be exceedingly firm, and he has asked in advance that the Prussian consul here, against whom he is prejudiced, shall not be allowed to interfere in the matter in any way."[8]

Humboldt's report is all the more valuable as an expression of opinion, since he proved his independence in concluding it by advising against the acceptance of the loan, this being of course quite contrary to Nathan's wishes. Rother, on the other hand, speedily came to terms with Nathan regarding a loan of five million pounds. This he considered advantageous for Prussia, as other important states were able to obtain money by loan only in small amounts.[9] In spite of the ups and downs of the negotiations, exceedingly cordial relations seem to have been maintained throughout between Rother and Rothschild. At any rate this is indicated by their correspondence at this time. Rother wrote to Solomon Rothschild,[10] who was also in London at the time, that he had been glad to make the closer acquaintance of his brother Nathan, whose character and intelligence he felt compelled the greatest admiration.

Solomon's reply was full of friendliness and candor. His letter was, he indicated, an expression of his sincerest feelings, and Nathan and Solomon assured Rother, when he left, that he could travel with a light heart.

He had achieved "a splendid piece of business, and they were his devoted, loyal, and eternal friends."[10]

This way of getting into the good graces of the Prussian negotiator did not fail of its effect. Rother was delighted that he had carried the business through and that on the day on which the agreement was concluded Nathan sent a ship to Hamburg with a million thalers as a payment on account.

Rother had, if possible, been even more strongly impressed than William von Humboldt by Nathan's influence. "The Rothschild in this country," he reported to Berlin,[10] "is a most estimable person and has an incredible influence upon all financial affairs here in London. It is widely stated, and is indeed almost a fact that he entirely regulates the rate of exchange in the city. His power as a banker is enormous."

The loan, which was issued at an average price of 72 per cent, turned out to be "a splendid piece of business" for Rothschild, as it never fell below the price of issue, and in 1824 actually reached par. The House of Rothschild therefore had every occasion to be pleased with this, the first big state loan which they handled, and they were encouraged to develop this line of business on a large scale. This loan was the first of several.

The brothers had formed valuable friendships through these negotiations, and William von Humboldt introduced them to his famous brother Alexander. It was not long before he was seen dining at Rothschild's house in London. Nathan was more frequently the guest of William von Humboldt, whose wide education and extensive knowledge certainly provided a contrast to the Frankforter who had risen so rapidly. Humboldt expressed himself candidly about him in a letter to his wife.

"Yesterday," the letter runs, "Rothschild dined with me. He is quite crude and uneducated, but he has a great deal of intelligence and a positive genius for money.
He scored off Major Martins beautifully once or twice.

Martins was dining with me, too, and kept on praising everything French. He was being fatuously sentimental about the horrors of the war and the large numbers who had been killed. 'Well,' said Rothschild, 'if they had not all died, major, you would presumably still be a subaltern.' You ought to have seen Martins's face."

